6774. How many children have you in the institution at present?—There are fourteen children altogether at present; three of them boys, and all the rest are girls.

6775. What is the usual age of the children in the school?—Well, they are mostly of all ages from three years up to twelve years.

6776. How are they admitted to the school?—They must appear before the committee of management with certificates of baptism, and notice of action must be given by the member proposing a candidate for admission, to the other members of the managing committee.

6777. By whom is this managing committee constituted?—It is appointed at the general annual meeting of the governors, which is held every year.

6778. Who are the governors?—They are those who subscribe one guinea a year or upwards to the funds of the school.

6779. Lord Justice NADE.—Was the income of the school derived from voluntary subscriptions?—Yes, a great deal of it was bequests.

6780. What does the annual income amount to?—It comes to about £199 18s. a year.

6781. Have you a balance sheet of last year?—Yes. [Paper handed in.]

6782. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—I see by your last report that a sum of money called the "Bell bequest" is lying in the Court of Chancery. Can you tell me what this Bell bequest is?—That was a sum of money that was left in the hands of Mr. R. W. Cherry, and he died, and we found great difficulty in getting it from the late Mr. Cherry's son. He, for some reason or other, put the thing in the Court of Chancery.

6783. Has the money been actually lodged in the Court of Chancery?—I believe so.

6784. Do you know what the amount of the Bell bequest is?—It is a sum of about £300.

6785. Dr. TRAILL.—Is there an action going on in the Court for the recovery of this money?—I believe that the money has been lodged in the Court.

6786. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—I see you have got a number of other bequests here, the bequest of the late Humphrey Hughes, £200, grant from the trustees of Adam's trust?—I believe the bishop is one of the trustees of the Adam's fund.

6787. Is that an annual donation?—No, some years we do not get anything at all from it. It is just according to the state of the funds.

6788. Then comes the Whitney bequest, amounting to £21 3s. 2d., and then I see there are about ten different bequests all together?—Yes, the treasurer knows more about these funds in detail than I do.

6789. Dr. TRAILL.—I suppose the institution is for all denominations of Protestants?—Yes.

6790. I see the Lord Bishop of Cashel is the President of the Society?—Yes, and there is both a ladies' and gentlemen's committee in connection with it.

6791. Are all denominations of Protestants represented on this committee?—Well, the committee is appointed annually at the general meeting, and if Protestants of other denominations, who are duly qualified by subscribing to the institution, are proposed, there is no objection to them serving in the committee.

6792. Professor DOCUMENTY.—Are there any Methodists or Presbyterians on the present committee?—It so happens that this year all the members of the managing committee are members of the Church of Ireland, but it is not always so.

Oct. 29, 1887.

The Right
Rev. Dr. Day.

Oct. 19, 1891.
John Strongman.
Esq.

John Strongman sworn.

6793. Lord Justice FREDGUY.—You are treasurer of the Protestant Orphan School, I believe?—Yes.

6794. It is stated in the Report of 1880 that a Mr. Frankford bequeathed a sum of money to the school producing an income of £3 11s. 10d. yearly—have you still got that fund?—Yes, my lord, but the payment of dividend is divided; it is now paid half-yearly.

6795. How is that money paid to you now?—I get it through the Bank of Ireland. I get an order from the trustees authorizing the Bank to pay the income to me; the money comes to me as hon. treasurer [document handed in].

6796. I see that you have got the names of the trustees here?—Yes.

6797. Are they all resident in Waterford?—They are.

6798. Are they all members of the Church of Ireland, or any of them members of another Protestant denomination?—They are all members of the Church of Ireland.

6799. The next bequests I see referred to are those of Francis Martineau, £100, and Mr. Stone's, £250. Is—do you know anything of these?—I think those must have been laid out upon the buildings.

6800. The next item is one sixth share of a year's rent of the estate of H. Kennedy, per J. R. Lecky—what is that?—Here it is, my lord.

6801. How do you get this money?—I get it through a Mr. J. R. Lecky, who resides at Tinnore, and who sends it to me. It is only a sixth share of the estate of Mr. Kennedy.

6802. The next is a year's dividend on the Apprentice Fund?—Yes; the surplus of that is to be used on the repairing of the house; we have invested that in Waterford and Limerick Railway Preference Stock, £400 at four per cent.

6803. Then we come to the dividend on Mrs. Kennedy's bequest?—That is in Government Stock, Three per Cent. The amount of the stock is £303 7s. 6d.

6804. What about Dr. O'Connell's bequest, from which you derive an income of £4 7s. 1d.—That is in 4½ per cent. Preference Stock of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company; that is in the name of the same trustees as this other Preference stock. We got a notice from the Railway Company as to changing the names of the trustees who held this stock.

6805. Do you not think it would be better to get your governing body incorporated, and so save yourselves a great deal of trouble and expense?—I believe there is an impression among the Committee of Management that we are exempt from the Act.

6806. What about Miss Archdekin's bequest?—That is in the name of the same trustees. It is the interest arising from £100 Four per Cent. Stock.

6807. Is that invested along with Miss Carter's bequest?—No, it is separate; it is in two £50 Four per cent. Preference Shares, in the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company. Miss Carter's is a £50 Four per cent. Preference Share.

6808. Now we come to Miss Colclough's and Miss Strongman's bequests?—That is the same.

6809. What about the item—a half-year's dividend part of Dr. Carroll's?—That is mixed up with the late Humphrey Hughes' bequest—It is invested in the Bank of British North America.

6810. In whose names were these shares bought?—In the name of the existing trustees; they are on the certificate.

6811. When were the shares bought?—Last year, I think, these shares were bought.

6812. I suppose your trustees know that they are personally responsible for any deficiency or depreciation in these moneys?—I do not know that. I know they are now worth about £71 or £70 each share, and we bought them at about £67.

6813. Are there any other investments except those you have mentioned?—No; we get donations from the Adams' trustees, but that varies just according to the amount the Dean and Chapter have in hand.

6814. You are not entitled to any fixed sum annually from this Adams' trust?—No; the Dean and Chapter need not give us anything if they like.

6815. Dr. TRANT.—Have you any idea what the Protestant population of Waterford amounts to?—I think between 2,000 and 3,000, but I have no idea as to what are the exact figures.

6816. Lord Justice FREDGUY.—Do you know anything of the losses of the site on which the school has been built?—I have never seen it.

6817. Do you not know how it is held?—All I know is that we have paid no rent for over fifty years, I believe.

6818. I understood you to convey that all those funds you have mentioned, and which are set out here in your annual report, are funds according to the will?—Yes, that is so.

6819. Can you tell if the purposes of the society are stated in any document?—Yes, here is a copy of the rules of the society.

6820. From these rules it appears that Protestants of any denomination can be admitted, and that a child of Catholics parents, but who is going to be reared in the Protestant faith, can also be admitted?—Yes.

6821. Lord Justice FREDGUY.—Have any Protestants but those belonging to the Episcopalian Church—I mean any Presbyterians or Methodists—been admitted to the governing body in past years?—No, not to my knowledge; before my time I hear there were some.

6823. Lord Justice FREDGUY.—It is very plain that this is an open endowment, and is certainly in great need of some legal status. You have now got all sorts and conditions of securities, and in the name of various trustees, which increases the danger of some of them being lost. The purposes of your society are well set forth in your rules, and you are not exempt from the Act, as some of the managing committee seem to think. You have a number of legacies here which form an endowment in the strictest sense of the word. What we should be inclined to do for you would be to incorporate your committee of management, elected as it now is, and thus relieve you of all the danger and difficulty you are in about your funds. The existing rules would practically be the same as those we have laid down for a similar body in Belfast—"The Ladies' Industrial School." It appears that, through want of something akin to what we propose to do for you, you have lost two or three items that were mentioned in the last report. It will cost you some time and money to get that "Bell bequest" out of Clonacerry. All this can be avoided in future when the managing committee has been incorporated under our Act.

Mr. ANDREWS.—My impression is, my lord, that Mr. Cherry, being solicitor for Mr. Bell's people, and the money happening to be in his hands at the time of his death, Mr. Cherry's executor did not think there was anyone who could give a proper receipt for the money, and so he lodged it in the Court of Chancery to protect himself.

Mr. RIDGEWAY.—That we believe, my lord, to be an excuse merely. It was the plea put forward at the time when we demanded payment.

6824. Lord Justice FREDGUY (to Mr. ANDREWS).—Was Mr. Cherry's estate solvent at the time of his death?

Mr. ANDREWS.—It was, my lord.

SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY, LADY-LANE, WATERFORD.

Oct. 26, 1857

The Right Rev. Dr. Day, Lord Bishop of Cashel and Emly, Waterford and Lismore, examined.

6825. Do you know who manages the School of Industry, Lady-lane?—It is managed by a committee of ladies.

Day is the principal manager of the girls' school, and Miss Barron of the infant school.

The Lord Bishop of Cashel

6827. Do you know who are the trustees?—I believe that the trustees are Mr. Rylands, Mr. Post, and Mr. Harvey.

Thomas Smith Harvey examined.

6828. Lord Justice FRYCHESTER.—I believe you are one of the trustees of the School of Industry, Lady-lane?—I am secretary, trustee, and manager.

Thomas Smith Harvey.

6829. The school was founded I believe in the year 1818, as a free industrial school for boys and girls?—Yes, it was; but for some time past it has only been used as a daily school for girls.

6830. Of what do the premises consist?—Well, there is an upper and a lower school, but these are quite unconnected with the original Lady-lane School of Industry. The schools commenced in the year 1818 and was held on till 1863, and then it was closed; and after that some time the present school parties were allowed the use of the building.

6831. Lord Justice NASH.—But the present schools are carried on in the same rooms?—Oh, yes.

6832. Dr. THURTELL.—Who allowed the present occupants of the building the use of the school-rooms?—Well, it was the committee existing at the time the school was given up, in the year 1863.

6833. Lord Justice FRYCHESTER.—There were formerly some funds belonging to the original School of Industry?—Yes, I have the preservation of these funds.

6834. What purposes are they applied to now?—They are applied to the repairs of the school, and then I have given donations to the two schools now occupying the building of £5 and £10 a year.

6835. They formerly were, I see, £15 15s. 11d. a year?—Yes, but they are very small now.

6836. How are the present schools supported?—They are supported by subscriptions. Here is a statement of the present condition of the funds of the old school. [Document handed in.]

6837. The interest on £100 Irish Corporation bond, £3 11s. 4d. Alice Quinn's legacy, £3. Who is the legal owner of the Corporation bond?—Well, I suppose the secretary. I receive the interest every year from the Corporation.

6838. How long have you been a trustee for the school?—I have been trustee since the year 1863, I believe.

6839. Do you know how they were originally appointed trustees?—Well, they were appointed trustees by the committee in existence at the time—the managing committee.

6840. Is there any deed under which they are appointed?—I have no document of that kind. The only thing I have is a copy of the minutes. [Minutes book handed in.]

6841. How many of the original trustees are now alive?—Mr. Thomas Rylands, Mr. Edward George Post, and myself.

6842. You are the only one of the trustees who takes an active part in the management of the funds?—Yes. The only thing to rest in new trustees, my lord, is this £100 Corporation bond which I have in my possession.

6843. What is Alice Quinn's legacy; who holds it?—I hold nothing about that, but I receive the interest from Alderman Slaney.

6844. How is it secured?—I think he got it from the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

6845. But do you know how Alderman Slaney represents the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests?—I thought he acted for them.

6846. The next is Mrs. Ulrich Poul's legacy, paid I see by Mr. T. N. Overend?—She left that as charge upon her property, and Mr. Overend sends it to me every year.

6847. What is the amount of it?—Two guineas Irish.

6848. The next item is such in the Waterford Savings Bank, the interest on that amounts to £2 9s. a year. In whose name is the bank book?—I think the book is in the name of the "School of Industry." I lodged the money.

6849. The next item is the rent of garden, Franciscan convent, £3 3s. 1d.—Yes, that piece of ground belongs to the school premises, and as it adjoins the Franciscan convent, the community took it into their ground and pay us the rent.

6850. Have they the ground under a lease?—They took it under a temporary letting.

6851. That makes the annual receipts £13 15s. 11d., and you have besides funds in the savings bank, £87 2s. 6d., together with such in the treasurer's hands amounting to £40 10s. 1d.—Yes, that money is in my hands at present. That is the surplus of that money I have mentioned. I have not put it into the bank with the other money, because I have to keep the premises in repair, and lately I have had considerable expenses in connection with the school, putting down a new flooring in the upper school-room; and since that I have also had to take down the ceiling and put up a temporary one.

6851A. Was it through being subscribers to the school that the trustees were originally qualified?—Not at all.

6852. How did they become trustees then?—They were appointed by the committee of the school.

6853. Who are they?—They are all gone now. I forget who were the exact parties. But the same parties I believe, are the subscribers to the school. I know they appointed me treasurer, secretary, and trustee.

6854. I presume the subscribers to the present Girls' Industrial School are the nearest persons corresponding to the late trustees?—Oh, no. This school which is in this building now is not the original Lady-lane School of Industry at all. The managers of the present school have nothing whatever to do with the original one.

6855. Dr. THURTELL.—Would not the best way to apply the funds you have got be to spend it on the present schools?—I am desirous of being released from Lady-lane School as soon as convenient, my health and age require it. I am willing to give my assistance in the new arrangement that may be required.

6856. But would you wish the money to be spent on these schools?—Well, yes.

6857. Lord Justice FRYCHESTER.—Was there ever any legal transfer of the trust property in your time?—I never recollect any sort of transfer since I became connected with the school. I hold the bond of the Corporation, and that is the only thing tangible except the money in the Savings Bank.

6858. What is the Frankford bequest?—The Frankford legacy was paid by the late Mr. Beasant. He used to come round here occasionally,

Oct. 16, 1897.
Thomas Smith
Harvey.

When he died his executor put the money into the Court of Chancery. I forgot exactly what the amount came to yearly, but I think it was about two guineas a year. But Mr. Bennett's executor, instead of handing me the money, put it into the Court of Chancery, and it cost me £25 or £26, I am not sure which, to get it out again.

5850. Where is that money now?—I put it into the Savings Bank.

5851. Do you know if the people managing the Industrial School have ever had a meeting?—No, of course not; they have all given it up long ago.

5852. But we have been a subscription list for last year!—Oh, yes, but that is another school entirely. That is another school which occupies the premises of the original school. We have lent the schoolroom to the other schools, but they are not the same school at all. Since the other members of the original school committee retired, they left the management of the funds in my hands, as I had been managing for them when the school was closed, and so I have continued to hold on.

The difficulty you are in is this—there never was any legal transfer of the property made to you, at least no transfer that would legally convey anything. But the Scheme that we would make under the Act would vest, without any conveyance, all the property in the governing body that might be selected. What occurs to us is that yourself, as one of the former trustees of the old school, and Mr. Rylands, as your only surviving colleague, and some other representatives of the working body of the school, should all be associated together to hold the property, and that the committee of management should be elected every year by the subscribers to the school.

5853. Dr. TRAILL.—Did this endowment belong to any one particular denomination?—I think the trustees were all Protestants, but I know that the old school was open to all denominations.

5854. Do you know did any Roman Catholics go to the school?—I think Roman Catholics did go. I should say that the governing body of the old school mostly belonged to the Society of Friends.

5855. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You are, I understand, a member of the Society of Friends?—Yes, and so also is Mr. Peet.

5856. What is Mr. Rylands?—He is a member of the Church of Ireland.

5857. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—You say that the school at present occupying the school buildings is not the original Lady-lane School of Industry?—No. The present schools have no claim upon this money at all. They have funds of their own sufficient to carry on their business, but I subscribe to them.

5858. Dr. TRAILL.—And you think that would be the best way of applying the funds—to devote it to the present schools?—I think it would.

5859. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Now, as trustee of the old school that has ceased to exist, and as representing the managing committee that has also ceased to exist, is it your desire that the funds you hold as surviving trustee should be applied legally to the existing school or not?—I would be quite satisfied that they should be applied to the existing school.

Mrs. Day (Superintendent of the Girls' Industrial School, Lady-lane, Waterford), sworn.

Mrs. Day.

5860. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—We have heard from Mr. Harvey that there was formerly a school called the School of Industry in Lady-lane, but that that has been dissolved, and it is now a school managed by you?—Yes, assisted by a committee.

5861. How is this committee appointed?—The Dean appointed us as a committee, and we ourselves fill up our numbers as the members drop off.

5862. How many of the committee take part in the management of the school?—I am really the only one who takes part in the management, but there are other ladies who take an interest in the work of the school.

5863. You collect subscriptions?—Yes, we collect subscriptions. I do not undertake that part, it is Miss G. Benson who collects the subscriptions for the school, she is the treasurer. I only undertake the management of the school at the request of the Dean.

5864. What number of pupils have you attending the school at present?—There are from thirty-one to thirty-five every day in attendance in the upper school.

5865. How many pupils have you on the rolls?—There are now forty-five girls on the rolls with an average attendance of about thirty-five.

5866. What class of education do you give them?—Well there is what is called a very good English education given, including reading, writing, and arithmetic, and then all kinds of plain needlework are carefully taught.

5867. Are any of the girls attending the school going in for Intermediate education?—No, but we train them occasionally for entrance to the Church of Ireland Training College, Kildare-street, Dublin. We have sent up one to that place.

5868. To what class do your pupils belong?—They are usually the children of respectable citizens, there are not a very great many low class Protestants in Waterford.

5869. Have you any free pupils attending the school?—The children all pay 1d. per week as school fees.

5870. Is that uniform for the whole school?—Yes.

5871. What teaching staff have you got?—We have one teacher and an assistant monitor, who is paid £6 a year.

5872. What salary do you pay the principal teacher?—She is paid £40 a year, she is a certified teacher, she was trained at the Church of Ireland Training College, Kildare-street.

5873. Dr. TRAILL.—Was that under the old or new system?—Under the old; she has been with us eight or nine years.

5874. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Have you any gentlemen associated with you in the management of the school?—The Dean is the only one who takes part in the management. There is no one else connected with the committee but ladies, but we always consult the Dean when anything is required to be done.

5875. Does Mr. Harvey take no part in the management?—No, he merely keeps the building in repair, and gives us a subscription of £5 a year.

5877. How much does your annual subscription list amount to?—£28 5s. for the year 1896.

5878. Dr. TRAILL.—Why are these two schools quite separately managed?—Well, they were always managed by separate committees.

5879. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Your committee for the upper school consists of seven ladies with yourself as superintendent?—Yes; I visit it two or three times each week to see that everything is going on right.

5880. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The school is not under the National Board?—No.

6893. In the event of your obtaining the funds of which Mr. Harvey is trustee, for your school, would you be satisfied that the management should be changed so as to give all Protestants an opportunity of availing themselves of the education given there?—All classes of Protestants do come to the school at present.

6894. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you teach all the children attending the school the Church catechism?—Yes, they are all taught the Church catechism unless they object, and then, in case they object, they are not asked to learn it.

6895. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—I understand you to say that the school is really open to Protestants of all denominations?—Yes, we have all classes of Protestants at the school.

Oct. 28, 1887.
Mrs. Day.

Miss M. Barron, Treasurer and Secretary of the Infant and Junior Boys' School, Lady-lane, Waterford, sworn.

6897. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—You are treasurer of what is known as the lower school in Lady-lane?—I am treasurer and secretary of the infant school which is held in the room under the industrial school.

6898. How many pupils have you on the roll, and what is your average attendance?—We have 103 pupils on the roll, and our average attendance yesterday and to-day, was, I think, from sixty to seventy, but sometimes it is from seventy to eighty.

6899. I see you got last year subscriptions and donations amounting to £37 15s.?—Yes.

6900. And then you have a sum of £4 16s. 9d., interest on an Eastern Telegraph Company bond. Is that an investment?—Yes.

6901. In whose name is that invested?—In mine alone.

6902. Then there is the donation from the Adam's Trust, amounting to £10; by whom is that paid?—That is paid to me by the Bishop and Dean, who are the trustees of the Adam's Trust.

6903. Then you have a donation from the trustees of the School of Industry £10. When is that paid by?—We got that from Mr. Harvey. He pays it to us.

6904. What fees do you charge your pupils?—We charge them one penny a week each.

6905. Dr. TRAILL.—Do they all pay a penny a week?—Yes, unless they are very poor, when I can remit it if I choose.

6906. Has the teacher been trained?—Yes, she was trained at the Church of Ireland Training College, Kildare-place, Dublin. She has been with me over three years.

6907. Then she is not the same teacher that is in charge of the other school?—No.

6908. How many assistant teachers have you got?—We have two assistants. We pay them £31 10s. per year.

6909. Have they been trained?—No.

6910. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—You have a committee of five?—Yes, and I am also the superintendent.

6911. How are you appointed?—I was appointed by the committee in 1873. I have been working there since then.

6913. How do you fill up the vacancies on the committee?—I generally fill it up, and the rest of the committee agree. I propose some one for each vacancy. I manage the whole school.

6914. You have the use of the schoolroom separately by the permission of Mr. Harvey?—Yes, I pay him a shilling a year rent, and he keeps the school-room in repair.

6915. I suppose if the management of the funds of which Mr. Harvey is trustee, were given to a committee representing both schools, you would have no objection to the two schools being amalgamated?—

I would like to consult the other members of the committee before saying anything about amalgamation. Would the funds be put together?

6916. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—Yes.

Fryman.—I am afraid that would not be advantageous.

6917. But is it not you who collect for the other school?—No, it is my sister, Miss G. Barron.

6918. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think you would lose subscriptions if you had the one governing body for the two schools?—I am afraid so.

6919. But would not Mr. Harvey's fund help you?—Yes, it would.

6920. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would you have any objection to have the school thrown open to children of all Protestant denominations?—I would like to consult the other members of the committee.

6921. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you give the children religious instruction in the Church catechism?—Yes, they are all taught the Scriptures and the Church catechism.

6922. But if their parents objected to the children being instructed in the catechism would you insist upon teaching it?—Well, in that case it would not be taught, but I wish the school to be a Church of Ireland school.

6923. But in the upper school they do not force any child whose parents object to it, to learn the catechism?—That may be so.

6924. If they are all taught the Scriptures would not that be sufficient? Do you not think a knowledge of the Scriptures more important than a knowledge of the catechism?—Yes, of course, but then I should like to teach the children what I believe myself to be true.

6925. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—You would like to give your own interpretation to the Scriptures?—Yes, what I consider our Church's interpretation.

6926. Dr. TRAILL.—What difficulty prevents you putting your school under the National Board?—There is a school under the National Board in the town already.

6927. But why do you object to the National Board?—The reason I object to the National Board is—that we could only give religious instruction at certain hours of the day.

6928. Professor DOUGHERTY.—But as a matter of convenience and for the effectual working of the school, do you not find that at present you are restricted to certain hours of the day for religious instruction?—Yes, that may be so, but I object to being compelled to reserve religious instruction for certain hours. At present we open the school with a prayer and hymn, and close with a hymn and prayer, and we could not do that under the National Board.

6929. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I suppose the ladies' committee would be quite willing that the gentlemen should be incorporated, and the property vested in them, and that the management of the school should be left to the ladies' committee?—Yes, that would satisfy us.

Miss M. Barron.

Oct. 16, 1887.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE SCHOOL, STEPHEN'S STREET, WATERFORD
(WATERFORD CORPORATION FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL)

Joseph W. Howard, Town Clerk, sworn.

Joseph W.
Howard.

6927. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Do you know how the arrangement existing in 1865, between the Corporation and the Managers of St. John's College, ceased with regard to this school?—I have no knowledge at all of that, my lord, because the Corporation has had nothing to do with that school for a number of years past.

6928. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Did not the Corporation enter into an agreement with the Catholic Bishop of Waterford, to let those premises to him at £12 13s. 6d. a year? Was that lease ever made?—I think not, but I know that the resolution granting the lease has always been acted upon.

6929. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—In 1879 the premises were stated to be held on a lease from the Corporation to the Roman Catholic Bishop, but no lease seems ever to have been taken out?—Yes, there was a resolution to grant a lease to the Rev. Dr. O'Brien, the Roman Catholic Bishop, at the yearly rent of £12 13s. 6d., but that lease was never taken out, so far as I know, before the year 1879, nor has it been taken out since.

6930. Dr. TRAILL.—What is the date of the resolution of the Town Council agreeing to grant a lease to the Rev. Dr. O'Brien?—It was dated the 12th December, 1867.

6931. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is the rent still paid to the Corporation under that resolution?—Yes, it is paid to the borough treasurer. It is not paid to me.

6932. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What is done with the rent after it is paid to the borough treasurer?—Well, then it is corporate property, and goes into the borough fund.

6933. What was understood was, that the Corporation made such a lease as simply shared themselves of any rent, and thus gave the property for the purpose of establishing these schools?—Well, I say that the rent goes into the borough fund, and afterwards the head rent is paid out of the borough fund.

6934. Do the Corporation take any part in the management of the school at present?—None whatever.

6935. Nor do you know how it is being used now?—As far as the Corporation is concerned, they have made a letting of the building, and farther than that they know nothing about it.

6936. Then you do not even know that it is used for a school?—Oh, of course we have a general knowledge that it is used for an educational purpose. As far as we know a school has been going on there for years.

6937. We visited it this morning, and it is now a school for the poorest class of boys; and it was formerly a high class school? I understood that it is only within the last few weeks that it has been turned into a primary school.

6938. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The resolution states that the lease was given for the purpose of establishing a school in connection with the Catholic University, and that in case the building should cease to be used for an educational establishment, the Corporation could resume possession?—Yes.

6939. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Is it not a fact that this school has generally an educational endowment from the Corporation, and on that account they have taken part in the management?—The Corporation have taken no part whatever in the management of this school that I am aware of, and I think the Corporation is eminently uninterested for such management.

6940. Then it would satisfy the views of the Corporation if we can secure the premises for educational purposes?—I think so. The question, however, has never been mooted in the Corporation.

6941. Do you know what became of the endowment which they formerly gave as an educational grant to the College, has it been resumed by the Corporation?—No, they have not resumed it.

6942. Dr. TRAILL.—What was the amount of that former grant?—I think it was somewhere about £40 a year.

6943. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Is not that paid now by the Corporation?—No, it is not.

6944. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—I suppose it has never been paid since Dr. Price gave up the premises?—I cannot say; I think not.

6945. Dr. TRAILL.—How long is it since Dr. Price left?—I should say that it is over twenty years at the very least.

6946. Was he evicted from the premises?—I cannot say that he was evicted. I have no official knowledge of the matter, and it is a long time since I looked up the matter in the Corporation records.

6947. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Do you know whether that annual payment was a voluntary one or not?—I think it came down from the old Corporation; and there was, I believe, a condition attached to it that the master of the school should deliver a certain number of lectures in one of the city churches, I think St. Olave's.

6948. Do you know how this endowment was granted—was it by deed or otherwise?—I cannot say.

6949. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Are you able to form any estimate of the value of the premises?—Well, if they were to be let tomorrow as a dwelling-house I do not think they would bring more than £12 13s. 6d. The buildings look as if they would bring more than they really would. You see the locality is deteriorated, and in consequence the value of houses property in the street has fallen very much. If the houses were let as a dwelling-house, it could be let only in tenements.

6950. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you know could it bring £27 a year?—I do not think it would. The house is too big except to let as a tenement house.

6951. Would it bring £10 a year rent in that case?—I do not think it would, the locality is of such a nature that you could not get a high rent. If the whole premises were put up to auction tomorrow I do not believe they would bring £10 a year, unless houses in the same street do not bring more than £10 or £12 a year.

6952. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is there any building going on in that locality now?—No, there is no building going on there now. Indeed the neighbourhood has fallen so low, that it has been proposed in the Corporation to clear away the old houses as tenementary. The situation is not good and the houses are inhabited by the very poorest class of people.

6953. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—It was used as a high class school for a number of years?—Yes, but a much better site could be got for such a school.

6954. Professor DODDINGTON.—Has the Corporation spent any money on the building?—The Corporation has spent no money upon the place since the date of the lease.

6955. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do you think that for the benefit of the city the purpose for which the school is employed at present is one of the most useful to which the building could be applied?—Yes, I think so.

Rev. Jos. G. Phelan, Rector of St. John's Ecclesiastical College, sworn.

OCT. 28, 1887.

Rev. Jos. G. Phelan.

6906. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—I believe the school in Stephen's-street was formerly known as St. John's College School?—In 1858 it was called the Catholic University School; it was at that time in connection with the Catholic University. It was opened in 1853 or 1854. It has now ceased to exist as the College School. It was chiefly a preparatory school for our ecclesiastical college, and was known as St. John's College School.

6907. Who was the manager of it at that time?—I was manager of it while it was St. John's College School.

6908. How long did you manage it?—I was there for seven or eight years resident on the place managing it.

6909. What number of pupils had you at the school then?—We had a school of over 100 boys.

6910. Was it an Intermediate school?—Yes.

6911. How was it that it ceased to exist?—Well, the numbers attending our school was reduced by the Christian Brothers establishing an Intermediate school. Our charge was from five guineas to eight guineas, and they taught practically for nothing.

6912. Dr. TRAILL.—Did that charge include everything?—Yes, the fees we charged included stationery and books. I heard the superior of the Christian Brother's School state in evidence yesterday that the reduction in the numbers attending St. John's College School was owing to the Bishop of Osnery establishing a school at Kilmacow, this is a mistake; that I consider was not the reason why our numbers were reduced.

6913. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—How long has St. John's College been established?—That college has been in existence since 1804 or 1805.

6914. Have the boys who attended at St. John's College School gone to your college?—Not at all, we have no day school attached to St. John's College. St. John's College is the diocesan college.

6915. Then there is no Intermediate School under Roman Catholic management in Waterford but the Christian Brothers?—None but the Christian Brothers' School.

6916. Is there no school higher than the Christian Brothers' for Roman Catholic boys?—None; at least no Intermediate School. The one we had was intended to supply that want, and was carried on successfully for years, until the Christian Brothers started their Intermediate School.

6917. Dr. TRAILL.—When was St. John's College School closed?—It was only closed last year as an Intermediate School.

6918. Then it was not, you think, because of any interference on the part of the Bishop of Osnery by establishing another school at Kilmacow that caused the failure of the school?—No; I decidedly think not.

6919. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—How many pupils have you on the rolls of the school which now occupies the building?—There are over 300 boys on the rolls. These 300 boys were on the streets till the school was opened.

6920. They seem to belong to a poor class?—Yes, they are very poor. It has been for a long time in the Bishop's mind to open such a school.

6921. Are you a trustee for the place?—No. I have no legal connection with the place. I was merely acting with the Bishop. I was always under the impression that there was a lease for the place made out, and that it was handed over to the Bishop for educational purposes.

6922. Who pays the rent?—I have paid the rent since 1871, but I am not a trustee for the place. I was always addressed as the representative of Dr. O'Brien, and the Lord Bishop in matters regarding the rent; and I always took it for granted that there was a lease.

6923. Who is the manager of the school under the National Board?—The Bishop is the manager.

6924. What is the name of the parish in which the school is situated?—It is in St. Patrick's Parish, but the old name of the parish is St. Stephen's.

6925. Is that the Bishop's parish?—No, it is the condjutor Bishop's parish; it is at present under the administration of a condjutor.

6926. Who will be the manager of the new school under the National Board?—The Bishop.

6927. I believe that the present teachers belong to the Christian Brothers' order?—Yes, they are a French order; they are the original Christian Brothers; they are known as les frères des écoles chrétiennes.

6928. Will they receive salaries from the National Board?—Yes, they will receive salaries from the Board; they are certificated teachers under the National Board.

6929. Dr. TRAILL.—Whose money was spent upon the building in improving it?—It was the Bishop's money. It was money that was in the Bishop's own hands.

6930. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—We saw that there had been a good deal of money spent on the building since we were here last?—That was money resulting from the fees of the students. I spent that money myself. When I came into possession I spent a great deal of money. The residence was in a wretched condition; the contract for improvements in connection with the residence exceeded £150, and that sum was provided out of the pupils' fees. The Catholic University also lost a good deal of money by it during the time it was in their hands. When I got possession there was six years' rent due upon the place.

6931. Was that paid off?—Yes, that was paid by me, or rather by the Bishop for me. At present the rent is paid up to date, and there is no debt due.

6932. Rev. Dr. MEARNS.—The value of the premises as a dwelling-house would not be very great?—Well, no; the rooms are too large for an ordinary dwelling-house. If the improvements had not been made, so as to suit it for school purposes, it would be more apt to be let as a dwelling house, it then would be in the same state as the other houses in the street.

6933. The street, I understand, is not a prosperous or thriving one?—No, it is in a very poor quarter of the city, and there are several houses in the street in ruins, and a number of others closed.

6934. Then it is, perhaps, a good thing for the Corporation to have a solvent tenant of the house at the present time?—I should say that it decidedly is. We have improved the place, and spent a great deal of money upon it.

6935. Dr. TRAILL.—How much did you spend?—During my time I spent over £400 in improving the place; but then I had a very successful school, I had over 100 pupils who were paying me.

6936. How many of a staff had you then to assist you in the school work?—I had four or five assistant teachers.

6937. When did it cease to be so successful?—Well, about eight or ten years ago. It became a preparatory school for our ecclesiastical college. The numbers fell from 100 to 80, and then to 50. The last year in which the school was open there were not more than twenty boys attending it.

6938. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—To what do you attribute the decrease?—Well, I attribute it to the Christian Brothers opening an Intermediate department in their school, and teaching the pupils practically for nothing. In fact we have now no Intermediate school either for Protestants or Catholics in Waterford except the Christian Brothers' schools and the model schools. The respectable people of Waterford, as a rule, send their boys either to the Model Schools or the Christian Brothers', where they receive a very good elementary education, and then when the boys come to a certain age, about fourteen or fifteen, they send them off to Blackrock College or Clongowee Wood. I know several boys who have been sent by their parents to these colleges.

6969. Dr. TRAILL.—In whom do you think the premises ought to be vested in case we prepare a scheme for the school?—I think they ought to be vested in the bishop under the new scheme.

6970. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—You have a model school in Waterford, I understand?—Yes.

6971. Are there any Catholics going to it?—Yes; I think there are a few, but they are prohibited from going. It is really not practically available for Catholic boys.

6972. Dr. TRAILL.—Is the teacher of the model school a Roman Catholic?—Yes, and a very good one.

6973. Then why do you object to sending the boys there?—What we object to is the system.

PUBLIC SITTING—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1887.

At the Courthouse, Kilkenny.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NADEAU, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, B.D., D.Sc., ANTHONY TRAHL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, JUNR., was in attendance.

Lord Justice FITZGIBBON made an opening statement.

KILKENNY COLLEGE.

Mr. G. D. Burtchall (instructed by Mr. James Poe) appeared on behalf of the Marquess of Ormonde.

The Right Rev. William Falcouster Walsh, Lord Bishop of Cacer, Ferns, and Leighlin, sworn.

Rev. William
Walsh.

6974. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—I believe that you and the Provost of Trinity are the visitors of Kilkenny College?—Yes.

6975. Have you any control over the funds of the college?—None whatever.

6976. Have you any control over the master of the college beyond the general power of visitation?—No; we have no power over the master except the power to visit the school and report to Lord Ormonde our views upon the matter.

6977. Have you recently visited the college in your capacity of visitor?—The Provost and I visited it in January last, and reported to Lord Ormonde several things which we thought desirable should be done. On a subsequent visit we found that of what we desired to be done part had been done and part had not.

6978. What were the things you desired to be done?—Well, on our first visit we found that part of the college premises had been sold. This has now been discontinued since our report to Lord Ormonde. The other matter which we thought should be carried out was the execution of some repairs to the premises, and this has not been done. These were to have been finished by the 1st October. I believe that under the scheme of endowment Lord Ormonde can apply the endowment to carry out repairs to the building.

6979. In 1879, it was reported that the number of pupils in the year 1857 was forty-seven, and that in 1879, at the time when the Commission visited it, there were no pupils; are you aware whether there are any pupils at the school now?—There are none there now. I have visited the school within the last fortnight and found no pupils at the school.

7000. How long have there been none?—Well, I think for some time past there have been no pupils at the school. It has been gradually going down. I think there were two pupils at the school when the Provost and I visited it last January.

7001. Mr. Mahaffy reported that in 1879 there were three boarders and four day boys at the school. Has the number been much larger than that since 1879, or was the number reduced?—I think the number has been gradually reduced from year to year for a number of years past. I believe about three years ago there were only five boys.

7002. Have you formed any opinion as to the cause of the falling off in the numbers attending the school?—Well, I believe that when the vacancy occurred, and Mr. Weir appointed head master, that he was the only candidate for the post at the time. He was a very well known scholar at that time, and for many years had turned out admirable boys who were well taught. I need scarcely say that he is at an advanced age now, and he is not now, in consequence, able to give that energy to the work which is so necessary for the master of a large boys' school.

7003. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—About what age is Mr. Weir now?—Well, I should say he is past seventy.

7004. And has he a right to retain the mastership until he either dies or resigns of his own accord?—I think there is no provision in the deed giving power to anyone to remove the master.

7005. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—But who has the power of appointing a master for the school?—The master is appointed, I understand, by the Board of Trinity College.

7006. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—And is the appointment so made that the master retains his office whether he is efficient or inefficient?—I think so. I know the Provost and I, as visitors, have no power except to report to Lord Ormonde on the state of the school. In times past the school was a very celebrated one. I believe that Bishop Berkeley, Dean Swift, the present Bishop of Peterboro', the Provost of Trinity, and Dr. Newell were all educated there.

7007. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—Can you give us any suggestion how to make this endowment useful?—I think if, under the powers entrusted to your lordship, a scheme was drawn up which would preserve the original intentions of the founder there might easily be a board constituted which would manage the school successfully. I think, according to the terms of the old deed, the master must be an M.A. of one of the Universities. It is hard to get a master with the qualifications required by the deed for the small endowment attached to the school. I think the only thing that can be done is to turn it into an English school instead of keeping it up as a classical school.

7008. Dr. TRAILL.—But that would be a retrograde step?—Well, if you can increase the endowment it could still be maintained as a classical school. But it is very few masters who are fully competent to conduct a classical school will take a salary of only about £100 a year.

Mr. Barckhoff.—It is £140 a year English, with a house and land, my lord.

7009. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—How much land is there?—I don't suppose there is more than an acre.

7010. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—There appears to be over nine acres according to the last report.

7011. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is the master allowed to take boarders?—Yes.

7012. Has he the houses rent free?—Yes.

7013. A large house with land attached rent free and £129 a year is not a very bad endowment for a master of arts?—Well, still the fact remains there was only one candidate.

Dr. TRAILL.—Coleraine, one of the most successful schools in the North of Ireland has only an endowment of about £180 a year.

7014. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The founder appears to have been Chancellor of Oxford and Dublin?—I think there was another foundation, a much older one than that to which you are now referring. I think the foundation was renewed in the time of that member of the Ormonde family, but there was a much older foundation than that.

7015. I see there is also a paragraph of the deed dealing with the power of appointing the head master?—I rather think that power of appointment fell into the hands of the Board of Trinity College in consequence of the Act of Attainder.

7016. How long, as a matter of fact, is it since there was what you could really call an efficient school in this building?—Well, I should say at the time of his appointment he had a very efficient school, and for seven or eight years after his appointment.

7017. I understand that the Provost and you visited the school and reported upon it to Lord Ormonde?—Yes, we sent him a report, of which I have a copy. [The witness then read the following extract from a letter].—

Having in our capacity as visitors inspected Kilkenny College buildings, it is our duty to call your attention to certain repairs (Schedule of Repairs enclosed), which we consider necessary to be done in a workmanlike manner. We beg to call your attention to the fact that part of the building has been rebuilt; this has been done without our consent, and we direct you to obtain possession of that part of the premises and to restore them to their original state.

Since we reported to Lord Ormonde the repairs have not been executed, but the part of the premises subject have been surrendered.

7018. Did you examine the pupils who were at the school at the time when you made the report to Lord Ormonde?—There were only two pupils then, and we had not an opportunity of examining them. Perhaps I ought to say, as Mr. Weir does not appear to be here to-day, that the Provost received a letter of explanation from him.

7019. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you ever reported on the educational condition of the school?—Yes. In 1875, immediately after I came here, I reported on its educational condition to Lord Ormonde. The school was inefficient at that time in not having a sufficient number of pupils attending it, but the few who were there were well taught, I believe.

7020. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Is there any reasonable prospect of a supply of scholars being obtained for the school in this neighbourhood if it is started once more?—I believe there is.

7021. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How are the pupils who would attend the school provided for at present?—I believe they go to a private school.

7022. Dr. TRAILL.—Who keeps the private school?—It is kept by Mr. Creighton, I believe.

7023. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Is it a university school?—I believe it is.

7024. Do you know how many pupils are attending Mr. Creighton's school?—I have been told there are thirty-seven boys at it.

7025. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Does your lordship know of any Protestant boys in Kilkenny who are available for this school, and who are not going to any school at present in consequence of the closing of Kilkenny College?—I think not; but there are boys belonging to the neighbourhood who have had to go as boarders to other schools.

7026. We find that boarders are not usually sent to schools in their own neighbourhood, but are generally sent some distance from their homes. It does not appear, then, that as far as Protestant education is concerned, there is any want of additional educational resources in Kilkenny?—Well, I think it would be an advantage to have such boys going to Mr. Weir's school.

7027. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—There appears to be a private school, unendowed, competing successfully with Kilkenny College?—Yes, there is Mr. Creighton's private school.

7028. Supposing that a local board of control were established, on you suggest who should be the members of it?—Well, I think it would be desirable that the Provost should be a member of it, the Bishop of Ossory ought to be another, then those two might have the power of co-opting two or three others.

7029. Has there been any formal visit to the school except the one you mention of last January?—Oh, yes, I think so. Dr. Mahaffy came down and held an examination some years ago. He was distinctly deputed for this purpose by the Board of Trinity College.

7030. We find that in the North of Ireland, in the case of appointing managing committees for schools, it has been found beneficial to associate some of the parents of the boys attending the school with the managing body. Do you think that might be done in this case?—I think it would be well to associate some of the parents of the boys who pay fees with the managing body.

7031. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—But so far as Kilkenny is concerned success could only be attained for the school by drawing off pupils from other schools to which they are at present going?—Well, I think if there is an endowment available for the people of Kilkenny, they should get the benefit of it; that is my opinion on the matter.

7032. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Is there anything in the regulations dealing with the class of education to be given at the school, or which your lordship can offer a suggestion?—I think it is not a good thing to make it necessary for the master who obtains the appointment to know Hebrew.

7033. But it is a necessary qualification under the deed of the original founder?—Yes, I know that; but I consider that such a qualification for a master of a boys' school is not at all necessary; it is out of place, I think, to make it incumbent on the master to know Hebrew.

7034. Would you make it necessary for the master to know Greek and Latin?—Well, I have no objection to him knowing Greek and Latin, but I do not think that it should be necessary for him to be a master of arts, which he must, according to the old deed.

7035. Do you think he should be a graduate of a university?—Well, that is more a matter for your lordship to settle.

7036. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—I presume the building is the most valuable part of the endowment?—The building is a very good house indeed.

7037. Do you know that the building was erected by the Irish Parliament in the last century?—I have heard so. But I believe there are additions to the house since that time.

7038. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do you know what part of the building represents the grant received from the Irish Parliament?—I cannot say.

On 19, 1887.
Rev. William
Pakenham
Weir.

Oct. 19, 1887.

The Right
Hon. William
Fenwick
Walsh.

17036. Your lordship thinks that it would be an improvement if instead of requiring that the head master should be a master of arts, it were required only that he should be a graduate?—I think, perhaps, you might get a master who would do quite well for the Kilkenny school without being a graduate at all.

17040. Dr. TRAILL.—You mean as compared with some graduates?—Yes.

17041. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—Do you think that the class of education gives ought to include a middle class education, including Latin and Greek?—I think there should be a qualification that the master of the school, or some of his assistants, ought to be able to teach Latin and Greek; it would prevent boys of the neighbourhood being sent away to distant boarding schools.

17042. Mr. BARTCHELL.—The only points to which Lord Ormonde, for whom I appear, wished to draw your attention, were these two clauses in the charter of foundation with regard to the religion of the school. Lord Ormonde was also anxious that in any scheme that should be adopted, he should have a voice in the appointment of the master and in the control of the school. This voice he desires to have because he has to pay the endowment of £140 a year. He wished me to point out that he believed there would be evidence before you, that there was ample material in Kilkenny for the support of the school, but that from a variety of circumstances the school has failed, the boys being drawn off to other schools. The present master is not as physically capable of carrying on the school as when he was first appointed, and there is no way of making any provision, that, in case the master is not able to conduct the school, he can be supplanted by a man who is physically more competent to do so. There is no way provided of pensioning such a master, and carrying on the school under a younger and more energetic man. Lord Ormonde considers that there might be such powers vested in a governing body as would enable them to make provision for the master. There is no difficulty whatever in the matter, except that the power to do so does not exist under the old charter; there is no power to so deal with the endowment as to allow a pension out of the endowment. There are some other points to which I wish to call your lordship's attention. The first of these is with regard to the master of the school. The clause dealing with the qualifications of the master provides that he should be a master of arts; this provision with regard to the master plainly points out the class of school which the founder intended to establish. The other matters to which I desire to direct your lordship's attention are the 15th and 17th clauses, which provide that the master should take special care of the secular and religious instruction of the boys. That he is to instruct them by good example, and to read the prayers of the Church of England and Ireland both morning and evening in certain convenient places in the house; that the prayers used are to be such as are approved of by the Bishop of Osnery, and that the scholars are to be regularly assembled in the school for the purpose of being instructed in the Church catechism.

17043. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you make any claim under clause 71?

Mr. BARTCHELL.—No, because all parties are agreed that if there was some local control provided under the scheme it would practically settle that matter.

17044. Why has Lord Ormonde refused to pay the endowment?

Mr. BARTCHELL.—I understand that Lord Ormonde has declined to pay the endowment on the grounds that were reported by the visitors, namely, that the repairs considered necessary had not been carried out, and also that those alterations in the premises, and the shuffling that had been made without their consent or approval; these are Lord Ormonde's objections to paying the endowment.

17045. But how could he refuse to pay the endowment for the last two years when his attention was only called to these matters, to which you have referred, last January by the visitors?

Mr. BARTCHELL.—Well, I cannot answer you that.

17046. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—You have said that Lord Ormonde would desire to have a veto in the new governing body of the school. What form do you suggest this control should take?

Mr. BARTCHELL.—Well, I think Lord Ormonde would be satisfied that, whatever regulations you should make for the future management, he should have a substantial voice in the matter. I think as the Bishop of Osnery and the Provost of Trinity were two of the visitors under the old scheme, they should naturally have a place in the new governing body.

17047. Dr. TRAILL.—With regard to the Provost of Trinity, I think he would find it difficult in his circumstances to act as one of the governing body, and it would perhaps be better if there was some local power, an official person, the Dean of Osnery for example, who could, being resident in the neighbourhood, set on the governing body with less danger of interference with his other duties. Have you had any communication with the Provost about the matter?

Mr. BARTCHELL.—No.

*James Maxwell Weir, M.A., Head Master of the College, sworn.

James Maxwell
Weir, M.A.

17048. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—We understand you were appointed in April, 1874?—Yes.

17049. When you came here in 1874 what number of pupils had you at the school?—Well, I may say six or seven, except what I brought myself to the school.

17050. Then you brought a number of pupils with you?—Yes, I brought fourteen boarders from Limerick.

17051. What was the largest number of boarders you had at any time at the school?—I had nineteen boarders from 1874 to 1876 or 1877.

17052. Then I suppose during the time you had the nineteen a considerable number of these were some of the original fourteen boarders you brought with you from Limerick?—They were.

17053. Are they all counted in the nineteen you have mentioned?—They are; those boys remained with me till they completed their education, some of them went off to fill positions, and others of them entered college.

17054. You had a school at Limerick before you came here?—Oh, yes, it was a boarding and day school.

17055. How many boarders had you there?—I had twelve boarders, I had not room for much more than that.

17056. But you say you brought fourteen boarders with you from the Limerick school to here?—Yes, but some of the day boys I had at Limerick came with me here as boarders.

17057. How many pupils had you attending the Limerick school?—I had from seventy to ninety boys from time to time. I had the school in No. 1 Crescent and in Peers-square.

17057A. Was it a classical school?—It was a classical and general school. It was not solely confined to classical work. We used to get a number of science scholarships in the Queen's Colleges, and also numerous other distinctions.

17058. You are a graduate of Trinity College?—Yes, I am a graduate and scholar. I was the first class at entrance in 1849, and first scholar of my class in year 1852. Here is a copy of my appointment and some of my testimonials.

17059. It is the Board of Trinity College recommends, and the visitors appoint the master?—No; it was the Board of Trinity College appointed me. The appointment is altogether vested in the Board of Trinity College, as you will see from the statutes, the original statutes of the foundation of the college.

*Appendix B, No. XX., p. 504.

7060. What was the largest number of day boys you had at any period attending Kilkenny College?—I think about fifteen or sixteen was the largest number of day boys I had.

7061. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—How many did you find when you came here?—I think there were four or five day boys and no boarders, but a couple came after I brought the fourteen with me from Limerick.

7062. What accommodation is there for boarders at the school?—There is accommodation for, I am sure, sixty boarders at the school.

7063. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—What is the largest number of day boys you had?—I had about thirty-one or thirty-two boys altogether down to 1876 or 1877.

7064. Within the last eleven years what have the numbers been?—Well, within that period the numbers have been falling off gradually.

7065. To what cause do you attribute this decrease in the numbers?—Well, in the first place, scarlatina broke out at the school, and I sent away all the boarders except one or two, who were taken ill with the disease.

7066. What year did the scarlatina break out among the boys?—Well I cannot certainly tell whether it was in the year 1877 or 1878. I think, however, it was in the latter year. Well, after the scarlatina the boys did not come back, and then, since that year, I have only had, from time to time, three or four boarders.

7067. When did the number of the day boys fall away?—I completed the education of all that were there, and then others did not come in their place.

7068. When did the boarders leave?—The last boarder I had is now assistant-master in a grammar school in England. He left on the 24th May last.

7069. From the report of 1879 it appears that Mr. Mahaffy, who visited the school then, found the number of the pupils reduced to seven; has there been any larger number since the date of that report?—Well, there has been about the same number.

7070. There are none at the school now?—No.

7071. How long is it since there were no pupils at the school?—Since the 24th of May last.

7072. How many were there last year?—There were five or six.

7073. Were any of these day boys?—Yes, a few of them were day boys.

7074. How long have you been engaged in teaching?—I have been forty years teaching this year. I commenced my career as master of the Endowed School of Eyre Court, Co. Galway, in 1837. This school was under the Clere Street Commissioners.

7075. What income did you derive altogether from the endowment?—The endowment is £145, I was paid according to Irish currency, but according to the statute of limitation I should be paid £140 English.

7076. Did you ever get more than the £140 Irish?—No, except what I made from the fees of the pupils who were at the school.

7077. There is some land attached to the school?—There is a lawn, and no other land.

7078. The land, houses, building, and site comprise, I see, about 9½ acres?—I do not think there is so much. I think about eight acres is the amount.

7079. Was this land about the school profitable to you?—Well, I sometimes got from £12 to £15 for the grazing of it; that is the only money endowment that I get out of the school except the £140 Irish, and I have to pay the head-rent of £5 a year.

7080. To whom is this head-rent paid?—I paid the £5 a year head-rent to the Marquis of Ormonde.

7081. Do you know for what part of the building or land this head-rent is payable?—I think it is paid for the tenancy of the lower part of the grounds, not of the site of the house.

7082. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you certain whether it is for the land or the house that this head-rent is paid to Lord Ormonde?—I believe it is for the lawn, and for a part of it only; I think about the half of it.

7083. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It is stated in the former report that the poor-law valuation of the premises is £92?—It is not that now; I got the poor-law valuation reduced to £51, and that represents the present valuation of the property.

7084. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—Had you formerly some Roman Catholic pupils?—Yes, I had.

7085. How many had you; I think I saw in the report of the last Commission that you had eighteen?—I had not eighteen; I had nine or ten at one time.

7086. With regard to these pupils, did you fulfil the condition of the deed by instructing them in the Church catechism, and reading certain prayers to them?—Yes, I did this with all the boys, with the exception of the Roman Catholic pupils; these conditions were not fulfilled with regard to them.

7087. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Had you any teaching staff last year except yourself?—I had assistance up to August, 1888; I had a student of Trinity College, a mathematical student, named Rountree. When I had no pupils I did not need a master. I had to dispense with Mr. Rountree's services last August twelve months.

7087A. What fees did you charge for boarders and day boys?—I used to charge for boarders from £40 to £50, and for the day boys I usually charged from £6 to £8.

7088. Had you ever any pupils applying to be admitted as half-boarders as being the children of parents residing in Kilkenny and the Liberties?—No, I never had.

7089. Had you as a matter of fact any boys attending the school from Kilkenny or the Liberties?—Yes, several; all the day boys were from the town and neighbourhood of Kilkenny.

7090. Did any of them come from a distance?—Yes, one came from Thomastown.

7091. How far is that from the school?—That is about seven miles away. He was a half-boarder the boy who came from Thomastown.

7092. What do you mean, by a half-boarder?—He used to go home for the night, and then after school he dined at my place. That pupil is in the army now; he is a son of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

7093. What is your present age?—I was sixty-two my last birthday.

7094. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—To what causes do you attribute the falling away of the pupils attending Kilkenny College?—Well, there are several causes. I had opposition from a variety of sources. There was the Government opposition—the model schools—and people who want to give their children an English education, prefer to send them to these schools on account of cheapness. Then I lost my Roman Catholic pupils who go to their own college; the Roman Catholic clergy prefer their own college to any other. Then the Incorporated Society have a school in this neighbourhood. And besides these things the people have a mania for sending their children away to distant schools. They send them away to English or to other schools that have more inducements in the way of exhibitions. I have been frequently referred to by the parents of pupils to know whether there were any exhibitions attached to Kilkenny College, or other inducements of that kind, which would assist in defraying the cost of a boy's education.

7095. Where, as a rule, have such boys gone to?—I found that they usually went to the Royal schools where there are such inducements.

7096. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Did any of your boys leave you to go to these schools?—Some of them went to Tipperary to the Erasmus Smith school. There are exhibitions open to pupils from the Erasmus Smith schools at Trinity.

7097. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Are there any exhibitions attached to the Kilkenny school?—None at all, not even a fund for giving the boys prizes. I made an unsuccessful effort to get up a fund for this purpose.

7098. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—Do you think are there many boys going to the model school here, who would naturally go to your school if there was not a model school in Kilkenny?—I believe that there are boys of the same class that used to go to my school in Limerick, going to the model school here.

7109. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you mean that there are boys going to the model school here who could afford to pay £5 or £6 a year for their education?—Yes, I believe there are.

7110. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Do you make any provision in your school for commercial classes?—Yes, always, since ever I first set up as a teacher. I had science and English and everything else necessary taught.

7111. Did you make book-keeping one of the subjects?—Yes, I have had book-keeping taught in the school for a long time. One of my pupils passed for the Bank of Ireland; he was sent to the manager of the bank here.

7112. Do you know how long the school was vacant before you came here?—About three months; but it was closed for about twelve months before that. I was appointed in April, 1874; but I did not come here till the following August, because Dr. Martin had his furniture and family at the school, and I did not like to come till he had cleared out of the premises. There had been a complete break up of the school in Dr. Martin's time, in consequence of an outbreak of scarlatina. I had then to get the place disinfected before I could bring my boys into it, and also before I could take possession of the house I had to pay £500 of debt that was on the place.

7113. To whom had you to pay this debt of £500?—I had to pay it to the Board of Trinity College. The exact sum was £463. This sum I had to pay to the credit of the Board of Trinity College, and they settled with Dr. Martin.

7114. Did Dr. Martin get the whole of this sum paid by you to the credit of the Board?—I think there was a certain amount deducted from it by the Board for dilapidations to the premises.

7115. Did the Board of Trinity College exact the repairs to the premises?—No, they did not repair the premises, but I repaired them, and the repairs were inspected and approved by Mr. McCarthy, the architect of Trinity College, Dublin, in the year 1875.

7116. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—One of your predecessors had expended a sum of money in repairs?—Yes, Dr. Browne spent £926 in repairs, and it was agreed between the Board of Trinity College and himself that, upon his retirement, his successor should pay him £694, being three quarters of £926. Dr. Martin, who succeeded, paid Dr. Browne £694, and when on the retirement of Dr. Martin, I was appointed Head Master, I was required to pay £463 into bank, half of the original sum of £926. It was, however, agreed between the Board and myself that, upon my retirement, I should be repaid, by my successor, half the sum I paid, that is, £231 10s. The Board gave me £138 to carry out repairs when I came here, but I expended more than double that amount.

7117. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—How much of your salary is in arrears at present?—I have not been paid for the last year and a half. My last half year's salary was due on the 29th September.

7118. When was the last payment of your salary made to you?—The last payment was the 25th March, 1885. That is the last payment I got. I have received no payment since then, and I have had to pay rates and taxes on the school premises ever since.

7119. What is the annual amount of rates and taxes you have had to pay?—They vary in amount, sometimes they are higher than at other times. As a general rule the rates and taxes amount to between £20 and £30 a year.

7120. Mr. Burtlesell.—Have you kept the house in repair?—I have always kept the house in repair, but this last year I have not been able to do so as my money has been kept from me. Previous to this year all the repairs that were necessary were done every year.

7121. Dr. TRAILL.—How does it come that you have to keep the premises in repair?—I was bound by my deed of appointment to keep the building in repair; it is in the statute of foundation, I think.

7122. Then previous to the time when your salary ceased to be paid you kept the house in repair?—Yes, I repaired it every year. It has cost me over £200 since I came here to pay for the repairing of the place.

7123. Mr. Burtlesell.—I suppose you thought you were entitled to your salary whether the repairs were executed or not?—Well, I was not able to do it without getting my salary. Every year since I came here I have had out from £10 to £15 for repairs, besides getting the place thoroughly overhauled and repaired immediately before I came here. Since I came to the school I built a pair of entrance gates which cost me over £12. The entrance gates that are there at present are not the same entrance gates that were there when I came.

7124. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you taken any steps for the recovery of your salary?—Not at all—as I have an objection to go to law.

7125. Mr. Burtlesell.—When did the master, that the people of Kilkenny and the neighbourhood here, according to your account, for sending away their sons to distant schools and to England, since upon the people; was it since you came here?—Well, I cannot tell you that, but I know that it is the case all the same.

7126. Dr. TRAILL.—You say that scarlatina broke up the school on a former occasion when Dr. Martin was the head master. Were the sanitary arrangements of the school overhauled by you before you entered into possession so as to avoid, if possible, a recurrence of the epidemic?—Yes, the sewers were all opened at my expense and thoroughly cleaned and overhauled.

7127. How many years after the first outbreak of the scarlatina did the second outbreak occur?—It was in 1878. The first outbreak took place in 1873, I think, and the second in 1875.

7128. Lord Justice FRINGHAM (quoting from a document handed in to the Commissioners).—I am from this report that it would cost £300 to put the premises in proper repair?—I think that is a mistake. Though they say it would cost £500, I do not believe it would take so much now. I think about £200 would do all the repairs that are absolutely necessary. But of course you could lay out £2,000 in improving the place, or even £3,000.

7129. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do you happen to know how much of the present building is erected for the £5,000 given by the Irish Parliament at the end of the last century?—I believe the entire building was erected by a grant from the Irish Parliament. I saw in an old directory of Kilkenny that the Irish Parliament granted £10,000 in 1790.

7130. We understood that the sum was about £5,000?—I saw this in an old directory of Kilkenny. I thought to bring it with me but was unable to obtain it.

The Right Rev. Dr. Browne, Lord Bishop of Osnery.

The Right Rev.
Bp.

7131. I consider the Roman Catholic body have some claims for the consideration of the Commission in the drafting of a new scheme for this school. My grounds are these: the school was originally established for Protestants, I admit, that is plain from the original statutes, but it has failed entirely of being any use to the Protestant body. At present it is quite manifest, from the evidence which has been given here to-day, that the school has been just kept on its legs for the last fourteen years; it has during that period been barely kept alive. It is evident that Mr. Wair brought here from Limerick for the purpose of rehabilitating the school, but his efforts have only been attended with complete failure. I do not mean to say that it is owing to any fault on Mr. Wair's part. It may be that the people of the district are Catholic and I believe that is a reason. I think, that, as the school is a failure so far as the Protestant body is concerned, and as the Commission is empowered under the Act to draft a new scheme for the school, the Catholics have a right to some consideration in the drafting of the new scheme—the original object having failed and Catholics not being allowed to go to the school, both on account of their religious convictions, and also, because they cannot comply with the conditions laid down in the original statutes. The question is a matter for the Commission to decide, but I am decidedly of opinion that in the preparation of the new scheme for the government of the school the Catholics have a claim to consideration. There was one point just touched upon in the evidence, and this might operate against the claim of the Catholic body. In glancing over the Act I saw, that according to the Act by which the Commission is constituted, sub-section 1 of section 7, the Commission has no power to deal with any endowment which is in the gift of Trinity College. Possibly there might be an objection to the Commission dealing with this endowment on that ground, and in taking evidence upon the point the Commissioners might be acting ultra vires. But you will also see that the whole Act does apply the moment the consent of the party interested in the endowment has been intimated.

7151. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Our mode of dealing with endowments like this is as follows—we take all the evidence we can get about the matter, we hear the founder's representatives either personally or by counsel. If he has the power of withholding consent we then do not attempt to force a scheme upon the governing body; but we are quite ready, in case they consent, to draft a new scheme for them. In this case we are now merely taking evidence, and ascertaining the state of the school, and also the views of all parties who consider themselves interested.

Dr. Browne.—Well, I maintain that this school is not in the gift of Trinity College; I maintain that it is simply administered by them. The original statutes appointed the Ormonde family as the administrators, and it was only when the Act of Attainder was past against the 6th Duke in 1715, that the administration of the school passed into the hands of the Board of Trinity College. His estates were all forfeited in 1715, and he left no male issue. However, there is another point I wish to raise, that is, supposing hereafter that this objection to which I have referred should be decided against us. With regard to this endowment, I wish to draw your attention to this—it is manifest that the building which cost over £3,000 was erected by State money. That money was supplied by the State; it was a State grant to the school. And according to the evidence, and the principles laid down in the Report of the Commission already published, the Commission can deal with public money that has been given for endowments. From the evidence given to-day part of this endowment is money granted by the State, and the Lord Justice has said that the State is a continuing body, that it never dies. Even if the fund be diverted to another source from that to which it was intended originally, the State is supposed to change its mind. I would claim that, even if the other objection carries, the grant for the building of the house at least is within the powers of the Commission.

7152. Lord Justice NAMM.—Supposing that the property were sold would your contention be that the proceeds would be free property; you would draw a distinction in that case between the annuity paid by Lord Ormonde and the money given by the Irish Parliament?—Yes, that is my contention.

7153. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you make any claim to the endowment of Lord Ormonde, and if so, on what grounds do you base it?—I claim that endowment as I stated before as one fairly within the powers of the Commission.

7154. But have you read the will of Lord Ormonde, that he gives it to Protestants? Do you think that under these circumstances we could take the endowment from Protestants and give it to Roman Catholics?—Well that is a nice legal point for the Commission to decide. My contention is that the endowment has failed with regard to the objects for which it was originally given. If I be asked in what proportion I would claim it, I think in its entirety, on the grounds that it has totally failed to be of any use to the Protestant body. The Ormonde who founded the endowment made no provision for it in case the objects for which it had been established failed, and in that case I think the Commission have full power to deal with it. I would consider that I have a claim to it. The Catholic body have made great sacrifices in the way of education, and the Protestant body are very well supplied with schools already, and I am of opinion that the claims of the body I represent ought to have some weight with the Commission on the drafting of a new scheme.

7155. But what use would the building be when you have St. Kieran's College?—The building certainly would be of no use to me as an educational establishment; I have no purpose whatever to which I could devote it. But my point is that the building could be disposed of, and the money accruing from the sale could then be applied to educational purposes. This, I think, puts my views fairly before the Commission.

7156. Mr. Weir.—The school under me has been anything but a failure. I have prepared a great number of pupils for entrance to Trinity and the Queen's Colleges. One succeeded in gaining two gold medals and one a science scholarship. Another pupil gained two gold medals in the Queen's University, and three were all since I came here. Another pupil gained a scholarship in Trinity, and the master before me could show as much record as I could show.

7157. Dr. TRAILL.—Were you trained as a teacher? Mr. Weir.—Yes. I have been teaching since the 1st March, 1847.

7158. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How many pupils had you from the city of Kilkenny during your period of control over the college?

Mr. Weir.—I never had more than five or six at any one time.

7159. Lord Justice NAMM.—How many had you altogether from the city of Kilkenny?

Mr. Weir.—I never had more than a dozen at any time.

7160. But do you know how many had you altogether who were actually from Kilkenny?

Mr. Weir.—I should say I had never more than a dozen.

7161. Professor DEANE.—Were these boys all members of the Church of Ireland?

Mr. Weir.—I had at one time a few Roman Catholic boys.

7162. Had you any boys belonging to other Protestant denominations?

Mr. Weir.—I had some Presbyterian boys.

7163. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What is the largest number of those boys you had?

Mr. Weir.—I think about four. I had one Presbyterian boy named Wilson, and two boys of the name of Riddle.

7164. Professor DEANE.—Had you any Presbyterian day boys?

Mr. Weir.—Yes, I had two Presbyterian day boys of the name of Riddle.

7165. Did you require these boys to go to church?

Mr. Weir.—No, no; the Riddles were only day boys, but Wilson used to go to the Presbyterian place of worship when he was here, but a good many times he went to the Protestant Church with the other boys.

7166. Dr. Browne.—I might be asked what proposal I would have to make in my view of the circumstances with regard to this endowment. Well, I would not exactly go in for a grant of the endowment for our Catholic school, pure and simple. I believe one of the clauses of the Act by which you are constituted requires, in case any part of an endowment is appointed for any establishment, that there will be the right of inspection and also of audit of the funds. I do not care to go in for that. I do not ask, therefore, that the endowment be given to Catholic schools purely as such. There are other ways of giving this endowment in which it may possibly be shared by non-Catholic schools. I believe in other places it has been suggested that endowments, like this attached to Kilkenny College, which are open for re-arrangement by the Commission, should be applied for prizes under the Intermediate examinations open to boys from the district. In case the endowment was applied in this manner it is probable that a considerable portion of the endowment would reach the Catholic body, inasmuch as we have competed very successfully for prizes under the Intermediate Board with these schools.

7137. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you have these prizes in the shape of result fees, or prizes to the pupils, or both?—Both.

D. H. Creighton sworn.

D. H. Creighton.

7138. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—You are engaged in teaching in Kilkenny?—Yes, I am engaged in teaching an Intermediate and Civil Service Academy, and also in catering for the Royal University.

7139. How long have you had a school in Kilkenny?—I began the school myself in 1899, November 1st. The school is now almost seven years in existence.

7140. The school is a private one?—Yes, there is no endowment attached to it. I maintain the school myself.

7141. What are your qualifications as a teacher?—I taught in some boarding schools in England, from 1874 to 1889.

7142. What schools did you teach in there?—The last one was the Manchester Grosvenor school, and I also taught in the Tallam Grammar School, Brixton, London, S.W.

7143. To what religious denomination do you belong?—I belong to the Church of Ireland.

7144. Are your pupils principally Protestant boys?—I have a return of the religious persuasion of the boys with me—there are seventeen Church of Ireland boys, one Presbyterian, and twelve Roman Catholic boys.

7145. What is your course of education?—Well, it is very general, we prepare for the Intermediate, also for the matriculation of the Royal University, the various Civil Service departments, the Banks, and various other examinations.

7146. Have you had any successes at the Intermediate examinations?—Yes, I have a return of the various examinations passed by the pupils. At the Intermediate I have had eight passes in special subjects, nine passes with honours, one exhibition of £15, one of £25 for three years, and one of a like value retained, also a £15 exhibition retained and a middle grade prize, also a scholarship of £40 at Redcliffe Seminary. I have got some female pupils, my wife assists me in that department; we work together. The girls join my classes in some subjects. In the Royal University department, I have had eight pupils passed the matriculation examination direct from the school; I have also had three passes in the First University Examination in Arts, another pupil has passed the College of Surgeons preliminary examination. Then in the Civil Service department 22 passed the lower division preliminary examination; fourteen have obtained Civil Service appointments, four Provincial Bank clerkships, one National Bank clerkship. Two National teachers came to me for evening work in order to be assisted in special subjects for their Training College examinations. All those positions were obtained by pupils prepared at my place.

7147. What staff have you to assist you in preparing the pupils?—I have one assistant master, and my brother has also latterly assisted me. He is a matriculated student of the Royal University.

7148. What terms do you charge?—My terms are various; they range from 30s. a quarter to £12 a quarter. I get £4 a month for one boy.

7149. Dr. TRAILL.—For what examination are you preparing the boy who pays you £4 a month?—He is preparing for the Army Preliminary. He is the son of an officer stationed in Kilkenny.

7150. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What schools compete with yours?—All of them. When I came here first there were twenty-three boys at Kilkenny College. I consider there is a great want for a Protestant school in Kilkenny.

7151. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you be willing to make your school a Protestant one?—I would be willing to make mine a Protestant school if I got support for it in that way, because the Catholic Church does not approve of boys coming to mixed schools, I believe.

7152. You have not got a University degree?—No, but I studied at Owens' College for a couple of years. I was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

7153. Are you a native of Kilkenny?—Yes, I am a native of the town.

7154. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—Did you go from Kilkenny to Owens' College to study?—No, while teaching in England I attended the evening lectures at Owens' College. I was a pupil of Professors Stewart and Russell.

7155. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What are your views as to the causes of Kilkenny College not having pupils?—Well, there is no local control over it by people really interested in it. If there was a Board formed from the parents of the boys attending the school, similar to those appointed in several schools in the North of Ireland—at Armagh there is one school, and at Monaghan, I think, another so managed—it would help the College greatly.

7156. Dr. TRAILL.—But there is no local control over your school?—No, there is none except the interest of the parents in the success of their son. They are so interested that if I did not keep up the results I would not have any endowment at all.

7157. But your case and that of Kilkenny College are exactly similar, they are both without local control and yet your school succeeds?—I suppose I must have attended to my school much better.

7158. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Supposing you had no endowment and outside provision how many boys do you think you could attract in Kilkenny and the neighbourhood to the school?—Well I have thirty-seven boys at present, and the number could be easily increased I think.

7159. What boarders would you have?—If I had accommodation as large as that at Kilkenny College I would have a large school.

7160. What accommodation have you at present?—Only such accommodation as a private house affords.

7161. Have you any boarders at your school?—None at present. I have had as many as seven boarders, and the last boarder I had left me because there were no others to keep him company.

7162. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—If Kilkenny College was a success would it not draw off some of your pupils?—Well it ought to do so.

7163. Then you have that class of boys who would naturally go to the College?—Yes, I have the class of boys who would be going to Kilkenny College if it were a success.

7164. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What subjects do you teach the boys?—I teach them mathematics, science, and various other subjects. My assistant master is an ex-classical scholar of University College, Wales, and he teaches the classics.

7165. Dr. TRAILL.—Have the boys taken interest in classics at the Intermediate examination?—Yes, several have gained honours in Latin, and we had an honour in Greek in the junior grade.

1765. Rev. Dr. METCAL.—Would you say that there is room for another Protestant school in Kilkenny, in addition to those that already exist in it?—There is no Protestant school at present in Kilkenny of the kind; at least none at which there are pupils in attendance.

1766. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What about the Peacock Institution?—The Peacock Institution which you have mentioned is two miles out of the town, and it does not compete with us for day boys.

1767. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do many boys preparing for the University go to your school?—Well, I have prepared eight students who have matriculated in the Royal University.

1768. Do you prepare any students for Trinity?—No, I have never sent any to Trinity.

1769. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Then you are doing really the work that Kilkenny College formerly did?—Yes, I say that I am doing the class of work Kilkenny College used to do.

1770. Is there not enough educational material to keep both Kilkenny College and your own school going?—I should say not. I do not consider that I am sufficiently supported as it is. However, the want of such a school is proved by the existence of my place. Kilkenny College never fulfilled the conditions of the original charter under which it was founded; it became a high class aristocratic school.

1771. Mr. BURTON.—Are there many boys living in the neighbourhood of Kilkenny who are sent away to schools in England?—I cannot say.

1772. But are you yourself aware of any such boys?—No, I am not, but I have had some boys who have gone off to other schools. One boy went to Drogheda Grammar School from my school, but then I specially prepared him for entrance to a school of that kind. As to boys being sent to English schools I may say that at present I have a boy who was taken from an English school, and his father is well satisfied with his progress under my charge.

1773. Rev. Dr. MULLOR.—Do you know of any Protestant boys in this neighbourhood going to school in England?—I do not know of any.

1774. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do the sons of the resident gentry go to English schools for their education?—I do not know of any.

1775. Dr. TRAILL.—Where are the sons of the resident gentry of this neighbourhood educated?—I do not know.

1776. Then you cannot say whether they are educated in England or not?—I cannot.

1777. The Most Rev. Dr. Browne.—I submit, my lord, that in this question relative to Kilkenny College the relative proportions of the Catholic and non-Catholic populations would be worth something. The relative proportions of Catholic and non-Catholic in the county, including the city, is 94·4 Catholic, and of course then the non-Catholic population is 5·6, or it is the other way 93·4 Catholic, and 4·6 non-Catholic. As to the relative proportions in the town and Liberties of Kilkenny I cannot say. But I know that Kilkenny enjoys the privilege of having a member of parliament, and that necessarily involves it having a population of 15,000. What proportion the Protestant population bears to the Catholic in the city and Liberties I am not prepared to say, but I will admit that the proportion is larger than is the case in the county.

1778. Very Rev. Thomas Hare, Dean of Ossory.—There are between 800 and 800 members of the Church of Ireland in the city and Liberties. I may say that I am quite aware that there are a number of young men who have been sent away from Kilkenny for the want of a "finishing" school in this town, and I do assure the Commission that there would be a very fair school on the original plan of the donor. That plan included even the admittance of the children of the servants of the Marquis of Ormonde as pupils at the school, or that if the intention of the original founder was carried out, the school would not by any means be aristocratic or exclusive. It would be a school which would include in it both a lower and a middle class; and certainly I am of opinion that under these circumstances there would be a fair and flourishing school in Kilkenny. I have known numbers of young men, as I have already said, who have been sent to various other schools throughout Ireland. They have gone to Tipperary and Drogheda, solely because a suitable school was not in working order in Kilkenny. At the present moment these young men to whom I have referred are going to these other schools, but they would most unquestionably go to the school here if it were in a working condition. Indeed these very boys to whom I have alluded this instant were formerly pupils at Mr. Weir's school.

1779. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Can you form an estimate of the numbers of boys from this locality who are going to other schools throughout Ireland?

Dean Hare.—Well, I cannot pretend to give you the exact number, but I know that it is the case with a good many boys.

1780. Rev. Dr. METCAL.—How then do you account for the falling off in the number of the pupils attending Kilkenny College if there is such abundant material in the neighbourhood?

Dean Hare.—Well, that is a very delicate question to ask.

1781. At all events it is a practical one?

Dean Hare.—Yes; it is a very practical one indeed. I think if there was a good school at the college there would be a good attendance of boys. Since I came here to reside there was a very flourishing school at Ferness, the then Bishop of Ossory (the present Bishop of Cork) and I examined the school, and thoroughly well, were the pupils grounded in their work.

1782. But do you call nineteen a flourishing school?

Dean Hare.—As to mere numbers perhaps it is not; but then you have also to take into consideration the way in which the boys are taught their work.

1783. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Do you think that boarders could be got for the accommodation that exists at the college?

Dean Hare.—I do not think there is any possibility of getting sixty boarders from Kilkenny; but I would put it that boys might be drawn to the school if it were successfully managed.

1784. But that is often attended with the result that another school loses its supply of boarders?

Dean Hare.—That may be.

1785. Dr. TRAILL.—The college would not, of course, be dependent upon Kilkenny alone?

Dean Hare.—No, I think not, nor would I suggest for a moment that the school should be exclusively Protestant; I would suggest, subject of course to the opinion of others, that the school should be a mixed one.

1786. Rev. Dr. MULLOR.—Your theory is that it could be made a flourishing school, but the pupils would have to be drawn from other schools and distant places?

Dean Hare.—Yes, I think we have here the nucleus of a good school.

1787. Can you say whether within the last thirty years the Protestant population of Kilkenny has fallen?

Dean Hare.—It has fallen a little, but very little. My memory goes back for over eleven years, and within that time it has fallen by about fifty individuals; it has fallen fifty out of about 900. It has not fallen very much, I am happy to say.

1788. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In other places we found that one of the great difficulties in the way of a large number of boys attending such a school as this was that the fees were too high. Has that been the case here?

Dean Hare.—If I might offer a suggestion, I should say rather that the qualifications of the master are too high. I think they should be reduced, so that a master, such as Mr. Coughton, would be qualified to carry on the school perfectly efficiently, having assistants to aid him in the work if necessary.

1716. Mr. Robertson.—I am an old pupil of the school; I was there from 1829 to 1831.

1717. How many pupils were attending the school then?

Mr. Robertson.—There were thirty-two boarders, and possibly an equal number of day boys. The present Provost of Trinity College was a class-fellow of mine.

1718. Can you give us any suggestion which would aid us in the formation of a scheme for this school?

Mr. Robertson.—I think a good school is wanted on the Protestant side in Kilkenny. The school was once a very good school.

1719. Were there many day boys at it in your time?

Mr. Robertson.—Yes, I was a day boy, and there were two or three Catholic boys at it then. Mr. George Beel was a day boy, and the only survivor is Mr. G. Kinella. These were natives of the town.

1720. Where did the boarders come from?

Mr. Robertson.—They came from all parts of Ireland. There were the Blacks from Clonsilla, the Sadliers from Tipperary, the Jellies from Mourmough (there were three brothers of the Jellies), then there were the Whites and a lot of others; some of them came from Dublin; they were principally the sons of the building gentry.

1721. Rev. Dr. Mearns.—Were you a day boy or boarder?

Mr. Robertson.—I was a day boy, the others to whom I have referred were boarders.

1722. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have now heard all that we can learn upon this spot, and it is plain that the college at present is inefficient. It has practically ceased to exist, and it is our duty to ensure it, if we can, to efficient working order. Our first duty is to see if this can be done in the terms laid down in the original foundation. There are several matters which will require some consideration, and this is especially the case with regard to the position of Trinity College towards this endowment. The next step will be, if that question is disposed of or if we can get over it, to publish a draft scheme for the school and endeavour to meet the views of all parties upon the matter. This scheme will be open to objections and amendments before it is finally settled.

The Rev. Father Barry, President of St. Kieran's College.

Rev. Father
Barry.

1723. In 1584 Kilkenny College was a Jesuit college in connection with St. Canice's Cathedral. It was granted by Piers Butler, Earl of Ormonde, and the endowment was supposed to be transferred to the present establishment, or rather to the building which preceded the present establishment. The present building does not represent the ancient institution. The old building which passed the tradition to the present one, was in connection with the cathedral, St. Canice's Cathedral. The grant was in its first origin given by Piers Butler and his wife, Margaret Fitzgerald, and was diverted by the Great Duke to the building which preceded the present college in 1624. That school failed and the college was rebuilt in 1784, by the aid of a grant from the Irish Parliament. So that on the grounds of the building itself being a public institution built by public money, and also on the grounds that the school in its original foundation was a creation of Piers Butler and his wife, I consider that the Catholic body has a claim upon it.

1724. Dr. TRAILL.—Can you give us your authority for the fact that the college was originally founded by Piers Butler and his wife, Margaret?—Yes, it is to be found in a very ancient work "The History of St. Canice's Cathedral," by the late Mr. Green. I would suggest as to the grant of the Marquis of Ormonde of this £140, that although it was intended, in the first place, for the benefit of the Protestants of Kilkenny, it was also intended for the inhabitants of Kilkenny and the Liberties. The grant so far as the Protestants are concerned has absolutely and entirely failed, and has therefore lapsed. The Catholic body could fairly put forward a claim for such an application of the endowment as the Commission might consider just and fair, in consequence of the failure of the intention of the Marquis, and also because the school building represented money contributed by the State to the school. I would suggest to the Commission that the school is plain from the evidence is very unsatisfactory. Within a period of ten years two outbreaks of vaccination occurred, and such was the fear that was struck into the few pupils that were there at the time, that none of them returned afterwards. I think that the College is in a very unhealthy situation and not at all suited for a school. There are plenty of schools which at present fulfil the functions which Kilkenny College formerly fulfilled, and I would suggest that the building be disposed of and the proceeds applied in the way of endowments, in the manner suggested by the Bishop of Ossory.

POCOCKE INSTITUTION, KILKENNY.

J. Blair Brown, Esq., Master of the School, sworn.

J. Blair Brown.

1725. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How long have you been Head Master of the Pocke Institution?—I have been head master for the last twenty-eight years.

1726. The school is at present in the hands of the Incorporated Society?—Yes; it has been in their hands since I came here, and for a long time before that.

1727. Is it now a boarding or a day school?—It is now practically a boarding school. We are so far from Kilkenny that it is inconvenient for day boys to come to the school from the city.

1728. Have you any day boys at the school?—I have one, but he lives between the school and the town of Kilkenny.

1729. What was the greatest number of day boys you had at the school?—I never had more than two or three. The last day boy that I had was at one time at Kilkenny College, and he came to me to grind up in science for the entrance examination to Trinity College.

1730. Where were you educated?—Under the Incorporated Society at Santry and Dunsink.

1731. What number of boys have you at the school at present?—I have now forty pupils.

1732. How many of these are free boys?—Twenty-seven of the forty are free boys.

1733. How are the free boys admitted to the school?—By public examination; there is a public competition each year, and there are four boys admitted in this way from the counties of Kilkenny, Wexford, Waterford, and, I think, part of Queen's County; other examinations are held in Cork, Tipperary, Limerick, and in Kerry, and I receive five boys from all of those.

1734. Are all these instructed in the Protestant religion?—Yes, they are all ground in the principles of the Protestant religion.

1735. Have you any children of Roman Catholic parents at the school now?—I have no Roman Catholic children, they are all Protestants, they come with us every Sunday to church.

1736. Are they all members of the Church of Ireland?—They are all members of the Church of Ireland while they are with us, they all go to the church on Sunday. I make no inquiry as to what religion the boy's parents may belong.

1737. Did any Presbyterian boys come to the school?—Yes, I have had some Presbyterian boys, but their parents made no objection to their coming to church with us and leaving the Church Catechists. All the boys march to church together.

7211. How are the free boys provided for?—By the Incorporated Society; they pay me 10*l.* a day for each free boy, and for this sum I am obliged to board and clothe them.

7212. Besides the free boys you have boys who pay fees?—Yes, I have two classes of pay boarders; there is one class who dine with me and pay me thirty guineas a year, and the other class dine in the hall with the free boys and pay me twenty guineas a year.

7213. What is the distinction between them?—There is no distinction whatever made between the two classes, except that the parents of the more delicate boys prefer that they should dine with me apart from the others. The education given to the two classes is exactly the same, indeed this is the case with all the boys both those who pay and the free boys. There is no distinction at all made except as regards the dining.

7214. Besides the 10*l.* a day for each free boy, what other emoluments do you receive from the Incorporated Society?—I get my salary, which amounts to £150 a year, and also allowances for servants, soap, candles, and also for fuel. There is besides an allowance for an assistant master.

7215. What is the amount of that allowance?—£30.

7216. What is the value of the allowances altogether?—I got about £185 a year from them, that includes salary and allowances; the allowances alone would amount to about £35 a year. They also allow me £40 a year for an assistant master; it was £30, but they have increased it.

7217. Who has the appointment of the assistant master?—I appoint him myself.

7218. What land have you attached to the school?—I have no land attached to the school as an endowment, but I rent a farm of twenty acres, whereof ten acres are held from the Corporation of Kilburn at £22 10*s.* per annum, and ten from the Incorporated Society at £20. I have got both at Griffith's valuation. I was paying 50*s.* an acre for the land, but the lease fell in, and they give me the land at the Poor Law valuation. The Incorporated Society give me the land at the same rent.

7219. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you any land from the Incorporated Society?—Yes, I rent ten acres from them. I am paying rent for all the land which I have. I have no land rent free from the endowment.

7220. Lord Justice FRY-GROSVENOR.—Who keeps the buildings in repair?—The Incorporated Society keep them in repair, and during the last twenty years they have scarcely ever ceased making improvements.

7221. Had you to apply for these improvements?—Well, the main improvements which were for the benefit of the school I applied for them, and if they approved of them they were executed at the expense of the Society, but any little things which were for my own benefit were done at my own expense.

7222. What is your course of instruction?—It includes not only a general English education, but arithmetic, algebra, trigonometry, book-keeping, Book-keeping, drawing, science, and classics to a few boys.

7223. Do you prepare boys for entrance to Santry School?—A great number of my boys are boys who hope to go to Santry. They compete for promotion; this is the great prize held out to boys coming to the Peacock Institution, that if they are industrious they may be able to enter Santry.

7225. Lord Justice FRY-GROSVENOR.—To what class do your boys belong?—It would scarcely be supposed to be the case, yet I have had some of officers in the army among the pupils. I have known them to compete with the children of poorer parents. But as a general rule the boys are the children of poor parents, they are boys of a class in life who are unable to pay their own fees.

7226. What position in life do your boys as a rule go to?—I have had over eighty of my boys passed into the Civil Service; three taking the first places in the three kingdoms. Many of them have matriculated in the Royal University, others of them have gained Scholarships in Trinity College. Other pupils have gone into the banks, I may say they have never failed in this examination; a good many have entered the Royal College of Surgeons, and then numbers of them go as mathematical masters to schools in England.

7227. Is your school connected with South Kensington?—We were at one time in connection with South Kensington, but we dropped it though we were very successful; we have had as many as seventy-six passes, sixty-four of these with honours. When we went to take up the connection again we found some of the rules bearing rather hard upon us.

7228. What were those rules which interfered with the establishing of the connection again?—One rule was that junior passes in mathematics would not be allowed to us, that is that a boy would not be allowed a pass in the Junior Grade Mathematics. Teacher would not be allowed results fees in Junior Grade Mathematics. Then we had not got a local committee, which is necessary under the rules of the South Kensington Department. The nature of the Incorporated Society does not permit of them acting in the capacity of a visiting committee.

7229. Would not a local committee benefit you in this way if we established one?—I do not think it would. I could have got a visiting committee for the purposes of the South Kensington Examinations, but I found that they had monopolised all the available gentlemen to whom I wished to apply, and then the South Kensington authorities would not permit of the same committee acting for the two places; formerly they did allow this, but latterly they have not done so.

7230. You are desirous then of forming a local committee for the purpose of re-establishing your connection with South Kensington?—I would be very glad to do so.

7231. Do you send in boys for the Intermediate Examinations?—I have formed a separate class for the Intermediate, and I should like to join South Kensington again, as I think I could work the two examinations together.

7232. What accommodation have you for boarders now?—I have my number of beds full at present, and I could not accommodate more without trespassing upon the infirmary accommodation.

7233. What is the largest number of boys you have had at the school?—Between sixty and seventy, but then I had to get more beds, and crowd them more closely together in the dormitories.

7234. How long is that ago?—That was some years ago. The diminution in the number was caused by an article which appeared stating that my boys had copied at an examination in religious instruction. The boys demanded a public investigation, because the charge was unfounded, and the result was that they were completely exonerated from the charge. But the public investigation of the matter did not take place for twelve months after the charge was made, and the result was that my numbers went down very rapidly, they went down to six boarders. But the falling off was only temporary, and when the boys were publicly exonerated I soon ran the numbers up again.

7235. Do you take any part in the management of the estate?—I have nothing whatever to do with that.

7236. Do you consider the present position of the school, as an educational institution, satisfactory?—It is most satisfactory, we have been very successful at all the public examinations.

Oct. 21, 1887.

J. Blair Brown.

7237. But you have no industrial education whatever at the school?—No, there is none.

7238. Are the boys trained in the art of linen weaving?—We have had nothing in the way of linen weaving for years, it was done away with when the new rules came out.

7239. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you teach drawing?—Yes, we teach the boys drawing, I take this subject myself, I have been engaged in teaching drawing over thirty years.

7240. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You said you had occasionally Presbyterian boys at the school?—Very rarely, and the parents of the boys, if not personal friends of my own before, have become my friends afterwards. Though I strictly attend to the requirements laid down in the regulations of my school, I do nothing that would hurt the feelings of such a boy.

7240a. But would you offer any objection to the boy attending the Presbyterian place of worship?—I would, most decidedly. What I say to the parents is this, I will not allow him to attend the Presbyterian Church, but, if you wish, his friends can ask the boy to visit them on Sundays, and then they, as his personal friends, can take him to the Presbyterian Church if they wish. My views of the matter is just this—If a parent wishes to take advantage of my school, and sends his son to it, the boy must comply with the regulations, and must come to church with the other boys, but then if his parents wish him to go to visit a friend on Sunday he may take the boy to the Presbyterian Church if he likes.

7241. Would it not be better to allow the boy to go to the Presbyterian Church without resorting to this subterfuge?

7242. Dr. TRAILL.—What I understand you to mean, Mr. Brown, is that if a personal friend apply for leave of absence for the boy for a day, and relieve you of all responsibility, for the time being he is entrusted to the care of his friend?—If a friend of any boy says to me will you allow him to visit me, I give my assent, and I then consider that he is under the charge of his friend. As long as the boy is under my care I must instruct him in the doctrines of the Protestant Church, and he must go to the church. I do not look upon the matter in the same light that others do. If the Presbyterian clergyman asks me, can the boy attend the Presbyterian church, I answer, certainly not; but if his friend asks for him then he may bring him to your church.

7243. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would you not think it a great advantage if this school were open to all Protestants?—I do not think it would be. It would be exceedingly awkward; I would require four or five different masters, a master to go with the boys to every church.

7244. Then you always send the boys in charge of a master?—I would not like my boys to go out without being under the charge of a master.

7245. You consider it part of your duty to require all boys at the school to attend the Protestant church?—I simply accepted my position with certain restrictions, and I consider I am bound by these.

7246. Rev. Dr. MOTTET.—Do you teach any of the children for whom the endowment was founded?—If you mean Roman Catholic children, no.

7247. Do you teach linen weaving?—No.

7248. In fact you do not teach either the class intended to be benefited, nor the subjects of instruction prescribed by the founder?—No, I believe the founder's intention was to further the interests of the Protestant religion as then established. It was found that the plan would not work, so the school is now devoted entirely to the education of Protestant children and not to training up Roman Catholic children in the Protestant faith.

7249. But what about the linen weaving, why is it not taught?—I know nothing about it, when I was appointed there was no reference to the matter.

7250. Do you not think that an industrial education available for all classes would be a newer approach to the intentions of the founder, Bishop Pocock?—I think not, because he intended the industrial training as a sort of bribe to bring the Roman Catholic children into the Protestant Church. But now they have begun to take only Protestant children into the institution there is no need of teaching the linen weaving; in fact there is no such thing as linen weaving in the neighbourhood of Kilkenny.

7251. Linnen weaving not being required now in Kilkenny, what industrial training would you substitute for it; at present you are substituting Latin, Greek, and mathematics?—My suggestion is that it would be better to educate them than to give them an industrial training. The best thing is to give the boys a good general education; if we gave them an industrial education they would not succeed nearly so well in life.

7252. If all the people of Ireland were brought up, and educated only in Greek, Latin, and Mathematics, do you think that would be the best sort of education for them. You know it is, as you have said, the poorer classes who come to you?—No, my class of boarders are an intermediate class, they are a different class from the boys going to the ordinary schools in Kilkenny, they are a middle class.

7253. But to what class do the free boys belong?—As to the free boys, I cannot answer for the whole of them, but the most of them are the children of poor parents.

7254. Is the kind of instruction you give these boys the best for the children of poor parents, to enable them to get on in life?—But these boys are not bound to take classics and French.

7255. Dr. TRAILL.—What percentage of the boys are educated in classics?—Not ten per cent. of them learn classics.

7256. Rev. Dr. MOTTET.—I understood you to say that a good number of your pupils aim at a professional career, and that many of them have entered the universities?—Yes, but they are mainly my boarders, my foundation pupils are not forced to learn classics. The Incorporated Society only tolerate the teaching of classics in the school.

7257. You mentioned your successes at the Civil Service examinations; does that mean success in these examinations which include classics?—No, only an English course, one of the boys entered the Civil Department.

7258. Dr. TRAILL.—Does that require classics?—No.

7259. Rev. Dr. MOTTET.—I take it that the education you give is literary and scientific as distinguished from industrial and technical?—Yes.

7260. Most Rev. Dr. Browne.—Is there any endowment from the Corporation of Kilkenny in the nature of land?

Witness.—I held land under a lease from the Corporation, but I paid a rent for it. The rent under the lease was 235 10s., and then the rent was 235 10s., when the lease fell out. I asked the Corporation to give me the land at the Poor Law Valuation, and they did so. The land was at first held by a neighbour of mine, but we found it very inconvenient, the boys were breaking down the fences and trespassing on the land, in order to get their cricket balls which would be knocked over.

7261. Professor DOUGHERTY.—What was the length of the lease?—It was for twenty-one years, and it fell out in 1865.

Lord Justice FRYCHAMER.—I may say that the evidence we got in Dublin tended to show that the Incorporated Society had in this institution, a private endowment. If, however, when our scheme comes out, your lordship has any evidence to give upon the subject, we will be quite ready to hear it.

The Most Rev. Dr. Brewin.

Oct. 24, 1857.

Most Rev. Dr. Brewin.

1255. My lord, strange as the inference may seem, I would go in for making a claim for the endowment of the Peacock Institution, in the same way as I made a claim for the Kilkenny College for the Catholic body.

My claim is based upon the following considerations—I find that the trust established by Bishop Peacock was for "Papist" boys from the ages of twelve to sixteen who should become Protestants; and if any other religion should be established in Ireland than the Protestant religion, he then bequeathed the money to St. Patrick's Hospital for Lunatics, in Dublin. So it is quite manifest that the trust has failed as far as regards the object for which it was originally established; that is manifest, I consider. I have listened to the evidence just given by the head master of the school, and I read the original will. There are no Catholic boys there at present. They are not there because they are compelled by their conscientious convictions to abstain from availing themselves of the education there given, which according to the will of Bishop Peacock, should be based upon the doctrines of the Protestant Church. But I think that the Commission have powers under the Act to alter the provisions of a trust, and to divert the terms of a trust where the original trust has not been carried out. The terms of the trust not having been carried out here, it is a case with which the Commission should deal. It is quite plain that Bishop Peacock intended a benefit for the Catholic boys, for the "Papist" boys, as he calls them, of Kilkenny. That benefit divides itself into two divisions; there is firstly a temporal benefit, and secondly what he considered a spiritual benefit, one was to give the boys a secular education, to train them in linen weaving and other handicrafts, and then to fit them to fill some position in life after they left school. The other benefit was to give them the blessings of a Protestant education. I am perfectly certain that Bishop Peacock was a sincere believer in the Church of which he was such an eminent member. He thought he was conferring a benefit on the Catholic children by having them educated as Protestants. I perceive the whole thing turns upon this, whether these two classes of benefits are separable or conjoint, or in other words whether you can confer one of the benefits without the other, and whether that was the intention of Bishop Peacock. I maintain that they are separable, and that it is quite within the powers of the Commission to deal with this endowment in the interests of Kilkenny. I am only putting my own view of the case; I regard them as separable; you will ask me perhaps what reason I have for that. My reason for regarding these two benefits as separable, the one temporal and the other spiritual is this—I cannot conceive any man in Dr. Peacock's position, a bishop, a kind man, and a liberal minded one, I do not consider it would be possible for him to establish a deal of trust under which he conferred temporal advantages upon a certain class at the expense of their religious convictions. I do not think that any man of Bishop Peacock's stamp would do that.

1256. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you not think he intended it as a proselytizing institution?—I do not think he intended to proselytize. If he intended it as a proselytizing institution, he was a proselytizer in the worst sense of the term, but I do not think that Bishop Peacock was a man of that stamp. He was much too liberal minded.

1257. But it is quite clear by his will that he was a proselytizer?—Well, if you accept that conclusion and treat him as a proselytizer, my argument falls to the ground, but I consider it is quite possible to put neither construction upon his conduct. I think he intended to confer temporal advantages on a certain class, provided they saw their way to accept the Protestant religion. I think it is quite possible he may have intended to confer the temporal advantages upon them. I am not gifted with a legal mind nor am I gifted with the power of discriminating between one end and one, but I am giving you what I consider a common sense view of the matter.

1258. Suppose the "Church Missionary Society" goes out to the savages of South Africa to teach them trades and to convert them to the Christian religion, do you think it would be right to confiscate the property of the Society, and use it entirely to teach trades to the savages, if they would not be taught religion?—I will answer you by putting the converse case. Suppose that I—Bishop of Ousey—perceiving that there are a number of Protestant boys utterly destitute, and without the means of education in Kilkenny, am moved by their condition, and under my will I appoint a certain sum of money for their temporal benefit, on condition that they should become Catholics—do you mean to tell me that I would enforce the condition upon them? Do you mean to say that my first desire was for to enforce the spiritual benefit before they could take advantage of the temporal one—that what I meant to confer upon them was rather a spiritual advantage than a temporal one?

1259. But, in case you made such a will, would we not be justified in supposing that you did intend that?—Well, I think the Commission ought not to take that view of it—they should not put me down as a proselytizer.

1260. But then Bishop Peacock makes provision for the money going to St. Patrick's Hospital, in case of any other religion than the Protestant one being established in the country. Does this not show that it is an exclusively Protestant endowment; does not this provision providing for the case of disestablishment show that it was intended as a proselytizing institution?—I say that in that case the Catholics have as good a claim to the money as the Protestants. This is my view of the case. We are drawn to one of two conclusions—either that he was a proselytizer in the worst sense of the word, or that he was a liberal and kind-hearted man, and intended to benefit a certain class, according to the light of the time in which he lived.

1261. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—Supposing that to be his object, the scheme has utterly failed. It is not possible to teach the children of Catholics under these conditions, and therefore something remains to be done with the endowment?—Yes.

1262. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We had this matter already before us in Dublin, but we have not yet announced our decision upon it. The principle is a very important one, and we will consider the arguments to the best of our ability. With regard to Bishop Peacock's intention, I think he was not a proselytizer, nor did he intend to purchase the religious convictions of any one. I think he was an honorable man, and wishing to benefit a certain class, both temporally and spiritually, he left this endowment. This raises the difficulty of separating the temporal from the spiritual advantage, and in this matter we are guided by what is known in law as the cy pres doctrine. We must so settle the matter that we come as near as possible to the intention of the founder.

The Right Rev. Dr. Brewin.—I may point out, my lord, that it is of the essence of a spiritual advantage that it should be according to one's conscience—so one's reason.

SUBSCRIPTION SCHOOLS KILKENNY.

Very Rev. Thomas Hare, the Dean of Ossory, sworn.

Very Rev.
Thomas Hare.

7270. Lord Justice FLEMING.—Under whose management are the Subscription Schools?—I am a manager.

7271. Are they the Subscription Schools which were formerly situated in King-street?—Yes, the former and present schools have been transferred to the buildings of Evans's Charity. The parochial and subscription schools are combined.

7272. It was originally a parochial school?—It was at one time a parochial school.

7273. Was it a parochial school at the time of the passing of the Church Act?—Yes, it was intended as a parochial school for all Kilkenny.

7274. Who are the trustees?—I think they are the Mayor, the High Sheriff, the Dean of Ossory, and the incumbent of the parish of St. John.

7275. I see from the Report you have an endowment arising from the will of John Evans. Is this fund still applied for the benefit of the school?—Yes.

7276. Then you have another endowment arising from a bequest of house property by William Pratt?—Yes.

7277. Then you have a rent arising from the old school?—Yes, Lord Ormonde, after the school ceased to be held in King-street, gave the old premises for the benefit of the school.

7278. And you have let them to a tenant?—Yes, as soon as the school ceased to be held in the old buildings, the premises by virtue of a clause in the lease, lapsed to Lord Ormonde, but he kindly continued the grant during his own life.

7279. Dr. TRAILL.—How much do these premises bring in yearly?—About £38 with certain reductions for rates and taxes.

7280. Lord Justice FLEMING.—Who are the governors of the school?—The governors are the clergy of Kilkenny, with the bishop at the head of them.

7281. Is that under the constitution of the old school, or are they the governors only since the school was removed to the buildings of Evans's Charity?—I think it is under the old constitution.

7282. Do you know whether it was under a deed or will they were appointed trustees originally?—I cannot say, I came in myself as one about eleven years ago.

7283. There is an apprentice fund for the apprenticing of ten children at the rate of £20 for each child, who must be of the Protestant religion. Is that still carried out?—Yes, it is carried out to this day.

7284. Who administers the apprentice fund?—The trustees of Evans's Charity.

7285. Lord Justice FLEMING.—What is exactly the amount of the endowments of the school? What is the annual income?—Well the endowment varies, because the grant is from Evans's trustees, and it is a dividend from Evans's trust. It has varied in amount from—

7286. Dr. TRAILL.—Gives on the various accounts for last year?—Well last year the dividend from Evans's trust amounted to £57 Os. 8d.

7287. What was the amount from the bequest of William Pratt?—Pratt's bequest amounts to £9 10s. 10d.

7288. Lord Justice FLEMING.—What is that derived from?—That is derived from a profit rent in Rose In-street. It was bequeathed under the will of Mr. William Pratt in 1830. Here is the document. [The Lord Justice reads from the will], "To the Protestant rector for the support and maintenance of the parochial school and Lee's lane poor-house." What is Lee's lane poor-house? Is it in existence? It is in existence, and receives half of the Pratt endowment; it is an almshouse.

7289. And is the parochial school the same school only transferred to the buildings of Evans's Charity?—Yes. The premises in King-street became unsuitable and wholly unfit for a school-house, and was removed to the place in John-street.

7290. And you receive the rent of that old school?—Yes, it is mentioned there; it amounts to £11 15s. The rent is paid by a man named Lundy.

7291. Who receives the rent?—We receive the rent.

7292. Do you know was it from the Dalm of Ormonde that the grant was originally derived?—I could not say, perhaps Mr. James Fee could answer that. When it ceased to be used as a school-house, I knew the premises reverted to Lord Ormonde, but he granted us a fresh lease of the place. He has entered on the back of the old lease a waiver of the forfeiture for his own life only. His marriage settlements prevented him granting it for a longer period.

7293. Have you any other endowments?—No, or only other source of income, besides these endowments I have mentioned, is our subscriptions.

7294. Lord Justice FLEMING.—Then the entire income of the school consists of these endowments you have mentioned, and subscriptions, and nothing else?—Yes.

7295. Lord Justice FLEMING.—The apprentice fund is paid over to you by the governors?—It is usually administered by the trustees of Evans's trust.

7296. Do you find these apprentice fees still efficient?—Yes, thoroughly.

7297. We are told in some localities where such funds exist that they cannot get proper places for apprentices for £30?—Well I think it very efficient here.

7298. Dr. TRAILL.—Are the apprentice fees for girls only?—No, they have been given to boys who have been apprenticed to the saddlery business. The girls usually go out as dress makers and milliners.

7299. Are they all apprenticed in Kilkenny?—Not necessarily.

7300. Lord Justice FLEMING.—There is another provision here about marriage portions of £50 each to girls?—Yes, that is still carried out with this exception that the portions are reduced from £50 to £20, but the spirit of the thing is still carried out.

7301. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you think that an endowment to provide marriage portions is a practically useful form of endowment?—On the whole I think it is useful, it starts the young people in life.

7302. I suppose you have not known any of these young women married simply for the sake of the marriage portion?—No.

7303. Do you not think this money might be more usefully employed in giving them an industrial education?—Well, I do not think so.

7304. Lord Justice FLEMING.—Are the governors of these schools clergy of the late Established Church?—Yes.

7305. Are the children attending the school members of the Church of Ireland?—Yes, but there are some Presbyterians and Methodists among them.

7306. What fees do the pupils pay?—A penny a week.

7307. It appears to be rather in the nature of a preparatory school?—Yes.

7308. Is it in connection with the National Board?—No, it is not; it is not in connection with any Board.

7309. Dr. TRAILL.—How many children are there on the roll?—About sixty.

7310. Professor DOUGHERTY.—From what we observed the school appears to be rather poorly supplied with teaching requisites?—Yes, we are poor.

7310. If you were connected with the National Board it might help you in that way?—Yes.

7311. Is there any objection to establishing a connection with the National Board?—I do not think there is any insuperable objection to establishing a connection.

7312. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Are there any ladies connected with the management of the school?—There are some ladies who come to visit the school; they are appointed by the clergy for the purpose.

7313. Who are the clergy who are joined in the management?—There are two parishes and the incumbents and the curates are joined together in the management, those and the clergy connected with St. Cuthbert's Cathedral.

7314. I am afraid all we can do for you is to tell you that you are exempt from the operation of our Act. But we have found some institutions like this for which we have done good work by enabling them to associate one or two lay men with the existing governing body?—I think that would be an advantage. I believe it would be advantageous to enlarge our body and bring others into co-operation with us in the work.

7315. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you prevented by your deeds from joining the National Board?—I do not think so.

7316. Then why don't you join the Board when you have sixty children on the roll?—[No answer].

7317. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Is the teaching done by one mistress?—Yes.

7318. What are her qualifications?—I do not know what are her qualifications, but I know she is a most excellent teacher.

7319. As regards this Evans' trust, would it not be as well to have that money managed by the same body in connection with the school?—Well, I don't think there has been any difficulty about the management of it. We have never found any difficulty between the managing committee, and the governors of the school; they are a very excellent set of people and work well together.

7320. Who manages the property?—Mr. James Fox manages the land, he is the agent.

7321. In your case the Act does not apply without your consent; but if there is any disposition on the part of the governing body to give effect to the suggestions we have made, we will carry them out for you as far as our Act will allow us.

Oct. 24, 1887.

Very Rev.
Thomas Haas.

CHAPEL LANE SCHOOL.

The Most Rev. Dr. Brownrigg examined.

7322. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Is your lordship one of the trustees for the Chapel Lane School?—I should remark that I really have not got a great amount of information about this school. When I became Bishop of Ousey I found the property in a very confused state, and it is exceedingly difficult to discover the references to these various properties in the parochial records. I found a couple of references in the diocesan book with reference to this Chapel Lane School, which is a school attached to the Presentation Convent. The principal endowment is a sum of £3 18s. 3d., which is paid every half year by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. It goes to the nuns of the Presentation Convent.

7323. I suppose that is the fund represented in the report as N. Keaven's will, March 25, 1835, interest on £200 Government stock, represented in 1857 as £194 10s. 6d.—Yes, that is the fund.

7324. Besides that there is mentioned in the report of 1880, P. Dunn's will, £10 annually?—I have no record whatever of that in the diocesan books. It does not appear to be paid now, it never comes to me.

7325. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Could it be paid direct to the Superiors of the Convent?—Well, I had an interview with her about those matters, and she told me that the only sum she receives is the £3 10s. 3d. half-yearly. The only other trust she mentioned was one attached to the Chapel Lane Boys' School.

7326. What was that trust?—That is a small bequest of £5 or £10 yearly; it comes in annually; it originally was given for the orphanage. There was a small orphanage attached to the convent then.

7327. How long ago is that?—That is about forty years ago, and when the small orphanage was disbanded this sum was transferred to this school for school purposes.

7328. Do you know how that sum is secured?—I do not; there is no record whatever of it in the diocesan books, nor have I found any record of the other.

7329. Would you have any objection to tell me how much it cost to get the diocesan property into order?—I know it occupied a very long time, but I could scarcely say how much it cost, but it entailed an infinite amount of time, labour, and expense.

7330. Is the Kilkenny Female Orphanage School one of yours?—No.

7331. Lord Justice NAUGHTON (to the Dean of Ousey).—Have you any funds for a school of that name?—No. There is a school of that name mentioned in Evans' trust, but there never was enough funds to found it.

Most Rev. Dr.
Brownrigg.Very Rev. M.
Barry.

ST. KIERAN'S COLLEGE.

Very Rev. M. Barry, sworn.

7332. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—You are President of St. Kieran's College?—I have been President for the last three years.

7333. How is the land held on which the College stands?—It is a fee farm grant. It is granted to the trustees of St. Kieran's College, for the time being.

7334. Who was the head landlord?—Mr. William Harford Flood was the grantor, the site was bought out from his predecessors.

7335. Was that grant made before the College was founded?—Yes; that was a lease at first for 999 years and that was afterwards turned into a fee farm grant.

7336. Who are the trustees?—The Bishop of Ousey for the time being, the Vicar-General, the Vicar-Forsan, and the President of the College.

7337. How many Vicar-Forsans and Vicar-

Generals are there?—Two Vicar-Forsans and no Vicar-Generals at present.

7338. When was the last deed executed by the trustees?—The present trustees had quite lately to sign their names to some new leases for house property.

7339. Unless there has been some deed conveying the property to them they are not the legal owners at all. Who were the former trustees?—Dr. Moran, the then Bishop, Dr. Murphy, Dr. Hayden, and Dr. McDonnell.

7340. Have you any money fund?—Yes, the principal portion of them comes to me through the bishop. I believe they are invested in the name of the bishop alone. Some of the funds, however, I receive direct as rents; they are paid to me by the tenants.

7341. Have you any land attached to the building?

Oct. 18, 1895.

Very Rev. M.
Barry.

—Yes, but all the land attached to the College is not held in fee farm.

7342. How much land is there altogether?—Ten acres, of which six acres are held in fee. There is one portion of the remainder held in fee, and another portion from year to year.

7343. Who is the grantor of that other portion which is held in fee?—The Earl of Normanton.

7344. Who are the trustees for that portion?—They are the same trustees who hold the six acres granted by William Handford Flood.

7345. Do you yourself know anything of the trusts under which the bishop holds the funds?—I know that they are held by him for St. Kieran's College.

7346. What is the amount of the funds?—The whole interest on them is £540; a large portion of that income is devoted to the Foreign mission.

7347. What is the amount of the rents which you yourself receive?—That amounts to £100; it arises from houses and land.

7348. Of the income of £540, how much is devoted to Foreign missions?—£405 out of the £540 is devoted to that purpose. The difference between £405 and £540 we are bound to apply for the education of priests for the Home mission.

7349. How many students have you in the college at present?—There are ninety-four altogether.

7350. How many of those are paying for their education, and how many have free places?—Well, the bursaries are divided into three classes—some are full free places, some are only half, and some receive only £10.

7351. Is this for the students of the Home mission?—The students for the Home mission have some free places, but they are confined sometimes to certain portions of the diocese.

7352. What is the fee charged to the students who pay?—£30 a year.

7353. Then when you speak of a bursar of £10, you mean that the student who receives it is educated for a fee of £20?—Yes.

7354. How many students pay the full fee of £30?—Well, of those who receive bursar, twenty-eight are for the Foreign mission, and eight the Home mission; all the rest pay the full fee of £30 a year.

7355. How many boarders and how many day pupils are at the school?—We have sixty-four boarders and thirty externs.

7356. Is the college solely an ecclesiastical institution?—No, we have got a theological department, and also one for a general literary education—a lay department. They are in different wings of the building with a different staff of professors for each.

7357. Do the theological students read philosophy?—Yes, but at present we have not a class reading philosophy, but they will take it up as they pursue their theological course.

7358. Do your theological pupils receive their training at first in the lay department?—Yes, as a rule they do, but the two departments are quite different. The students pass from the lay side to the clerical side of the college.

7359. Are your pupils on the lay side all Roman Catholics?—Yes.

7360. What is your course of instruction?—Well, the highest class on the lay side is the rhetoric class; we have two humanities; and then we have two or three preparatory classes reading the Latin, Greek, and French grammars, and primary classics, and also a junior class at English and mathematics.

7361. Do you send your pupils in for the Intermediate examinations?—Yes.

7362. How have your boys got on since they commenced to go in for the Intermediate?—We have received altogether £760 from the Intermediate Board, £440 of this amount is result fee, and of the remaining portion £360 is exhibitions, and about £20 in special prizes.

7363. I believe on one occasion a pupil of yours ranked very high in the list?—Yes, in the last examination one of our boys got second place in all Ireland in the junior grade.

7364. Do you send in all your boys for the Intermediate?—Yes, all the students of the requisite age have to compete.

7365. What subjects do you send them in upon?—Latin, Greek, French, English, all the mathematical subjects, natural philosophy, chemistry, and drawing.

7366. What means have you of teaching natural philosophy, and chemistry?—We got assisted all this year, as we are connected with South Kensington. This year South Kensington sent us £160; that all goes to the teachers.

7367. How many pupils did you send up for the South Kensington examinations to get that money?—We sent up 49 in mathematics; in chemistry we sent up 33; in sound, light, and heat, 32; in mechanics, 29. In the mathematics 25 of the boys got first class certificates, and 24 second-class certificates in the junior stage. In sound, light, and heat they got 20 first class certificates.

7368. How are you supplied with instruments for teaching the science subjects?—We have a fairly good supply of instruments; besides we got a supply recently, about £50, from South Kensington.

7369. What is your staff of teachers?—We have six priests, and one lay professor in charge of the students; these are exclusively devoted to the lay department of the college.

7370. Dr. Traill.—What does the lay professor teach?—Mathematics and French are his subjects; he has also charge of the Civil Service classes.

7371. What salary do you give him?—£130 a year; he is non-resident.

7372. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You prepare boys for the Civil Service examinations?—Yes, we have a Civil Service class for boys desirous of competing for Government appointments.

7373. Who appoints the staff?—The staff is appointed by the bishop.

7374. Rev. Dr. Meenan.—What does the first class certificate of South Kensington mean; does it mean that they have passed in what is called the advanced stage?—I presume it is given in every stage; first class means that they have done very well in the examination.

7375. How much shall you receive this year in result fees?—We will receive, I think, about £46, that is exclusive of prize, at least, that is what we have calculated them at.

7376. Have your numbers increased or diminished?—They have diminished, we had many more students some years ago. The majority of our students are sons of the farming classes, and the depression of the times affected our school very much.

7377. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What was the largest number you had?—About eleven or twelve years ago we had 112 boarders, and now we have only sixty-four.

7378. Had you accommodation for that number?—Yes, but that includes both sides of the house, both the lay and the clerical departments.

7379. To what do you attribute the fluctuations in the numbers?—To the fact that the students are unable to pay the fees; their parents are middle class farmers, and are unable to send their sons at a sufficiently early age for us to send them in for the Intermediate. If the boys are sent at an early age it means more expense to the parents.

7380. At what age do they come to you generally?—We do not get them young enough, they are not sent to us until they are about fourteen or fifteen, and then it takes fully two years to make them up in the subjects. They are fair in English and mathematics when they come to us, but know nothing about classics.

7381. Dr. Traill.—How do they get on with their classics?—They get on very well considering they commence them so late.

7382. At what schools are they taught before they come to you?—In the country districts they receive their elementary education at the National schools, and in the town at the Christian Brothers' school.

7382. Have you any idea of the numbers in attendance at the Christian Brothers' School?

Most Rev. Dr. Browne.—There are about 400 on the rolls, and there is an average attendance of about 250.

7383. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—If you had any further endowment as what use would you apply it?—We would apply it with the greatest advantage in the intermediate school, in the way of getting further professors.

7384. You would not think then of creating free places?—I would apply it in both ways.

7385. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What is your yearly expenditure?—The salaries amount to about £255, keep to £240, then wages of the servants and other things amount to £235, but besides that we have to keep the students. The total expense last year amounted to over £2,200.

7386. How do you make up the difference between that and the endowment of £540?—The rest of the money is made up by the payments of the students, and through the fees of the externs.

7387. What charge do you make for extern pupils?—£5 a year.

7388. What proportion of these students go into the clerical department?—Three-fourths at the least, but some of those who do not go into the Church go into other pursuits—into the bank, and for medicine; some of them go back home. I would like to point out that our diocesan college represents a population of 150,000 Roman Catholics at the very least. It is the only Catholic College in the whole district of Ossory, and it also represents the county Waterford in a great portion. The nearest college is the one at Waterford, but that is exclusively for ecclesiastics. We have students from the county Waterford in our lay department.

7389. Is there a college at Carlow?—Yes, that takes all branches—there is a lay college and an ecclesiastical one.

7390. Do you find the Intermediate Examinations a fair test of the work done by the school?—We do; it is a very fair means of ascertaining the work done by the schools. I may say that if we had the pupils coming to our college at an earlier age we could trouble our witnesses.

7391. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you find the parents sufficiently alive to the advantages of the Intermediate Examinations?—No, we do not; they are afraid to incur the expense of keeping them a long time at the college.

I can give the successes of the Loretto Convent at the Intermediate Examinations. It is one of the most successful schools in Ireland; within the past six years they have obtained seventy-six passes, ten exhibitions, eighteen prizes, and twelve medals, of which five were gold and seven silver, all for modern languages.

7392. How many pupils are at the school?—There are forty-three boarders and forty-seven day pupils, ninety altogether.

7393. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Was the total number of pupils who passed only seventy-one during the six years; the exhibitions, prizes, and medals bear a very large proportion to the passes?—It was only lately they went in for the Intermediate. One of their pupils held the first place in all three grades. She held it throughout.

7394. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—This is the only high school for girls in Kilkenny?—Yes.

7395. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Where do the rest of the Catholic boys of Kilkenny get their education?—At the Christian Brothers' School, our terms are too high for many of the boys, and they go there.

7396. Do you not find them competing with you?—They never compete with us except in sending boys up for the Junior Grade, and then they do not touch the classics, they send them up only in English and mathematical subjects.

7397. Do you consider it judicious that the Christian Brothers should prepare boys for the Intermediate Examinations?—No; I think they should stick to their work of primary education; if they deal with the primary work we will be able to deal with the Intermediate work.

7398. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do the Catholics of Kilkenny gain any advantage from the Model School?—No. I do not think there is a Catholic going there.

7399. Dr. TRAILL.—But we found six there to-day?—Well, they must be boys from the country.

7400. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What prevents the Catholics taking advantage of the Model School?—They are prevented by conscientious scruples.

THOMASTOWN PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

Very Rev. Archbishop Gorman, Rector of Thomastown, sworn.

7401. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—There is a foundation from Lord Curriek at Thomastown for a parochial school?—Well, I have not been able to get hold of the original document; it seems to have been misplaced among his lordship's papers, but I have got a memorial of the deed, which will do as well, perhaps.

7402. Dr. TRAILL.—What is the amount of the endowment?—It is only a house and garden.

7404. But we find also from the Report that there ought to be a sum of £215 1s. 10d. Government Stock invested under 8 & 7 Vic., c. 91?—That is still available, it is in my name, that of the late rector, Rev. J. L. Irwin, and Thomas Greene, Secretary Church Representative Body. It stood formerly in the names of Mr. Irwin and the late William Digges La Touche, but was transferred about three years ago. It is in the New Three per Cent. Stock and produces about £6 a year.

7405. From what did it arise?—It came from a Parochial Loan Fund established about forty years ago.

7406. Is the school under the National Board?—No, it is not connected with the Board.

7407. How is it maintained?—It is kept up by the small endowment and by private subscription.

7408. Have you a master in charge of the school?—We have only a mistress at present.

7409. How many pupils are there at the school?—There are fourteen children at it now.

7410. Is there any likelihood of the numbers being increased?—There are about six more pupils likely to attend the school when they grow up.

7411. Is the school available solely for children of the Church of Ireland?—No, not exactly, according to the words of the deed.

7412. Is the site of the school of any value?—There is a small garden, but I cannot make out what is the exact acreage of it.

7413. What are the premises rated at?—It was rated at £6 a year, but the amount has been reduced to £4 15s.

7414. Does Lord Curriek take an interest in the school?—Yes, the lease reserves to him the right of appointing a master.

PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1887.

At the Nicholson Memorial School, Lichburn.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAIRN, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MULLOY, D.D., D.S.C., and ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., was in attendance.

OBJECTIONS TO THE DRAFT SCHEME FOR THE NICHOLSON MEMORIAL SCHOOL.

Lord Justice FITZGERSON stated that, a preliminary inquiry having been held by the Assistant Commissioners, and a draft scheme having been published, the present sitting had been appointed by the Judicial Commissioners to consider the objections which had been made respecting that draft scheme. It appeared that the foundation was a grant of the site by Deed, dated June 2, 1864, from the Marquess of Hertford to Clara Nicholson, at the nominal rent of one shilling, with a proviso that if at any time any house other than a schoolhouse should be erected without the consent of the Marquess of Hertford or his agent, the lease should revert to the Marquess. It would therefore be the first duty of the Commissioners to provide that a good and useful school should be maintained. Mrs. Nicholson, the lessee, appeared to be the second founder, and probably the principal one, having supplied the money with which the schoolhouse was erected. By Lichburn dated October 11, 1864, she assigned the premises to the Very Rev. James Stannus, Dean of Ross, and Rector of the Parish of Lichburn, Magdalene Stewart, and the Rev. Wm. Dawson Pender, then Incumbent of Christ Church, Lichburn, for the use of the town, upon trust during the lives of the said James Stannus and Magdalene Stewart (both since deceased), and during the incumbency of the said William Dawson Pender (since deceased). That the premises should be used "as and for a Sunday school, and for such other religious meetings and purposes as shall tend to the promotion of the reading, teaching, and studying the Holy Scriptures and of Protestant truth, as they shall in their discretion think proper, and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever, provided always that the full, free and unrestricted use of the Holy Scriptures shall be allowed to all and every child or children who may receive instruction and education in said school from time to time." After the death of James Stannus and Magdalene Stewart, and the determination of the Incumbency of the Rev. William Dawson Pender, the Deed directed that the Incumbent of Christ Church, Lichburn, and his successors for the time being shall hold the premises for the remainder of the term for the purposes aforesaid only and for no other purposes whatsoever, and it provided that if the trustees or incumbents should permit the schoolhouse to be used for any purpose contrary to the conditions aforesaid the said Incumbent should determine. It would therefore appear that so long as the Marquess of Hertford's lease existed the desired premises were an educational endowment, and if Mrs. Nicholson's grant became void, the original lease would still require, under penalty of forfeiture, that the schoolhouse should be maintained as such. That being the position of the property, the first matter to be considered was whether the existing management extended the usefulness of the endowment so far as was desirable. The first question was whether a day school was to be carried on in the premises, and, therefore, the Commissioners desired to know whether those interested in the endowment wished that it should be made useful on week days as well as on Sundays. The point to be considered on that matter was the existing trustee, the Incumbent of Christ Church, Lichburn, for the time being. There was also an endowment of £300 under Mrs. Nicholson's will, of which they desired to obtain an account. That money was to be applied by the Incumbent in keeping in repair the schoolhouse so long as that schoolhouse should be maintained under the deed of 1864, and in case that deed became void, the £300 was to form part of her residuary property, and would cease to be an educational endowment.

Rev. Arthur John Moore sworn and examined.

Rev. Arthur John Moore.

7414. Lord Justice FITZGERSON. — Are you the Incumbent of Christ Church, or the New Church, mentioned in Mrs. Nicholson's deed and will?—Yes, since June, 1886.

7415. And see you now in possession of this school as such incumbent?—I am.

7416. How is it used?—For a Sunday school, and for various meetings and classes in the evenings, through the week; there is nothing in it during the day time.

7417. Are any meetings held in it in the day time?—No. It is idle all week days.

7418. Could it be usefully employed during the day?—Yes. Being a trustee, I am quite as anxious as any person to have proper respect paid to the donor's intentions and wishes, but I do not see any difficulty in those wishes being carried out in the school being used as a Sunday school, and for other purposes. If a governing body opened a day school in the building, provision would be made that religious instruction should be given to all; if under the National Board, there is the Conscience Clause.

7419. Have you any day school connected with your church?—A small school in the country. None in the town.

7420. Where are your children taught?—The Church people have no school in Lichburn connected with their Church. The Presbyterians have two schools and the Methodist body have recently opened one. Those are the only National schools, with the exception of the Roman Catholic National school.

7421. Are those three schools in connection with the National Board?—They are.

7422. Where do you expect the children to come from—who would attend this school if opened as a day school?—There are numbers going to a day school which is not very convenient, and some not going to school at all. The population is on the increase and there is really great need of a school. The Church population is more numerous than any other body in the town, and the working classes, of which my congregation largely consists, feel aggrieved that they have no school in connection with the church.

7423. Lord Justice NAIRN. — Does your church

encompass the entire of Lieburn 1—No, only a section of it; it was taken off the original parish of Maris.

7434. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—What is the Church population of your parish 1—I could not state the population inside the district, but we have in connection with the Church some 800 families which represent about 4,000 individuals.

7435. You are manager of the Sunday school held here 1—Yes.

7436. What attendance have you 1—About 350 in the morning and 300 in the afternoon. On the rolls we have altogether 800 children.

7437. Are these all from your own parish 1—Yes, from my own congregation.

7438. How many of those want primary school education 1—Of course a great many of those are beyond school age—young women working in mills—but I am quite sure there are 500 children at any rate, of school age, belonging to my congregation.

7439. If this school was opened as a day school, how many pupils could you attract 1—I am quite sure we could soon have 300 at least.

7440. Are you in a position to undertake to give instruction in the Protestant religion and in the Holy Scriptures 1—Certainly; excluding Roman Catholics, who, of course, would be exempt under the Conscience Clause.

7441. Would they come 1—I don't think they would, for they have a school of their own. In my present school the children get religious instruction every day.

7442. Who do you think should have the management of the day school if opened here 1—Of course, as the deed stands, it was contemplated that as long as this indenture exists the Incumbent of Christ Church should be manager of the Sunday school and of the building.

7443. There is nothing about any day school in the deed 1—No. Of course that is a matter which must be decided by the Commissioners.

7444. Lord Justice NASEH.—Give us your views as to the management 1—If the incumbent and the churchwardens were incorporated, I think that would be sufficient for all practical purposes. After the school is started there is very little to be done.

7445. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—The churchwardens change from year to year—would you see any objection to persons being elected for this purpose 1—One reason why I suggested the churchwardens was that it would prevent any necessity for election as they would be officio.

7446. But they are different people in different years 1—Yes, they are.

7447. You might therefore lose the best school people if they were not the churchwardens. Do you think the best man for looking after the seats in the church, which is the duty of the churchwardens, would necessarily be the best man to look after the school 1—No, I do not say that.

7448. Lord Justice NASEH.—Are any of the 300 children whom you expect receiving no education at present for want of a school 1—If all the children needing education came to the school I don't think there would be sufficient accommodation.

7449. And some children that would come here are now attending Presbyterian schools 1—I think so.

7450. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—What means have you of giving religious education to the Church children now attending these other National schools 1—I have none.

7451. Dr. TRAILL.—You have no right to go into these other National schools to look after your children 1—Not without the managers' consent.

7452. Lord Justice NASEH.—Your opinion is that the Church children should be educated in a school under the care of the incumbent 1—We feel that our own children should have that privilege.

7453. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—Do your children now get no religious instruction from any minister of their own church except on Sundays 1—No.

7454. If you had this school what religious education would you give them 1—I would most decidedly give them daily religious education.

7455. Through their clergy or teachers, or through both 1—Through both.

7456. Dr. TRAILL.—As a matter of fact, by the last census, the Church population of Lieburn is about equal to all other denominations put together 1—I dare say it is.

7457. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—Do you know anything about the view of the present owners of the estate on this matter 1—I do. Sir Richard Wallace and his agent are both quite favourable to the opening of the day school. I have had communications with both of them, and they are quite willing to give me every facility.

7458. Dr. TRAILL.—Have they promised to contribute anything 1—Yes, Sir Richard Wallace has promised £100 for making an enlargement if we require it, for providing sanitary accommodation, school furniture, and the other matters necessary for the day school.

7459. How do you receive the interest on the £200 1—I have never received that interest; I never knew of it until quite recently. I may remark that the draft scheme requires that "The Governors shall provide religious instruction and scriptural education in accordance with Protestant principles and doctrines for all Protestant children attending the school." I think that fully meets the case.

7460. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—Would any gentlemen present like to give us any information as to whether this school should be opened as a day school 1

Rev. John H. Seymour examined.

I would insist most upon the intention of the founder. The last enquiry here it would appear to me was one-sided, as it was those who were in favour of the change who were heard. I was not consulted at the last enquiry, and knew nothing of it until it was held, and I believe it was the same with regard to Mrs. Nicholson's only surviving child. Mrs. Nicholson held very strong views on the subject of education. She was greatly opposed to the National Board, and I am positive she never would have spent her money on this building if she had had any idea that after her death a National school would be opened in it.

7461. Lord Justice FRITHGIBSON.—Perhaps, strictly speaking, as being merely a relative of the lady who built the school, you are not directly interested, but we shall be glad to hear you. The first practical point is what were her views with regard to having a day school here at all; it is clear that she desired to promote religious and scriptural instruction, and keeping this building closed is depriving children of her own church of any religious instruction through their own clergy except on Sundays 1—I do not want to enter into a discussion on that matter; it is the principle I am looking to. I think it is wrong in principle to violate her wishes.

7462. Dr. TRAILL.—How are we to gather her intentions except from the original document, and she never mentions the National Board in that document from first to last 1—If you think the members of her own family are unworthy of belief you can do so.

7463. Lord Justice NASEH.—Do you think Mrs. Nicholson's intentions were that this building was never to be used except as a Sunday school, and was to be closed against one particular form of education 1—She was very much opposed to the National Board.

17454. Was that because she thought the religious instruction of Protestant children would not be safe under the National Board?—Well, with reference to the Protestant children we know it is the principle that no reference can be made to the Bible during so many hours in the day. I have a document in my pocket which was drawn up and signed by all the Bishops of the Irish Church, except the Archbishop of Dublin, a long time ago on the question of National education, and if it is stated that Mrs. Nicholson held strong prejudiced views on the subject I may add that a large number of the clergy also held strong views on it.

17455. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—But Lord Justice TRAILL asks whether you think her intentions were that the school should not be opened except on Sundays. If you think she intended it to be open only on Sunday the question for us is whether having regard to the Marquis of Hertford's lease, we ought to continue that restriction. If, on the contrary, we come to the conclusion that consistently with her intentions it may be opened on week days, we will then come to the next question—on what terms it should be opened as a day school. I would require as a condition of opening it as a day school, that every child who came into it should be provided with free Scriptural instruction, but I do not mean by free Scriptural instruction, compulsory instruction—I never heard her express any wish as to the use of it as a day school.

17456. Dr. TRAILL.—The restriction she puts on the document is that it is not to be used as a day-school. Do you think it should be used as a day school, but not under the National Board?—I would infer that from her views and her mind on the subject.

17457. Was her mind that she did not want it to be a day school at all?—I know her mind as to the National Board.

17458. Would you, as a relative of hers, think that you were at liberty to open a day school here on your own terms?—Well, I would, I think.

17459. But if you were to open it, it would be under the Church Education Society?—It would.

17460. Then you would be tearing her will to bits and disregarding her intentions?—Well, I would not do it without getting advice on the subject.

17461. Whether do you consider it a greater evil to leave the Church children meeting National School education in schools under the management of other denominations, without their own clergymen giving them any religious instruction except on Sundays, or to open a school here in which their clergymen would have access to every child?—That is not the point with me.

17462. But that is a very important point. You have admitted that you would yourself go against Mrs. Nicholson's intentions, provided the school was opened as a day school on your own terms.—I understood you to say that most distinctly—I did.

17463. Now which do you think would more carry out Mrs. Nicholson's wishes—that the children should be left at large without any religious instruction on the week days or come here and be instructed day by day in the Scriptures; which do you say, knowing Mrs. Nicholson's ideas, would be more in accordance with the spirit of her intentions—the children being educated here under their own minister or receiving no religious instruction in other schools in Licham?—I think it was Mrs. Nicholson's intention that the children at this school should not receive instruction under the National Board.

17464. But it is admitted now that the children are getting no religious instruction at all in the other schools—no instruction in the formularies of their Church—on the week days, and I ask you whether Mrs. Nicholson's intentions would not be carried out better with a day school where they would receive religious instruction every day?—I think they should get such instruction every day.

17465. Well, every Protestant child that comes here will get that religious instruction according to the draft scheme.

17466. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—In the proposed scheme there is a power of bringing the school under the National Board. There certainly ought to be no provision in the scheme which could relieve the minister from the obligation of providing daily religious and Scriptural instruction for all the children of his own denomination and for all others willing to receive it—we should make it obligatory on him to do so!—But if Roman Catholics were to come.

17467. Do you want us to provide for what may happen if the sky falls?

17468. Dr. TRAILL.—You don't suppose that a priest would send them here willingly?—No.

Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—The school is to be used for a Sunday school and for such other religious meetings and purposes as may tend to the promotion of the reading, teaching, and studying the Holy Scriptures and of Protestant truth. We therefore need not provide for the case of Roman Catholic children coming.

Rev. Canon Wm. Dawson, Founder recalled.

Rev. Canon
 Wm. Dawson,
 Founder.

17469. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Do you know whether during the time Mrs. Nicholson lived after the foundation of this school it was ever used as a schoolhouse on week days?—There was a night school twice in the week in it for a time, and the young people were taught reading and writing, and everyone was taught the Holy Scriptures.

17470. Dr. TRAILL.—Were you Incumbent at the time?—I was.

17471. Did you consider that to be forbidden in her will?—No, I do not see that.

17472. She says it was for religious meetings.—But she mentioned that it might be used for a day school. Dr. TRAILL.—Certainly not.

17473. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Was it her intention that it should be used as a day school?—Yes, her first intention was a Sunday school. I said I thought it was a great pity it could not be used as a day school, and she said she would put a clause in her deed to enable it to be used as a day school on the ground that the children should be taught the Scriptures.

17474. If that were carried out would it be in accordance with her intentions?—It would, but there should be an amendment in the draft scheme that the school should not be under the National Board which would not allow the free use of the Scriptures absolutely.

17475. What do you mean by not allowing it absolutely?—It would allow it practically, but what I proposed was that it should be under the Incumbent and Church management with Scriptural instruction, not necessarily that the school should be under the Church Education Society. In the future it is expected that the National Board will become denominational.

17476. Then you wish us to provide for opening a day school at which the children should receive religious instruction?—If it is a school at which all the children would receive such instruction.

17477. But who would there be to refuse such instruction?—The parents of any Roman Catholic children.

17478. Dr. TRAILL.—Surely no Roman Catholics would be coming here?—I am not quite sure, I think there would; there are Roman Catholic children attending other National schools in town.

17479. Suppose Presbyterian and Methodist children came here would they refuse the religious education?—I don't think they would.

Nov. 1, 1887
Rev. Canon
Wm. Davies
President.

7480. Do you think there would be any Roman Catholics in this school to prevent religious education from being given to every child in it?—I don't think the proviso in the will could be carried out if one case.

7481. The deed says:—"The full, free, and unrestricted use of the Holy Scriptures should be allowed to every child" would not the Scriptures be freely open to all?—Not if the parents of the child tell it not.

7482. Lord Justice FRY-GIBSON.—Then, in your view, would it be free Scriptural instruction to instruct a child whose parents forbade the child to get it, and when the child did not want to take it?—I don't suppose it would, but the schoolhouse was built by Mrs. Nicholson as a memorial to her children and she wished to prevent the possibility of the exclusion of any child that ever entered the school from receiving instruction in the Scriptures. She wanted to have the rule so strict that no one could be instructed in the school that did not receive religious instruction.

7483. Dr. TRAILL.—The proviso is that "the full free and unrestricted use of the Holy Scriptures should be allowed to all and every child or children who might receive instruction and education in the said school from time to time;" that is provided for in the said scheme?—I say not with the word "allowed" there.

7484. You want to put it that the Scriptures should be forced on every child?—I think that the Incumbent will allow free Scriptural instruction to every child that comes, but I do not think he can do it without getting permission.

7485. It is only in the case of Roman Catholics that this permission is required, but the chances are Roman Catholics would not be here at all; you want to have the Scriptural education given compulsorily even to them in this school?—The proviso should be in that, it is to be a Protestant school.

7486. Lord Justice FRY-GIBSON.—The draft scheme says:—"The Governors shall provide religious instruction and Scriptural education in accordance with Protestant principles and doctrines for all Protestant children attending the said school;" if that does not make it a Protestant school I don't know what does. Would it not be much more a Protestant school if receiving children under this clause than excluding them from religious education altogether by keeping the place shut?—It was Mrs. Nicholson's objection to the National Board that led her to adopt this course, and I said to her that perhaps the National Board might change the constitution.

7488. How many schools have you in this parish—not in your own parish, but in this parish?—There is only one parish in Lislebury; Christ Church is a parochial district.

7489. Well, in this district how many schools have you?—Two.

7490. One is called the Free School and the other Iron Hall Street School.

7491. Lord Justice FRY-GIBSON.—Who manages the Free School?—A committee.

7492. How are they appointed?—By the committee themselves; one or two vacancies have been filled up to that way.

7493. They are appointed by co-option?—Yes.

7494. Dr. TRAILL.—That school was originally built by private subscription?—Yes.

7495. And some funds were left to it from time to time?—Yes, to the Incumbent of the parish of Lislebury.

7496. The school is situated in the parochial district of Christ Church?—Yes.

7497. Has the Incumbent of Christ Church a place on the Committee?—He had in the former case, but I don't think there was any change since Mr. Moore came.

7498. He is not on the committee?—Not ex-officio.
7499. How many are there on the committee?—Mr. McCall, Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Mack, and I think another.

7500. Do they ever meet?—Not often.

7501. What religious instruction is given in that school?—The Holy Scriptures are read there every day.

7502. Lord Justice FRY-GIBSON.—We went there to-day, and it certainly was a melancholy sight. There was only one child, recently promoted, in the fifth class; there was no sixth class. Nine children were in the third class; the bulk of the school were in the first class, receiving most rudimentary instruction, and there was only one poor teacher trying to struggle with the task of teaching them all, and as far as we could discover, no clergyman gave any religious instruction whatever in the place.

7503. Dr. TRAILL.—The other school was worse—twenty-four children and one teacher?—It was established as a sort of ragged school.

7504. Neither of these schools appeared to have any advanced children at all?—I think the children are taken away early to go and work in the mills.

7505. But are not the half-timers required to attend school?—Yes.

7506. Why do they not take to those schools?—I do not know.

7507. These children, the half-timers, are required to get their education in a National School; they are not at your schools. Does that not prove the necessity of having a National school here?—I did not know that was the rule.

7508. Does not that point to the necessity of having a National School here for the benefit of the Church children?—It is very expedient, no doubt.

7509. Lord Justice FRY-GIBSON.—Would it meet your difficulty if we gave prominence in the scheme to the absolute obligation of giving religious instruction to all Protestant children attending, and also made it the duty of the manager of the school, the clergyman of the Church, to provide religious instruction daily in the school?—Mrs. Nicholson's object was to promote "Protestant truth," and what Protestants believe to be true would then be taught in her school to every Protestant child?—If it was any other school but this one, I would consider that this might be unobjectionable, but this proviso was put in in order to exclude the possibility of such a principle being laid down.

7510. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think that proviso was put there to meet the case of one Roman Catholic?—It was to meet the case of putting it under the National Board.

7511. Mrs. Nicholson had not Roman Catholics in her mind at this time?—I do not know.

7513. Lord Justice FRY-GIBSON.—Where is the £200?—It is in the funds in the name of the three executors, and the dividends have been spent up to the last year on this house. I was under the impression until this enquiry came on that it was as the trustee I held the money, and I just left it out on the house. Last year Mr. Chamberlain laid out the money on repairs, and then there was the insurance, etc.

Nov 1, 1887.

Rev Canon
Wm. Dawson
Preston.

7514. Dr. TRAILL.—What balance is there to the credit now?—One year.

7515. How much is that?—£8.

7516. It is £200 exactly, is there any fractional sum?—£300.

7517. She gave £300 to be invested?—Yes; it was not invested at first; it was only invested of late.

7518. That is in the name of the three executors?—Yes, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Seymour, and myself.

7519. Is that specific sum invested in stock?—Yes.

7520. What year did you cease to be incumbent?—1884—three years ago.

7521. I suppose you can easily make out a balance about?—I can.

7522. And pay over the balance to Mr. Moore?—Yes.

The Lord Bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore examined.

Lord Bishop of Down.

7523. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Have you formed any opinion as to whether it would be for the advantage of the Protestant community to open this building as a day school?—Yes; that it would be.

7524. Do you think this school is necessary?—I do; under existing circumstances it is.

7525. You have heard the evidence that at present the children of your church get religious instruction only on Sundays?—Yes.

7526. Do you think it possible to make provision that they should get religious instruction here daily?—Yes.

7527. Would you approve of that?—Yes.

7528. Would your lordship have any objection to act as a member of the Governing Body; the whole question being about religious instruction it would be well to have some authority to look up to?—I cannot answer that question at present; the matter is only brought under my attention now. I do not know who the Governing Body may be.

7529. What is your opinion regarding the Governing Body?—My opinion would be largely that of Mr. Moore.

7530. Whether would it be better to have the churchwardens or a couple of parishioners specially selected?—I should prefer the churchwardens.

7531. They change every year?—You must specify how the others are to be appointed.

7532. One of them might be appointed by the incumbent and the other by the select vestry?—The select vestry is a fluctuating body.

7533. But it elects one of the churchwardens, usually changing every year, while the select vestry remains almost entirely the same, and could elect a suitable Governor annually.

7534. Dr. TRAILL.—If Mr. Moore had the selection of a layman out of the select vestry would you think it advisable that the curate should be an ex officio Governor, and be put on the Governing Body as well as the rector as he is also a member of the select vestry?—Yes, I would be satisfied with the curate.

7535. It is important to have on the governing body either five or seven so that the chairman should be the old member?—Yes, and have the casting vote.

7536. If he had the casting vote and the selection of one layman he would have the whole affair in his pocket, if there were only three Governors.

7537. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We might meet Mr. Moore's wishes if we had the Bishop and incumbent ex officio, and allowed the incumbent to nominate one other member; that would give him three, the select vestry or the general vestry might appoint two more; that would make five; and if there was any difference of opinion among the four they could call in the Bishop?—As to the appointment of the individual I was not prepared to say anything.

Walker T. Shannon, D.L., sworn, and examined.

Walker T.
Shannon, D.L.

7538. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You were agent for the estate at the time the site for the schoolhouse was granted?—I was.

7539. Can you give us the views of the grantor as to the school?—Well it was mainly for a Sunday school, but there never was any intention to prevent its being a day school during the week.

7540. You mean as regards the Marquess of Hertford?—Yes, and also as regards Mrs. Nicholson; she was a most excellent woman; a good Church woman, but I don't think she was a supporter of the National Board.

7541. I think it is quite clear she was not?—Had she lived any length of time she might have changed her opinions. Mr. Seymour mentioned that the Bishops of the Church were at one time against the National Board, and even mentioned that the Lord Primate was opposed to it, but every one of those Bishops came round to the National Board, and the Lord Primate himself was a supporter of it before he died. I believe that Mrs. Nicholson being a very sensible woman would not have allowed her feelings against the National Board to interfere with the opening of a day-school in this building provided proper religious instruction was given to the children.

7542. Do you think it would be advantageous to the Protestant inhabitants of the district to have a day-school here?—I do; most advantageous. I don't think there is a town in Ireland in which there is a greater deficiency as regards the teaching of the humbler classes. There is a school at my gate, just opposite there, and there are a few children attending it. There is a school-master who I believe is very willing to do his duty if properly paid, but from inquiries I made, I find there are no funds. It is worked by the Church Education Society. I have spoken to the incumbent myself on several occasions as to the want of education for the children of the town. The children are running about the streets of the town without receiving any education and from conversations I had with the Rector of Lishorn, I think that he does not feel justified in starting the school under the National Board. I have discussed the subject with him from time to time, and he says that his principles won't allow him to place the school under the National Board. The school is managed by a Committee; I was one of them about twelve or fourteen years ago, but I was absent from Lishorn some time since, and I think there are now only three or four who were members of the Committee at that time.

7543. Dr. TRAILL.—When you were on the Committee who were the trustees?—I could not answer that.

7544. Do you think if there was a good school established it would be a wise thing to utilize the funds here?—I think if there was a good school established, and put under the National Board there would be sufficient children to fill both schools, and I think it is a crying shame to have these two fine buildings empty all through the week. I believe every other religious denomination in Lishorn has its own schools.

7545. Lord Justice NABES.—Are there Roman Catholic National Schools?—Yes.

7546. Large enough to supply their wants?—Well

I have heard of no complaints, but they have one close to their chapel, and I think it a very great hardship that the members of the Church of Ireland which, as you have heard, are equal to the population of all the others put together, have no place to educate their children in. You are well aware that whatever school children are in the habit of attending they think is connected with their religious persuasion, and when there is such a large religious body as the Church of Ireland in Limerick there should be an arrangement for them to educate their own children.

7547. What Church Schools are there in Limerick?

John Ruddy sworn and examined.

7548. Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—What evidence do you wish to give?—I wish to speak relative to the governing body of the school. I know a good deal of the feeling of the people of Christ Church, and the feeling of the congregation and of most of the Vestry is that there should be a large Governing Body. They would not be satisfied with the clergyman and his two churchwardens and the bishop behind; they do not pin their faith to the clergy at all. You are aware that the Incumbent has the appointing of one of the churchwardens and that the congregation has the opportunity of appointing the other. I think two members of the Governing Body should be taken from the Vestry in addition to the two churchwardens. The churchwardens would be appointed irrespective of the school, and they change every year, and there is nobody so good a governor as those who attend year after year.

—I might say there are no schools except the Sunday schools. There is a school up by here which is scarcely entitled to be called a school for it is nearly empty.

7549. Dr. TRAILL.—The population of Limerick at last census was as follows:—Roman Catholics, 2,305; Church of Ireland, 5,223; Presbyterians, 2,382; all other denominations, 8634—I think the children of the Church of Ireland are entitled to a good school instead of being scattered here and there, and the great majority of them running wild through the streets.

Walter T.
Stinson, A.C.

7550. Dr. TRAILL.—If Mr. Moore were to select John Ruddy one of your vestry, and the vestry selected two more, and you had the bishop at the head of the whole, do you think all would work well together?—Yes; I think the congregation would approve of the whole thing.

7551. What is your opinion about the want of education?—I think it is very much required.

7552. And you think a day school here would be a great advantage to Limerick?—I am quite satisfied of that, and I think so is everyone in the congregation.

7553. Are you aware of that arrangement as to half-time girls which I mentioned already?—Yes.

7554. And therefore they have to go to National schools under the management of other denominations?—Yes.

Thomas Beggs examined.

7555. Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—What do you wish to mention?—As one of the working classes I would have more faith in a governing body being composed of the incumbent and two churchwardens, and two taken from the select vestry, for this reason.—I, as a working man, could go and speak to the select vestryman, when I could not approach Mr. Moore on all occasions.

7556. Dr. TRAILL.—Why not?—The members of the congregation would be more readily got at.

7557. Are you not a member of his congregation?—No, I am a member of Queen's Foundation's congregation.

7558. Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—Where do you send your children to school?—I have sent my children to a school connected with the National Board for the last twenty-two years, and would send them anywhere else, and I think it would be the greatest boon that could be given to the children of the Church of Ireland in Limerick if this school were placed under the National Board. Hitherto we have had no schools to send our children to except schools under the Presbyterians, or the Chapel, or the Methodists; the fact is simply this, that it shows other people have more faith in their clergy than we have. If this school was utilized as a National school we would have some place to send them to. As to the Free School I would not send any child to it. I was taught myself at a school under the Church Education Society, and I know very well the sort of education given there. Since I was married I had to go to a night-school to get any little education I have. I have no faith whatever in the education given at those schools, and it is perfectly true that the certificate of proficiency given to "half-timers" cannot be given from those schools.

7559. Dr. TRAILL.—If there is a National School in the neighbourhood the inspectors require them to go there?—Yes; out of a population of 12,000, I think, about the half belong to the Church of Ireland, and it is a crying shame that years and years ago they had not a school of their own under the National Board, and only for Queen's Foundation and others who blocked the way, we would have had these schools, and our children would not have been kept back. I say the greatest credit is due to the Presbyterians of this town for the education they provided to the advantage of Limerick.

7560. You would not like to have young children kept back in the case of life for want of education?—No, I would not.

7561. Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—We have now, I think, heard the views of all parties, and it seems to be the unanimous opinion that it would be greatly for the advantage of the Church children of the place that there should be a day school here as well as a Sunday school. We must give greater prominence to the intentions of Mrs. Nicholson and provide that the education to be given shall be a Protestant and Scriptural education, and that this education shall be freely open to all children who attend this school. It is certain that none but Protestant children will attend this school, and the scheme will provide for giving full effect to her intentions as to all such children, and at the same time will extend the usefulness of the site and building which Lord Hartford and she provided, during the day. We will deal with the matter upon these principles, and if the scheme does not command itself to all parties, it will be open to them to appeal against our opinions, but as we think it would be a great benefit to the locality to have this place available for the instruction of Protestant children under their own clergy men, we cannot keep it shut up from Sunday to Sunday. As to the Governing Body, that is a matter of detail. There are several proposals which we will consider; we wish we could have the Incumbent and some members of his congregation specially selected as taking an interest in the school, and that they should have the Bishop to refer to, but we cannot force that upon the Bishop. We will revise the draft scheme on these lines, and submit it to the Lord Lieutenant in Council, and if it is hereafter decided that this building must lie idle for six days out of the seven, we cannot help it.

The inquiry then concluded.

PUBLIC SITTING—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1887.

At the Office of the Commission, 23 Nassau-street.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAIR, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.Sc.; ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Secretary, WM. EDWARD ELLIS, Esq., LL.B., and the Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., were in attendance.

THE ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY OF MUSIC AND THE COULSON BEQUEST.

Stephen Roman, Esq., B.L. (Instructed by Messrs. Maxwell, Weldon, and Co.), appeared on behalf of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

Alderman F. B. Dillon, and the Right Hon. The Lord Mayor, M.P., represented the Dublin Corporation.

Mr. Walker, Solicitor, appeared for the representatives of the late Mr. James Ward, one of the trustees and executors of Miss Coulson's will.

Sir Francis W. Brady, Bart., Q.C.; Sir Thomas Jones, F.R.I.A.; Sir Robert P. Stewart, Mus. Doc.; and Mr. George Cress, represented the Royal Irish Academy of Music.

There were also present:—Sir George E. O'Shea, J.P.; Robert Sexton, J.P.; William Beetham; D'E. Dunn, LL.B.; E. S. Meredith; T. R. G. Cook, Mus. D.; Joseph Smith, Mus. D.; Brendan Rogers; E. Houghton; James Cecil Meredith, LL.B.; and James W. Drury, M.A.

1883. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—It may simplify matters and save time in the end, if I mention shortly how the case of the Royal Irish Academy of Music and the Coulson Bequest comes before us to-day, recalling what has already been done in the matter. On March 10, 1886, we held a public sitting, at which the Dublin Municipal Corporation, the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, the Trustees of the Coulson Will, and the Royal Irish Academy of Music were all represented; and at which we proposed to take evidence with a view to framing a scheme for the joint administration of the Coulson bequest, and of the existing endowments of the Royal Irish Academy of Music. At the opening of our proceedings Mr. Roman, for the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, called attention to the fact that proceedings were already pending in the Vice-Chancellor's Court for the settlement of a scheme for the management of the Coulson bequest. These proceedings were not convenient with the Royal Irish Academy of Music, which, I presume, was not within the jurisdiction of the Vice-Chancellor. It was then stated to us, on behalf of the Corporation, that, having regard to the terms of Miss Coulson's will, under which the Lord Lieutenant, the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Dublin, and the executors of her will were charged with carrying out the trusts, the Corporation, in conference with the Council of the Royal Irish Academy of Music, had appointed a committee of their body to act with the Royal Irish Academy of Music and the trustees of the will in applying to the Court of Chancery, and that the proceedings in Chancery, which were necessarily limited to the Coulson bequest, were taken by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests as petitioners at the joint request of the Corporation and the Academy. As the parties were all in attendance, we took evidence as to the constitution of the Academy and the administration of the Coulson bequest, in order to advance the matter as far as we could, and to ascertain whether it was a case in which we could with propriety exercise the powers of our Act, but we felt that we ought not to carry our proceedings further while those in Chancery were also in progress. We accordingly allowed the matter to stand over for the purpose of ascertaining whether the necessity for continuing the Chancery proceedings might not be obviated by our undertaking the settlement of a joint scheme for both endowments. We afterwards received a letter from Mr. Cress, Honorary Secretary of the Academy of Music, on June 1, 1886—informing us that the proceedings in the Vice-Chancellor's Court were adjourned for a fortnight, on the application of counsel for the Corporation, with a view to the resumption of the inquiry before us; but in a second letter, dated June 5, 1886, Mr. Cress informed us that it was desirable to ascertain clearly whether the adjournment was granted by the Vice-Chancellor with a view of giving time to proceed with the inquiry before our Commission, as a difference of opinion existed as to the ground of the adjournment. We accordingly set the case down again for June 1, 1886, when Mr. Bewley, Q.C., appeared for the Corporation, and Mr. Maxwell for the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, it appeared uncertain whether the Vice-Chancellor had postponed the proceedings with a view to our preparing a draft scheme, and we, therefore, felt that we could not with due respect to him proceed to draw it up until the proceedings before him had reached some definite conclusion; but we saw no reason why we should not continue the inquiry and hear the views of the Corporation and of the Academy of Music on the subject, especially as regarded the Academy itself; and accordingly a number of witnesses were examined—Sir Francis Brady, Sir Robert Stewart, Mr. Dillon, and others. At the conclusion of their evidence the matter stood adjourned generally to await the result of the proceedings in Chancery, and so the case has stood since. On December 9, 1886, we got a letter from the Town Clerk, with "the request that, now that the proceedings before the Vice-Chancellor are at an end, the Commissioners will be pleased to resume the proceedings for the settlement of a scheme," and sending copies of a proposed scheme framed at a conference between the Committee and the Council of the Academy. On receipt of that letter, we, on December 11, 1886, ordered:—"That the Town Clerk be informed that his letter will receive attention at the earliest possible date, but that in consequence of the number of draft schemes now in course of prepar-tion it is impossible for the Commissioners at present to fix a date for resuming the consideration of the matter." Nothing more was done until November 1, 1887, when we got a further letter from the Town Clerk asking us to inform the Committee of the Corporation which had charge of the matter at what time we would be prepared to take it up. As they had patiently waited for nearly a year we thought the least we could do was to fix this sitting, giving three weeks' notice to all parties concerned. That is the way the matter now stands, and the gentlemen present will remember that we have already taken a body of evidence about their wishes in the matter, that we have also got a draft scheme lodged as the joint proposal, as I understand, of the Corporation and the Academy of Music, and that we also have a report from the Corporation dealing with the subject. I believe that since the matter was last before us a scheme has been settled in Chancery for the administration of the Coulson bequest; that deals with only a part of the subject-matter open to our consideration, but we ought first to know how far the settlement of that scheme affects the views previously laid before us.

1863. Mr. Rosen, c.—I am instructed to appear here on behalf of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and what I have to do is very simple and very short. I called attention, on the last occasion I attended here, to the fact that the Vice-Chancellor had this matter before him, and had referred it to Chancery, and that under those circumstances it would be only proper for you to stay your hand. I then stated that it would be indecent and improper to have any conflict between this tribunal and the High Court of Justice; and I called attention to what occurred to a legislative declaration. I refer to the 52nd Section of the 32nd and 33rd of Victoria for that. That section is conspicuously absent from the statute constituting your Commission. Therefore, when we find in England, where both tribunals have jurisdiction, that the statute says the Court shall not go on, and when we find no such statement in the corresponding Irish statute, it means that the Court is to proceed, and by implication that the Commissioners are not. Now, what has taken place? A draft scheme was brought in before the Vice-Chancellor—a draft, it was alleged, of a joint scheme which has been just handed in, was furnished by the Academy of Music and the Corporation, and was brought before the Vice-Chancellor. The Corporation were represented on that occasion, the Academy of Music was represented, and the trustees of Coulson's will were represented; and with the assent of all parties, and after a long discussion, a careful examination of the merits of the draft, after frequent adjournments for further consideration of different points, a scheme was prepared and settled by the Vice-Chancellor on the 19th of July, 1886, and confirmed on the 8th of August, 1886. That scheme was prepared and confirmed for the further regulation of the Coulson bequest with the assent of the Corporation, with the assent of the Academy of Music, and with the assent of the trustees of Miss Coulson's will. That scheme having been so settled has been in operation since. It has hardly had a fair trial, and what I submit now on behalf of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations is that the Court of Chancery having jurisdiction over this matter, the law prescribes that the Court is to go on, and that this Commission is to stay its hand. On these grounds I am instructed by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to protest on their part against any such interference on the part of this Commission.

1864. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Allow me to ask you how this applies to the Royal Irish Academy of Music?

Mr. Rosen.—The Coulson bequest is what I am dealing with, and on the short grounds I have stated

I protest against any further scheme being entertained than that adopted by the Vice-Chancellor. I have nothing to do with the Royal Irish Academy of Music, or how far you may deal with that; but so far as you contemplate dealing with the Coulson bequest, I am instructed to respectfully protest.

1865. Lord Justice NASS.—I think you ought first to ascertain to what extent we purport dealing with it.

Mr. Rosen.—I am only instructed as to the Coulson bequest, and I protest against your dealing with that.

1866. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Allow me to ask you what you are protesting against—for you seem to be protesting against a thing we have not as yet touched on at all. The notice of this sitting, which you received from our secretary, was in these terms:—

"I am directed by the Commissioners to state that in consequence of a communication from the Town Clerk of Dublin requesting the Commissioners to state, for the information of the Committee of the Dublin Corporation, having charge of the matter of the above named endowment, at what time they would be prepared to take up the same, the Commissioners have appointed a sitting to be held here on Saturday, November 26th, at 11 o'clock, to consider the preparation of a draft scheme for the future government and management of this endowment." I cannot use stronger language than I did on former occasions to express my sense of the difficulty of asking us to interfere with the exercise by the Vice-Chancellor, or by any other judge, of a jurisdiction which the law has vested in him. But we also have a jurisdiction to exercise, and we must do it to the best of our judgment; and so I understand the proposal brought before us is one which the Vice-Chancellor had no power to entertain, namely, one for a joint administration of these two endowments. We have already expressed our unwillingness to meddle with the Coulson Charity alone, as it has been dealt with in Chancery by a tribunal qualified to deal with it. Accordingly, though pressed to deal with the whole scheme, we allowed the matter to stand over as long as the Vice-Chancellor thought it right to continue his proceedings, and I may say for myself that I have no intention of reopening what he has done, or of doing the same thing over again. Therefore, I have asked the parties to inform us to what extent the position of affairs has been changed by the Vice-Chancellor's scheme. At the same time, I think you must see that your objections do not apply to our settling a scheme now for the Royal Irish Academy of Music, and for its endowments, and for the discharge of its functions regarding the Coulson bequest. I have not read the Chancery scheme, nor do I know that the Royal Irish Academy of Music is mixed up in it at all; but we can't refuse to exercise our comprehensive powers for the benefit of the Academy, because a scheme has been settled in Chancery for the separate administration of the Coulson Fund.

Mr. Rosen.—When the matter was before the Vice-Chancellor the question was discussed before him.

1867. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What question was discussed?

Mr. Rosen.—The question I am dealing with; and, therefore, I respectfully submit you should stay your hand. I have no instructions to listen to any evidence for your proposed scheme. My sole instructions are on the part of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to protest against interference of any sort with the scheme of the Vice-Chancellor.

1868. Mr. Dillon.—As you are in the humour for protesting, I may mention that there is no foundation for the statement by Mr. Rosen, that the Corporation assented to the scheme before the Vice-Chancellor. On the contrary, they protested against the Vice-Chancellor proceeding with it. They appeared by counsel for that purpose, and asked for several adjournments, in order to settle a comprehensive scheme. They always considered that the scheme before the Vice-Chancellor would be only a partial settlement of the matter. I have the minutes of the meeting of the Corporation, at which instructions were given to protest against the Vice-Chancellor carrying out the scheme, and to ask him to leave it with this Commission. The Vice-Chancellor, for reasons that are best known to himself, thought fit to settle what the Corporation consider a very incomplete arrangement. Not only that, but the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, on the 31st of May, 1886, informed the Corporation that they would not oppose an adjournment in view of a comprehensive scheme being submitted to this Commission, showing that they were in favour of that being done; and this protest comes now by surprise upon us. The Town Clerk asked the Commissioners of Bequests by letter, previous to the meeting last Monday, to inform him what course they would take; but they had not the courtesy to reply.

1879. Mr. ROSEN.—I think there was a misunderstanding. What I said was that the scheme was settled with their own consent, and Sir George Owens and others were appointed the Corporation trustees.

1879. Mr. DILLON.—When the Committee of the Corporation saw the Vice-Chancellor was determined to settle a scheme in spite of their repeated protest, they did what they were absolutely bound to do—but they did it perfectly unwillingly—they nominated three members of their body to represent them. But that can't be taken down as evidence of a consent. On the contrary, as I said before, they repeatedly protested before the Vice-Chancellor.

1871. Mr. ROSEN.—Mr. Walker, the solicitor for the trustees of the will is here—will you ask him to say, on behalf of the trustees of the will, if he endorses the views I have just stated?

1872. Mr. DILLON.—I am sorry to have to protest again. Mr. Walker appears for the trustees of the will, and he cannot possibly do so under present circumstances.

1873. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—I have looked over the Vice-Chancellor's scheme, and the substance of it appears to be that trustees are appointed, and are given power to expend some portion of capital in providing premises in which to afford musical instruction to the sons and daughters of respectable Irish parents, and to provide furniture. They are at liberty to enter into arrangements with the Royal Irish Academy of Music for the purpose of affording this musical instruction. You cannot say that by the settlement of that scheme, dealing with the Coulson bequest, the hands of this Commission are tied up from dealing with the Royal Irish Academy of Music. It is not that we have not power to do it, but we are bound to deal with the Royal Irish Academy of Music; they have applied to us to do so, and, without saying that we would alter the scheme settled in Chancery, how are we prevented dealing with it?

Mr. ROSEN.—My instructions are to protest against you doing so. These are my only instructions.

1874. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Is your protest against our dealing with the Coulson bequest, or against our dealing with the Royal Irish Academy of Music, in which is involved the administration of the Coulson bequest?

Mr. ROSEN.—I have no instructions whatever beyond what I tell you.

1875. Lord Justice FRYGUSON.—The administration of the Coulson bequest is a thing in which the Academy of Music is interested. It is an institution which comes within our Act, and I wish you to tell me what is the application of your protest to the settlement of a scheme for the endowment and government of the Royal Irish Academy of Music. What ever may be the connection of that Academy with the Coulson bequest, the position of the Academy towards that bequest will be necessarily involved in the settlement of our scheme.

1876. Mr. ROSEN.—It is perfectly plain in the face of the trust that the trustees of the Coulson bequest have certain powers of dealing with this provision, and no matter what modification this Commission may make it will not alter the constitution of the body that the Vice-Chancellor appointed to deal with Miss Coulson's money.

1877. Lord Justice FRYGUSON.—How is it you apply that observation, or how can we give effect to your objection unless we refuse to deal at all with the Royal Irish Academy of Music, and so refuse them the benefits of our Act, to which they are entitled, and for which they have applied.

Mr. ROSEN.—The question is that the Academy of Music is to appoint three trustees, and your modifying the constitution of the Academy will prevent them appointing these gentlemen. I fail to see the difference.

1878. Lord Justice FRYGUSON.—Surely that is a difficulty that will not arise until we discuss the provision in our scheme for appointing the trustees in question.

Mr. ROSEN.—Quite so.

1879. Lord Justice FRYGUSON.—But you want to stop us altogether by protesting at the beginning against our doing anything at all.

Mr. ROSEN.—I would stop you dealing with the Coulson bequest; and I would ask you now to take me as objecting to your settling a scheme for the Coulson bequest. My instructions are that a scheme has been settled by a competent authority, that it has not had a fair trial yet, and it should not be interfered with until it has had a fair trial.

Counsel then retired.

1880. Lord Justice FRYGUSON.—Though Mr. ROSEN has retired, it is only right for me to say that his objections apply only to a small part of our duty in this matter, and so far as they apply, will receive full consideration. We wish to hear the views of the parties interested in the settlement of a scheme for the joint management of the Academy of Music and the Coulson bequest, but so far as that scheme would affect the disposal of the Coulson bequest, we will consider ourselves bound, as a matter of due respect for the high authority of the Vice-Chancellor, not unreasonably to depart from any provision of the Chancery scheme. At the same time the existence of that scheme will not deter the instruction accorded from the benefits of a joint management which we alone have jurisdiction to provide.

Sir FRANCIS W. BRADY, Bart.—As representing the Royal Irish Academy of Music, perhaps you would allow me at this early stage to say that the Academy of Music and the Corporation are perfectly in accord on this question. We have had many discussions about it, and are agreed, except upon one or two minor points, which we will leave you to decide. Subject to that, the Academy of Music, the Corporation, and Colonel Ward's representatives have agreed. I may also say that substantially the scheme we agreed upon is the same as the Vice-Chancellor's scheme. It may vary in some little details, but in nothing more than trifling details. The Academy of Music being interested in having the fund properly applied, are quite prepared to accept either the Vice-Chancellor's scheme or the scheme to be settled by you.

1881. Lord Justice FRYGUSON.—It is not our fault, I assure you, that you have to deal with two schemes. We did our best to have one comprehensive scheme settled here, cheaply and expeditiously, and once for all, but we could not go on here when the parties having the control of the Chancery proceedings insisted on going on there with Coulson part of the matter alone.

Sir FRANCIS BRADY.—It may shorten the matter if I mention that each party interested is agreed to accept a scheme prepared by the Corporation which differs very slightly from the Vice-Chancellor's scheme.

7592. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If so we may be relieved from much difficulty. Are there any points in the proposition now put forward differing from the scheme submitted by the Vice-Chancellor?

Mr. Dillon.—None, slightly differing.

7593. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We ought to know what they are.

Mr. Drury.—As representing Colonel Ward's interest I may mention that it has been agreed that the representatives of the Coulson charity per se are to be identified under this scheme. Formerly they were to be represented by the Academy of Music and the Corporation, but now we have agreed that there shall be a distinct representation of the Coulson charity.

7594. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Do you mean as the governing body of the Academy of Music?

Mr. Drury.—Yes. At present one of the Coulson trustees is appointed by the Corporation, one by the Academy of Music, and one by Colonel Ward. Under the new scheme the Coulson trustees will be represented on the governing body which is to take over the endowments of the academy and to amalgamate with it the Coulson bequest.

Mr. Dillon.—I need not go into details of the scheme; but some to the constitution of the governing body which is the only matter of importance in which this scheme differs from the Vice-Chancellor's. The governing body is constituted by sections 1 to 7, and by the schedule to the scheme.

7595. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do you speak of the governing body of the Academy of Music as such, or of the amalgamated body?

Mr. Dillon.—I speak of the governing body of the academy that is to have amalgamated with it the Coulson trust fund. It is explained at the heading, that it is to consist of the president, vice-president, and twenty-four members of the council. I do not find in the scheme any material difference between the proposed scheme and the scheme prepared by the Vice-Chancellor, except the constitution of the governing body. The Vice-Chancellor's scheme provides that the governing body of the charity itself shall be nominated, as has been mentioned to you, and shall consist of nine members. Now, unless some means can be devised for constituting the governing body of the Coulson bequest distinct from the governing body of the Academy, I think we must to that extent make some alteration in the scheme.

7596. Lord Justice NASH.—Would it not be possible to continue that body?

Mr. Dillon.—I think it would be rather difficult.

7597. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—This difficulty has arisen because the Vice-Chancellor had no jurisdiction over the Academy of Music, and therefore could not create a governing body for it. He did not make the governing body of the Academy the governing body of the Coulson charity, and I presume what you want now is that the same body which governs the Academy shall govern the Coulson charity also?

Mr. Dillon.—Certainly.

7598. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But you don't propose any alteration in the trusts of the fund?

Mr. Dillon.—No, I think they should be administered in the same way as by the Vice-Chancellor's scheme.

7599. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Then we may have to consider whether the alteration you seek is not merely consequential on the inability of the Vice-Chancellor to exercise jurisdiction over the two bodies.

Mr. Dillon.—That was one of the causes which led us to protest, that he had not the power to settle a comprehensive scheme.

7600. Dr. TRAILL.—Did Miss Coulson's trustees oppose the scheme in Chancery?

Mr. Dillon.—The representatives of Colonel Ward's will did, but not the trustees of the Coulson bequest.

7601. Dr. TRAILL.—Who prepared the scheme?

Mr. Dillon.—The Commissioners of Charitable Bequests and the Vice-Chancellor himself.

7602. Dr. TRAILL.—Who is opposing your present scheme?

Mr. Dillon.—Mr. Russell, for the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. They have no interest in music at all. They have the same interest as we have—an official interest.

Mr. Walker.—Mr. Drury says he has Colonel Ward's sanction not to object any further.

Mr. Drury.—We were represented before the Vice-Chancellor, and being interested with the Corporation and the Academy of Music in administering this charity we had several consultations with the Corporation, the Academy of Music, and the Coulson trustees, and we agreed that this was the best way to administer the charity.

7603. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Am I to understand that all the three constituent bodies, who have at present anything to do with the Coulson Fund—the Corporation, the Academy of Music, and the Coulson trustees—are unanimous in wishing us to proceed with the settlement of a joint scheme for its management in connection with the Academy.

Mr. Drury.—Yes. The Coulson trustees are nine in number, composed of representatives of three bodies—the Corporation, the Academy, and Miss Coulson's representatives. The first time we met, my co-trustees, representing the Corporation and the Academy of Music were averse to the representatives of the Coulson bequest having any representation at all on the new governing body. I insisted they should, and pressed it, and I am glad to say now that both the Corporation and the Academy of Music agree to have the Coulson bequest represented.

7604. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Then is this your position, that there are three existing bodies concerned in the endowments before us, namely, the Corporation of Dublin, the Academy of Music, and the trustees of the Coulson Bequest, appointed by the Vice-Chancellor and that these bodies come before us and ask us to co-ordinate our powers and to extend the usefulness of the endowments which they administer, by amalgamating them under certain conditions consistent with the objects for which they were constituted.

Mr. Dillon.—Yes, and to give them a constitution that they never had before.

7605. The Lord Mayor.—I think Dr. Molloy has exactly stated the case. All parties are now agreed save one or minor point, and that is as to the Coulson trustees—whether they should get three representatives or four. We all agree to leave that to you to decide; and upon every other point we consider the amalgamated scheme for the working of these two trusts the best and we all agree upon it.

7606. Mr. CREW.—As Honorary Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music I quite concur with the Lord Mayor in saying that the three constitutions are substantially agreed as to what the scheme should be. The question mentioned by Mr. Drury is unsettled and will be left to your determination—that is the representation of the Coulson trustees appointed by the Vice-Chancellor. The majority of us would be in favour of having a representation of four on the new board to represent Miss Coulson's interest in particular, the Corporation taking eight. Of the new body of twenty-four, the Corporation gets a representation of eight; those who represent Miss Coulson's personal interest, four; and the Academy of Music twelve. In addition to that there would be Vice-Presidents who would be chosen to represent the different interests. With regard to the trust in the Coulson will—it is a trust to found an Academy of Music in Dublin, where the sons and daughters of respectable Irish parents possessing natural musical talent may be instructed in instrumental music. There would be no interference with that at all for it would be still for the education of the same children, and the same trusts would be continued, as before.

7597. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—You keep up the special nature of the trust?

Mr. CRENSHAW.—Yes.

7598. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—You don't propose to amalgamate the Coulson trust with the general fund of the Academy?

Sir FRANCIS BRADY.—It will be kept distinct.

Mr. CRENSHAW.—The new corporate body will be the trustees.

7599. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—Yes, but one corporate body may have several special trusts, and I think you must keep up the special trust of Miss Coulson's fund, and you ought to perpetuate her memory thereby. How does the matter stand with regard to the amount of property brought in by each party?

Mr. DILLON.—The Corporation have power to raise £2,400 a year for purposes under the Library Act. We have already applied about £1,800 of that, and still have £600 to expend. The Corporation could not bind themselves to do anything until a scheme is properly settled; but the committee have stated that so soon as you have settled a scheme we will bring it before the Council with a view of getting a grant of say £300 a year for the Academy.

7600. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—There is a Government grant also?

Mr. DILLON.—There is. The reason we would press for a large representation on the governing body would be that we could say to the Municipal Council that we had such a representation as would ensure the interests of the Council being properly looked after.

7601. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—What is the value of the Coulson bequest?

Mr. CRENSHAW.—£30,000.

7602. Mr. DILLON.—It must not be forgotten that the Corporation are really the owners of one half of the Coulson bequest. The Lord Lieutenant resigned, and the Corporation, as trustees, are really owners of half.

7603. Mr. BRADY.—I would suggest that the representation should be eight and four. I think the Corporation, getting eight, will be properly represented. They have not given us anything yet, however much we may expect.

7604. Dr. TRAILL.—Why do the Corporation ask for more than that?

Mr. DILLON.—For this reason—we don't consider the Coulson personal interest to be of that controlling character that would entitle the executors to larger representation. The executors cease to have any interest when the fund is handed over.

Mr. WALKER.—And we protested against that, for Colonel Ward has the appointment of new trustees under the will.

7605. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—Originally, I suppose, Colonel Ward appointed himself, his son, and Mr. Drury, but has by his further power now?

Mr. WALKER.—Under the Vice-Chancellor's scheme he has exercised his power by appointing himself, his son, and Mr. Drury.

7606. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—Yes; but he seems to have no further power now.

Sir FRANCIS BRADY.—The will contains the usual powers of appointing trustees.

Mr. DILLON.—I say their power ceased when they handed over the property to the Academy.

7607. Rev. Dr. McALPIN.—You propose that vacancies on the Council shall be filled by subscribing members of the Academy?

Mr. DILLON.—Yes.

7608. Rev. Dr. McALPIN.—Do you make any provision in case there should be no subscribers?

Mr. DILLON.—Except in this way—that in some years the body must include a number of dilettantes, and they, on payment of 10s. a year, or upwards, are constituted subscribing members. We think they may constitute a permanent body.

7609. Rev. Dr. McALPIN.—It is extremely likely that one or both of these bodies will continue permanently to exist; but they may both possibly cease to exist, and you should make some provision for that contingency.

Mr. DILLON.—We can meet that in some way.

Sir THOMAS JONES.—Of course I need not say we will continue the body of subscribers, for if we don't we lose the grant of £300 a year.

7610. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—The only question, so far as I see, in dispute is whether the Corporation is to have a representation of nine or eight, and the Coulson interest of three or four.

Mr. DILLON.—Exactly. That matter we are not agreed upon, but we will leave it to you. I don't know whether Mr. CRENSHAW is prepared, on behalf of the Academy of Music, to say that the Corporation representation should be reduced to eight.

Mr. CRENSHAW.—I can only speak as Hon. Secretary, and we have not had a meeting of the Academy on this particular question. We had a meeting of the general body of subscribers, but not since this question arose.

7611. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—There is one point you should remember. As far as we are concerned, we have not yet determined upon any scheme, and the first thing to be done is to prepare a draft. Whatever proposal is brought out in print each of you will have full opportunity of discussing. So don't suppose that if we draft a scheme it will be final. Whatever we do may not satisfy all parties, but we are not bound by any of your proposals. Twenty-four is a large governing body, but if you are all agreed upon that number I will not object. What is the next objection?

Mr. DILLON.—Classes 7 and 8 might be modified, so as to introduce the new governing body. In clause 11—"any member of the Council who shall not have attended at least one of the meetings of the Council during a period of twelve months, shall cease to be a member"—we think that should be far more.

7612. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—Would you take him out if he was away for a third of the year?

Mr. DILLON.—They are annually elected. In class 10 we think fourteen days notice for a general meeting of the Academy too long. It ought to be seven days, and notice by post should be given as well as by advertisement. But these are all merely formal matters.

7613. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Are you all agreed on these alterations?

Mr. DILLON.—Yes.

7614. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Including the Academy of Music?

Mr. CRENSHAW.—Yes.

7615. Mr. DILLON.—There is another matter—the constitution of the Board of Studies—that we had a good deal of discussion about. You will find it in clause 29. Some of us, myself in particular, think that a very large responsibility should be given to this Board of Studies—that the Council of the Academy should be a Council more for the financial management of the property of the Academy, and the Board of Studies should consist of persons who would have control over the musical education. I speak so for this reason. Suppose I was elected myself on the Board of the Academy, I might have some knowledge in dealing with financial matters, but I have no musical knowledge and would not like to be appointed on a body that would have control over the teaching of the Academy. Therefore, I press it on the present members of the Academy to give most extensive powers to this body or Board of Studies.

7616. Dr. TRAILL.—Don't you give the Council full power to select the members of this Board of Studies?

Mr. DILLON.—Certainly.

7617. Dr. TRAILL.—Then suppose they elected all the members of their own body?

Mr. Dillon.—That of course would be objected to. I would limit the appointments on the Board of Studies to professionals.

7618. Dr. TRAILL.—Here it says that such members of the Academy as the Council may appoint. Do you want that changed?

Mr. Dillon.—I suggest that the words "members of the Academy" should be left out, and that instead it should be that "the Board of Studies do consist exclusively of the professors of the Academy." That did not meet the views of the Council, and I did not feel justified in pressing it. Under that the Board of Studies would consist altogether of the members of the Council and professionals would be excluded.

7619. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We had this very question before us in the case of the Alexandra College, and it was fairly settled by our scheme which has been approved by the Lord Lieutenant and is now law. There would be great difficulty in saying that all members of the Council or that all professors should be on this board. There must be a representation of the members of the Council on it.

7620. Dr. TRAILL.—Can any one tell how the governing body of the Academy was originally founded—whether it consisted of professors alone or was an elected body?

Mr. Cross.—I think it was an elected one. Our object is to have the best Council we can.

7621. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Would it be possible to have a professional representation on the Board of Studies?

Mr. Cross.—As framed at present, the Council has the power to appoint that body, and would it not be best to leave it in their hands?

7622. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What would you say to this: that the Council should have the power of appointing a Board of Studies, and that two-thirds of that Board should consist of professors; that the Council should have complete control over the financial affairs of the institution, but that the educational details should be carried out by the Board of Studies. In other words that, while the Board of Studies would have the practical management of the instruction given, the management of the finance and the supreme control of the institution should be reserved to the Council.

Mr. Dillon.—Dr. Smith, who is here, would like to give his views on this question; that there should be a musical director or director upon it; and as bearing on that point I have been furnished with the report of the Commission which sat in London in 1886, under the Presidency of the Prince of Wales, and which deals with this very question.

7623. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We have Dr. Smith's evidence on record. I think the director of the College of Music is Sir George Grove.

Mr. Dillon.—Yes.

7624. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If you get a practical professional man of good common sense, all will go well, and if you get a crookety man all will go badly. Every thing, therefore, would depend on the skill and tact of a single individual?

Mr. Dillon.—That was the view taken by the Commission, and then they suggested that a power should be taken at some future time to appoint a musical director if they thought fit.

7625. Dr. Smith.—As I was before the Commission it is only fair that I should give my evidence in support of the suggestion. I wish to allude to that report which the Rev. Dr. Molloy has in his hand now—the report of the Commission established by the Society of Arts in 1885, for the purpose of ascertaining what steps should be taken towards founding an Educational College of Music in England—and as there was an Academy of Music in London it was thought desirable to take that as a basis for their inquiry. There was a great deal of evidence taken. All the best known musicians were invited to give evidence. I have gone carefully through that evidence, given as to the nature of a responsible management. The question was asked as to what the general notion of a governing body should be. The evidence was almost unanimous in having a professional or some professional directors responsible—in fact one of the resolutions was to that effect. There was a difference of opinion on one point, and it was this—whether there should be one director solely responsible, or have the direction divided amongst more—say three or four. After the question had been fully discussed, it seemed to be the opinion that the idea of carrying on an institution of the kind without a strong professional representation at the head of it was too absurd for consideration. I think that the question should be met here by having a board of directors; and I should therefore like to suggest a board of three directors instead of one. I believe there are strong local reasons that operate against the appointment of one head director, at all events at present. As long as a local musical director should be responsible, all interests would be secured. I am of the idea that professionalists should not form part of the Council, or have anything to do with money affairs. I believe they should be responsible for the musical educational alone, and therefore I think that to constitute a Board of Studies composed by professionalists and amateurs would be absurd. Amateurs, as far as I know—I would not wish to disparage them—might be very useful in relation to the business management, but amateurs on the Educational Board, particularly on a subject like music, would be simply—to say the least of it—no acquisition; and I believe the presence of amateurs would take away responsibility from the professors. The evidence given before the Commission I would not like to burden you with, but I will simply say that the report on the table contains the most overwhelming testimony on that point. It comes from the most celebrated musicians we have—and the evidence is given in the most generous possible way—that recognising the fact that while amateurs in the capacity of business managers would be most essential, the evidence is unanimous against their being called on to exercise any influence in the practical work of musical education.

7626. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Then you would be in favour of eliminating the Board of Studies altogether, and appointing one or more directors who would have the management of the entire educational work.

Dr. Smith.—I would have either one body or the other. To have one director you should have a board of professors, but if you have three the Board would be superfluous. I would, of course, give the council the appointment of the Board of Studies, or director, as the case may be. They would have the appointment of professors, and the power of dismissal. You should have the Board of Studies, I think, to report periodically to the directors; but of course if you have a board of directors of three the governing functions of the Board of Studies would be much reduced.

7627. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is it the case that the representatives of the Academy of Music would object to have the Board of Studies composed exclusively of professors?

Sir Francis Brady.—This question has been under the consideration of the Academy for many years, and no question ever arose as to the interference of a non-professional. The council have the management of the details of teaching, but not professionally, and the professional teaching has never been interfered with. We make it our object to secure the services of the best professors we can, and each has the management of his class, and no one ever interfered with him to my knowledge, now extending over thirty years. The proposal of having professors solely responsible for the musical education might work well enough elsewhere, but in Dublin I fear it would not. However we may differ on minor points, there is one thing I must say—we will never sanction an outsider coming in and interfering with the business of the Academy of Music, with which he has no connection, good, bad, or indifferent. Any advice given by our own professors we always accept in the most friendly manner, and we generally act upon it. No difficulty has ever arisen on that point, and therefore I would suggest to Mr. Dillon not to press his view about directors. The great difficulty is to pay them. The Academy has not money to pay them well, but if they are to be paid, they should be paid well. If they are not paid well, they will not work, and are of no use.

7638. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What I understood Mr. Dillon to propose was that there should be a larger teaching representation and responsibility; he did not go so far as to say that the Board of Studies should consist exclusively of professors, but that they should have full representation and larger responsibility.

Mr. Dillon.—Yes, for I do feel there are great difficulties in Dublin in paying a musical director, or two musical directors. There would be great difficulty in doing it. I think the council should be very glad to get the views of those outside the Academy.

7639. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Do you think the Academy would object to having a preponderance of professors on the Board of Studies?

Sir Francis Brady.—No, we would practically put them all on.

7640. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Have you considered what number would be sufficient for such a board?

Mr. Dillon.—I think it was agreed that the Academy would be satisfied if the chairman of the Board of Studies was a layman.

Sir Francis Brady.—Yes.

7641. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Then, if we provide that not less than two-thirds shall be professors, it would settle it.

Sir Francis Brady.—As to the composition of the Board of Studies, we were satisfied if the chairman or presiding member of the board should be a layman—one of the council of the Academy—and let the professors make the rest of the board.

7642. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Would you exclude a professor from being chairman of the board?

Sir Francis Brady.—We have had a Board of Studies for some time in operation, consisting altogether of professional men, but they can't do everything.

7643. Dr. Smith.—I would like to say a word in reply to Sir Francis Brady's remarks. I fear he has interpreted my remarks in an unfriendly way. My desire is not to do harm. I want to improve the academy. I resent his assertion that the academy will not tolerate any interference or dictation from any one outside the council. It is a public institution, and is therefore as much open to criticism as any other public institution. The Academy is in receipt of public endowments, and as we contribute an infinitesimal proportion as tax payers we have an inherent right to speak—aye and more than a right to speak. I believe we have a right to be heard. I must assure Sir Francis Brady that my attitude towards the Academy, and towards him, is of the most friendly nature. I do not want to propose anything that would have the elements of discord or division in it. There has been a board in existence in the academy for the last year, and it has not been a success. The reason of that is that the members thereof had no responsibility thrown upon them. Throw the responsibility on one man and he will prove himself equal to it sooner or later. I don't understand why it should be insisted on that the chairman of the board should be a layman.

7644. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Would you be satisfied if this council were composed of professors of the Academy?

Dr. Smith.—Entirely.

7645. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—You don't wish for the introduction of outsiders?

Dr. Smith.—Certainly not.

7646. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I thought that was Sir Francis Brady's objection.

7647. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I think he was only guarding himself against having outsiders forced on them.

7648. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—What idea would the Academy have as to the number of members to be appointed on the Board of Studies?

Sir Francis Brady.—I think I may say we have no idea about it at all. We would probably place all the first class professors on it. We have several teachers besides.

7649. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How many professors have you now?

Sir Francis Brady.—Nine, but they are not all at present on the council.

7650. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But for efficient working it ought not to be too large; it would only be the working committee of the place.

Sir Francis Brady.—It would not. They would not have any existence as a Board of Studies unless an examination was coming on.

7651. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Have you not examinations often?

Sir Francis Brady.—An annual examination. The Board of Studies would really have nothing to do.

7652. Professor Davern.—Would they not have the preparation of the programme for each year?

Sir Francis Brady.—Oh, yes.

Mr. Dillon.—I fear sufficient responsibility is not thrown on the professional men, and I think if sufficient responsibility was thrown on such men as Sir Robert Stewart and Dr. Robinson better work would be done.

7653. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I think it would look like matters if I read the clauses we prepared in a similar case—the case of the Alexandra College—in which we established a Supreme Council to govern the institution, and a Board of Studies, or what we called a Committee of Education, to have charge of the instruction. The powers given to the Council are these:—

"The Council shall have and exercise general supervision and control over the college and the school; they shall determine the various subjects of education to be taught in each institution; they shall fix the terms and vacations, and shall make such rules and regulations as they shall think fit for the maintenance of order and discipline. They shall fix, from time to time, the number and names of the professors, lecturers, examiners, and other officers of the educational staff."

The powers given to the Committee of Education are as follows:—

"Subject to the supreme control of the Council, the Committee of Education shall have power to deal with all matters appertaining to education in the college. They shall fix the course of education, prepare the time table for the lectures and studies, provide temporary professors, lecturers, or other teachers during casual vacancies, and pending the making of permanent appointments by the Council. They shall make a report each year to the Council on the condition of the college, and the progress of the students, and they shall from time to time offer such recommendations with respect to the college, as their experience may suggest."

Now does it occur to you that something of that kind might be done here?

Mr. Dillon.—I see the Committee is elected by the professors in the College!

7654. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—It is.

Mr. Dillon.—That makes the difference.

7655. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—That is not in this way—in the Academy of Music nearly all the professors are on the Council.

Sir Francis Brady.—From what I know of the Academy, I think the correct plan would be to have some of the higher professors on the Council. That would be extremely desirable, but certainly not the introduction of strangers.

1845. Dr. TRAILL.—No one suggested that.
Mr. CREW.—On the part of the Academy, I desire it to be understood that we wish not to limit the responsibility of professors, but rather to throw additional responsibility on them.

1847. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Is there any definite objection on the part of any person to some professional representation on the Council?

Sir Francis BRADY.—On the contrary, it would be very desirable.

1848. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you allow the professors to elect themselves, or would you leave it to a vote of the Academy?

Sir Francis BRADY.—There would be no objection to an election by the Academy.

Mr. CREW.—At present the subscribers do that at the annual meeting.

Sir Thomas JONES.—Clause 11 says that no professor or teacher of music shall be eligible for election on the Council.

1849. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In every other case before us there was some representation of the teaching body on the governing body.

Mr. CREW.—We have no objection to that at all.

Sir Francis BRADY.—At present we have nearly all the professors on the Council.

1850. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Yes, but it is quite different to be on the representative of your own body.

Sir Francis BRADY.—We have no objection.

Mr. BRADY.—The Council have always worked with harmony with the professors on the Council.

Sir Francis BRADY.—And our efforts have always been to induce the professors to take responsibility upon themselves and assist us.

1851. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The next point is, as you go to exclude non-professional men from the Council of Studies? Dr. SMITH wants it to be exclusively professional, and I understand Mr. DILLON to ask for a larger professional representation, but not the whole.

Mr. BRADY.—The lay element would be very glad to be cut of it.

1852. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—I think we have it that the Academy would be content that two-thirds of the Council of Studies should be professors of the Academy.

Mr. DILLON.—There is no point in having a lay chairman of the Council; you would probably ruin the Academy by it.

1853. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If you agree on the composition of the Council, should you not leave it to themselves to select their own chairman?

Mr. DILLON.—Having given my own opinion upon it, I feel it is perfectly safe in your lordship's hands.

1854. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—I think we ought to fix the number of the board—say that it should not be less than eleven or more than fifteen.

Mr. CREW.—If you appoint so large a body you will have to appoint a committee.

1855. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—At present your actual board is nine—would nine be a sufficient number?

Sir Thomas JONES.—That is our idea.

1856. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Then that would make the number of professors six.

Mr. MOLLAY.—There are nine professors in the Academy. My opinion is that it would create great jealousy to exclude any of these gentlemen from the Board of Studies. I propose the number should be twelve—nine professors and three amateurs.

1857. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Then if you should get a tenth principal professor at any time you would be in an awkward position.

Dr. SMITH.—I may say on this point that in the Royal College of Music in London there is no fixed number. The Directors appoint the men on the Board whom they consider most suitable, and exclude others.

1858. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I am afraid that would not do here.

Dr. SMITH.—As bearing on this point, I would like to furnish you with a digest of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission.

1859. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We would be very glad to have it.

Dr. SMITH.—There is this I would like to say—and I say it sincerely—that during the whole career of the Academy it has been wonderfully well worked by two or three men, who were so fortunately situated that they could give both their time and ability to it. They were amateurs, and unless you can provide some such I think it is useless to saddle the Board of Studies with three men who under the new scheme will not do any good, and will be a dead weight on the Board, and will take away from the responsibility of the professors.

1860. Dr. TRAILL.—But if they be only three out of ten how can they be a dead weight?—They will be in the minority.

Lord Justice RAMEL.—And they may not attend.

Dr. SMITH.—It would be a composite board, and the professors have an objection to discuss points of a professional character with non-professionals.

1861. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There is great difference of opinion about this. Some say that, in Dublin, it would be impossible to maintain an exclusively professional board, while on the other hand it is said that the non-professional element, though working well hitherto, is mischievous, or at least would do no good. But at all events the non-professionals would be in a minority, and why should we throw away the advantages of a system that has worked well in the past merely because of fears for the future. Dr. SMITH's opinions are deserving of weight, and he seems to entertain them very strongly, but these are opinions on the other side also which deserve consideration.

Dr. SMITH.—The power of the directors should be clearly defined.

1862. Dr. TRAILL.—To whom would you give the appointment of new professors—to the Board of Studies or to the Council?

Dr. SMITH.—Assuming that we have a Board of professors, I would require them to report to the Council on the election of each applicant.

1863. Dr. TRAILL.—But to whom would you give the appointment?

Dr. SMITH.—I would give the final appointment to the Council, on the recommendation of the Board.

1864. Dr. TRAILL.—Does that mean that the Council must accept the names sent forward, or would you give them a veto?

Dr. SMITH.—I would give them a veto.

1865. Professor DOUGHERTY.—If you had a professional board would you give the right of veto to the Council?

Dr. SMITH.—Certainly.

Mr. DILLON.—I must say for myself that I would be very sorry to do anything that would cause the present members of the Academy to cease to take an interest in it.

1866. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Is there anything else to be suggested now?

Mr. DILLON.—In clause 30 I would make it "that on the recommendation of the Board of Studies the Council of the Academy may grant diplomas and certificates to candidates," &c. Some one suggested that there should be nothing but diplomas, and that certificated members be omitted; but that is a matter the Commissioners will deal with.

1867. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In my opinion the wisest thing would be to constitute a good governing body and leave them full power of regulating the giving of degrees and all such matters from time to time.

Mr. DILLON.—At present the £20,000—the Condon

Nov. 25, 1887.

bequest—is invested in the three per cents. We thought that power should be taken in the scheme, if possible, to enable it to be invested into securities that would produce more interest.

7668. Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—The power of investment must be given to the trustees.

Sir Francis Brady.—The Commissioners of Donations and Bequests have the money.

7669. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—They have certain defined powers of investment. I don't know that they would consent to accept any other securities.

Mr. COLE.—There is just one other point. The 28th clause does not seem to say anything express with regard to the trusts of Miss Coulson's will. I think we may agree that the trusts of her will should be preserved intact.

7670. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I should like to express, before you leave, our view of our own position with regard to this matter, and to tell you what we propose to do. We are very clearly that the creation of a governing body for the Royal Irish Academy of Music is within the powers of our Act. It is a practical thing, and accordingly we will undertake it. There is no conflict of interests involved, and it is gratifying to find such a large consensus of opinion amongst all concerned both as to the expediency of our undertaking it and as to the mode in which the work of the Academy should be carried out. Accordingly we will prepare a draft scheme which will be provisionally published in the first instance, and then all matters of detail can be carefully discussed. The matter is to some extent complicated by the undoubted fact that the large endowment derived under Miss Coulson's will has been so recently made the subject of Chancery proceedings, and is now regulated by a Chancery scheme. We must assume that in all matters regulating the disposal of that fund the Vice-Chancellor, with his usual power and excellence of administration, has provided for the application of Miss Coulson's money beneficially and in accordance with her will; and we should be very slow, even apart from the question of jurisdiction, to alter the provisions which he has made. But it is perfectly plain that the creation of the new Royal Academy of Music will bring into existence a body directly interested in the management of Miss Coulson's money, and which was not available when the Vice-Chancellor settled his scheme. I infer that some changes will necessarily be made in consequence of the creation of that body which the Court of Chancery had not power to create, and some other changes will be necessitated in dovetailing the Coulson scheme into that which we are now about to frame. We think it our duty to do what you have all asked us to do, but to alter as little as possible the scheme that is to be dovetailed into ours. We will preserve it as far as we can, preserving Miss Coulson's trusts, and making only such alterations as are necessarily consequent on the creation of the new Academy.

7671. Dr. TRAILL.—Would there be any objection to put ladies on the governing body?

7672. Lord Justice NASSER.—Having regard to the protest by Mr. Roan, I wish to state my view of our position here. If this was an application to settle a scheme for the administration of the Coulson Charity, speaking for myself, I do not think I would interfere with it, considering it settled by the Vice-Chancellor, who has concurrent jurisdiction; but I consider it open to us to draw up a scheme for the Academy with the Vice-Chancellor's Scheme for the Coulson bequest can be amalgamated. I may say that, as regards schemes framed by ourselves, we can make provision for the amalgamation of endowments for which schemes have already been settled. In point of fact we are doing that now, and I think it would be an improper construction of the Act if, for a charity like this, with a scheme settled in Chancery, we were to say we could not touch either it or any institution connected with it, for the purpose of preparing an amalgamated scheme, though minded that it would be more beneficial to both institutions that we should do so. We entertain the highest respect for the Vice-Chancellor, and for the scheme which he has settled, and if that were the only matter before us we would not touch it except under peculiar circumstances. But what we have to deal with is the Royal Irish Academy of Music, for which we are prepared to draft a scheme, and in that scheme to make provision for the Coulson bequest and the other endowments belonging to it.

Mr. DILLON.—I beg to thank the Commissioners on behalf of the Corporation for the kind and considerate manner in which they have heard us.

The proceedings terminated.

PUBLIC SITTING—MONDAY, JANUARY 9, 1888.

Jan. 9, 1888.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAIRN, Judicial Commissioners; and ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Secretary, WM. EDWARD ELLIS, Esq., LL.B., and the Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., were in attendance.

ULSTER SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE EDUCATION OF THE DEAF AND DUMB, AND THE BLIND; ROYAL BELFAST ACADEMICAL INSTITUTION; MAGES COLLEGE, LONDON-DERRY; BELFAST ACADEMY; NICHOLSON SCHOOL, LISSURN; LADIES' INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL, BELFAST; MOATE SCHOOL, LISNAKEA; LAUREL HILL SCHOOL, COLERAINE; TULLYVIN AND BENBAWN SCHOOLS; MERCHANT TAILORS' SCHOOL, DUBLIN; DUBLIN WORKING BOYS' HOME AND HARDING ENDOWMENT; ST. PETER'S PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS AND MRS. WRAY'S SCHOOL, DUBLIN; BERTRAND FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL, DUBLIN; PHIBSBOROUGH SUNDAY AND DAILY SCHOOLS, DUBLIN; MORGAN'S AND MORGAN'S SCHOOLS, DUBLIN (REMITTED SCHEME).

OBJECTIONS.

Mr. JELF, Q.C. (instructed by Sir Patrick Macneil, solicitor), appeared for the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland; Mr. Shaw (instructed by Mr. James Henry), appeared on behalf of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.

1878. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The present sitting has been appointed for the final consideration by the Judicial Commissioners of fifteen draft schemes, including one remitted by the Privy Council. We have received an objection from the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests which applies not only to all these schemes, but to every scheme as yet published under our Act, and we have therefore thought it convenient to discuss that matter in the first instance, after which we can relieve those interested in the schemes involving no further contentious matter from further attendance. The objection has arisen in the following way:—In 1886 we had a correspondence, to be found at page 294 of our First Report, with the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, when their special attention was directed to the portions of our first draft schemes, in which their co-operation was required. Some objections were then made by the Commissioners, to which we yielded; but with regard to the clause for future alteration of the schemes, the Commissioners stated that they would, as a matter of course, be prepared to accept the responsibility thrown upon them by the Act of Parliament. The two schemes then referred to were—first, the scheme for the 8-wards Borough Schools, providing that no alteration should be made except on the application of the Governors of either or both schools; and secondly, the Church of Ireland Training College Scheme, which provided for alteration upon the application of the Governors or of the General Synod. After that correspondence the schemes were signed by the Judicial Commissioners and submitted to the Privy Council and law officers, and these and other schemes have since been finally approved, and are now in force, containing provisions limiting applications for alteration to some defined authority, generally speaking, the Governing Body and some independent or superior body having an external control over the Governing Body. We continued to act on these precedents until July 15, 1887, when a communication was received from the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests in reference to "Lifford Endowed Schools" and "Currie School," which, it will be observed, was not a formal objection, but a request to us to consider whether we were justified in making provision limiting the right of application. We replied on July 16, 1887:—

"That, in our opinion, the power of making provision under section 25 of our Act for the alteration of schemes is discretionary, and that we, therefore, considered ourselves justified in deciding those by whom applications for alteration may be made."

The Lifford and Currie schemes had then been published, but had not been signed by the Judicial Commissioners. No further communication having been received from the Commissioners, these schemes, with others, were signed on October 28, 1887, and are now before the Lord Lieutenant. The next communication we received was dated November 18, 1887, and requested us to place on record the objection of the Commissioners to the retention of the building clause in the draft schemes for the Dublin Working Boys' Home, Anna Middleton Harding's Endowment, The Belfast Academy, Fethard School, Benbawn and Tullyvin Schools, Moat School, St. Peter's Parochial Schools, Mrs. Wray's School, and Laurel Hill School, all of which had been published on August 2, 1887. On the same date we also received some specific objections to the Bertrand School scheme. We then wrote to the Commissioners to say that we were anxious to have this matter, which had not yet been discussed before us, formally considered, with every desire on our part to give the fullest possible weight to the views of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and suggesting this day, January 2, 1888, as a convenient time to hear the objections, to which the Commissioners assented by letter of December 17, 1887.

We sent the notice required by our Act to all parties concerned. Some of them are represented here, I believe, and some are not; but I will now read the substance of the written communications we have received on the subject, which, in pursuance of the Act, have been sent to us. January 7, 1888, the Solicitors for the Ulster Society, Belfast, write:—

"The Committee of this institution will be represented by counsel on Monday, who will ask that the alteration clause in this scheme shall remain as originally drawn."

By letter dated January 6, 1888, the Joint Board of Managers and Visitors of the Royal Belfast Academical Institution state that they:—

"Are quite satisfied with the provisions made for alterations in the institution scheme by clause 44, and should object most strongly to any change being made in the constitution provided by the scheme."

The Trustees of the Mages Presbyterian College, Londonderry, under date January 7, 1888, write, stating:—

"1. That our letter and the accompanying documents were carefully considered at a meeting of the Faculty and Executive Committee of the Trustees of the College on the 5th instant.

"2. That they cannot but regard the decision to which the Commissioners may come on the objection of the Com-

July 4, 1888.

Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland (see their letter dated 18th November, 1887) on a precedent which will rule all cases of a similar kind, and particularly the case of the Magee College.

"3. That they object with the utmost determination to any modification (in the direction that the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland desire, of the draft scheme published on the 8th August, 1887, and commented in the latter of 18th November, 1887, before referred to.

"4. That they are prepared to withdraw the application for the scheme for the government of Magee College, but they are not prepared to entail on the Trustee the trouble, and on the funds the charges, in which they may be involved by any intermeddling body, should the scheme providing for the future alteration of the scheme authorize applications for such changes to be made by absolutely any person whatever."

The next communication is from the Committee and Trustees of the Dublin Working Boys' Home, and Harding Technical School, of the same date:—

"Referring to the objection of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, we beg to state that we do not approve of the alteration which is suggested, inasmuch as the governing body of the endowment is formed of persons interested in the institution, and one-half of their number will have to seek re-election every third year, and we think the clause in the scheme, as it now stands, is quite sufficient to guard against abuse in the future.

"No interested individual or public body has come forward within the time specified in the Act to give any help or make any suggestion in the framing of the scheme, and it appears to us most objectionable to leave it in the power of everyone who in the future wishes to be an interest in the endowment to re-open the question of its application. Such an arrangement would, we believe, take from the stability of the whole endowment, and would possibly prevent persons becoming life members, or bequeathing legacies except under stringent conditions.

"The draft scheme having been now drawn up by your Commission with so much care and consideration, we would prefer to omit the clause for its alteration altogether rather than make it wider than it now stands."

Then we have a resolution passed at a meeting of St. Peter's School of Donal:—

"Resolved.—That this board is strongly of opinion that the power of applying for any alteration of the scheme when finally sanctioned should be strictly limited to the Governing Body."

Then there is a letter from the Governors of the Bertram Female Orphan School, Dublin, under date January 5, 1888:—

"The Governors of this school held a special meeting yesterday, and unanimously agreed that the amendment of clause 84 of draft scheme suggested by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests should not be considered."

These are the documents we have received upon the matter, and, having read them, we are now anxious to hear those who are in attendance. Probably we should first ask Mr. Jelfet to present the views of the objectors.

7674. Mr. Jelfet, Q.C.—The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests conceive that the 24th clause of the scheme for Bertram's Charity should be modified in such a way as to enable persons who are really interested in the well-being and conduct of the Charity to make application in reference to any alteration of the scheme. I have no instructions in reference to Magee College, with which the correspondence is convenient. The Commissioners think the scheme should be modified to give the right to the Attorney-General, I would say, who certainly would be free from all the observations contained in the correspondence, and that it should also embrace persons who could prove that they are interested in the well-being of the Charity. Undoubtedly, it has been the practice in preparing schemes (not of this Commission, but speaking of Chancery schemes) to introduce a power to put the law in motion for its modification by persons interested—certainly at the instance of the Attorney-General—who would not be assumed to interfere except for reasons that might compel him to do so. The 37th clause in your Act appears to have an important bearing on the point. The governing body may not fulfil the duties they were intended to discharge, and it may be necessary for certain persons to put the Commissioners of Bequests in motion (Road Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1885, sec. 37). That clause undoubtedly seems to consider that there are other parties who would have a right to intervene to compel the governing body to discharge the duty thrown upon them by virtue of the scheme. It might so happen, and no doubt would happen in process of time, that they might be unable to give full effect to the provisions which were required under this 37th section to be given effect to; and it might be necessary to procure some modification in the scheme to enable them to do so. This 37th section appears to recognize persons having vested interests in the endowments, as being authorized to put the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests in motion, for the purpose of compelling that there should be a full observance of the scheme. Although section 18 uses the word "may," we are conversant with a number of authorities to show that that word, in statutes like this—particularly in matters of procedure, has had the interpretation of "must." It recognizes the authority of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests as persons who have certain interests in carrying out the scheme, such as would authorize them to interfere. There could be no objection to the name of the Attorney-General being introduced. He would be the natural person to make any application for an alteration, but the effect of the scheme at present is to make the Governor elector.

7675. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you insist on the objection that we must give the power to every party to apply, and cannot introduce any specified names?

Mr. Jelfet, Q.C.—What I conceive, and what the Commissioners instruct me to press for, is this—that any person appearing in the terms of the 37th section to have an interest in the endowment should be entitled to make application, if necessary, for an alteration in the scheme. Section 37 provides that an application may be made by the Town Council or governing body of any town affected by a scheme, and I would propose that either the Attorney-General, or the classes recognized by section 37 as having an interest in the proper government of the educational charity, should be recognized under section 18 as entitled to apply for an alteration in the scheme. That would appear to me to carry out the provisions of the Act. It would be free from the objections glanced at in the correspondence—that it would offer a premium to persons who had no right to interfere. It would prevent what would be a serious blot on the whole scheme—that is that the governing body should be so entirely absolute, that no other authority could have power to make an alteration in the scheme. It would be wise to introduce the Attorney-General and the other authorities.

7676. Dr. Traill.—But the objection is that we are stopped by section 18 from introducing any authorities.

Mr. Jelfet, Q.C.—No; section 37 is a good illustration of the class of persons who have a right to apply for alteration of the scheme.

7677. Dr. Traill.—How is the Attorney-General interested?

Mr. Jelfet, Q.C.—He is interested in every charity. He represents every charity. You cannot have an information laid against the Governors of any charity except through the Attorney-General, under Sir John Romilly's Act.

7678. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I had better read the objection in the most formal shape in which it has been presented by the secretary of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests before the Privy Council, for we must see what we are asked to do.

"CURRIE SCHOOL, BELFAST."

"I am directed to lodge an objection on behalf of my Commissioners to paragraph 29, on the ground that it limits the persons by whom applications to this Board for the future alteration of endowments may be made, my Commissioners being of opinion that it is not in the discretion of the Educational Endowments Commissioners to make such limitation, but that when a clause providing for the future alteration of a scheme is inserted therein, it should be framed so as to allow any party interested (and these words are undefined) "to apply as provided by the 16th section of the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1857."

It therefore appears, Mr. Jellett, that your Commissioners contend, as matter of law, that we are not at liberty to define at all who is to apply, and if they are right it would be as illegal to name the Attorney-General as anybody else.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—The 37th section seems to apply to the whole case.

7673. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—But the Town Council or the ratepayers mentioned in that section might not be persons interested at all, and if we are to put in "any person interested," that must include "every party interested."

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—No, a charity to Belfast would not have the interest intended for a charity in Dublin.

7674. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—The objection would involve that after the scheme has passed through this Commission, and been approved by the Law Officers and Lord Lieutenant in Council, and has put the force of law, everybody claiming any interest in it could go to Kildare-place and apply to have an alteration of the whole thing. The written objection is that we have no power to limit or define the applicants at all, and we must first know whether you are arguing in favour of this written objection, or shall that we be at liberty to define who the applicants are to be. If that is all you ask, you will find us anxious to admit every person to whom the power can be given with advantage to the Charity, but not to admit every interested person who might have an idea in his head that the scheme should be altered.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—What I would submit is that you should follow the 37th section, and introduce the persons named there as the persons on whose application any modification of the scheme was to be made.

7675. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Then you admit we are at liberty to define the persons.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—I think that in regard to procedure, and in dealing with a judicial body, you can say that the word "may" means "must."

7676. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Look at sections 14, 15, 16, and 17 of the Act, which say that the Commissioners "shall" provide so and so; do they not show that section 18, which says the Commissioners "may" provide, is discretionary?

Lord Justice NASH.—As regards your suggestion to enable those named in section 37 to apply for alterations, there are a great many schools that we have got to deal with belonging to particular religious denominations, and it would be inconvenient, I think, to give general powers to twenty ratepayers of a Poor Law Union to say how much schemes should be altered.

7683. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—What have the Town Council of Belfast, for instance, to do with the Ulster Society for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb; or the Derry Corporation with the Magee College? The institutions happen to be in the town, but that is all.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—I would ask you to take the very words of the 37th section—"Any ratepayers (not less than twenty) of any Poor-law Union or place directly affected thereby, or of any person or persons having a vested interest in the endowment."

7684. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Are the ratepayers "affected" by a scheme for a private endowment?

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—Yes.

7685. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—In the case of the Bertram Charity, how are the ratepayers of Dublin affected by the scheme?

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—I do not say they are.

7686. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Then I do not think the words of section 37 apply.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—Of course in case of the application being made by a particular class of persons, the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests would have the right to consider whether they were the persons having a right to object under the Act.

7687. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Yes, but they would have to hear the question discussed, and what we have to consider is, whether we can define who are to be competent to take the proceeding. If "any party interested" may apply, the Commissioners cannot refuse to hear the application. The governing body is interested, every object of the Charity is interested, every officer and servant of the institution is interested, but it would be a monstrous thing that if a person wanted a child to be kept longer in the school than the scheme allowed, or if an officer wanted a bigger salary, he could apply to have the scheme altered. Besides, there is no power given to occupy the governing body the cost of making applications for alteration. Your Commissioners have told us officially that there are duties which they "cannot efficiently discharge from want of officers, of time, and of judicial authority."

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—What I conceive is that the 37th section, which defines the class of persons who have a right to complain of a scheme not being properly carried out, would indicate who are the persons who should be permitted to apply to alter it.

7688. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—But your objection is that we cannot define them at all.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—Then I would say follow the words of the Act, and supposing the terms of section 18 to be compulsory, you would put in that the scheme should be altered by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests on the application of any party interested.

7689. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Those are the words to which all parties interested object. If we put them in, every person interested would be entitled as of right to apply.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—I cannot conceive that there is any great objection. It is plain that the 37th section recognises that the Governing Body may not finish up their duty, and that they can be called to account.

7690. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Yes; but section 37 deals with cases where the trust is not carried out, and according to the existing law any person interested can compel the due execution of a trust, and the Attorney-General can file an information. Observe the only judicial proceeding to be taken under the 37th section is one at the instance of the Attorney-General, but, preliminary to that, there is a power to go to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to get something like a preliminary notice. What section 18 deals with is the case of an existing charity, with defined trusts, which it is desired to alter. A trustee cannot go to the Court of Chancery to alter his trust. The only power that I know for that purpose is an information by the Attorney-General, and you want to give the power indiscriminately to the Commissioners, a new tribunal, on the application of anybody having an interest, no matter how small.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—Section 37 plainly contemplates that the governing body may fail to discharge their duty.

Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Yes; and provides a remedy.

Mr. Jellett, Q.C.—Therefore the scheme should be framed in such a way that the Governing Body could be called to account.

Jan. 7, 1886.

7691. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—I agree; and by analogy we have tried to find somebody in each case who may apply for an alteration, if the Governing Body should fail to do so in a proper case. Take the Bertrand scheme, and see the number of people who may apply:—

"In any matter whatsoever the Governors, or the General Synod and General Assembly, or the Diocesan Council and Presbytery; and in any matter relating exclusively to the Church Governors, the General Synod or Diocesan Council; and in any matter relating exclusively to the Presbyterian Governors, the General Assembly, or Presbytery."

The principle which we have gone on is this—we always allow the Governors to apply whenever they think the existing scheme requires alteration. We search for some other body independent of the Governors, and if possible superior to them, and authorise them also to apply. We do not let in individuals. Take the case of the Church of Ireland Training College scheme, which is now law, and assume that the clause you propose had been inserted that, "it might be altered on the application of the Governors or any party interested." At every stage that scheme was opposed by a minority of the existing committee. We overruled their objection here. They appeared again before the Privy Council, and argued the objection, and it was overruled there also. The objectors are members of the Governing Body and interested in the endowment, and regarded the objection as a matter of principle. If your objection prevailed, the moment the scheme passed, the whole question might have been raised again before the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—I could dispute an extreme case, that some scheme might exist to reference to the administration of the scheme that was not foreseen, and it is impossible to foresee what modifications might be required in the lapse of years. Perhaps the Governors would be the best to interfere for the purpose of having any alteration made.

7692. Lord Justice NANCE.—In the Bertrand scheme, do you think that the parties named are insufficient to enable application to be made to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations?

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—I should say not. No man can foresee what the future constitution of the bodies here defined may be. This proceeds on the assumption that these bodies will always be constituted as they are now.

7693. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Each of those bodies is defined to include the supreme authority of its own denomination for the time being. The General Synod or the Diocesan Council, or the General Assembly, or the Dublin Presbytery might be reorganised; but until the Churches they represent ceased to exist there would be some supreme authority in each of them, and if the Churches disappear the charity will probably have gone before then.

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—In the way the Governing Body is elected some of them represent the Diocesan Council, and some represent the Presbytery, and therefore really clause 34 of the scheme, which gives the power of application at the instance of the General Synod or General Assembly, or Diocesan Synod and Presbytery, gives it very much to the same class of persons as would be represented by the Governors. There is no independent body named, which seems to me to be the great objection, to criticise the action of the Governing Body.

7694. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—You say that there ought to be an independent authority amongst those empowered to apply, and so there ought, if such can be found, but that would not go to the length of your objection?

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—I press it to this extent, that there should be some body or individual having the right to criticise the action of both these bodies. The Governing Body is to consist of ten Governors, three of whom shall be ex-officio, and seven representative. The scheme defines who the ex-officio Governors shall be, and then states who are to be the representative Governors, and it seems to me that the persons who were contemplated under clause 34 are so much of the same class that there would be no independent body to criticise the action of both parties, and I really think that is what the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests wish to have.

7695. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Can you suggest who they should be—is it the category of the parish?

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—I think the Attorney-General.

7696. Dr. TRAVIS.—That would be a scheme to put fees into the lawyers' pockets. What is the Attorney-General wanted for? The object of all the schemes is to keep the lawyers out of them.

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—I don't think the Attorney-General for Ireland would interfere except at the instance of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. At present any proceedings in these cases must be taken at the instance of the Commissioners or the Attorney-General. On the other hand, this scheme, as I am, as it now stands, renders these particular bodies practically obsolete in the matter.

7697. Lord Justice NANCE.—Are you prepared to say in reference to this particular scheme that the persons mentioned in clause 34 are proper parties, or do you suggest any others whom we should consider as being properly suited to make application for alteration?

Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—There are cases in which categories or municipal authorities would be interested. For example, in Dublin there is a scheme for the Academy of Music, in which the Corporation should have a right to interfere, but you would not, I think, advocate our giving the power to the Town Council in the case of a private denominational charity.

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—I think myself that the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests would be satisfied if you inserted "any person or persons interested in the charity."

7698. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—That is what everybody else objects to. We could not allow every teacher or pupil to apply to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations to alter the scale of fees. I go with you to the fullest extent in desiring to put in, with the governing body, some independent authority, and the main difficulty is removed if you concede that we are not obliged to put in everybody.

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—We come to you now under the 18th section of the Act. I presume that clause 34 in the scheme has been introduced in accordance with section 18 of the Act?

7699. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Yes; but the Commissioners "are of opinion that it is not in the discretion of the Educational Endowments Commissioners to make limitations, but that when a clause providing for the future alteration of a scheme is inserted, it should be framed so as to allow any party interested to apply." Though they have never said so definitely, I would imply that they admit we have a discretion to put in the alteration clause or to omit it altogether.

Mr. Jellic, q.c.—That is what I would say, too.

7700. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—These schemes have a force that no Chancery Scheme has, because under section 29 of the Act they "shall not be questioned in any legal proceeding whatever." Therefore it might be contended that nothing short of an Act of Parliament could alter them if we omitted the alteration clause. We feel this as pressing pressure upon us to provide the means of modifying each scheme without going to Parliament, but if it is in our discretion to put in the provision at all, it seems unreasonable that we should have no discretion as to how it is to be exercised.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—The Commissioners say you need not insist the clause if you do not like, but if you introduce it I contend that you must do it in the strict words of the Act of Parliament.

7701. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Does the Act of Parliament say so? We may empower the Governing Body or "any party interested"—does that compel us (if acting at all) to empower every party interested? You have heard that some of the most important endowments in Ireland would rather withdraw than submit to that.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—I would say the view of the Commissioners was that it was intended by you that the modifications should take place only at the instance of the Governing Body.

7702. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is a mistake; we have done so, under special circumstances, in the cases of the Stanhope-street Schools, Belfast, and the Bewley Borough Schools, both of which are now in force, but in the case you are discussing you have the independent authority of three or four other bodies.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—By clause 34, it appears that the application is to be made on the part of the Governors, and unites with them very much, as the Governing Body, a joint application of the General Synod and General Assembly.

7703. Dr. TRAILL.—The charity belongs exclusively to the denominations of which these are the supreme authorities.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—But I want some other persons who are interested to be heard.

7704. Lord Justice Nares.—Would not the Attorney-General, irrespective of the provisions of our Act, have power to proceed by information, or petition?

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—He would, in reference to any abuse of it, but as regards modification of the scheme I don't know. This is not the case of giving liberty to any person to institute proceedings. The Commissioners of Charitable Donations are a public Board, and they would consider, before giving effect to any complaint, the status of the person interested, and see whether or not any consideration should be given to any complaint by the party.

7705. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We do not say the power would be abused, but the Commissioners act as a recognized tribunal for the exercise of jurisdiction in contentious matters. This is a new and additional power, over and above the power of the Court of Chancery—a power to have recourse to a tribunal that otherwise would have no authority for the alteration of what has been done, after full consideration by this Commission, viz., the authority of the Lord Lieutenant in Council. If every person interested may apply, once the application is made it must be heard, and the opponents of the proposed change must be heard too, and the question is who is to pay for all this, or how it is to be done. We have been informed that your Board are not in the habit of hearing counsel.

Mr. Gwyn.—They are not; they have refused to do so.

7706. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Then are you to discuss, in the absence of counsel, the unlimited alterations of schemes sanctioned, after all the elaborate procedure under our Act, by the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council? How is the question to be discussed? You do not hear counsel.

Mr. Gwyn.—No, my Commissioners have no time for it.

7707. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You would not alter schemes on any ex parte statement.

Mr. Gwyn.—No.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—Perhaps the Commissioners of Charitable Donations would define the class that would be interested in addition to those named.

7708. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is exactly what we have tried to do, and they contend we can't do. We should be very glad indeed to have their assistance and to consider their suggestions, and in such case to insert an independent authority over the Governors by whom alterations might, when necessary, be proposed.

Lord Justice Nares.—Provided there is no undue interference with the Charity.

7709. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In such cases as the Bortland Charity we could not admit any stranger to interfere with the interests of the Church, or of the Presbyterians. A number of schemes to which your objection applies have been brought in by the consent of the Governing Bodies themselves, and we could not give an unlimited power to alter a scheme which was originally brought under our jurisdiction by consent.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—If the elected bodies are maintained to those who elect them there would be no independent voice at all.

7710. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But if the electors and the elected, between them, see the parties to whom the endowment really belongs their independence must be respected.

Lord Justice Nares.—If there is any necessity for it we could make express provision for the Attorney-General's intervention under the ordinary law to protect the charity.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—I would suggest—"If any person who shall be certified by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to be interested."

7711. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That would be enabling them to certify the competency of any person to come before themselves, and besides it would not satisfy those who are opposed to your objection: a person might be "interested," in the strictest sense, and be entitled to be so certified, and yet ought to have no right to apply to alter the trusts, for example, anyone deriving emoluments under a scheme might apply to the Commissioners to change the scheme in his own favour.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—They never would entertain it.

7712. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—They must "entertain" the application, and certify that he is interested if he be so. If they certified to the contrary they would certify what was not true.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—That is a question of language. They could easily ascertain how the party was interested. All I mean to say is that any person has a right to interfere, and that the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests will ascertain the persons interested.

Dr. TRAILL.—That would open a door to all sorts of schemes. I am giving a lay view of the matter.

7713. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The objection to yielding to your contention is that we cannot allow every person interested to apply to alter our schemes. There is no such power in Chancery, or Common Law, or anywhere else, and it should be given only to the governing body, and to some controlling body over it.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests have power under this Act to entertain applications from any persons interested in the administration of a charity.

Dr. TRAILL.—That is the governing body.

7714. Lord Justice Nares.—That power does not extend to the objects of the charity but to the trustees of the charity, and we give it to the governors.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—What we want is some effect to be given, in some way or other, and a definition given of "any person interested?"

7715. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is exactly what we want too, and what the Commissioners say we have no power to do.

Mr. Jelf, q.c.—I would be satisfied if you define it in any way. Under the scheme at present the governors are completely subordinated in reference to any other scheme. Why not introduce an independent body that would have a right to introduce any change.

Jan. 2, 1888

June 9 & 1888.

7716. Dr. TRAILL.—I think the General Synod of the Church of Ireland, and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and the Diocesan Council, and the Presbytery will watch each other and the governors too.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—I suppose the Presbyterian Body would not interfere in regard to the Church of Ireland and vice versa.

7717. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—If you will look at the different schemes you will see that in every case we have endeavoured to secure some expense body. For example, the Ulster Society is supported by voluntary contributions. The subscribers have the right to spend their money as they please, and in that case the application for alteration may be made by the governors who are elected by the Society, or by the Society itself, which consists of those people who contribute the money. Surely you don't want to authorize anybody else to meddle with the administration of their money.

Mr. Jellott.—That gives a large field to the persons who would be applicants for the alteration of the scheme. This Bedford scheme is a very narrow scheme.

7718. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Well, in that case, there being no subscribers, we have given the power to the General Synod, General Assembly, Diocesan Council, and the Presbytery as well as to the governors. I don't think that is a narrow scheme, when those denominations are interested, and have been continuously interested in this charity already for nearly 100 years. Perhaps the practical conclusion is that we ought to ask the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to suggest, in each case, who would, in their opinion, be the most advantageous body to whom to give the power. Our present impression is not to let in subordination nor individual objects of the charity, nor mere minorities of those already represented.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—Then it will be necessary to have a meeting of the Commissioners to determine this question. If your Board suggested that there should be a meeting—

7719. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We suggest it now.

Mr. Jellott.—They thought that the Scheme would stand exactly as it was, or that the entire clause would be removed. They might consider the third alteration—that is to say, that you should add some person or other as a person interested, and modify clause 34 accordingly on the subject.

7720. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Let me read you our communication to the Lord Lieutenant on the subject in the case of Morgan's and Mercer's Schools:—

"Though provision is made for securing the continued efficiency of each scheme, in the constitution of the Governors, by the appointment of an Inspector by the Lord Lieutenant, and by public audit, the Commissioners quite feel the importance of conferring the power of application to alter the Scheme upon some other body as well as upon the Governing Body; accordingly, in the case of Morgan's and Mercer's Schools, they have proposed to give the power to the General Synod and to the Diocesan Council as representing the supreme authority of the religious denomination to which the endowed belongs, and they trust that this provision will command itself to the Lord Lieutenant in Council as sufficient to attain the objects of the eighteenth section of the Act."

The issue between us could not be more clearly joined than by comparing that with the objection I have read—that when the clause is inserted we have no power to insert any limitation or definition whatever, "any party interested" to apply practically—that we cannot interfere the power of alteration without making the Scheme inoperative. There are eight schemes now actually in force with the validity of Acts of Parliament, approved by the Law Officers, and sanctioned by the Lord Lieutenant in Council, which contain these limiting clauses, including one under which the governors alone can apply. Until July 15th last, we never heard of this point, and fifteen schemes have been delayed since for its consideration.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—Perhaps your secretary will communicate your suggestion to the Board.

Mr. Gerson.—If a communication comes to the Board it will be immediately considered.

7721. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have now made the suggestion in open court.

Mr. Gerson.—Perhaps your lordship would direct your secretary to communicate it.

7722. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We are required to act as a judicial tribunal, and I don't know that we ought to send any communication through our secretary, but if it convinces you we can send you the result of the matter in writing.

Mr. Gerson.—Our solicitor will have to report to the Board. It would be more regular, I think, if your secretary sent the communication.

7723. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We must ask you to remember that four of the largest endowments in the North of Ireland and eleven smaller ones are being delayed for this point.

Mr. Gerson.—Our Board is exceedingly slow to give a locus standi to any person coming before them to object.

7724. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—If the words "any person interested" be inserted they must give a locus standi to every such person.

Mr. Gerson.—They will not give a locus standi to any person. They will take care to consider the locus standi of any person applying.

7725. Dr. TRAILL.—Let them say what they want.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—I think Mr. Gerson can communicate your suggestion. You are willing to admit another body besides the Governing Body.

7726. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have in each case done what we could to discover such a body, but the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests have not yet approached the consideration of this question, for their attention hitherto has been that we must insert all the words of the section or none. If they will suggest a proper party in each case when they think the present provision is insufficient we will be very glad. The Attorney-General has an independent authority to go to a court of justice, and scarcely seems to be "a person interested" within the meaning of sec. 18. Besides if we gave this special power exclusively to the Attorney-General we should probably excite all the apprehensions of Government interference which are entertained by those interested in these private or denominational charities. The Attorney-General can always intervene if there is any abuse.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—How would he appear?

7727. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—In the High Court of Justice by information or petition.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—The expense would be much less to the "party interested" by keeping to the terms of the Act. It would be a trifling cost to him to have the scheme modified.

7728. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—But what of the cost of opposing improper applications?

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—If any one wants to modify the scheme he can do it by a summary application.

Lord Justice MAINT.—Only to carry out the scheme which is already settled. To apply to change the trusts he must have the aid of the Attorney-General.

7729. Professor DENHAM.—Take the case of the Magee College, where the Governing Body is under the supreme control of the General Assembly, would you allow any outsider to come in before the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests as a governing authority over them?

Lord Justice MAINT.—That is a theological college.

Mr. Jellott, Q.C.—There might be cases where both of them might be at issue.

Dr. TRAILL.—At present they could not be brought before the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests at all by anybody.

7730. Lord Justice FRYGROVE (to Mr. Dia).—Have you anything to say in regard to this matter?

Mr. H. F. DIA (one of the Governors of the Bedford Female Orphan School).—We did not know that the arguments which you have heard would turn upon our scheme, and we have not instructed counsel to attend here to-day. We think that the Commissioners have made provision for the most suitable persons to whom the power of making application to alter the scheme could be given. So far as we are concerned—ours being a charity consisting of Church people and Presbyterians—we consider that the bodies you have given the power to are the proper bodies, and that we should not be subject to attacks from any persons who fancied themselves interested, for if the general words of the Statute were inserted any person might come in and put us to trouble and expense, for which we have no means of being recompensed in any way. Under the circumstances we submit that clause 34 of the scheme as it stands is what it should be.

7731. Mr. J. J. SLOW.—It seems to me that Mr. Jellett has given up the greater part of the contention of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. The question I was brought here to argue was whether every person interested in it has power to apply to the Charitable Commissioners for an alteration in a scheme. Mr. Jellett, as I think, now contends that the Commissioners can define the parties interested, other than the governing body, who may so apply. He contends, I think wholly illegally, that section 37 gives an indication of who the persons are, other than the governing body, to apply under section 18. Under section 37 a number of people have got power to apply to put the Charitable Commissioners or the Lord Lieutenant in motion to have effect given to a scheme who are not "persons interested" within section 18 at all. The Town Council or twenty ratepayers of Bedford are not interested in the scheme of the Ulster Society. It would be illegal to give them a right to apply for an alteration. The Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant under the Act is not a person interested under section 18. If the Commissioners under section 18 were to propose that the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant or the Town Council, or twenty ratepayers, should have power to apply for the alteration of a scheme like the Ulster scheme, it would be contrary to section 18, under which the only persons to be considered are the governing body or the parties interested in the particular charity. So far as the schemes now before you are concerned, that for the Ulster Society, for example, in regard to which I am instructed, it seems to me that the Commissioners have done the best thing that they could do, that is to give the power to the governing body, or to the persons who elect them. Mr. Jellett objects that in reference to charities in connection with particular Churches, the supreme governing body of the Church is not the proper body to apply for an alteration of a scheme, because it would have the same interests as the governing body; on the contrary, it seems to me that, for that reason, they would be the proper persons. If the General Synod or the General Assembly are not the proper bodies to apply for an alteration in a scheme, which is directly of interest to them, I would find it difficult to know what other body could be selected. The objection that they belong to the same denomination, and that they have the same interest is not an objection to giving them the control of their ecclesiastical endowments. It might as well be said because a minister of the Presbyterian Church ought to have the same interest as the General Assembly, which has control over him, that some outside person should also have control over him. It seems to me that the governing body of the Church, placed there for the purpose of regulating the affairs of the Church, is the proper body to see whether there should be any alteration of the schemes in which the Church is interested. Mr. Jellett has conceded practically that the Educational Commissioners should define the parties to make application, and I say that every case must be determined by itself on the question as to who is the proper authority to apply. I appear for the Magee College and for the Ulster Society, and for a number of other bodies that have had schemes settled for them, and we decidedly object to its being left open to any persons to go to the Charitable Commissioners and say they are interested, and force us to go to the Commissioners and say that they are not. If the question is not determined by the scheme, it must be argued in every case, and we will be obliged to go to expense and trouble to show that Tom, Dick or Harry, who says he is interested is not interested in the scheme, or if he is interested that any alteration he chooses to propose should not be made. The Commissioners would have to determine these questions either on ex parte statements or on notice to the governing body, who would have to go to the trouble and expense of sending some person to argue the matter whenever the question was raised. For these reasons all the bodies that I represent, including the Intermediate Education Committee of the General Assembly, who take a great interest in the schemes settled by the Commissioners, object most strenuously to putting any words into the clause such as "any party interested." If you put in "any party really interested" it would come to the same thing, or that the Charitable Commissioners should decide or certify who was interested. Either the present Commission must define beforehand who are the parties upon whose application alterations may be considered by the Charitable Commissioners, or they must leave the whole question at large, and put every charity and every institution for which a scheme is settled at the mercy of every intermeddling body who may choose to say he is "interested."

7732. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What about the Attorney-General?

Mr. SLOW.—It occurs to me that the Attorney-General is not a "party interested" within the meaning of section 18. He has an official power in regard to charities, but it was not contemplated in this Act, nor is it affected by it.

7733. Lord Justice NASH.—He represents the Crown.

Mr. SLOW.—Oh, yes.

7734. Lord Justice NASH.—And the Crown represents every charity.

Mr. SLOW.—The Crown is not named in section 18, and in section 34 the Attorney-General is specifically named.

7735. Professor DOUGHERTY.—There might be great jealousy in denominational bodies if the Attorney-General was authorized to come in.

Lord Justice NASH.—Any right that he has is not barred by our schemes.

Mr. SLOW.—He can file an information at the relation of any person interested, and come into the Court of Chancery to have a scheme altered or scheme corrected.

7736. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—A proceeding of that kind would be at the risk of the relation as to costs; I don't think the Charitable Commissioners could make any order upon an applicant under section 18 to pay costs.

Mr. SLOW.—They could not. They are not a judicial tribunal. You would not as Educational Commissioners have power to give costs against any party coming before you, and the Charitable Commissioners have no greater power than you have in favor of or against parties coming before them. We certainly think that in each particular case some body other than the governing body should have the power of interfering—that is, in cases of denominational charities—parties of the same denomination, and in other cases parties of some recognized status.

Jan. 8, 1885.

7737. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You are satisfied with the provision made in the case of the Ulster Society, in the case of the Magee College, and in the case of the Bertrand charity?

Mr. Stans.—Yes. We don't object to any of those schemes.

7738. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You don't think any further modification should be made?

Mr. Stans.—No.

7739. Rev. Canon Morgan Jelliff.—I appear on behalf of the institutions I belong to, the Bertrand, St. Peter's, and Mrs. Wray's Schools, and as a member of the Church of Ireland, I say that if there are any additions to those who are to object besides the Governors, the General Synod should be at liberty to interfere, and you ought not to allow any person who thought he was interested to give trouble and annoyance to the Governors. When a scheme was established under this Act we thought there was a finality in the matter, and that there would be no danger of having it upset, or the scheme enlarged by any parties who said they were interested. As regards the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests, I don't think the reference to them would be as fair to the Church as I am connected with as it would be to the Roman Catholic Church. Any matter affecting a Roman Catholic charity coming before the Charitable Commissioners is referred, as I understand, to a committee of Roman Catholics exclusively. In the case of a charity belonging to the Church of Ireland it is referred to a committee of Protestants, who need not all be members of that Church, and all Protestants do not take the same views as to charitable donations and bequests where there are religious questions involved.

7740. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You surely don't suggest that the denomination I am connected with—the unfortunate Presbyterians—have any power or influence on that Board.

Rev. Canon Jelliff.—I don't know whether they are represented on the Board at all or not. I sympathise with them. They never know how to look after their own interests. That is all I have to say—that if the power is extended I would greatly prefer what the Commissioners themselves propose, and not what is suggested by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

THIBSBOROUGH SUNDAY AND DAILY SCHOOLS.

Thibsborough
Sunday and Daily Schools.

7741. Rev. N. W. Corry.—I am interested in these schools, and I think the proposal that has been made would not diametrically against what the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests want, and would bring in persons who could not be said to have any interest in the charity. I don't see how the Town Council or twenty ratepayers have any interest in the working of the charity. I think it should be open to the Charitable Commissioners to suggest before the scheme is signed the person interested in every particular instance to whom the authority should be given, and such persons should be introduced into the scheme. In that way each case would be decided, and the parties interested would have the right of opposing and stating that they had the right to interest themselves in any scheme. I object to any and every person being allowed to come in, but I would be glad if the Commissioners could suggest any independent body to see that there was no injury done to the charity.

THE MERCHANT TAILORS' SCHOOL.

The Merchant
Tailors' School.

7742. Mr. MacMullen.—On behalf of the Merchant Tailors' School I object to any alteration in the scheme you have laid down, or to any enlargement of the clause. We consider when you have given power to the General Synod, General Assembly, and Governors, it is sufficient.

7743. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—We would like to make it clear that the power in question is a new and special power to go before a special tribunal for the purpose of altering existing and valid trusts, with a view to improving the administration of charitable funds as occasion may require in the future. I confess that, looking broadly at the question, I think the whole power is discretionary; it being conceded that we may leave this provision out altogether, it would be a strained and unnatural interpretation of the clause, that although we may leave it out altogether we have no discretion whatever to define it if we give it at all. Also as a mere matter of grammatical construction my opinion is against the objection. The section says we may provide for alteration "upon application made by the governing body or any party interested." May we not give the power to either or the alternative? The contention is that we must give it to both or neither. That is not the ordinary meaning of the alternative "or." But if we take the alternative of giving it to "any party interested," we have, according to the ordinary meaning of the words, power to name, that is to define, the party to whom we give it, and are not bound to allow it to every party interested. If we have any discretion it is the unanimous opinion of all parties that we should limit the power, and some of the parties interested feel this so strongly that they say they will withdraw altogether if this unlimited liability to change is to be forced on them. If our jurisdiction is given in ambiguous words, I would prefer to exercise it not in a strict-faced fashion, but as the interests of the charities require, and no harm can be done, for, once approved by the Lord Lieutenant, the schemes cannot be questioned.

Mr. Gorton says the Charitable Commissioners do not bear counsel, but yet it is proposed that they should determine who are "parties interested," and that we cannot do so. If they were to determine the status of any person coming before them or parts and without hearing the opposing parties, it would lead to further litigation. We are satisfied that we ought to yield to the wishes of the parties interested in the charities, so far as is consistent with securing efficiency in the governing body and a reasonably sufficient judicial means of altering the scheme, if in course of time it should become necessary to do so. We would wish it to be officially communicated to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests that in our opinion, on the best consideration that we can give to the matter, we have a discretion to define the parties to make the application in question, and that it is our duty to define them so as to secure in each case, if possible, that not only the governing body, but also, in case the governing body should become inefficient, some higher authority should have power to make the application, but at the same time not to leave it open to any or all concerned to disturb the provisions of the scheme. I do not think we can name the Attorney-General; probably the Attorney-General would be as objectionable to those interested on any body else, and he already has his official power to interfere through the ordinary tribunals of the country, which can make provision for the costs, which the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests cannot. For these reasons we think it advantageous to adhere to the principle upon which we have gone up to the present, but we will be glad to learn from the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests whether they can suggest any other body or bodies which would be available to make the application in the case of each scheme, besides those already named.

Mr. Gerson.—Do I understand that the secretary will communicate with the Board or our solicitor?

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Your solicitor will report.

1744. Mr. Jellist, Q.C.—There are now some objections to the 30th, 31st, and 32nd sections of the Bertrand Scheme.

1745. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have a specific objection from the Commissioners to the clauses regulating their accounts. A good deal turns on the question whether the Governing Body of the School is distinguished from the Governing Body of the property, ought to have some means of learning how the property is dealt with.

Mr. Jellist.—We did not hear of these objections at all until to-day. We have a meeting of our Board on Thursday, and I would ask you to postpone the present application.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—It will be better that you should hear what it is now, and if necessary we can postpone dealing with it until you have considered it.

Feb. 3, 1888.

The Methodist

BERTRAND FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL.

1746. Mr. Jellist, Q.C.—As regards the Bertrand Charity, the proposed mode of making out the accounts will lead to a conflict between the Local Government Board and the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and having regard to the fact that the Commissioners are a public body, it would seem to us that the directions in reference to the management of the estate are unnecessary, and would also lead to a conflict. As regards the custody of the deeds, it is provided under 30 and 31 Vic., cap. 54, sec. 11, that the Commissioners are to make regulations in regard to them. Then the keeping and the auditing of their accounts are already regulated by statute, 7 and 8 Victoria, cap. 98, sec. 59, provided that the accounts should be audited by the Remembrancer in the Court of Exchequer. When the Remembrancer was abolished, his duty was transferred to the Receiver Master, and when the Receiver Master was abolished the duty was transferred to the Local Government Board. I therefore think that the provision in the scheme, clause 33, would lead to a conflict.

1747. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—By letter of November 18, 1887, your Commissioners requested us to be good enough to point out to the Board the authority under which we proposed to make provision as to the manner in which they were to discharge their duty, and they further directed their secretary to point out that clause 31 of the draft scheme appears to have been inserted in forgetfulness of section 53 of 30th and 31st Victoria, cap. 54. It was not inserted in any forgetfulness of the Act referred to, but it is in the common form adopted in our other schemes, and which we are quite ready to modify if necessary. Without suggesting that your Commissioners wrote this letter in forgetfulness of our Act, if you will look at sections 16 and 17 you will see how our difficulty arose. Our scheme when passed will, under section 27, override even Acts of Parliament, and we at a very early stage laid down the principle that we would endeavour to make every scheme complete in itself, so that those acting under it need not look to anything else. We are obliged under section 17 to insert into the body of every scheme a provision for audit, the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests are not excepted, and accordingly it occurred to us that we should insert the same provision with respect to them as to others.

Mr. Jellist, Q.C.—They are not the governing body.

1748. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—From the report of the Commissioners of 1880 it would seem that there were then two landed endowments of which they would be the governing body as defined by our Act, as "The Commissioners having the administration of the revenues." One of these is not educational, and, therefore, the Bertrand estate is probably now the only landed property administered by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests that comes within our jurisdiction. From the evidence given in 1879 by their Secretary it appeared that they wished to be relieved from the administration of the property, and we wrote to ask whether that was now their desire or not. The answer was that they did not wish to express any opinion on the subject, and they questioned our jurisdiction to withdraw the administration of the property from them. Under the circumstances, desiring to avoid any interference with the Commissioners of which they did not fully approve, we left the property as it was, but evidence was given before us by those who had the management of the school, and they complained that they never got any copy of the accounts, did not know how the property stood, were not allowed to attend the audit, and we have proposed to remove those grounds of complaint, but would be glad to modify the scheme in any way that would meet the views of the Commissioners so far as can be done consistently with the efficient management of the charity. The following evidence is what I refer to (Q. 18570):—

"The Bertrand property, and one other, are, I may say, the only charities we have. We cannot, by Act of Parliament, take property, and indeed the Commissioners had a disinclination to manage property. Those were transmitted from the former Board by the Act of 1844."

I then asked (Q. 18571):—

"Then it is not the view of the Board that they can with advantage in managing the property?—So much is that the case that from the draft Bill in the Charitable Bequests Act passed in 1887 they struck out the power intended to be conferred on them to accept landed property, and strictly confined it to annuities and money in the funds."

(Q. 18572.) Are there any instances of property being vested in the Secretary of the Board as the Trustee?—No, that was an expedient system under the old Bill. It was never done under this Board. We would not place ourselves in that position."

That was the view presented by the Secretary of the Commissioners on the occasion. No provision should be unnecessarily inserted in the scheme that would conflict with the existing system adopted by the Commissioners under their own Act, and, we will do the best we can to prevent any such conflict, but I am afraid we must insert the provisions required by our own Act.

Mr. Jellist, Q.C.—A clause of this kind could not have the effect of repealing the provisions in a whole code, such as that of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

Mr. Gerson.—My lord contented they are not a governing body.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—There is no exception in our Act, and that they are a governing body when they have the "administration of an educational endowment appears from the definition, and from sec. 9, which specified the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, or any other governing body having an endowment."

Mr. Jellist, Q.C.—The Bertrand scheme says who the governing body are to be. It consists of the Governors representing the Diocesan Council, and the Presbytery, and of the ex-officio Governors.

1749. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Possibly we can do what you want, and at the same time give effect to section 17, by providing for the Audit of the Bertrand School accounts by the same authority by which under your special Acts your other accounts are audited. We may safely assume that this will always be a "competent authority."

Mr. Jellist.—I don't think that it could have been intended that the system should be changed. It is an affirmative Act dealing with an affirmative Act, and it is inconsistent with it.

1750. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The Belfast Academical Institution is regulated by an Act of Parliament of Geo. III., yet it has been remodelled by the scheme.

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—Where you find an actual code in existence, providing for the actual thing, the effect of the late Act would not be to supersede the previous one.

1751. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We can give you what you want by providing that everything already governed by these existing statutes, shall continue to be carried out in accordance therewith.

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—It would be better to allow the thing to be worked out amicably, considering you are dealing with a body like the Commissioners of Beguins. There would be a conflict between the two bodies in any other event.

1752. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Let me assure you that, at all times and in every way, we have endeavored to give the fullest effect to the wishes of the Board.

Dr. Traill.—Are the Commissioners bound to give a copy of the accounts to the Governing Body?

1753. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I think you ought to send a copy of the accounts each year. As a matter of fact it appears that this is not done at present.

Mr. Dix.—I think we are entitled to an account. We should not give that up.

1754. Dr. Traill.—That is not mentioned in the code. If you have not got it in the past, you will not probably get it in the future.

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—I think there can be no objection to furnishing it.

1755. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There was a complaint here that the parties never saw the accounts.

Dr. Traill.—And there was a complaint that the estate was badly managed. Do you object to transfer the whole property to the new governing body to manage it?

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—The Commissioners cannot divest themselves of the trusts in the case, as has been decided.

1756. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That was so in chambers, but under our Act, sec. 6, we can transfer the Endowment and its management to a new governing body. In the case of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests we would not do so, nor even propose to do so without their concurrence, and therefore we asked them whether they desired to retain the management of the Barnard Estate; their only answer was that they did not feel called upon to express an opinion, and that they did not admit our power in the matter at all—(reads letter of May 18th, 1887.)

Mr. Gervon.—In 1876, the Barnard Estate was in such an unsettled condition that it occupied the attention of the Board. Since then the lease has been settled. The Barnard property used to overshadow all the other business of the Board until we settled the whole property.

1757. Dr. Traill.—When did it first come into the hands of the Board?

Mr. Gervon.—In 1805.

1758. Dr. Traill.—When did the Governing Body get the first money?

Mr. Gervon.—A long time after.

Mr. Dix.—The school was first opened in 1872.

1759. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We did not wish to raise a question of law gratuitously, and we were satisfied to leave the property in the hands of the Commissioners. We can leave out a good many common forms in this scheme, and provide for the management of the estate and audit of the accounts, in accordance with the statutes regulating the proceedings of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. There ought, however, to be no objection to retaining the clause giving the governing body of the school a right to copies of the accounts, and enabling them to attend the audit, and to bring forward objections or suggestions from time to time, as to the management of the estate, which is one that still requires more than perfunctory attention, and at which the past history has been very unsatisfactory.

Mr. Gervon.—The basis of the Commissioners' letter of May 19, 1887, was the decision of Lord Chancellor Brady.

1760. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Then it was based upon the general law, and does not apply to our Act of Parliament, which gives power to transfer trust property from one governing body to another.

Mr. Gervon.—We merely receive the rents and transfer them over to the governing body.

1761. Dr. Traill.—Will they hand the estate over to the new governing body?

Mr. Gervon.—I am not prepared to say.

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—I would ask you to look at the clause 33, providing for an assignment of the property by the Commissioners to the Governors. I submit it is contrary to law.

1762. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—No doubt a trustee cannot divest himself of his trust, but this Act enables us to transfer endowments from one governing body to another. Do you object to the discretionary power to do this in the case of the Barnard Endowment?

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—I am instructed to object to it.

1763. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—It is only an enabling power to yourselves.

Mr. Dix.—We want that clause retained, we might at some time want to have the management of our own property, and the Commissioners might be willing to give it to us. If the discretionary power is retained and approved by the Lord Lieutenant its being within the scope of the Act can not be questioned. It therefore is for yourselves to say whether you wish to have it or not.

1764. Dr. Traill.—Why would they object to a permissive clause?

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—The existing body might consider themselves, but not for their successors.

1765. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What do you say to this 53rd clause, Mr. Dix?

Mr. Dix.—I wish it to remain. Circumstances might arise when we would wish to manage the property ourselves.

1766. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What do you say about the management now?

Mr. Dix.—We say that we should have a voice, in making leases for instance.

1767. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There would be inconvenience in having two codes in existence at the same time, and Mr. Jellett says the Commissioners don't want a special code for this particular charity.

Mr. Dix.—Not being aware of the objections we did not look into the Act of Parliament to which to refer, and we would wish some time to consider it.

1768. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You should examine the existing Acts and let us know whether you want anything more.

Mr. Jellett, q.c.—(Reads from the judgment of Lord Chancellor Brady in Fanning's case in which the proceeding was instituted for the purpose of settling the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to get rid of a trust fund):

"It is very difficult to accede to the prayer of this Petition, or to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the case as it at present stands. I am of opinion that something might be done to test the working of the present system and constitution, and the present rules of this Institution, before asking on me to make any decree, or to decide this matter one way or the other."

"The basis of this Petition is in fact that the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests may be released from their duties, discharged from their trusts, and exonerated from their responsibilities in connection with this Institution. In support of this, they state that they have not time, or inspection, or means to look closely after the working of this large and important charity, or to take that part in the control and management which it interests would properly require. Some such difficulty as that suggested appears to exist; but if it does, it is not one that this Court has power either to remedy or remove. It is in fact a question for the Legislature and not for me. I cannot usurp its power; and if the Commissioners find their staff insufficient or their machinery defective, they must go to Parliament for relief. That part of the Petition, then, being clearly untenable, we come to what is more tangible, namely, that portion which seeks for a reference to the Master to settle a scheme for the management of the Institution. No doubt if the property of Mr. Fanning had in the first instance been brought into this Court, a scheme for the application of it would have been settled."

"There was in existence, however, a body having power, and ample power, to frame such a scheme, and they have done so."

"The Petition does not allege that any of the existing rules are illegal, or calculated to interfere with the working of the Charity; on the contrary, everything appears to have gone on in a most satisfactory manner down to the commencement of this suit."

"The question then is, is there any rule requiring alteration or amendment? If such be the case, it strikes me that the Commissioners have full power to make any alteration they think necessary, and to call upon the Board of Governors or Standing Committee to adopt the amended rules. As to that portion of the Petition which asks me to relieve the Commissioners from the administration of these funds, and to appoint new trustees, as I have already remarked, this is a thing that I am wholly unable to do. If the Commissioners would examine carefully into the rules of the Institution and ascertain, by consultation with the Governor, whether any alterations or modifications in them are necessary, they would save this Court a great deal of trouble, and probably lead to an arrangement that would satisfy all parties. In the meantime let the case stand over generally, and what I have thrown out may perhaps bring about a settlement."

7768. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—In our view the Act we are administering makes that decision inapplicable. We have in fact, in several of our schemes, already dealt with the management of endowments in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. In the first scheme approved by the Lord Lieutenant, the Swords School, we transferred the endowment to them, and provided for its management. The Commissioners are included in the definition of "Governing Body," and another section speaks of the "Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests or any other Governing Body." Mr. Dix, in reference to this matter, we will send copies of the draft scheme, when revised and before it is signed, to you and the Commissioners, and your side of the question can, if necessary, be brought up then.

Mr. Dix.—I ask you not to sign the scheme until we go into that.

Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We will not do so.

ULSTER SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE EDUCATION OF THE DEAF AND DUMB AND THE BLIND.

7770. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—Mr. Jollett, in this case there is a small sum of stock, about £50, in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests; and we propose to except it from the vesting clause, inserting words leaving it where it is, but to be applied by the Commissioners for the purposes of the scheme. (Reads clause as amended.) I think that clause will meet your difficulty.

Mr. Jollett.—Yes.

7771. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—Mr. Shaw, with respect to the religious instruction point we have revised the scheme, but we cannot go behind the declaration of the Privy Council that you cannot admit Roman Catholic children as free pupils. (Reads amended clause.)

Mr. Shaw.—We never saw this before. This removes our main difficulty, I think.

7772. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—Our correspondence was with Mr. Carson, to whom a copy was sent, and that may account for the Rev. Mr. Kingston not being aware of the amendment. The 53d clause has been amended, as you desired to cover the costs both of your trustees and committee.

Mr. Shaw.—Very well.

7773. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—The schedule has been corrected and you must see that it is right now. The stock in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests will remain there, and the governing body will get the dividends only. The 30 shares in the Holywood Gas Company are stated to be in the name of the "Trustees of the Ulster Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind." Can that be so?

Rev. Mr. Kingston.—They are registered by the company in that name.

7774. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—The Commissioners seem to have held the trustees as already a corporation, but the new scheme will make that right.

Mr. Shaw.—The shares were given to the Society through the Civil Bill Court in Belfast in an Equity suit.

7775. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—And did the Equity Civil Bill Court create this corporation?

Mr. Shaw.—I don't know, but I remember the case very well.

Rev. Mr. Kingston.—That was done by the company.

7776. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—When do the trustees meet?

Rev. Mr. Kingston.—On this day week we will meet.

7777. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We will try to let you have the final copy of scheme before you then, and you must name Mr. Ross's successor. Bear in mind that up to the time we sign it we can make any change, but after that we can do nothing for you. It will not be necessary for you to go to the Privy Council if you tell us in time of any reasonable change you want.

Rev. Mr. Kingston.—We got the scheme through Sir Wm. Kaye before, and that is the reason we want to the Privy Council.

7778. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—The Privy Council have declared that we are to accept Roman Catholics from those admissible as free pupils, but subject to the conscience clause you can take day pupils and paying pupils.

ROYAL BELFAST ACADEMICAL INSTITUTION.

7779. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—In this scheme the first amendment suggested was that the appointment of the Chairman of the Council of Studies as an ex-officio governor, should be put into a separate paragraph; that has been done. In this and other cases we have inserted, at the request of the Bank of Ireland, a provision that there shall be a written requisition for the transfer of stock. That is a matter of form. On clause 17—"The Presbyterian proprietors object to three academical years as a qualification for free pupils becoming members of class 2 for the reduced sum of five guineas, and with that privilege to be open to new year's pupils." The Joint Board of Managers and Visitors have written to say they prefer that the clause shall stand as it is.

three academical years in that the great mass of the pupils do not attend more than two years.

17780. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The Joint Board write that they "have very carefully considered the matters referred to therein, and that in their opinion it would be unwise to give the right of acquiring the privileges of membership in the institution to those who have attended it as pupils for a shorter period than three years, exclusive of attendance at the preparatory school." Remember anybody may become a member of Class II. who subscribes ten guineas.

Rev. George Heron.—Some of the children who come from the country are the sons of farmers, who have been educated in the country.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—This is a new privilege.

17781. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you wish to give this privilege to parties who came for two years only?

Rev. George Heron.—I do.

17782. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Since the intermediate system came into operation has there been any change in the age of the pupils?

Rev. George Heron.—They come at a much younger age.

17783. Dr. TRAILL.—Why then should they only remain for two years?

Rev. George Heron.—They attend schools in the country for elementary training.

17784. Dr. TRAILL.—If they attend for so short a time at the institution, why would they have this privilege?

Rev. George Heron.—They don't attend more than two years, on an average, except those living in Belfast. The great majority of the pupils come from the country.

17785. Dr. TRAILL.—But don't the great majority of the pupils stay more than two years at the institution?

Rev. George Heron.—No, not the country people.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We are not excluding anybody. This is a privilege given for the first time, and the question is whether it should be given to pupils who have not really got their education chiefly at the institution. The question is about a saving of five guineas, and it would be an inducement to a man to be thus recognised as a past pupil.

17786. Dr. TRAILL.—Wasn't one of the objects in making it five guineas that it was to be an inducement to past pupils?

Mr. Henry.—No doubt, the main thing to keep in view was to create membership among past pupils.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—These young fellows who come up from the country for a couple of years do not attend a sufficient length of time to be regarded as past pupils of the institution. Have you any means to indicate the number who would be likely to avail themselves of the chance?

Rev. George Heron.—No, I have not. I speak to some of the masters, and I know them very well personally.

17787. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The masters are satisfied with the scheme as it is. I should be inclined to regard this as a privilege to be given only to bona fide pupils, that is to those who have got their education, substantially, in the institution, and a young man who really gets his education in the country and only comes to Belfast for a couple of years to finish it, is scarcely an alumnus of the institution in this sense.

Mr. Henry.—The pupils are largely drafted from the country. Their means do not afford them to pay for a lengthened time for their education.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I don't think such a class of pupils would be of advantage to your constituency, at all events I don't think you should force them to against the opinion of the Governor. The first objection is as to the power of nomination of the pupils by transferees from donors of 100 guineas or upwards, and therefore think it should not be provided for in the new scheme. The Presbyterian Governors think we cannot omit it without taking away vested rights. We have looked into the old statute, and Dr. Molloy, who drafted the scheme, has come to the conclusion that it is very doubtful whether this right did not exist. It certainly has been exercised, though under protest as it were in at least two instances; we think we ought to make it quite clear that the power is not perpetual, that when once exercised it lapses, and in this shape it can do no harm.

Rev. George Heron.—We are quite willing to accept that.

17788. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We have inserted a more specific power to arrange with the head master and make terms as to the appointment by them of the domestic staff. The draft scheme says that the Governors shall appoint the staff, and that might be inconvenient. We will send you all final proof of the scheme. I really think you ought not to press this matter about two years for the boys.

Rev. George Heron.—I don't think we will alter what you have stated.

BELFAST ROYAL ACADEMY.

Belfast Royal Academy.

17789. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The only question here is as to the right to the title "Royal."

Rev. Mr. Heron.—I am aware, and can state that the authority has been got from the Queen.

MAGEE COLLEGE.

Magee College.

17790. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—There is only one question on this scheme. What is the name you wish to call it. The present name is "The Magee Presbyterian College, Londonderry." The draft scheme calls it "The Magee College, Londonderry." Take care lest hereafter the founder might be mistaken for Archbishop Magee, or Bishop Magee, or some other pastoral person.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—The name should be "The Magee Presbyterian College, Londonderry."

MORGAN'S AND MERCER'S SCHOOLS (DUBLIN).

Morgan's and Mercer's Schools
 (Dublin).

17790A. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—This is a recommended scheme. Mercer's school has been withdrawn from our jurisdiction, and Morgan's School remains. Do you know, Canon Jellott, what it is intended to do about Morgan's School?

Rev. Canon Jellott.—No, I am not a governor of the Morgan's Schools.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Then the scheme must stand over until we communicate with the Governing Body.

The Commission adjourned.

PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1888.

At the Office, 23, Nassau-street, Dublin.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NASH, Judicial Commissioners; and ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Secretary, WM. EDWARD ELLIS, Esq., LL.B., and the Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, junr., were in attendance.

ST. PETER'S PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS AND MRS. WRAY'S SCHOOL.

The Rev. Morgan W. Jellett, M.A., and Sir Andrew S. Hart, trustees, accompanied by the Rev. R. Geoffrey M. Webster, appeared.

7790. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We will take first the governing body of St. Peter's School. At page 1 and also at pages 2 and 6 after the words "New Bride-street," you wish to insert "and Camden-street." There is no objection to that. Then you want to leave out the definition of the General Synod which is given at page 3.

Rev. R. G. M. Webster.—Yes. We wish to preserve the powers of the Governors of the school.

7791. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In the next paragraph wherein the ecclesiastical parish of St. Peter is defined, you want to make an alteration, you propose for the words "said Church" to read "Church of Ireland."

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Yes, we would rather have legal title from you, and we think we are entitled to have it. We want to omit the paragraph relating to the General Synod altogether.

7792. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Why do you wish to leave out the definition of elementary education?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—You seem to limit the definition too much, and we do not want to hamper ourselves unnecessarily.

7793. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—It does not hamper you at all. It is nothing more than a means of explaining what is meant by elementary education. We have inserted it because it is in the 11th section of our Act; it means whatever education can be given in an ordinary National school. We can give you leave to have whatever education you like afterwards.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—We wish not to be restricted as to the education and instruction we give in our schools.

7794. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What is your objection to clause 71? We wanted to give you an ecclesiastical parliament over the parochial schools.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I think it would be only fair that the governing body of the schools should not be interfered with unless they did something wrong against the interests of the schools. We think that as parties outside should have power to object to the manner in which the schools may be managed by the Governors.

7795. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You want to have a scheme so framed as to bring the supreme control into your own hands.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not want that anybody should have power to interfere with the power we have as trustees.

7796. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Would you really prefer going to the Court of Chancery to being under the control of the General Synod?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I would, as the Court is a legal and small body.

7797. Dr. TRAILL.—This provision does not affect the scheme in any shape or form whatever. It simply gives you the power of getting your governing body changed through the Synod.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not want an external governing body. In a large body like the General Synod when you may have to take the sense by voting there is always an uncertainty. I want to avoid that difficulty.

7798. Dr. TRAILL.—The school ought certainly to be under the control of the highest authority in the Church.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not think it necessary that the General Synod should have the power of controlling us without formal application made.

7800. Dr. TRAILL.—There is no control asked for. Rev. Canon Jellett.—I think that the notion of large bodies is often uncertain, and not always to be depended on. I would prefer an appeal any day to a body like this Commission than to one composed of persons without special qualifications.

7801. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—But the Educational Endowments Commission will cease on the 31st December, and who will you go to then?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not think that the General Synod ever should interfere without being applied to for the purpose.

7802. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In all the cases of Church schools, we have made them liable to the supreme authority of the Church, just as in the case of the Presbyterian schools, we have made them liable to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian body, and you are the first to object to that principle.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—What I do object to is that in the General Synod an agitation might be got up by which we would be affected.

7803. Dr. TRAILL.—You do not suppose that the General Synod would trouble themselves about you unless for some urgent cause.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I have no objection that anything should be done which may be necessary.

7804. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—By whom is it to be done?

Dr. TRAILL.—If you go to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests would that improve your position?

Sir Andrew Hart.—The Commissioners and the General Synod have the power of altering the governing body.

7805. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—They have, Sir Andrew. I have been calling attention to the last clause in the scheme by which we have given power to the governors and to the General Synod to apply to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for an alteration. Speaking for myself I am extremely unwilling to leave that out, because it has been pointed out that the governors may fall into a state of inefficiency which it may be very desirable to put an end to, and in such a state of affairs the governors themselves would be the very last to apply to have themselves galvanised into life. It is evident that there ought to be somebody over them.

Jan. 16, 1886.

able to put new life into them whenever it may become necessary.

Dr. TRAILL.—You do not propose to strike out the power of alteration on the application of the General Synod?

1800. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—After what occurred yesterday there would be very great difficulty in doing it. It might be arranged by letting clause 41 remain as it stands, and leaving out clause 7.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Very well; I am quite satisfied with that if there is no other change to be made.

1807. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—Your next objection is to the word "Protestant"?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I want a suitable description instead of an ambiguity; I want to preserve the powers we have.

1808. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—The Wynn trustees differ from you—they have given this written notice:—"We understand that the trustees of the parochial school object to the word Protestant; we do not concur with this objection." What is the object of the change that you propose to make?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—The word "Protestant" unfortunately is liable to objection on account of its present ambiguity. For instance, benches were made for the purpose of educating Protestant children sixty or seventy years ago, and by "Protestant," I held, was meant "Irish Church," and this is now disputed, and my particular objection now is, that suppose you establish a governing body for a school, and that governing body are to be all members of the Church of Ireland, and that the children who are to be educated there shall be children of all "Protestant" denominations, in ten or fifteen or twenty years to come another extension of the word "Protestant" may be claimed, and it may be said here you have a governing body exclusively of the "Irish Church" while the children they educate are of all denominations, and a change would be demanded as to the governing body, that it should include all "Protestant" denominations. I do not see, also, where the schools being Protestant schools, they have taken and educated the children of all denominations, why the children of the other denominations should be given the same advantages as the children who are now legally entitled, and why the same advantages should be given to any children who are willing to come to the school. Another thing that I may mention is, that St. Peter's Schools are parochial schools, and we have, under the old law, no right to deny education to such children as are willing to come to us, and therefore we do not like the word "Protestant," as limiting the admission.

1809. Dr. TRAILL.—If you strike out the word "Protestant" it would cut against you in respect of possible future claims on behalf of the Roman Catholics to get representation on the governing body.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I think not.

1810. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—You have no Catholic children in the schools, I think?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I do not think we have.

1811. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—Have you any Jews?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—We had a considerable number of Jews; we have some Jews still, I think, but I do not think we have any Roman Catholic children.

1812. Dr. TRAILL.—Should not the trust be limited?

1813. Dr. TRAILL.—Your endowments may be one thing and your liberality another thing. I always thought it a very strange thing that the endowments should be confiscated because the charities were liberally managed in the past.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—What I would like to see done in this scheme would be to omit the word "Protestant" altogether, and to put in what we mean by the word Protestant, namely, "Church of Ireland."

1814. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—But you have got a great many children of other denominations.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Not very many, and I want to provide for the future, to see that we are protected in time to come.

1815. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—As regards the future, understand that as far as it is possible by law for arrangements to be made permanent these schemes are permanent. They are, when finally settled and approved of, the same as if enacted in a statute, but you cannot prophesy that another Act of Parliament may not be passed at any time to do anything whatsoever. Past experience would show that it is difficult to regard arrangements as unchangeable, but, short of an Act of Parliament, these schemes are final and permanent. Therefore, your guarding yourself against future change is providing against a thing that there is no possibility of guarding against at all.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—As nearly all the children are of one denomination, supposed to be all Church children, I want to have a definition or to have the word "Protestant" left out.

1816. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you consider that the omission of the word "Protestant" would carry out your views?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I would like to see it omitted from the clause, for I consider it qualifies the word "school." To describe the schools properly I think it is necessary to omit the word "Protestant."

1817. Dr. TRAILL.—And to put in a statement of the fact that the endowments are for the members of the Church of Ireland, leaving the governing body the exercise of their own discretion in admitting children of other denominations.

Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—You cannot say that these were intended to be purely Church schools. There is no doubt at all that they were founded at a time when the parochial schools were a part of the general system of education in the country, and when the parochial schools were intended to take in all poor children, irrespective of religious denomination. But when they got the children in there was religious instruction given to them.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—As regards the boarding schools at least, the children were to be exclusively Church children, according to the foundation.

1818. Dr. TRAILL.—They were to be taken to the church every Sunday by the master.

Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—That is only as regards the boarding school. The children of the day school were not required to go to church.

1819. Dr. TRAILL.—They certainly were so required by the original deed.

Sir Andrew HART.—Canon Jellet does not want to exclude children of other denominations from the benefit of the schools. His desire is to receive them.

1820. Lord Justice FRERGINSON.—It seems to me Canon Jellet is going in two directions. He wants to keep the school open to children of all denominations, but at the same time he wants to make out that it is exclusively a Church foundation. If we were to lay down that it was exclusively a Church foundation, but that children of all sorts must be admitted, he would be involved in the difficulty that there would be a breach of trust if he spent any of the money upon objects which were not strictly within the scope of the original foundation. Make the governing body of your school as exclusive as you please, because the history of the case seems to render you entitled to do that; and then say that this body may educate such children as they may deem it expedient to admit to the school. But if you do that we must put in a conscience clause to be observed as regards children who are not of your own denomination.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—We are not bound to change the character of the school.

1821. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you not a National school there in connexion with the trust?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—No, we have not. I do not want to say to any children we won't admit you unless you are members of our Church.

7832. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—In the case of Mrs. Wray's endowment you could not do it, for her endowment was for all poor children.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Yes, but I want to preserve the religious character of the schools without deviation from its original constitution.

7833. Dr. TRAILL.—You want to secure that the governing body be kept strictly denominational.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Omit the word "Protestant" now, and put in "as the governors shall think fit."

7834. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—If we do that we must also put in a conscience clause as regards all children resorting to the school except children of your own Church.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Very well.

7835. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The one that is here now is the old National Board of Education conscience clause, that you are not to teach religion to children whose parents object. The existing conscience clause of the National Board is that you are not to give any religious instruction which is not sanctioned by the parents except in the case of Church children.

Lord Justice NASH.—It is not merely if parents object but you must obtain their consent.

7836. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—If you look at the school as in the position of an open school for all children, it ought to be open to them in all respects as laid down by statute for the National schools. What do you say, Sir Andrew; would that meet your view?

Sir Andrew HART.—I approve of the conscience clause.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—We never had a conscience clause up to the present moment.

7837. Dr. TRAILL.—What do you do with Jews and Roman Catholics?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Are you bound to put in a conscience clause at all?

Lord Justice NASH.—We are not bound by the terms of the Act, but we have always done it as a matter of equity.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—In St. Peter's School the attendance of the children is voluntary.

7838. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—You may take either branch of the alternative. If you turn the school into a Church school you must adopt the conscience clause. If, on the other hand, you wish it to be kept as it always was, and as I think the trustees of the old endowment would have kept it, a school to which all children might go, you must take care that the children who choose to go there are children whose parents are willing that they should receive your instruction.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I would wish to preserve the school in its old character.

7839. Dr. TRAILL.—It would be unreasonable to be obliged to ask the parents of every Protestant child to give their consent in writing. What you want is only the consent of Jews and Roman Catholics to your instruction.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—What would be the nature of the conscience clause that you propose to give?

7840. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We will give you the National Board of Education clause, that Protestant children shall not attend the religious instruction if the parents object, and in the case of Roman Catholics and other children the sanction of the parents must be obtained.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Suppose a child is a Presbyterian?

7841. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Will you not recognize Presbyterians as Protestants?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I will, to a certain extent, not to the extent that in the term "Protestant" as used fifty or one hundred years ago, Presbyterians are included. By the clause you suggest you will keep open the designation "Protestant" and not define the term.

7842. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—It includes Presbyterians.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I would rather not have it so.

I would prefer that there should not be any other denominations mentioned than our own.

7843. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—If we adopt your proposal, when any child comes to your school, and is put down as a Presbyterian, you cannot give that child any religious instruction without a written sanction from the parents to give the child such instruction.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I wish the Church children to be left together, and all others to be put in the same position as to religious education.

7844. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What do you say upon this point, Sir Andrew?

Sir Andrew HART.—I would be willing to apply the principle of the National Board, that Protestants of all denominations who do not object may receive religious instruction in the school, and that Roman Catholics and Jews who consent to receive it must forward a certificate.

7845. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Unless you have some special reason, Canon JELLET, for objecting, I do not see how you can effect what you want.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—We teach all children, but any person who objects we need not teach under the new rule.

7846. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—In the provision in clause 15 that "the Governors may, if and when they shall so think fit, remove any or all of the schools to some other convenient site or sites in or near the city of Dublin," you want that it should be in the parish of St. Peter.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—In the civil parish of St. Peter.

7847. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What about St. Kevin's?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—That is part of the civil parish of St. Peter.

7848. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—In the same clause you want to omit the part beginning—"provided that no such removal shall take place," and ending "benefit of one or all of the schools." By that you are not at liberty to remove, let, or sell the premises without the sanction of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. You want to be able to do so without control.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—We do not want to be tied up.

7849. Dr. TRAILL.—What body would you like to exercise this control?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I would prefer leaving the Governors of the schools unfettered.

7850. Dr. TRAILL.—There should be some body within your Church to see that things are kept right. Take the Synod of Dublin or the Representative Church Body. Would that do?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I will take the Church Body as a smaller body and Representative.

7851. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—In clause 16 you wish to omit the word "Protestant." If your case is that this is a Church school, how is it that you want to leave the word Protestant out of your scheme?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—For the same reason that I said before. I do not want other churches to take our privileges from us. In all probability St. Peter's Schools will be placed under the National Board. It would be far better for the people of Ireland not to obtain free education, as a charge, however small it may be, makes the education be valued more than when it costs nothing. The regulation in our school has been that the children pay a penny a week, except very poor children.

7852. Dr. TRAILL.—You reduce the fee "if the Governors are satisfied that they are unable to pay the scholastic fee." Was that provision in your original deed?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Poor children were free; their clergy recommended them.

7853. Dr. TRAILL.—Is it in the original deed that unless they are the children of poor parents they should pay?

Rev. Canon JELLET.—It was the rule, and we have no objection to that, provided that the word Protestant be changed.

Jan. 10, 1885.

7844. Dr. TRAILL.—I think you may put in the words of the original deed. The children were every one required to go to church with the master on Sundays, and not only those of the boarding school, but also those resorting to the day school.

7845. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The meaning of the thing is perfectly plain. This is a parochial school for the children of parents of all religious denominations, but they were obliged to go to church as part of the parochial system prevailing then.

7846. Dr. TRAILL.—It is now provided that "the governors shall permit the children of poor Protestant parents, resident in the civil parish of St. Peter, to receive elementary education in the daily schools at reduced fees, or free of charge, if the governors be satisfied that they are unable to pay the ordinary fees."

7847. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We ought not to put into the scheme anything that would enable the Governors of the schools to offer free education, or cheap education, as an inducement to the children of other religious denominations to come to the schools where they were not really objects of the endowment. That would be sanctioning a breach of trust, and also it would be open, in my opinion, to a charge of suggesting proselytism.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—I do not want the word Protestant in the schemes as liable to be misconstrued.

7848. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If you want to omit the word Protestant there, it would be better to say that the governors may permit poor children, members of their Church, "to receive elementary education in the daily schools at reduced fees, or free of charge."

Rev. Canon JELFET.—Very well; but if a poor Presbyterian child wants education I would not prevent it.

7849. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Then leave the word "Protestant" in the clause as it is.

7850. Dr. TRAILL.—Put the word "may" instead of "shall," and then put "the children of poor Protestants." Nobody will proceed against you for educating a Presbyterian free, for they do not want free education; they are always ready to pay for it. I think when the endowment specially mentions it that I would give them religious instruction, and not allow the liberality that was exercised in the past to be taken advantage of in a hostile manner now.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—The endowment is very small. It is a very small part of the foundation of the schools.

7851. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—With which now will you agree—"The governors may permit the children of poor Protestant parents, resident in the civil parish of St. Peter, to receive elementary education in the daily schools at reduced fees, or free of charge, if the governors be satisfied that they are unable to pay the ordinary fees," or, "the governors may from time to time authorize the charge of such school fees as they may think reasonable, provided that, so far as the endowments will allow, the governors shall permit the children of poor Protestant parents resident in the parish of St. Peter to receive elementary education in the daily schools at reduced fees, or free of charge, if the governors be satisfied that they are unable to pay the ordinary fees?"

Rev. Canon JELFET.—I am satisfied with the latter form, but I want "may" instead of "shall." I want it to be a Church school.

7852. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The conscience clause will be, as already agreed to, that, in the case of Protestant children, they shall not give religious instruction in the schools if the parents object, and in the case of other children unless with the written consent of the parents.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—Omit the word "shall" and put "may" in.

7853. Dr. TRAILL.—And take out the word "Protestant."

7854. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Coming to clause 17, you want to take from the governors the control and management of the Sunday schools, and to provide that "the Incumbent of St. Peter's shall have the right of using for the Sunday schools, which according to the canons of the said Church it is his duty to maintain, such rooms in the school premises as he may think expedient, and the governors may give such pecuniary aid towards the maintenance of such Sunday schools as the funds will permit."

7855. Dr. TRAILL.—You do not want the governors to have any control over the Sunday school?

Rev. Canon JELFET.—No; it is provided for already by the canons of the Church.

7856. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The Sunday schools are open for parochial purposes. You have no objection, I suppose, Sir Andrew, to allow one of the buildings to be used on Sundays for a Sunday school, and for such other parochial purposes as the Incumbent may approve of.

Sir Andrew BART.—I have no objection.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—The Incumbent of St. Peter's parish has a right to the use of the building on Sundays and on any other day.

7857. Dr. TRAILL.—Why do you want to separate yourself from the governors?

7858. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We must get the use of the place for a school and we can put in, that on Sundays and at other times when the buildings are not required for this purpose, they may be used for such other parochial or educational purposes as the Incumbent of the parish approves of.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—Very well; that will suffice.

7859. Dr. TRAILL.—You stated at first, for Sunday school purposes; now you have limited it so that the governors cannot use it, unless such use is approved of by the Incumbent. The Incumbent should have complete and absolute control on Sundays, but on week days it should be under the control of the governing body of which he is a member.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—The governing body would never interfere.

7860. Dr. TRAILL.—If you want extra power for the Incumbent, well and good; but if you say that the governing body is not to act at all without the express permission of the Incumbent it will be a very curious state of affairs.

Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Let me read this for you—"On Sundays the governors shall permit the school buildings to be used by the Incumbent for the purpose of a Sunday school, and at all other times when the said buildings shall not be occupied or required the governors may, with the sanction of the Incumbent, and subject to the other provisions of this scheme, use and permit the same to be used on such terms as they may think proper for such educational or other purposes as they may from time to time approve of."

7861. Dr. TRAILL.—The way in which you word it now would prevent the governors from using it unless the Incumbent permitted them.

Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of giving a veto to the Incumbent on the one side and to the governors on the other. They may work well together. Nobody has objected to anything the Incumbent has done.

Dr. TRAILL.—I want to have them both perfectly free; give the Incumbent perfect freedom and give the governing body freedom also.

7862. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Is there any objection to letting the Incumbent have a veto as well as the others?

Rev. Canon JELFET.—I do not want to have a meeting held here for any purpose.

7863. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If the governors object the Incumbent cannot hold a meeting, and if the Incumbent objects the Governors cannot hold it. The result, therefore, will be that both must use the building only for the purposes for which it has been intended; but in one sense the Incumbent will be schools. We will draw the clause up in that form, and if you have any further objection when you see it you can let us know.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Very well.

1854. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—After clause 17, the next to which you take objection is clause 20. You want to alter it so that both parents shall be members of the Church?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—That is to prevent children of mixed marriages being admitted contrary to usage.

1855. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—And what are the children of mixed marriages to do?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—There may be children of mixed marriages of Protestants with Roman Catholics. We do not want to take them into our schools.

1856. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you make it an offence for a member of your Church to marry a Presbyterian?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—No, we do not.

1857. Dr. TRAILL.—You do not prohibit mixed marriages?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—No, we do not, we have no power to do so.

1858. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you never taken as pupils children of mixed marriages?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—No free boarders, only children of members of our own Church.

1859. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Surely you have got children of Methodists or Presbyterians as free boarders?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Never.

1860. Dr. TRAILL.—It was in the original deed that they should only be Church children.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—It is; they are to be Church children. As the clause now is people might think that it was the children of mixed marriages that were intended.

1861. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I agree with you that you ought not to expose yourself to any difficulty about mixed marriages with Roman Catholics, but at the same time it seems to me very hard that, if a Church widow is left with a child and her husband happened not to have been a Churchman, the child must get into the school. I think it would be a very great hardship to establish a rule by which such a child would be kept out.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not want to make a distinction between Roman Catholics and others.

Lord Justice NAISH.—I think the practice up to the present has been so.

1862. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—You want to omit section (c) of Clause 20, which requires that candidates should be present at the day of election, seen by the Governors present, and examined. I am in favour of the candidates going up the day of election, and that nobody be admitted until he or she has been seen by somebody representing the Governors?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—There is no objection that the children should be present before election—that the Governors should see them. But as regards competitive examination it is a different thing.

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—I think it is ignorant children that we should prefer to admit.

1863. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You need to ascertain their qualification for the reception of further instruction.

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—We do not object to that.

1864. Dr. TRAILL.—You do not require them to be examined before they come to you.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—To take in a stupid child means the loss of a child's education; if you take her into the boarding school, instead of letting her go to the daily school, you keep out a clever child.

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—Besides taking into account the examination and the results there are other considerations to be kept in view.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not think it at all a fair thing to establish that the boarding-school is to be open only to those who may have been strongly recommended to a governor.

1865. Dr. TRAILL.—This gives you a large privilege. You are to exercise your own judgment. The clause is framed to prevent jobbery. It is to prevent each person nominating a child in rotation. I do not think they should be seen by any other persons than the governors, but that they should be seen by the governors themselves.

1866. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—They are to be admitted by a majority of the governors present and voting, and the names of such governors as vote are to be recorded in the minutes.

Dr. TRAILL.—If a governor is present and does not vote he has no right to be taken into account in the majority of the Board.

1867. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The difficulty is that if you have a meeting at which, say, three governors attend and one of them says he will not vote, the result is that two persons do the business. When a man attends a meeting he ought to do his duty.

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—Is its present form the majority might be ruled by the minority.

Dr. TRAILL.—Yes, if three do not vote and there are five there.

1868. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—If there are six present and three of them do not vote can you say the majority have voted?

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—When they do not vote we cannot say that they are against it.

1869. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I think you would have all kinds of inducements held out to persons to decline to vote if they are allowed to decline voting when they attend. If they do not want to vote they should stay away.

Dr. TRAILL.—Where there is a large number it may not affect the matter if one or two decline to vote, but it makes a serious difference if the number be small.

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—If there are four present and only two vote they could not carry the question.

1870. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—But if three of them have not made up their minds what is the result?

Rev. Godfrey Webster.—They should not be taken into account on one side or the other.

1871. Dr. TRAILL.—Suppose there are three present and that only one of these votes, and that two won't vote, the one carries it, I suppose, by a majority of one?

1872. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—In clause 25 you want to omit the words "at each quarterly meeting" so that the governors should not be bound to examine into the condition and efficiency of the schools at stated times.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not like requiring the governors to examine the schools at frequent periods; they will not do it often.

Dr. TRAILL.—But make them do it. Sure one of the things causing the springing up of abuses is that the governors will not take the trouble to do what is required of them.

1873. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—They must once in six months look over their trust?

Dr. TRAILL.—Say once in three months, that is each quarterly meeting.

1874. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—With regard to section 29, the Act of Parliament compels us to provide for the audit of the accounts. It is the Local Government Board which is empowered to appoint the auditor, and the governors are to pay the cost of the audit.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—We want the appointment to be by the Local Government Board or some other competent authority. We do not want to be bound to have their auditor, as not required by the act.

1875. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The Local Government Board are willing to approve a competent auditor other than their own officer.

April 20, 1885.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—The auditing of the accounts is an ordinary thing, and it has been done for us by Sir Andrew Hart for the last two years.

1886. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—It is better let it be as it is provided in the Scheme. This is a clause which we have not changed in any case.

1887. Dr. TRAILL.—It is quite possible that the governing body might mismanage the affairs of the institution, and have a friendly auditor.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—It is not imperative in the Act of Parliament to appoint the Local Government Board.

1888. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—No, it is the Local Government Board or other competent authority. If we altered the clause we should be obliged to define what the other competent authority was. We would have to say some society of scholars, or something of that kind.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—We have an honorary secretary, and an honorary treasurer, and all our immunities are above question.

1889. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—How many years ago is it that you had six or eight months of trouble before you could get your accounts audited?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—It is very seldom that there is any delay. By this clause there would be a further expense involved for the payment of a secretary. We do not want a paid officer.

1890. Dr. TRAILL.—You are offered an outside body for the auditing of your accounts.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—It is not a large endowment.

1891. Dr. TRAILL.—The Local Government Board has to appoint an extra auditor to do all this work, and it is much better not to let the accounts be audited by a governor.

Sir Andrew Hart.—In preparing the accounts for the auditor's inspection it may become troublesome.

1892. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—No account is worthy to be called an account if it is not in such a shape that it can be audited. Your accounts being in that shape you ought certainly to provide for an official audit. What do you say, Sir Andrew?

Sir Andrew Hart.—Though it may not be absolutely essential I suppose it would be more satisfactory to have it done.

1893. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—In clause 31 you want to omit the words "a person holding any paid office or employment under the governors or entitled to any salary or emolument out of the endowments, shall be capable of becoming or shall continue to be a governor."

Rev. Canon Jellett.—It might be a question at some time in the future whether a paid officer may be also a Governor. It might be a possible thing that one of the clergy connected with the church should act as secretary or treasurer. We want to avoid misunderstandings that may arise hereafter in case they were not now guarded against.

1894. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—That would be a case in which the secretary ought not to hold office under the Board.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I would regard it rather as a sum paid for individual exertion in the work of the schools. I would not like that our hands should be tied up in such a manner as to prevent us from adopting a course that may hereafter be seen to be expedient.

1895. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—Your hands would be tied only to this extent, that if the governors did resolve to pay a salary to a clergyman in respect of services rendered by him in connection with the schools, he should not be at the same time both paymaster and servant.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—In a scheme sanctioned by this Commission a person not an elected governor, is entitled to receive a salary, but if an elected governor he is not.

1896. Dr. TRAILL.—There is an example that happened the other day. At the Church of Ireland Training College £700 were voted away by a majority of one, that one being a paid officer.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I think there are a good many paid officers in Trinity College who vote payments to themselves.

Dr. TRAILL.—Oh, that is a different matter altogether. They obtain their places by competition and are not elected by other governors.

1897. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—The question is not whether you are to pay a salary, but whether the person who receives the salary is to be also a governor and have a voice in ordering the payments. If one of the estates is to be appointed chaplain ought he to be a governor too?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I know several institutions in which both capacities are combined, and with advantage too.

1898. Dr. TRAILL.—I can give you an example in which it worked very badly. Look at Mercer's Hospital.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—There is for instance the case of Infirmeries, in which the doctors are paid for their professional services, and are also members of the governing board.

1899. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—What do you say to this, Sir Andrew?

Sir Andrew Hart.—I would not like this clause omitted.

1900. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—There is a difference of opinion between the lay members and the clerical members, and the Commissioners are unanimous.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I am not sure of that. I do not see how they can be with their knowledge of Roman Catholic institutions.

1901. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—You can sit down if you like. There are several cases in which part of the original terms of the foundation was to pay a salary to somebody who was also to be a governor. In such cases we have followed the will of the founder. But in these schools the governors ought not also to be paid officers. It would place you in a very unpleasant position to fill both capacities. Supposing a proposal was brought forward that a salary should be paid for the performance of certain duties, the particular person affected by the motion would not be disqualified until after it was carried.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I cannot forget that the Irish Church is not now an endowed church, and there will be great difficulty in maintaining it. Even for the clerical staff of St. Peter's there might be a difficulty in keeping it up, and some aid derived in this way may be useful, and if it be not possible to give it inquiry may be done in the future.

1902. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—I am afraid that the answer I would give as a layman to that argument is, that the best money that should be given to supply a parish curate is the money of the schools.

Dr. TRAILL.—Who should be interested in promoting the education of the children of the parish more than the clergymen?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—By the clause as it stands any person paid must cease to be a governor. The main provision for the school depends on individual exertion, not the endowment; thus the advisability of paying for aid.

1903. Dr. TRAILL.—You put him into a different position at once by the fact of making him a paid officer of the institution.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—How many schools are there conducted by Roman Catholic clergymen in which these who manage them are both governors and paid officers?

1904. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—I don't know of any where they are paid out of the school funds. Now, in clause 34, empowering the governors with the consent of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to sell, exchange, let on lease, or otherwise dispose of the lands and buildings in their control, you want to strike out the words "with the consent of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests." I think this clause reasonable enough. We give you full power to dispose of your buildings so long as you do not take a fine. You cannot sell any of your own authority, and we have given you full power of letting.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—The reason we objected was that the interest of the charity might possibly suffer if we did not take the power into our own hands.

1913. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You seem not satisfied about the investment clause in relation to the Wray trust. You say that it is too wide. There is no substantial difference between your proposal and ours.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—It was our treasurer that drew that amendment up. If there is no difference there is no objection to the clause as it is at present.

1914. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The alteration would put you to all sorts of trouble about finding out whether dividends had been paid for three years on the ordinary stock. This is a matter that would involve the personal liability of the trustees.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—What we wanted was the power of investing in Colonial funds.

1917. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You seek a discretionary power to lend "on debentures or debenture stocks or guaranteed stocks of any railway company of the United Kingdom which shall have paid on the ordinary stock thereof for the three years at least immediately preceding such investment, or to lend the same on the security of sale of freehold property in the United Kingdom, or of rates or assessments levied by the Act of Parliament, or on the security of any of the investments before mentioned, or on deposit receipts of the Bank of Ireland, and to vary or charge all such investments at their discretion." We give a discretionary power to lend on debentures or mortgages but not on shares. The Wray trustees want what we will give them, that no charge of investment should be made without the consent of the majority of the governors. We are really guarding you against yourselves. The Wray trustees say "We think that the powers of investment are too large, and in this also so far as relates to the Wray endowment we think that no charge of investment or new investment should be made without the consent of the majority of the Wray governors, and we think that the two funds should be kept distinct." That is a separate matter.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Is there any objection to adopting this suggestion of our treasurer; he got it in some other deed.

1918. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Our clause is more general than yours, but we have deliberately refused in a great many cases to allow the governors to invest in shares at all—whether preference or not—on the general principle that trustees have no right to become partners. You have a right to lend your money, but not to become shareholders. Therefore we have not let in shares. The personal liability of the governors would be very considerable if they were obliged to see that the ordinary stock has paid dividend within three years.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Railways are in many cases good investments.

1919. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—There are many better companies than railway companies. You could, for instance, invest in Guinness's debentures.

1920. Dr. TRAILL.—In the case of debentures there is interest accumulative. This is not the case in regard to preference stock.

Sir Andrew Hart.—I think the debentures of a company might be considered safe.

1921. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—In clause 40 you object to power to join a central governing body for the future management of the various educational endowments belonging to the church in the diocese of Dublin.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Yes, I would rather not have it at all.

1922. Dr. TRAILL.—Suppose you found a scheme framed under the Act and constituting a central governing body for the management of the educational endowments of the diocese of Dublin worked satisfactorily, would you consider yourself justified in standing aloof? I want to give you power, with your own consent, at some future day to join the central body. The Cork people are much more sensible about this matter than you are here in Dublin, for the clergy and laity, especially the clergy, are in favour of such a project.

1923. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Under the 38th section of the Act, you can do this if the future scheme ever reaches maturity.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—The application must be with written consent.

1924. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Yesterday it was argued on behalf of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests that every person interested should be permitted to apply for an alteration of the scheme. The great argument against us was that the Governors may become inefficient. Suppose the Governors of St. Peter's fall out amongst themselves, there ought to be somebody to apply for an alteration to set things right.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—The General Synod could do this.

1925. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The General Synod or the Representative Church Body, or the Diocesan Council.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—That is a small body.

1926. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Would you like to give the power to the Select Vestry of the parish?

Sir Andrew Hart.—I think the General Synod would be preferable.

1927. Dr. TRAILL.—We want to secure that if the governing body becomes inefficient, or if something has been left out which we cannot provide for now, there should be some competent body to arrange it. It would not do to appoint the Select Vestry for this purpose. You are better protected by the General Synod than you would be by a small body. The General Synod would not think of interfering unless there was a case of great abuse.

1928. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Will you give the power to the governors and the General Synod?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not know whether it would be desirable to do so.

1929. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you say that the application ought to be carried by a vote of two-thirds of the governors?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not think as a matter of fact that the question will ever arise. Still I would like to have the thing done in the best manner.

1930. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—In clause 11 you want power "to continue the grants hitherto made to provide articles of clothing and bread for the poorer children attending the Wray school." You also want—which seems reasonable—to provide that the income of the Wray endowment be applied in the first instance for purposes of the Wray school; and you say you want that to be done in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Wray governors and the incumbent of St. Peter's present and voting.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Supposing the schools be put under the National Board, then a very large increase might be made in the infant school and the day schools, to make preparations for which money would be necessary. At present the Wray governors pay nothing at all for a very splendid room in their possession.

1931. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Who built this?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—This is a part of the large school, and I am not quite certain that it would be reasonable that all the income of the Wray school should be spent entirely and exclusively on the Wray school.

1932. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Only so far as it may be required. The Wray governors are three in number, and those of St. Peter's four. What they say is that they would associate the incumbent with them, and that there should be two Wray governors with the incumbent.

Jan 15, 1886.

Rev. Canon Jellott.—I do not think this presents any difficulty, but I wish the matter to be understood.

7923. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you not want a preamble to this scheme, that the endowments are dealt with with your own consent?

Rev. Canon Jellott.—Yes, that we have agreed to.

7924. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Will you send us in a written consent?

7925. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The Act of Parliament requires a written consent to be given in all cases which are exempt. The Wray school is not exempt.

7926. Rev. Canon Jellott.—Would you modify the provision as to paid governors holding office?

Dr. TRAILL.—We had applications to do this very thing—to allow that persons should sit and vote in their own interest. It would be a most irritating thing for any governor to take part in a discussion and then walk out of the room, or sit down and see who it was that voted for or against him, in a matter personal to himself.

Rev. Canon Jellott.—He could act as visitor to the school, but not as governor.

7927. Lord Justice NAIRN.—It is impossible for us to allow it on general principles.

7928. Dr. TRAILL.—We have had some cases of great abuse in this respect. I have mentioned one already.

TULLYVIN AND BENBAWN SCHOOL.

The Rev. Francis Alexander Sanders, Incumbent of Killesbarnady; Mr. Robert Good, Master of Tullyvin School; and Mr. G. A. McGusty, Solicitor, appeared.

7929. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The first objection is from Mr. McWilliam as representing the members of the Methodist Church in Cootchill and its neighbourhood who claim to have at least two representatives on the Board. Are there, Mr. Sanders, many members of the Methodist Body at Cootchill and in the neighbourhood?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—There may be, but I do not know them.

7930. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Are there many Methodists in Tullyvin School, Mr. Good?

Mr. Robert Good.—There is one at present, my lord.

7931. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What is the largest number of Methodists you had at any time?

Mr. Good.—I think one family was all we had—four pupils.

7932. Dr. TRAILL.—How many Presbyterian families have you had?

Mr. Good.—I could not answer that question. We have always had a good many Presbyterians. At present we have four families of Presbyterians. We have only one Methodist boy at present.

7933. Dr. TRAILL.—Why is it that more Methodists do not avail themselves of the school?

Mr. Good.—Well, there are not very many Methodists in the neighbourhood.

7934. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Is there any substantial Methodist element in the surrounding locality?

Mr. Good.—There is a Methodist church at Cootchill.

7935. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The present constitution of the governing body is five churchmen to two others, so that you have a substantial majority. In your opinion would there be any objection if one in ten of the children attending the school were at any time Methodists that a Methodist minister should be associated as the Presbyterians are?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I think the Methodist element is so very small that it does not possess a claim to representation on the governing body.

7936. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—But I do not propose bringing them in unless they have a number of children there that would form an appreciable portion of the whole school.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I do not think there were any Methodists in the school for a long period, and this Methodist boy that Mr. Good says is there now, comes from Cootchill, and has only been there or four months in the school. His family was not educated there in the ten years that I have been there.

7937. Professor DOUGHERTY.—How many pupils come to the school from Cootchill?

Mr. Good.—There have been always some; at some times more than at other times. At present there are only two, I think.

7938. Dr. TRAILL.—How far is the school from Cootchill?

Mr. Good.—It is two miles. We have twenty or more pupils from Cootchill sometimes.

7939. Dr. TRAILL.—Is the Methodist population of that part of the parish greater than at your call?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I think it is more in Ashfield parish than in ours. There are very few at the Tullyvin side; I am not aware in fact that there are any.

7940. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—At the time that you had four Methodist children in your school how many children had you there altogether?

Mr. Good.—I think I would be safe in saying seventy.

7941. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Of those seventy how many were Presbyterians?

Mr. Good.—About fifty.

7942. Rev. Canon Jellott.—Will you allow me to ask was not the school always under the direction of the church?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—It was.

7943. Rev. Canon Jellott.—What is the reason then of adding on the different denominations?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—We did not add them on.

7944. Rev. Canon Jellott.—It seems to me that if a gentleman founded a school for the instruction of children, and that the governors have always been "Protestant," that is, "Church," the governing body should continue Irish Church.

7945. Lord Justice NAIRN.—I do not think you object to the Presbyterian representation?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—No, we do not.

7946. Rev. Canon Jellott.—Would it be competent for them to appoint as head master to the school a person who was not a member of the Church of Ireland?

Dr. TRAILL.—The head master up to the present has been a Protestant. If they get a good master he must be principally elected by the Church people, for they have a majority on the Board.

7947. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What do you say about the representation of the Methodists? Is it better to let them go to the Privy Council?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I think it is an inefficient man in that part of the country.

7948. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Suppose it becomes at any time efficient by having a certain number or proportion in the school, do you think that it ought to have any representation?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—"Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof."

7949. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What is the name of your parish?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Killesbarnady.

7950. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You have in the parish a population of which 2,900 are Roman Catholics, 940 Protestant Episcopalians, 390 Presbyterians, and 65 Methodists.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—You refer to the civil parish of Killesberony, which includes the district of Ashfield parish. In my parish of Killesberony, all counted, I have but 203 Protestant Episcopalians, and I am not aware that there are any Methodists, much less 65.

Mr. Good.—As far as my knowledge goes, my lord, there are not 65 Methodists there at all. In fact, I would find it difficult to point out a Methodist family during the last twenty years.

17931. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—How far is Costello from you?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—It is two miles.

17932. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—And how far are you from Cavan?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Cavan is ten miles.

17933. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—It is better for us to adhere to what the parties agreed to when we held a public sitting down there. You propose to limit your own power of giving instruction anywhere except at the Tullyvin school.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—On that neighbourhood. Some children may come to the school from Ashfield, which was originally a part of the parish.

17934. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—This is a very large sum of money, and it has occurred to us that the master did not intend it to be strictly locally applied, for he gave part of the bequest for "board and lodging at a moderate rate contiguous to such school for Protestant children whose own residence should be too distant from thence to allow their daily attendance at such school."

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Tullyvin reached to more than five miles away. The people living at Tullyvin would find it very hard to send little children five miles to school every day. When the Hon. Henry O'Brien was incumbent they got up a school in the other part of the parish, 2½ miles away from Tullyvin school, and that was the cause of their originally making provision for board and lodgings near the school.

17935. Dr. TRAILL.—There is a reservation in the will that "one-third of the number of children so to be supplied and instructed should be the children of persons who were tenants on the estate," so that two-thirds should be Protestant children not necessarily children of those persons who were tenants on the estate.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Coming from a distance and coming from a place ten miles distant are two different things. Cavan is ten miles distant.

17936. Dr. TRAILL.—The will does not say anything against their coming from a distance of ten miles.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Cavan is ten miles distant. If some of the endowment was spent on children going to school in Cavan, I do not see how it would do any good to the inhabitants of the estate of the late William Meade of Tullyvin.

17937. Dr. TRAILL.—The endowment was not restricted by him to the inhabitants of the estate.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—The inhabitants of the estate and of the neighbourhood.

17938. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—No, it was not restricted to the neighbourhood. It was for the education and instruction of Protestant children at or near Tullyvin, and to pay for the board and lodging of such children of Protestant parents as resided at too great a distance.

Dr. TRAILL.—The school was to be at or near Tullyvin, but the children might come from any distance.

17939. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—What we wanted to do for you was this—that if you had a good school at Tullyvin, which you are bound to keep in any case, and that there was a better high-class school at Cavan, you should have the power of doing what the testator appointed, to send the Tullyvin children there and to pay for their education at the Grammar School in Cavan or any other part of the county.

Dr. TRAILL.—You are at present supplied with a very good schoolmaster, who gives the boys a high education; but suppose you had a master that could not do so, suppose Mr. Good left you and you had another, you might find it well to be able to send the pick of the children to the boarding school at Cavan. That would not apply at present; but supposing Mr. Good was promoted to the school at Cavan, it might be well to be able to exercise that power.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Then you would fritter away the endowment from the place it was intended for.

17940. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—So long as it is the opinion of the governors that the school is adequate to the wants of the community they need not exercise that power. At present you have the services of a very efficient head master, but if Mr. Good were appointed by the Cavan Board to be the head master at Cavan, surely the better way for you would be to be in a position to send your advanced boys to Cavan, and not to keep them in this part of the country.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I do not know.

17941. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—We are giving you the power of doing it. You have a most useful piece at present, because Mr. Good manages it in the way he is doing.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—We know, for instance, that if we appointed a National schoolmaster there the result would not be the same.

17942. Professor DEVENPORT.—You are not compelled to put the school under the National Board or to pay money outside Tullyvin. All you get is power to be exercised only when you may find it expedient to do so, and I think it is useful for you to have as wide powers as you can possibly take.

Lord Justice NALAN.—And to place the children out to board if you find it necessary.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Under what plan would those children be under the control of the governors if they were sent to Cavan?

17943. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—That would depend on the regulations the governors might think it expedient to make. As long as fear of them are of opinion that it should not be done it could not be done. If you had a good classical school in the town of Cavan, and wanted to send some of the Tullyvin children to it, it may be a desirable thing to be in a position to do so.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—The same rule would hold if we sent them to England or Scotland. It would not be carrying out the purposes of the endowment.

Dr. TRAILL.—But you need not do it if you do not like.

17944. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—I think it is carrying out the testator's will, for he speaks of children from a distance getting the benefit of education.

Dr. TRAILL.—He designed part of the endowment for children coming from a long distance to be educated.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Not to be educated elsewhere.

Dr. TRAILL.—But that depends upon the Board having the services of a good master. If anything happened to Mr. Good, or if he got a good school elsewhere at a larger salary, how would you have a chance of getting a master that would combine teaching the classics with his other duties?

17945. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—The proposal we originally had to deal with was a proposal by the Commissioners of Education to amalgamate you with the Caryfort and Eymourstown endowments.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—The necessity for doing so may never take place, but one has to look out for the future, and guard against any danger that may arise.

17946. Lord Justice NALAN.—It leaves the exercise of the power in the hands of the governors, who are the best body to judge of the desirability of resorting to that power.

Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—I think it is a great pity for you to tie your hands. We are really guarding you against yourselves.

Jan. 18, 1888.

Jan. 29, 1888.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I know that the other governors are against it.

1957. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—The provisions of the trust give power to the trustees to apply a part of the endowment "to pay for board and lodging at a moderate rate contiguous to the school for Protestant children whose own residence should be too distant to allow their daily attendance at the school." As Tullyvin is situated at present there is no suitable lodging to be obtained in the neighbourhood, and Mr. Good has taken them into his part of the house and boards and lodges them himself. If you had another master who had not a wife capable of taking care of the boys their parents would not have sent them and your school would not be so well attended. Nothing could be better than the present arrangements.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Still I think, my lord, we cannot consent—we are not obliged—to expend the endowment at any great distance. If you send it out ten miles you may send it out 300 miles.

1958. Lord Justice NASH.—If you wish to do it yourselves.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—But we are not to legislate for ourselves only, but for those who may succeed us as well.

1959. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—It is perfectly plain, if you look at Cavan as a place of education, that you are not likely always to have in Tullyvin the same provision for teaching that you have at present, and that you may want a good school for Protestant boys in Cavan. You should therefore be able to send Tullyvin boys to a good school in Cavan similar to the one you have now in Tullyvin, which might possibly be kept in Cavan. So long as you are of opinion that it ought not to be done it cannot be done.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—The present governors think that it ought not to be done.

1970. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—Therefore it will not be done. What do you say, Mr. McGusty?

Mr. McGusty.—I know that the governors do not wish that their successors should have the power of doing it. What they fear is that their endowment might go to the Royal School in Cavan.

1971. Professor DOUGHERTY.—How can it possibly go to the Royal School in Cavan?

Mr. McGusty.—Speaking for themselves it would not, but their successors might not be so careful as to part with it.

1972. Dr. TRAILL.—But if their successors did that it would be in accordance with the conviction of the whole neighbourhood, and why not do it if it turns out to be the best thing to do?

Mr. McGusty.—These things are generally done by eliques.

1973. Dr. TRAILL.—But this is an elected body, and all eliques may be knocked on the head at the next election?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I do not think I have authority to consent.

1974. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—It is not a question of consent, it is a question of doing what is best. You come here under the impression that by this scheme you should have to transfer the whole of this endowment to Cavan. If we take out those words that frighten you, and put in plainly, the scheme enables you to pay for the better education in the Royal School or elsewhere in the county Cavan of children belonging to Tullyvin, provided you see fit to do so. I think you are frightened by an unusual interpretation of the clause. You have got £3,000, and it is a pity to spend the whole of that £3,000 at a small place like Tullyvin on one school.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Two schools.

1975. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Supposing you had promising boys, and wished to give them a good intermediate education.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—We do that now.

1976. Professor DOUGHERTY.—They go to the Incorporated Society.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—They go to Santry and to Trinity College, and become men in life; and it is not only that the thing is possible, but it has actually taken place in very many cases.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—The Incorporated Society are not justified according to the charter in allowing the boys of Tullyvin to compete for scholarships. I do not see that a boy able to pay for board in Tullyvin is to be allowed to compete for scholarships.

1977. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—I may tell you now that before you come to that conclusion you ought to go and see the Tullyvin school. It is the best and cheapest education, and the most substantial board we saw anywhere for the money.

Mr. Good.—I think it is hardly fair, my lord, when a man can pay for his son one year to see, to assume that he can pay for him during three years in Dublin.

1978. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—What do they pay you?

Mr. Good.—They pay me £20 for one year. If a man can pay me £30 I think that does not prove he can pay three years' expenses in Dublin.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I agree with you.

Mr. Good.—I have sent a letter to the Board to explain the circumstances.

1979. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—Mr. McGusty, do you think we could make it clear on the face of this scheme that the education to be provided at Tullyvin may, if the trustees think it desirable so to do, be supplemented by their paying for the education of the children in any other school within the county Cavan. Then you see if they are able to send a dozen children to Cavan it will be a great support to the Cavan school, and get better teaching for the children than at Tullyvin.

Mr. McGusty.—It would be a great benefit that they should have the power, but the governors think they are bound by the terms of the will to maintain the education at Tullyvin.

1980. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—The will actually provides for children from a distance?

Mr. McGusty.—That is merely to give them board and lodging at Tullyvin.

1981. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—But now the circumstances are changed, and the Tullyvin children might get education better in Cavan.

Mr. McGusty.—The trustees think that they would not be carrying out the intention of the testator if they allowed that.

1982. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—If they think so they would not do it. We will try to alter the wording of it, but I think, Mr. Sanders, that it would not be reasonable for you to object to a discretionary power to spend this money for your own children in Cavan.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I am only a representative. If I had authority to do that—1983. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—It is not a question of authority; but we will take the responsibility of proposing it to the Privy Council.

Mr. McGusty.—The governors discussed it before.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—Yes, but they discussed the question under the impression that the whole endowment might be taken away from Tullyvin. If we make it clear that that is impossible I think the trustees may change their views.

1984. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—You want to leave out clause 10. That power to place the schools under the National Board of Education is discretionary also.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—They think that it is removing the government from one body to another—that it is removing to the National Board the power of governing the schools.

1985. Dr. TRAILL.—The National Board would not have the control of the school at all. All the control they would have would be to pay the money.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Are you to give the money to the National Board of Education?

Dr. TRAILL.—No, but they are to give money to you, and not to interfere with you.

1793. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We will leave out this clause that you object to, and keep in clause 11, which enables you to take aid whenever you can get it, including the National Board.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I do not see any objection to that.

1794. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The next thing to notice is that Mr. Good, naturally enough, has been alarmed at its being suggested that his boarding system might be interfered with. Ought we not to put in for him that he should continue to hold his emoluments and have his right of receiving boarders on the same terms as if this scheme did not pass.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—The only objection we have to boarders is the deficiency of accommodation. If the accommodation was a little larger there would be no objection.

1795. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What do you say to the wish of your testator, who says that you were "to oblige and pay for board and lodging at a moderate rate contiguous to such school, for Protestant children whose own residence should be too distant from thence to allow their daily attendance at such school."

The last objection is with reference to applications to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for alterations. You want this to be on the joint application of the governors and the Diocesan Council. There is no objection to that, in case the governors feel satisfied.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Yes.

1796. Mr. Good.—My Lord, may I ask just one question. There is a clause in the scheme which says that two of the governors are to visit and inspect the schools once a month. Does that mean that they are to visit and inspect my private apartment? One of them is under the impression that it is part of his duty to go in and inspect my bedroom every time he comes. Jan. 18, 1888.

1797. Dr. TRAILL.—Who is that?

Mr. Good.—One of the governors said to me that he considered it was part of his duty under clause 14.

1798. Dr. TRAILL.—Are not your premises part of the school of which they are trustees? It is a permissive thing allowing you to have boarders there.

1799. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Is it the frequency of the visits that you object to?

Mr. Good.—I object to gentlemen walking into my bedroom.

1800. Dr. TRAILL.—You have no right to object. The house is not yours, it is the property of the governors.

Mr. Good.—Is the house not mine as long as I keep the school?

1801. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I am afraid that every schoolmaster's residence is liable to visitation.

Mr. Good.—Then I do not hold it on the same terms as I did.

1802. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I think if you try to keep out a trustee it may be a very serious matter for you. If any of the governors caused any unpleasantness the other governors would not allow it. But every man who is in a position, such as a schoolmaster is, is liable to be visited at reasonable times. Now, Mr. Sanders, how often do you visit the school?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—I visit once each week generally, to catechise the children.

1803. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You do not make a minute inspection, I presume?

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—No, I do not.

Mr. Good.—He never went into my private bedroom, unless there was some sick person that he wanted to see.

Rev. Mr. Sanders.—Whenever I did I saw everything clean and nicely arranged.

THE BERTRAND FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL.

John T. Henderson, Esq., q.c.; Henry T. Din, Esq.; Rev. Hamilton Mages, D.D.; Rev. J. M. Hamilton; Rev. Morgan W. Jellott, D.D.; and James Shaw, Esq., B.A., appeared.

1797. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—In the case of the Bertrand Female Orphan Schools there are several amendments suggested to the draft scheme. We will first take those proposed by the trustees. They propose to adopt the principle of co-optation, instead of election by the Diocesan Council or the Presbytery, and they propose to fill any vacancy that may occur in their body in the manner provided in the scheme acted by the Vice-Chancellor.

Rev. Canon Jellott.—The objection we have to this part of the Commissioners' scheme is, that the manner of filling up vacancies was settled in the Vice-Chancellor's scheme, and we do not see any reason for altering that mode.

1798. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—It appeared in evidence at our sitting when the original formation of this body was considered before the Vice-Chancellor, it was proposed that there should be three gentlemen nominated by the Presbytery, and three by the Church, and that these six names were to be submitted to the Vice-Chancellor out of which he was to select three governors; that three Church representatives were nominated, but the Presbyterians, instead of nominating any one, appealed against the distribution of the members between the Church and the Presbytery; that the three who had been nominated by the Church were appointed by the Vice-Chancellor, but no Presbyterians at all. When it went to the Court of Appeal which then consisted of two judges, the members of the Court were equally divided, one judge being in favour of the Presbyterians' appeal, and the other against it, and the result was that no order was made.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—Lord O'Hagan ultimately coincided with Lord Justice Colvile. I was present at the judgment. I first heard Lord Justice Christian give his judgment in favour of the Vice-Chancellor's scheme, and Lord O'Hagan then said that there was no use in his giving judgment as he differed from Lord Justice Christian.

Mr. J. J. Shaw.—The Lord Chancellor said that he would like to modify the scheme of the Vice-Chancellor, but that as Lord Justice Christian differed in opinion from him he thought it best to agree with him.

Rev. Dr. Mages.—Do they oppose or are they now opposing the recommendation of the governors themselves to name a board to this Commission, as recorded in our minutes of the meeting to which they were invited?

1799. Professor DOUGHERTY.—What was the recommendation?

Rev. Dr. Mages.—The Governors of the Bertrand Female Orphan School were summoned, and a special intimation was put in the notice paper to consider your scheme.

Rev. Canon Jellott.—The governors, when the matter came before the Commissioners, were all opposed to any change. I may mention that Mr. Pennfather declined the proposed change so much that he has resigned being a governor.

1800. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Did those gentlemen object to the draft scheme because it is not in accordance with the scheme of the Vice-Chancellor?

Rev. Canon Jellott.—Yes.

1801. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are they satisfied that the Vice-Chancellor's scheme is in accordance with the will of the founder?

Rev. Canon Jellott.—Yes.

1802. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We cannot concur in that view. It appears to me perfectly clear that the testator in making his will put the ministers of Mary's Abbey and the incumbents of the two parishes on the same basis. The ministers have been out of

Jan. 26, 1862.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I think the Presbyterians believe that Mr. Peter Bertrand was a Presbyterian and made his will in the form that he has done in the interests of the Presbyterians.

8003. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You do not contend that Peter Bertrand was a member of your Church?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do.

8194. Professor DOUGHERTY.—On what ground?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I will give you the extracts I made myself from the parish books—

"17th April, 1785.—At a vestry duly called and held for said parish, the Rev. Mr. Curran, Minister, chose for churchwarden, Mr. William Johnson, and the vestry chose for churchwarden, Mr. Peter Bertrand. William Johnson and Peter Bertrand resided office on the 2nd February, 1786, and also at the Easter vestry in 1787."

8003. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Might I ask whether every person who was churchwarden in those days was necessarily a member of your Church?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—There was a provision made that if a churchwarden was selected who was not a churchman, the other churchman might act, but in this case Peter Bertrand, as I show you, acted as churchwarden, and if he acted as churchwarden he must have been a member of our Church.

8004. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What is to be considered as what he said in his will—that Messrs. McDowell and Horne, Ministers of Mary's Abbey, and the Ministers of St. Werburgh's and of St. Peter's and their successors to the end of time were to be trustees. Nothing will persuade me that when writing these words he did not regard Messrs. McDowell and Horne and the others mentioned in his will as being all of them persons who were to have successors to the end of time. The term used was a technical expression, and, consequently, the successors of two of those ministers have been put out. I think the scheme ought to be so made as to carry out the intention of the founder.

8007. Professor DOUGHERTY.—It appears at the face of it that the testator's intention was that there should be equal representation on the governing body.

8008. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—That the two Presbyterian ministers, Messrs. McDowell and Horne, were not put on two ministers is a point on which the view that has been taken was founded. I must say I would have concurred in the view of Lord O'Hagan.

Mr. Shaw.—On the matter of Peter Bertrand being a Presbyterian, we have evidence that at the time Peter Bertrand made his will he was a pew-holder in Mary's Abbey Presbyterian Church. We have an old book of Mary's Abbey Presbyterian Church in which Peter Bertrand appears as a pew-holder from the 1st January, 1803, to the 11th January, 1805, so that at the date he made his will and the date he died he was a pew-holder in Mary's Abbey Presbyterian Church.

8009. Rev. Canon Jellett.—Then you say he went back of his old faith.

Mr. Shaw.—I say that at the date he made his will and at the date he died he was a Presbyterian, attending Mary's Abbey Presbyterian Church.

8010. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In his will he described Messrs. McDowell and Horne as the ministers of Mary's Abbey. Is it not clear that he intended the two ministers of Mary's Abbey and the two incumbents of the parishes to be governors of the school?

Dr. TRAILL.—He gave a further direction that this place was to be built, if possible, within the parish of St. Nicholas Without.

8011. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I am not speaking of that now.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Those two gentlemen, Messrs. McDowell and Horne may have been friends of his, and he only intended them to be governors during their lives; afterwards they were not to be succeeded. I merely mention this as a view that has been held.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—We do not object to the constitution of the Board as at present proposed, but to the mode of election that keeps the nomination in the hands of the Diocesan Council and the Presbytery.

8012. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are we to understand that the existing governors do not object to the draft scheme as regards the constitution of the governing body?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—As regards the present representatives put on the Board.

8013. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You want that they should have the power to co-opt when vacancies occur?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—Yes.

8014. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Co-option here is practically when the vacancy falls one denomination in a minority. The co-opting body will always include a majority over the denomination in which the vacancy exists.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—The new governor must be of the same denomination as that in which the vacancy takes place.

8015. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Yes, but you want to have a person of a particular religious denomination appointed to represent that denomination, by an election at which the other denomination would be in a majority.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—Of course he must be qualified by being a member of that denomination in which the vacancy is? Where the governors are restricted to appointing a person of a particular denomination they must do so.

8016. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There is no instance in which we have formed a co-opting body so small. It becomes a sort of family business. It is not satisfactory to any one. The denomination who are to be represented would not feel satisfied.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—The scheme is drawn on the principle that we have adopted in a great many other cases of a similar nature.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—It is a very small body and there are many changes in this proposed scheme that we object to.

8017. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Remember on the other hand, that if the property had been held after property you would have an enormous income from this endowment. The Fortbellio property ought to be worth some £2,000 or £3,000 a year if it had been managed differently from what it has been.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Mr. Magee voted most readily the other day in favour of the plan proposed.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—I think it probable that he did not understand its practical application.

8018. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The testator himself wanted to have Mary's Abbey, St. Werburgh's, St. Peter's, and St. Nicholas Without, connected with this place. If we could bring in the representative bodies of these Churches it would be better. I do not like to have so small a number of persons choosing their own successors. Past experience shows very clearly that they are liable to fall into inefficiency. In this particular case nothing can be worse than the history of this charity.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—But not since the governing body was elected.

8019. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—But the original governors named by the testator were intended to apply the endowment to advantage.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—That did not come into operation as regards the school until all the legacies fell in.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Ever since that the school has gone on exceedingly well.

8020. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The school has been admirably managed, but it is not at all as big as it might have been if the estate had been better managed in the past.

Mr. Shaw.—As to co-option, the view Presbyterians take is this, that if a Presbyterian governor dies his successor will be elected by a majority of the Board.

Jan. 26, 1858.

of a different denomination. They, of course, are bound to elect a Presbyterian, but there are Presbyterians and Presbyterians. A great many who call themselves Presbyterians are so only in name, and take no warm interest in the Church or its concerns, and are on the high-road to another Church. We strongly object to such persons being chosen as representing the Presbyterian Church. We strongly object to any body consisting of a majority of another denomination electing a Presbyterian representative.

8029. Dr. TRAILL.—But in a body where they are to pull together afterwards is it not a very important thing to secure harmony in the body, that the person who comes in as representing the Presbyterian Body should have a voice in choosing the governors belonging to the Church Body, and, on the other hand, that the representatives of the Church Body should have a voice in electing the representatives of the Presbyterian Body who would belikely to work harmoniously with them?

Mr. Shaw.—I have no doubt whatever that the Presbyterian gentlemen in electing their representative would give a good deal of consideration to the opinion of the other members of the Board.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have we not the admission that the present selection is a most admirable one?

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—The choosing of the gentleman who would be co-opted would always be left to the Presbyterians when the vacancy to be filled was a Presbyterian one, and similarly in the other case.

8030. Lord Justice FRASER.—Then it becomes co-option by an individual. It seems to me that there is a most insuperable objection to have such a small body appointed by co-option, especially when it is a co-option by the majority of the other party. The best course would be to require the representative to be chosen from outside, and to give you the power of co-opting in case of failure to do so within three months.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—There are three governors who are not co-opted; why not leave the rest so?

8031. Lord Justice FRASER.—We think that some direct connexion should be preserved with the religious denomination which it is to be represented.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—Is it necessary that they should be nominated by external bodies?

8032. Lord Justice FRASER.—Past experience shows that mere co-option is not enough to secure efficiency.

Mr. Shaw.—It opens the door to jobbery.

8033. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Besides that it may give you inefficient governors whom you cannot get rid of.

Rev. Dr. MOSES.—We thought the method of co-option would be the more simple course to pursue on the occurrence of vacancies, but I do not think there will be any difficulty in adopting any solution you think desirable.

Mr. Shaw.—If once a co-opting body begins to decline in efficiency it goes on in that direction, because they co-opt men or had on themselves.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—We have had evidence that it is a most unsatisfactory system.

8034. Lord Justice FRASER.—We ought to give them power to co-opt when the religious denomination to be represented fails to appoint.

Dr. TRAILL.—There might be a very efficient man who would not be elected on this plan by either of these bodies, but that you might elect by co-option.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—Suppose it was this way, that we should nominate to the vacancy with the sanction of the denominational body.

8035. Dr. TRAILL.—Send three names to them, do you mean?

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—No, but nominate.

Mr. Shaw.—Would not that throw an invitation on the representative body?

8036. Lord Justice FRASER.—There might be a power given to the governing body to send forward three names from which either the Diocesan Council or the Presbytery should make the appointment, or in the event of their having reason to object that they might require other names to be sent to them. That would secure some sort of supply from outside.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—The only objection to that is—why would not one name be enough?

8037. Lord Justice FRASER.—If you only send one, the invitation is refusing to accept him. If you send even two names you lessen the likelihood of that course being deemed necessary. There are many precedents for three names, and there are great advantages in it. If you send up three names you are almost certain to give satisfaction.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—That will meet my view.

8038. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The scheme provides for the periodical retirement of the persons who are elected as governors. That does appear to me to be an extremely valuable provision, for a governor who becomes inefficient may be easily removed. Now under the proposal that you make you do not provide for that difficulty, and practically a person, once he is admitted remains on the Board no matter how inefficient he may become.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—The other day Mr. Pennedather resigned.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—But suppose he did not resign?

8039. Lord Justice FRASER.—The names should be suggested in the first instance by the people who are to be worked with. Then the controlling body may say "we will not have any of these, send us other names."

Rev. J. M. Hamilton.—We would have no difficulty in getting suitable persons, but we might have a great difficulty in objecting to unsuitable persons.

8040. Dr. TRAILL.—That would not apply if three names are sent to you.

Rev. J. M. Hamilton.—It might.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—The governing body should be a body that would not harmoniously.

8041. Lord Justice FRASER.—We have never adopted pure and simple co-option, and we are warned against it by previous experience. On the other hand there is great difficulty in sending one name for approval. I think it would be well that in any case those two bodies which are bodies of authority—the Diocesan Council and the Presbytery—should have power to elect one representative; that they should send one man in from each side, and in the case of the others we might allow co-option subject to the sanction of those bodies.

8042. Dr. TRAILL.—I think these different bodies should elect one each or two each.

8043. Lord Justice FRASER.—I would not like any large number of the governing body to be sent in from outside, but I think that those two important bodies ought to have their representatives on the Board of Governors so that they could bring forward anything that the Diocesan Council or the Presbytery thought proper. Then comes the question whether the co-option of the remaining members ought not to be left to the two laymen, and the two incumbents of the Church, or the two Presbyterian Ministers in either case.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—The Presbyterians have not unduly interfered with the co-option of churchmen, and I think the church people would use the same forbearance.

8044. Professor DOUGHERTY.—There is just this important difference, that hitherto you have always had a fine working majority.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Of course that may make a difference.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—If there is a vacancy in our denomination the Presbyterians would have four votes, while we would have only three.

Rev. Dr. MOSES.—In the filling up of the vacant vacancy there would have been no election if we had not interfered. The election was made in fact by the Presbyterians.

Jan. 18, 1888.

8037. Dr. TRAILL.—And does your new member work well with you?

Rev. Dr. HOGES.—He works well with us.

Dr. TRAILL.—One denomination will not exercise the right of voting unless there is a difference of opinion amongst the others.

8038. Lord Justice FRASER.—What do you say to this suggestion, that there shall be one direct representative of the Diocesan Council, and one direct representative of the Presbytery. These may be nominated annually, the man that works will be put on again, and if he does not work another will be put on instead of him. When any vacancy takes place amongst the representative governors, those of the denomination in which the vacancy exists may unanimously co-opt, and in case of a difference of opinion amongst them the whole body may co-opt.

Mr. Henderson, G.C.—That would be very well.

Mr. SLANE.—The members of the Presbyterian Church here are willing to accept the suggestion, but they wish me to say that in the case of the other members of the Board they would rather not have it.

8039. Lord Justice FRASER.—In the other cases, if there is no appointment made within a certain time after a vacancy occurs the appointment should lapse to the Diocesan Council and to the Presbytery. That will entail a modification of clause 3. You cannot co-opt, and then get each other out of office. The nominated governors should be nominated de anno in annis. The co-opted governors will remain governors as long as they stand and remain members of the church, and clause 4 will be suitably modified.

8040. You want to strike out of clause 7 the words "and if there should be a surplus of the endowments, after maintaining such school to provide board and education for female orphan children in any other institution or institutions approved by the governors from time to time."

Mr. Henry J. DIX.—The Governors think that unnecessary, as it is provided in section (e) of the 8th clause that they are "to lodge, clothe, and maintain in the school as many female orphan pupils as the income of the endowments after payment of all other necessary outgoings, shall permit."

8041. Lord Justice FRASER.—You might with very great advantage get your children taught in a day school in the neighbourhood, and make this a boarding institution.

8042. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You might wish to give education of a higher class than you can give with your existing staff in the Boardman school.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—I do not see any objection.

Mr. DIX.—But our objection is that it would not be in accordance with the views of the founder of the school.

Mr. SLANE.—Having regard to the endowments and the accommodation of the school.

8043. Lord Justice FRASER.—You should first fill your school and afterwards use your endowments beyond that as you may think proper. You may enlarge your accommodation if you think proper to do so, or you may pay stipends for the children in other schools.

Mr. DIX.—But I thought we had not power to do that.

8044. Lord Justice FRASER.—We will give you a discretionary power to pay stipends for children elsewhere after you have kept the school full. Sub-section (f) was to enable you to give as a prize any a position in the classes at the Academy of Music or the Alexandra College, or places of that sort. The meaning of the clause is that for a child of 14 you can offer a prize in music a scholarship in the Academy of Music.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—I do not object to that, and sub-section (A) too is proposed to be omitted but I thought it a good thing to have such power.

8045. Lord Justice FRASER.—What is your objection to clause 10?

Mr. DIX.—I think it is quite outside the scope of our powers under the will of the founder.

8046. Lord Justice FRASER.—Are you not getting money from the Science and Art Department?

Mr. DIX.—No.

8047. Lord Justice FRASER.—Have you not sent in your application?

Mr. DIX.—No.

8048. Lord Justice FRASER.—There are a great many things available that people connected with the management of schools do not know. We found at Shillbroom an upper school over a National school where they got £80 last year in results fees alone, by getting a master who knew how to teach chemistry.

8049. Clause 11 relates to external education. It cannot do any harm.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—I think not.

Mr. Henderson, G.C.—The 11th clause states that "they may discontinue or reduce the provision for employing resident teachers or giving instruction in the school as they may think fit."

8050. Lord Justice FRASER.—"To promote the education of the pupils."

Rev. Canon JELFET.—Stop there.

8051. Lord Justice FRASER.—Yes, the remainder would look like an encouragement to them to neglect the Boardman school.

Mr. Henderson, G.C.—It would.

8052. Lord Justice FRASER.—We will strike that out. Now as to clause 13 you have an objection.

Mr. Henderson, G.C.—The governors think that this clause in the old scheme would work in a much better manner—"that such pupil shall be elected by a majority of votes of the governors present at the meeting at which such election shall take place, and when any pupil is to be elected notice shall be given thereof in the summons convening the meeting."

8053. Lord Justice FRASER.—Under the existing rule you are bound to elect by a majority, but by a practice which we can probably not prevent you often carrying out, which is a convenience and nothing more, you make an arrangement that A.B. or C.D. is to nominate a child and nobody else is to be proposed against her. We certainly think that the persons who would have a claim for admission should know when an election is to take place. You can nominate when you like.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—The governors would not like to be convened morning, noon, and night by application.

8054. Lord Justice FRASER.—Your own rule provides that you are to give notice. All we want you to do is that before the election you shall prepare a list of the candidates so that everybody's name shall be before the governors at the time of making the selection.

Rev. J. M. HENNINGTON.—I remember some time ago when we could not find a Presbyterian child to be elected. Had the matter been before the public we might have had a candidate.

Rev. Canon JELFET.—Surely you could advertise to say you were anxious to get a child to be a candidate.

8055. Lord Justice FRASER.—We may modify your existing rules preserving the portion that we think ought to be unchanged, that is that such pupil should be elected by a majority of the governors present, and that when any pupil is to be elected notice shall be given and a list of the candidates prepared. If anybody has a child eligible they can then present her.

Mr. Henderson, G.C.—The objection is that when a vacancy exists it may be kept over for half a year.

8056. Lord Justice FRASER.—You want the whenever there is a vacancy you should be at liberty to fill it at once.

Jan. 22, 1888.

Mr. DIX.—Yes, it would be very inconvenient to postpone the election.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not see myself any practical use in that. When a vacancy occurs a governor votes for the child he is interested in.

8057. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Surely if there is a deserving candidate she should have an opportunity of being brought before the governors.

Mr. DIX.—It often occurs that a very deserving candidate is not put in.

Dr. TRAILL.—Supposing a more deserving candidate comes before the governors should not they have the power of putting in that more deserving child? Such a child should be elected.

8058. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—There ought to be no objection that the governors should have in their hands a list of all the children applying for admission, and it should be the business of the other governors to see that it is a deserving one which has been nominated, and that there is no other applicant on the list who is more deserving.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—That is not according to the present system of nomination.

8059. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—The system of nomination is directly against the Vice-Chancellor's advice. It says that pupils shall be elected by the majority, and the way in which you do that is, by an understanding among yourselves that one governor is to propose a candidate and that the majority of the governors present are to vote for that candidate. We think you ought to have a list of all the candidates.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—I see no objection to that.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I remember speaking to a governor of a school of high position upon this very thing. I said to him "at present you are entitled to only one-fourth of the nominations; you will be in the chair, and you may say that there is no doubt that A.B. and C.D. are the most eligible; thus you might have from your position not only one nomination but practically all the nominations."

8060. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—The founder described the school as a school for female orphan children in the city of Dublin. There is another school in Dublin—the Blue Coat School, which is now open to all parts of Ireland, and no child can be even nominated unless he attends at the school on the day of election.

Dr. TRAILL.—As a matter of fact is the election of the governors made before they meet?

Mr. DIX.—No child has been elected who has not appeared before the governors.

Dr. TRAILL.—It seems a very hard thing to have these children, say, brought up and that their expenses should have to be paid.

8061. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—No candidate should be declared elected unless first seen by the governors.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—That is our present system.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I am afraid the governors do not always vote impartially.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—When a governor selects a candidate he is himself responsible that the candidate is a deserving one.

8062. Dr. TRAILL.—Would he go down to the society of Cork to see them?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—We have got enough of applicants in the parish of St. Peter.

8063. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—You object to clause 18.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—St. Peter's school has a mixture of free boarders and paying boarders.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—If that were introduced it would in fact become not an orphan school at all. We consider such an arrangement as that to be quite inconsistent with the intentions of the founder.

8064. Dr. TRAILL.—Would it not serve the charity children, to have them mix with other children who are paying?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—I do not think it would.

Dr. TRAILL.—Charity children sometimes suffer from a brand which would be removed if you mix them with paying children. The children who have friends paying for them like those at Mercur's, are often men of the same class as the charity children.

8065. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Your house is too small at present. Suppose you got one of those large houses which are available at the other side of the town, which would accommodate thirty or forty children, you might give an enormous advantage to persons who could pay a little but who could not pay much, so long as you did not prejudice your first intention. Remember, Mr. Henderson, Eton and Harrow, which are chiefly paying places at present, include free pupils. You maintain children at £50 or £60 a head, but if you double the number you lessen the average cost, for the staff and establishment expenses are not proportionally if at all increased.

Professor DOUGLASS.—The atmosphere of a charity school is sometimes depressing, and it might be improved by the children mixing with paying boarders.

8066. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—You propose to amend clause 19 by providing "that at all meetings of governors, subsequent to their first meeting, the chair shall be taken by the governors in a rotation to be fixed by themselves at their first meeting, but if the governor whose turn it is to take the chair at any meeting shall not be present at the hour for which the meeting is convened, or within fifteen minutes after the same, then the chair shall be taken by the governor next in rotation. The chairman shall in addition to his ordinary vote have a casting vote; all questions shall be decided by a majority of the votes of governors present, and for all purposes except the co-optation of a governor to fill a vacancy there shall be sufficient to form a quorum. The name of the governor to take the chair at the first meeting shall be drawn by lot from those present." This proposal that the chair is to be taken in a rotation to be fixed by themselves means waiting a quarter of an hour for the last man.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—There is no doubt that it is well to have a regular rotation of chairmen.

8067. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—If you wish to have it, we will leave it as it is. Why do you want to strike out clause 20?

Mr. DIX.—The governors would prefer the action in the old scheme.

8068. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—All these provisions about the governors we must settle by reference to their existing laws.

8069. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Does your secretary at present live in the school?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—No.

8070. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—What has he to do?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—He has all the correspondence to attend to, and to keep the minutes.

8071. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—It is better for you to have power to appoint a paid secretary.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—There is one clause in which it is stated—it is the latter part of number 21 "The governors may from time to time appoint a committee or committees consisting of any two or more of their number to visit the school to superintend and carry into execution any orders, rules, or directions of the governors with respect to the purposes of this scheme, or to manage such of the business of the school as the governors may deem it expedient to delegate to such committee or committees." That seems to imply that it is not the business of the governors individually to visit the schools. I submit that it is the duty of every one of the governors to visit the school occasionally himself, and that the duty should not be delegated to two to be selected by the governors for the purpose.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—In the Blue-coat School they appoint two governors as monthly visitors, but any governor can visit the school whenever he pleases.

Jan. 27, 1884.

8072. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—There is a provision that the governors shall meet at the school once a month, and at such other times and places as they may from time to time appoint.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—That is merely a meeting for the business of the school; it is quite a different thing from going to the school for purposes of inspection.

Dr. TRAILL.—It is very important that two persons should be appointed as visiting governors from time to time, as there is evidence of the necessity of such inspections taking place.

8073. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—We can put in, what we have done in other cases, that it shall be the duty of the governors to satisfy themselves from time to time as to the state of the school; and then give the governors power to appoint two or more of their body to inspect and to manage such business as may be deemed to them. You must have a small committee to act from time to time.

Dr. TRAILL.—I want to guard against a sudden meeting being called in vacation time. Would it not be well to give six days' notice of the intention to hold a meeting?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—I think we might call a special meeting at three days' notice.

8074. Dr. TRAILL.—I think at least there should be six days' notice given, at all events in vacation time.

Rev. Canon Jellott.—To give notice in cases of emergency is what we want.

8075. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—We can require that any proceedings so taken shall be confirmed at the next monthly meeting.

Rev. Canon Jellott.—That will do very well.

8076. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—The 54th clause provides that the scheme may be altered from time to time by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations in any matter whatsoever upon the application of the governors, or upon the joint application of the General Synod and General Assembly, or of the Diocesan Council and Presbytery. The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests want to have the alterations open to the application of every body. Our intention is to give the governors power to have the scheme altered from time to time whenever they may find it necessary, but if they become inefficient that there should be some body over them to control them. But we could not allow any one body to come in behind the back of the others.

8077. Rev. Canon Jellott.—It was clearly the intention of the founder that the Incumbent of the parish of St. Nicholas Without should be one of the ex-officio governors.

8078. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—When the scheme was prepared to be laid before the Vice-Chancellor, it was found that the school could not be established in that parish. The scheme accordingly states "that the said school shall be called the Berward Female Orphan School, and shall at present be established at No. 11 Eccles-street, in the city of Dublin; that inasmuch as no suitable premises can be procured in the parish of St. Nicholas Without, and the said school cannot therefore be now conveniently established in the said parish, the Rector of the parish of St. Nicholas Without is not now appointed an ex-officio governor of the said school." In the draft scheme before us, the ex-officio governors are the Incumbents of St. Peter's and St. Werburgh's, and the Minister of Rutland-square Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Shaw.—In the case of there being two ministers the senior is ex-officio governor and the second is not.

8079. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—Would you then take out one of the Presbyterians representatives?

Mr. Shaw.—Oh, not at all; they would be unequal if you put in the Rector of St. Nicholas's.

8080. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—But should you not get a second representative minister when there are two officiating in the parish.

Mr. Shaw.—The testator named the two ministers of Mary's Abbey, but now there is only one for Rutland-square. What I say is that we should have the two ministers on if the Rector of St. Nicholas's is, 8081. Dr. TRAILL.—Then you should drop one representative now. The will gives directions that the schoolhouse was, if possible, to be built in the parish of St. Nicholas Without.

8082. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—Perhaps Canon Jellott will tell us what is the parish of St. Nicholas Without.

[The Secretary produced a map and showed that the parish extended in the direction of Chancery-street and included Malpas-street.]

Rev. Canon Jellott.—Peter Berward was church-warden, and took an active part there as church-warden.

8083. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Can we ascertain the limits of this parish?

Rev. Canon Jellott.—Yes. Francis-street runs right through the middle of it. It extends from Francis-street to Patrick-street. It is bounded by Lower O'Connell on the other side. On the far side it runs through houses. So that practically you have the Coombe, Swift's-alley, Francis-street, Cambrin, Carran's-hill, Spidalsfeide, Mar's-alley, Pambin-street, and the big brewery.

8084. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—Is it not better for us to follow the words of the will and put on the face of this scheme that if the school is ever removed to the parish of St. Nicholas Without the Rector of that parish shall be an ex-officio governor.

Mr. Shaw.—What is the use of putting it in now it shall be removed; the representation would by that means be made unequal.

8085. Dr. TRAILL.—The will provides that there shall be an inequality in that case.

Mr. Shaw.—I know that perfectly well, but the principle of this scheme is that there are two equal bodies of trustees. You are now providing for a contingency that there shall be an increased body at one side.

8086. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—The will provides equality in every event except one. In that event it did not provide equality, but 3 to 2. That event is extremely unlikely to take place; but we want to follow the will by saying that if that event does happen the equality shall come.

Mr. Shaw.—I read the will differently from you; I read it that the minister of St. Nicholas Without or the Minister of St. Peter's was to be ex-officio governors according as the school shall be in one parish or the other, St. Peter's, or St. Nicholas Without. I think it is perfectly clear that there were to be two ministers of the Presbyterian denomination and two ministers of the parish church, and he goes on to mention two ministers, those of St. Werburgh's and St. Peter's, and then it comes to him that the school may not be in St. Peter's parish but in the parish of St. Nicholas Without, in which case the minister of St. Peter's was to be displaced by the minister of St. Nicholas's Without.

8087. Dr. TRAILL.—He gave directions in his will to look for a building in St. Nicholas's Without.

Mr. Shaw.—And in case they found a place in St. Nicholas's Without the Incumbent of St. Nicholas's Without was to be the governor, and the Incumbent of St. Peter's was to be left out.

8088. Dr. TRAILL.—He says "and St. Nicholas Without" not "or."

Mr. Shaw.—You must remember that it is the will of a man not accustomed to express himself in the English language at all, and if you only look at the meaning of the whole thing you must see clearly that his intention was that wherever the charity school is situated the Incumbent of that parish was to be a trustee for the time being.

8089. Dr. TRAILL.—That could not have been the case, because he mentions more than one parish, at any rate.

8090. Lord Justice FRINGEMAN.—If you look at the will I think you will find that Messrs. McDowell and Horne, Ministers of Mary's Abbey Meeting House, have no local connexion with the school, and then he mentions the Ministers of Wexburgh and St. Peter's. These are all nominated, and you cannot deprive them of their tithes, and so far there is no local connexion between them and the school at all. Then he says "the Minister of St. Nicholas Without, if said charity school be in said parish," and then comes "and their successors to the end of time." Surely he meant to bring in the Rector of St. Nicholas and not to exclude the others.

Mr. Shaw.—As I understand it the man that made that will meant that it was to be a choice between the Ministers of St. Nicholas's Without and St. Peter's.

8091. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I do not think he intended to prefer the Minister of the parish of St. Wexburgh to the Minister of St. Peter's.

8092. Dr. TRAILL.—And the word "or" is not there. He does not say St. Peter's church or St. Nicholas's church, but St. Peter's church and St. Nicholas's church.

Mr. Shaw.—If it is insisted on that the Minister of St. Nicholas's Without is to be an ex-officio governor in case the school should be removed into that parish, I insist on the other hand that the two Ministers of Mary's Abbey, if there be two Ministers at any time, shall be also ex-officio governors.

8093. Dr. TRAILL.—Then you must give up one of the representative governors.

Mr. Shaw.—Not at all, that is the principle on which the scheme has been formed. The clause you keep to the will the better.

8094. Dr. TRAILL.—No, the scheme is formed on the principle of equality, in the event of its not being in St. Nicholas's Without and only on that case.

Mr. Shaw.—It seems to me to be very absurdly and very inaccurately expressed. It says there shall be three ex-officio governors and it immediately provides for four.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I want to have the clause according to the intentions of the founder as well as I can.

Mr. Shaw.—The intentions of the founder were not respected hitherto, and it is well that they should be respected even now.

8095. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Suppose that notwithstanding our present amicable arrangement that the board should be equally divided between the Presbyterians and the Church people, there was a vacancy amongst the Presbyterian governors and the Church people voted to transfer the school to St. Nicholas's parish (although if they were only to look to the benefit of the school it is not the place they ought to take it to), the only way to prevent that effectually is to say that it shall not be done unless a certain number of the governors concur in it.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Put in five, or whatever the number may be.

8096. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We will put in then that if the school be removed into the parish of St. Nicholas Without, the Incumbent of that parish shall be an additional governor, but that the school shall not be removed from its existing site without the consent of six out of the ten governors. I think that will satisfy the views of Mr. Shaw.

8097. Dr. TRAILL.—What about Mr. Shaw's suggestion that there may be two ministers for Mary's Abbey?

Professor DOUGHERTY.—Mary's Abbey was formerly a collegiate church, having two ministers of equal standing; but under existing arrangements it is impossible that that could occur.

8098. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There will be one representative from the Diocesan Council, and one from the Presbytery. They will be chosen de jure in canon, but eligible for re-election, but those co-opted by your own body will remain on until they die or resign, or leave Dublin, or cease to attend for a whole year. It is better the different bodies should have the power of putting on their representatives every year.

8099. Dr. TRAILL.—The Diocesan Council is elected every three years. Does your Presbytery go out every year?

Mr. Henry.—The elders do, but the ministers do not.

8100. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think your representatives should go out every year or every three years?

Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If a man is efficient he will remain on, but at the same time I think the yearly election is a great deal safer.

8101. Rev. Canon JELLET.—Would he have to get a certificate of character?

Mr. Shaw.—One of the nominated Governors goes out every year. How are you to arrange who the one is to be?

8102. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We ought in your case to put down the last elected as representing the Diocesan Council. In the other case, representing the Presbyterians, Mr. Shaw will tell you the proposed representatives.

Rev. Mr. Hamilton.—They are the Rev. Hamilton Magee, Dr. Dunoon, Dr. Fraser, and Mr. Boyd.

Rev. Hamilton Magee.—The question is, which would retire? I think it would be the last on the list except an additional one was proposed.

8103. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In the other case we will put in the name of Mr. Robert Dumas. (To Canon JELLET.)—In regard to the apprentice fee, that is one of the things you wanted to alter, you wanted to get a certain sum fixed for apprentice fee.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I am afraid the apprentice fee fund might come to be too small, and unless the fee was £30 we would not get a girl apprenticed at all.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—The auditor appointed by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations required that the interest of the fund should be accumulated, which I don't think is the intention of the scheme.

8104. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There is nothing more impossible to fix than the amount of fees for apprentices. One year you may have none, and another year you will want to apprentice three or four. We should allow you to expend as much as you think expedient on the apprentice fee fund.

Mr. Henderson, q.c.—Yes, I think so. I think we should have a discretion to set it apart.

8105. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You have the existing fund to go upon, and can use it from time to time.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—I see that; but is there any provision made for the addition to that from year to year?

8106. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—They can add to the apprentice fee if they wish.

Mr. Henderson.—I think it would be better to leave that to a resolution to apply funds for increasing the apprentice fee fund.

8107. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Then in regard to Divine Worship and religious instruction the members of each denomination should attend to their own children.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Yes, I think so. That is, if they like.

Rev. Hamilton Magee.—I would leave that to the Governors.

8108. Dr. TRAILL.—It would be better to leave the Governors free.

8109. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In matters of this sort each denomination should regulate its own affairs.

Rev. Canon JELLET.—Yes, I think so. I do not wish at all to interfere with the decision of the religious societies of the Board on such a question.

8110. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The next is as to the election by open vote—that is, the next of election, and it is said—"It is suggested by the lay governors that it is inexpedient."

Aug. 18, 1899

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I do not press that.

8111. Dr. TRAILL.—The episcopal governors are all clergymen. You have four clergymen out of ten governors.

8112. Dr. TRAILL.—I would not leave it to the clergymen to elect a layman. I do not object to leave the co-optation open.

8113. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Two laymen should be nominated, for you have a preponderance of clergy already. It is the intention that the co-opted governors should be laymen, but I think that the Diocesan Council should be free to co-opt, and the Presbytery in the same way.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—Why not leave them equal numbers of laymen and clergymen?

8114. Dr. TRAILL.—In the scheme here there are four clergymen and six laymen.

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—Why not leave it so?

8115. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I would like to have your views on the subject. Are you in favour of leaving them as at present?

Mr. Henderson, Q.C.—Yes.

8116. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—In the case of the Presbyterians there would be only one clergyman out of three.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—I am taking Dr. Traill's view—certain co-optation for a certain number, and leave it open for certain other cases.

Rev. Mr. Hamilton.—I think that a minister would attend to this work much better than a layman. I think that laymen should be elected, but I would like that they should be half and half.

8117. Professor DOUGHERTY.—I think it would be more desirable that clergy should be appointed.

8118. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I think of the co-opted, two at least should be laymen. That would secure four. You must then have four laymen, and you may have six.

8119. Dr. TRAILL.—And the Diocesan Council to be open to elect laymen or clergy?

Rev. Canon Jellett.—That is fair.

8120. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Now, the number of meetings proposed is one every month. You think one meeting every quarter should be enough.

Rev. Canon Jellett.—Yes.

Mr. Dix.—There might be a sub-committee appointed to meet once a month to look over the accounts.

8121. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It is better to leave it as it is. If you want the children to be properly treated you should have a meeting once a month.

PHIBSBOROUGH SUNDAY AND DAILY SCHOOLS.

The Rev. N. W. Carr and J. W. Jennings attended.

8122. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I think there is a point raised about your jurisdiction.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—There is a legal question. I wanted to bring before you. So far as I see from the Act the endowments arising from voluntary contributions are excluded from your jurisdiction, and would appear to be outside it. An "endowment" is defined to be "any property devoted to charitable uses in education. The buildings of our schools were raised by 'voluntary subscriptions,' and, therefore, the fabric is in our view excluded from your jurisdiction.

8123. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The Act is not to apply to "endowments consisting of voluntary subscriptions or accumulations, or investments thereof." Buildings are not "investments;" besides that Mrs. Herbert gave her money by will.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—The second point we wish to submit is this. The draft scheme appears to exclude altogether the Chancery scheme settled for the charity in 1858 by the Lord Chancellor, and we are thrown back to the will of Mrs. Herbert, who provided for an exclusively Church charity, as she placed her bequest in the hands of two clergymen of the Irish Church, and directed that the chaplain of the Dublin Female Penitentiary was to have the sole charge of the religious education in the schools, and that the unexpended interest—not allocating any special portion—derived from her property should go to the chaplain, and, therefore, as Mrs. Herbert's bequest was by her will "in the management of one denomination," and for "the benefit of one denomination," it is excluded from your jurisdiction, but we may appear before you with "our consent" to get a scheme as far as Church school.

8124. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It is to be open to all boys and girls who are Protestants, and not to Church people only.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—That is the meaning of the word Protestant—Established Church. All others were called Dissenters generally, or by their special denomination.

8125. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—There was an existing school at the time of the will. Were not the Phibsborough Sunday and Daily Schools then open daily schools?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Her will directs that the school shall "be opened" under a Protestant master and mistress, and those who came there were aware that it was an exclusive school.

8126. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Is there any record of the school having been closed?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—No, and that is the difficulty.

8127. Professor DOUGHERTY.—She directed that they should be opened for boys and girls, but gave the money to the Phibsborough Sunday and Daily Schools.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—She directs them to "be opened," ignoring the previous existence of the school.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Not ignoring the previous existence, but that the school should be opened to both sexes.

8128. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Was Mrs. Herbert a member of the committee of the school for years?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Yes.

8129. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Were they conducted in her time on "the fundamental principle" stated in the original rules?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—I cannot say.

8130. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The original rule was that they were for the purpose of giving a united education to children of different denominations.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Yes, and she rejected that and put in a clause of her own.

8131. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—She desired by her will that the Phibsborough Sunday and Daily Schools, which was an existing building which children of different denominations attended, "should be opened for boys and girls, with a master and mistress, both Protestants, and that after the subscriptions should be collected the remaining necessary expenses should be paid out of the property in the hands of the trustees, after which the surplus was to be applied as a salary for whatever chaplain might be appointed to do duty at the Female Penitentiary at the North Circular road, and to give religious instruction at the said schools." She intended that the chaplain of the Penitentiary might be appointed to give religious instruction at the Phibsborough Schools, and accordingly he was invited to do so.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—It was always a boys' and girls' school, and she certifies it is to be open and signifies it is to be under that regime.

8132. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—It was not to be any new or exclusive regime. She says the clergyman is to get a salary and to give religious instruction.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—I wish to put that forward as the second law point that we wanted to have decided. We did not understand when we appeared before you last time, that any question would be raised as to changing the management, and our committee wished the law to be made clear as to the working of the will, it was here before you in any way as you put aside the scheme which exclusively gave to the clergyman the religious teaching in the school.

8133. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Not exclusively. The lady gave the money to be applied in the first instance for maintaining a school which was not an exclusively Church school, and she said if there is any surplus the chaplain of the penitentiary is to get it, but he may be appointed to give religious instruction in the school.

Mr. JENINGS.—The trustees of the lease were disinterested.

8134. Professor DOUGHERTY.—She endowed the school as it existed, an open school.

Mr. JENINGS.—She was a member of the committee of the schools, and belonged to the congregation of the institution. She gave the money to neither of the bodies, but gave the money with conditions, and we think that the spirit and words of the testatrix ought to be carried out in the scheme.

8135. Professor DOUGHERTY.—She gave the money for an institution with whose working she was familiar.

Mr. JENINGS.—She gave it to two institutions.

8136. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—In Master Litten's report it is stated that a Protestant master and Protestant mistress were to be engaged, but the appointment was not confined to any particular denomination of Protestants. The Holy Scriptures were to be read by the boys and girls judged capable. The chaplain of the Dublin Female Penitentiary, for the time being, was to be at liberty to give religious instruction in the schools, but subject to the approval of the committee as to the most convenient time for giving the instruction. It is an open Protestant school, in which a particular clergyman is to be at liberty to give religious instruction.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—I think that the legal force of that is giving the power to one person and that all others are excluded.

8137. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—One person having the liberty does not exclude another. There was nothing to prevent the committee from permitting a Presbyterian clergyman also to give religious instruction, nor could the chaplain insist on all the pupils receiving his instruction.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—This was for all Christian children, and we held that the school was an exclusive foundation.

8138. Professor DOUGHERTY.—What do you mean by exclusive?

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—That it was not for any child who would not read the Bible; the early reports give instances of such exclusiveness. Mrs. Herbert added a rule of "religious instruction" under an Irish Church clergyman.

8139. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Can there be anything more certain than that Mrs. Herbert was in agreement with the schools, inasmuch as she was a member of the mixed committee, and it was the rule that the catechism and religious formularies were to be excluded from the schools.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—Yes, that is clear; and when she made another provision in the will she knew that she was reversing what she had been familiar with. She had been aware from the first of it.

8140. Mr. SLEW.—How did she reverse it?

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—By providing that a clergyman of the Irish Church should give the religious instruction there. He had the sole control of the religious instruction.

8141. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Not the sole control, the government was to make the arrangements.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—Yes.

8142. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Here are the plain facts from the report of 1859.—In 1859 in the boys' school there were twenty-five children on the roll, of whom nine belonged to the Church; four were Presbyterians and twelve were Independents. Therefore of the twenty-five male pupils nine only belonged to the Church. In the girls' school there were seven children belonging to the Church, and twenty-five Presbyterians or Independents, so that the great majority of the children were not Church children at all.

Mr. JENINGS.—That was before our scheme. The scheme came into operation in October, 1858, and that report was before it.

8143. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The point is what this lady intended when she made the will.

Mr. JENINGS.—The scheme was not in operation at that time.

8144. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Her intention was in operation when she made her will. This is not an exclusive endowment.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—Then I rely on the 4th sub-section of the 7th clause of your Act—"It shall not apply to any endowment or part of an endowment (as the case may be) given to charitable uses."

8145. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—That relates to endowments given after the passing of the Act.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—The third point I want to raise is on the 8th section—"Where any part of an endowment is an educational endowment, within the meaning of this Act, and part of it is applicable or applied to other charitable purposes." The will specially states that "the overplus" was for the minister appointed to do duty at the Dublin Female Penitentiary. That cannot come under your jurisdiction.

8146. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—We propose to preserve his rights.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—The Chansey scheme directs that "the chaplain is to be at liberty to give religious instruction without the control of the managing committee." The will says that the salary is for "whatsoever chaplain may be appointed to do duty at the Female Penitentiary, and to give religious instruction in the schools." The services for which the salary is given are united, "the overplus" is variable, and the amount, whatever it might be, would be exempt.

8147. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—If you want us to go by the will you must take it in the entirety, and it gives nothing to the chaplain until all the expenses of the school are paid; but Master Litten's scheme provided that he should get £35 per annum. If he had gone by the will the chaplain would have got nothing since, through want of funds, the boys' school closed and the boys' and girls' schools amalgamated.

Mr. JENINGS.—It never ceased to work well; it was to save the funds that the schools were amalgamated.

Rev. Mr. CURRY.—The amalgamation was necessary, but temporary. We knew we had to go to the Vice-Chancellor to allow us to do so, but your Commission stopped us in the act. The amalgamation was the result of Master Litten, contrary to the will, assigning fixed sums to the teachers and to the chaplain. And I don't think the "intention of the testatrix" was to give the chaplain so much "a salary" for double duty as £25 per annum. The whole expense of the schools never reached £50 a year in Mrs. Herbert's time, and at that time with subscriptions not £35 but £50 would have come to the chaplain.

8148. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The chaplain was to get nothing under the will until all the expenses were paid.

J.C.W. 1888.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Well, the expenses never reached £50 a year when the master and mistress were paid.
 8148. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The schools were to be opened for both boys and girls under a Protestant master and Protestant mistress, and I don't think it possible that in Mrs. Herbert's or at any other time the salaries of both a Protestant master and a Protestant mistress and all the expenses could be defrayed for £50 a year.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—All the reports in existence state that as a fact.

8150. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—If you rely on the will now the chaplain would get nothing. The first charge under the will is to pay a Protestant master and a Protestant mistress, to maintain the school and pay all the expenses, and after that the chaplain is to get any surplus remaining. Master Litton thought that was not practicable, and he said—I will give the chaplain a fixed sum of £25 a year.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—The proportion derived therefrom, when so applicable, shall not be diverted by the scheme." That is the third point I wish to make. The draft scheme inserts a clause for possibly diverting one half the present stipend of the chaplain. That we hold to be ultra vires.

8151. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The school as originally founded was open to all denominations of children willing to read the Bible, and the pupils were of various denominations.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Including Roman Catholics.

Mr. Jenings.—The schools were not restricted to Protestants; they were and are open to all.

8152. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Mrs. Herbert managed the school herself, and knew what it was, and she wished to extend the school and to open it under a master and mistress, and to have schoolrooms besides. She did not alter the character of the school, but she said if there was anything left after paying expenses the chaplain of the United Friends' Bazaar was to receive it as giving religious instruction to the school. Our duty is very plain. We will not divert any money you are in receipt of, you can keep the £25 provided by the scheme if you desire to have it in that way, and we will give it as a vested interest, but we thought we could do better for you under Mrs. Herbert's will, and we proposed that the chaplain should get more if the schools were first provided for.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—I think the Chantry scheme was not fair to the chaplain.

8153. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Not fair to the chaplain so long as there were sufficient subscriptions to the school, but not fair to the school so long as there were not.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Mrs. Herbert's will directed it so that it would be to the chaplain's advantage to get "sufficient subscriptions." The Chantry scheme altered that, and the schools could not be expected to win both ways—the greater portion of the trust money taken from the chaplain and increased subscriptions obtained by him.

8154. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Is it not the fact that all the pupils, male and female, are now under the instruction of a single schoolmistress?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Yes; since the year the boys' school was discontinued. The master became incapacitated, and we got him admitted to Simpson's Hospital, and then failed to get any efficient person for the stipend at our disposal, and as I have said, we were applying to the Vice-Chancellor for power to meet the altered circumstances.

8155. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Now, compare it with its condition in former times.

Rev. Mr. Corry.—I will tell you what it was. When Mrs. Herbert was alive there were twelve children attending the school, and the old woman who taught them used to do the cooking at the same time.

8156. Dr. TRAILL.—Did she teach cooking?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—No, she did not. We were working hard to get the school into a state of efficiency.

8157. Professor DOUGHERTY.—As a matter of fact, have you discontinued the boys' school?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—It is better now, as regards the number and efficiency of the boys.

Mr. Jenings.—We drafted young boys up to the girls' school. There were 37 in the girls' school then, and there are now 76 boys and girls.

8158. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Can you say the amount of the voluntary contributions?

Mr. Jenings.—Only £15 was got in the last year.

8159. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The schools have been chiefly maintained by the trust fund, and since 1881 the male school has been discontinued, and the male and female children are now instructed by one teacher, and the buildings were allowed to fall into disrepair?

8160. Mr. Jenings.—It was to save the funds they were discontinued. There is no school of its size or capability that stands so high, as a reference to Mr. Freeman's report will show. The school is working well, and buildings have lately been permanently repaired.

8161. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—But the trust is violated, for the boys' school is closed, and you have only a mixed school under one female teacher.

8162. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you any objection to the "Draft Scheme" as it stands?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Certainly. In the first page—"maintained by voluntary contributions until after the date of the report hereinafter mentioned."

8163. Professor DOUGHERTY.—How would the school maintain itself from the date of the death up till the date of the report?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—From Mrs. Herbert's fund. Mr. Gibson Clerk went to the Court, and the accounts were passed. Master Litton passed the accounts.

8164. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Part of the maintenance would be the voluntary subscriptions which Mrs. Herbert contemplated in her will?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—No; for Mrs. Herbert and her heir died within the year. We further object to clause 3 on third page of draft scheme—"the school buildings have fallen into disrepair," &c. We think there is hardly justice done to us; that is, should agree that the schools got into a shocking state of disrepair and neglect, whereas the schools are in a high state of efficiency. Some of the best charges paid out of the Herbert trust fund, and passed by Master Litton, were for putting the schools into order. We kept upon old buildings at great expense, and it is in a better state now than before.

8165. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you any objection to the Governing Body as it stands?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Whether the draft is presented, would follow upon the point we have taken up as to "consenting" to apply for a scheme for a Church school. You rule against us on that point. We object to the double representation, for we think there should be no such thing in the parish as making a division in the management.

8166. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What way would you have the management?

Rev. Mr. Corry.—Just as it is.

8167. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—At present the lease is vested in a Presbyterian?

Professor DOUGHERTY.—The trustees of the lease, Lang and Macalister, were both Presbyterians.

Mr. Jenings.—I think you will find that the original trustees were Church people.

8168. Dr. TRAILL.—Who were the original trustees?

Mr. Jenings.—The Countess of Belvidere, Robert Hyndman, and Joseph Henry.

8169. Lord Justice NORT.—I believe the Countess of Belvidere was the daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman.

Mr. Jenings.—Yes, that is so, but it does not follow she remained a Presbyterian.

8170. Professor D. J. BETT.—Who was Joseph Henry?

Mr. Jennings.—He was a member of the Church.

8171. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have the list of the original committee in the old papers. The original secretary was Mr. Robert Mansfield.

Mr. Jennings.—He was not the original secretary. The schools were started in 1832, and he did not join till 1837.

Mr. Stoen.—Robert Hyndman was a southolier in Mary's Abbey. On the 8th October, 1815, he paid "for a seat in Mary's Abbey 27 19s." He would not do that if he was a good Churchman. The Church was the daughter of a Presbyterian minister, and the property was assigned to Long and Mansfield, both of whom were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—Those two were the representatives of the voluntary subscribers of other denominations who agreed to the alteration, and Mr. Mansfield spoke to me about it, as to the last approving of the alteration and acknowledging its necessity.

8172. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What alteration?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—In putting it under a Church dispenation.

8173. Dr. TRAILL.—How long is it managed by you?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—Fifteen years. It never was managed by anybody but the Church dispenation since the will of Mrs. Herbert.

8174. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Why would you let the Presbyterians have religious instruction?

Mr. Jennings.—It would be certain to lead to confusion, and we held that to do so would be contrary to the will and scheme.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—I can testify that Robert Mansfield was the most earnest to put it entirely in my control. He urged it, and it was his wish that his family should not have trouble after his death. We have testimony of his wishes.

8175. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What do you propose as the governing body? It cannot go on as it is, in the present condition of the trusteeship.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We were going to get changes made.

8176. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What changes do you propose?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We wish to have the governing body elected according to the Chancery scheme. I think that was a proper one. We only want to get some changes in order that those who do not attend might be retired.

8177. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—But the Chancery scheme has not worked at all well.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—I would not like to put those out who did not attend. We did not know the legal aspect of the case.

8178. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—One of the trustees, and the legal owner of the property, is living in England.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—That was in consequence of death.

8179. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Look at your minute book, and you will see that for nine years, from 1873 to 1881, the governors never met; the funds were left in the treasurer's hands; in 1881 he returned the income as not having been spent to the expenditure, and claimed a balance as due to him.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—Since my time of retiring on the committee we have regular work, and I attend every week to the schools.

8180. Dr. TRAILL.—What were the names of the managing committee at the time of the Chancery scheme?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—That was before my time.

8181. Dr. TRAILL.—Were they Churchmen or Presbyterians?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—There was one Presbyterian in my time.

8182. Dr. TRAILL.—Master Lister's committee consisted of the trustees of the will of Mrs. Herbert, the trustees of the lease, and the existing managing committee, out of whom were to be selected the whole number of nine.

See 25, ante.

8183. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—On December 27, 1872, trustees of the school fund were appointed. There was no meeting from that date until October 25, 1881. On the 11th July, 1882, you called on your treasurer to supply you with a statement of the income and expenditure in each year since he became treasurer. In September, 1882, he intimated to you that he had not yet been able to make out the accounts, and the audited account was not presented until September, 1883. From 1883 till 1885 there was no meeting, and then, when the trustees were thinking of taking proceedings in Chancery for an alteration of the scheme, on April 1, 1885, it was resolved that the dividend, rent, and balance in the treasurer's hands should be lodged in bank in the names of Mr. Jennings and Mr. CURVE, and all accounts paid by cheques drawn by them.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We worked as much as we could, and we wanted to get from you what we wanted from the Vice-Chancellor—that was power to retire the old committee men who would not attend; we took advice and tried to get them out, but we had not the power.

8184. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have the power now, and we should be glad to know how you propose to appoint the governing body?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We want to have them elected year by year by subscribers, if there are any.

8185. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The subscribers amount to a very small sum. You have now no sufficient constituency of subscribers. You must get somebody to take charge of the property.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We want somebody to take charge of it.

8186. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Whom would you say?

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—If I had room for them I would wish a committee of the people who have been working there.

8187. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—There should be some scheme, besides the present committee. There are people in your neighbourhood willing to take an interest in the institution. The Rev. Mr. Scott, for instance, the rector of the parish, is willing to take an interest in it.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We have no room to put them on now. When we got the first notice from you our scheme was that we had thirteen on the committee. When we got the Chancery scheme, we found that we had more than we had a right to. There are plenty, I believe, who are willing to act.

8188. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Mr. Black wants to retire, but we cannot let him out, as he is a trustee of the money, until the accounts are audited.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—We want to have another trustee.

8189. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—It is obvious that there must be some independent authority to look after the place, and not leave sight of it for nine or ten years.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—It has been working well educationally.

8190. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—It was working without any meetings being held, or any accounts being rendered, with the funds in the sole management of the treasurer, for nine years, and it is our duty to guard against that occurring again.

Rev. Mr. CURVE.—The interest of the fund was expended on the schools. When the boys' school was closed we were in debt to the treasurer. We want the power from you of appointing trustees without the expense of going to Chancery. We would wish, also, a yearly election of committee which would put over one body as intended by the testatrix. The fabric at present is condemned. The architect has looked at it, and, on inspection, he says it is not worth spending money on.

June 14, 1895.

8191. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—How many Presbyterians are there in the parish?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Not many now.

8192. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—How many Church people are there?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—There are a good many.

Rev. Dr. Tait.—There are a large number of Presbyterians in the parish.

8193. Dr. TRAILL.—In what parish is the Female Penitentiary?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—In St. George's. The children come from different parishes.

8194. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Do they come from the country districts?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Some.

8195. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Dr. Tait says that some of those attending the school are the children of Presbyterian workers in Mountjoy Prison?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—A few may be.

8196. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—And he says he regularly visits the school.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Never; he may have done so once or so.

8197. Mr. Shaw.—He says he visits the school very frequently.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—I would like to know how often.

8198. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Did he record his visits?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—He did, once. He went to see the little Finlaga, with whom he lodges, who are Presbyterians.

8199. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What do you propose as to the governing body?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—To have room to put on a proper committee.

8200. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—We will give you any room you want.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—No; the room is filled up. We have on it Dr. Ferguson and a gentleman named Norman. We have asked them would they retire, and they gave no answer, and we were in a difficulty then. We could supply a committee from those who take an interest in the place, if they were elected annually.

8201. Lord Justice NAHER.—By whom?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—By those who are interested in the school.

8202. Lord Justice NAHER.—Do you mean subscribers?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Yes, and others interested in the school.

8203. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—On April 1, 1885 at a meeting held at the residence of the Rev. Mr. Carr, the members present agreed to the discontinuance of the boys' school, as the funds were insufficient to pay a master, and proposals for alteration in the schoolhouse were discussed, but no further proceedings were taken to settle the matter.

Mr. Jennings.—Your Commission stopped us.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—We had a draft petition prepared for Chancery. I have the documents at home, and if I had thought of it I could have brought them.

Mr. Jennings.—The law is very slow. We could not have got the school into the state of efficiency it is if we had not been careful. We are most anxious to maintain it in a state of efficiency.

8204. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The first thing is to see who is to look after it.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Mr. Macalister wished us to look after it. Delay arose because a solicitor got his documents, and would not give them up.

8205. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Are they documents belonging to the trust?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—I don't know.

8206. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Have you got up your documents?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Mr. Macalister died in the meantime.

8207. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—He was the last surviving trustee?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Yes; he is only a short time dead.

8208. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The first thing is to create by the scheme some representative and efficient body to look after the place.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Mr. Macalister's wish was that it should be taken up by my congregation.

8209. Professor DOUGHERTY.—There is no doubt that it was not worked as well as it should be.

Mr. Jennings.—We maintain that it has been well looked after.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—We did the best we could.

8210. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are the 60 children members of your congregation?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Yes.

8211. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are there any other Church children there?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—No; Mr. Macalister said as long as the school was in my name and the children were of my own congregation, the congregation would give it help. At his suggestion we formed a sub-committee, and collected money to enlarge and re-fit the place.

8212. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you a district assigned to your church?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—No; it is a congregation. We could elect a committee at the Vestry.

8213. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Do the children come from Orangefordham or St. George's parish?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Half and half.

8214. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Have the Presbyterians disappeared altogether from the committee?

Rev. Mr. Macalister.—I made inquiry about the matter, and a near relative of the trustee's said that they were subjected to such annoyances that in fact they were practically shunned out of the Committee.

Mr. Jennings.—Mr. Macalister was the only Presbyterian I met on the committee, and he worked to the last most cordially.

8215. Dr. TRAILL.—Did the Presbyterians wish to have anything to do with the school?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Mr. Macalister never gave a hint of the kind. His earnest wish was that I should succeed him as trustee of the fabric. That was the dying wish of Robert Macalister, the oldest friend of the cause, and his son, a representative, wrote consenting to facilitate our carrying out the project we had entered on with his father's approval.

8216. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Have you anything to say on the subject, Mr. Shaw?

Mr. Shaw.—We are satisfied with the proposed governing body. We say that the school was clearly founded as a common school for Protestants, and maintained by subscriptions of Protestants of all denominations, and that the trust deed was made to Presbyterians, or at least there were Presbyterians named in the trust deed at first, and the majority of them were Presbyterians, and we think they are entitled to a representation.

8217. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think that the trustees of so large a fund as Mrs. Herbert's should stand on an equality with the trustees of a site and a dilapidated building?

Mr. Shaw.—The school was formerly carried on under joint management.

8218. Dr. TRAILL.—Mrs. Herbert left it under the control of two Church clergymen.

Mr. Shaw.—It was to be a school conducted on non-sectarian principles.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—Originally, but it is now denominational by the will.

8219. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—In the original foundation, and in the will, and in the scheme there is a provision for reading the Scriptures, which Roman Catholics will not accept, but which all denominations of Protestants are entitled to receive. The will and the scheme and the original foundation all show, and the practice of the school, too, shows, that it is not exclusively for the Church of Ireland. We must try to give representation to both Presbyterians and Church people. We do not think of making the representation equal. We propose to give two representatives to the Church and two to the Presbyterians, that all members of the existing committee who really attend shall be on the first governing body, and that afterwards governors shall be elected by the subscribers to the school, if there are any. If not, then the Diocesan Council and the Presbytery may elect.

Jan. 25, 1888.

Rev. Hamelin Mager.—As to the population I know that there are a good number of Presbyterian families in the neighbourhood that a school of that kind would suit, and I believe that we would contribute to the success of the school if we had something to do with it.

8230. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We propose at first to have eight on the committee—six of the Church and two Presbyterians, and that the subscribers, if they bring in money, shall continue to elect representatives. If either the Church or the Presbyterians bring in all the money it ought to make the representation different. If all work together you will have one of each. I cannot see that it is an undue proposal.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—That possibly gives the power to others against me.

8231. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The subscribers will elect whom they please.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—But it gives a power to the Presbyterians.

8232. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—There are only two representatives from each denominational body—the Diocesan Council and the Presbytery. We hope they will stir up the existing governors, whose minutes books show that although they may have had the best intentions they have not done as much as they ought.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—The draft scheme makes it possible that Presbyterians and others by a majority of subscribers might fill all the elective places with their own men. Oh, if there were no election, it gives the power to the Presbytery to elect half the Board. My school would be in a different position, for I call it mine for the last 15 years.

8233. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Way was that?

Rev. Mr. Carr.—You will have persons brought in having no interest in the place at all. Besides there would be conflicting interests if the parish and the Presbytery were represented on the governing body, which would prejudicially affect my school. On the one side there would be a drawing by the Presbyterians, who have a large school in Hardwicke-street. There also would be a strong interest in the parish of St. George's on behalf of the parish schools.

8234. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—How is religious instruction given to the Presbyterian children attending the school?

Rev. Dr. Tait.—I think they have received no religious instruction, save, I suppose, from the Bible. I suppose Mr. Carr does not teach them the Catechism. We have a number of Presbyterian children attending the schools—six in all. I attend frequently there. There are six of the children, I am sure, going there who are Presbyterians. There are other children there of mixed marriages, largely composed of families of workers in Montjoy Prison. I do duty for my senior minister weekly there, and know the workers. The children in that school come to my Sabbath School. I get them to come to my Sabbath School in Abbey-street. I frequently call to them in the day school, and look after them, to show that I am looking after their interests. I have asked the teacher there, who is an elderly lady, did she know the number of Presbyterian children there, and she said "No." She does not enter the religious denominations. The last day I was there there were 25 children present, and there were six Presbyterians amongst those. The school is in a dilapidated state. We have, I would say, seventy Presbyterian children in the district who pass that school and go to the Hardwicke-street School, for the people look upon it as a better school. I give religious instruction in Hardwicke-street.

8235. Dr. TRAILL.—Do the children pass the other school?—Yes.

8236. And come from a district beyond it?—Yes.

8237. Is that from Grange-gorman parish?—Yes.

8238. Aren't there only 63 Presbyterians in Grange-gorman parish?—There are a great many more.

8239. That is the census return?—We have a large number of Presbyterian families located in that district; and at the present moment I dare say I have 50 Presbyterians coming from a radius of from one-eighth to a quarter of a mile—taking that school as the centre—30 Presbyterian children coming to the Sabbath School in Abbey-street.

8240. Where are they educated on week days?—In Hardwicke-street, for they like it better.

8241. Would you wish them to cease going there, and to go to this school?—If this school were more efficient, I dare say that the parents would send them to the same.

8242. Is the Hardwicke-street School one of the best in Dublin?—It is.

8243. And would you recommend your people to send their children to this other school?—Yes, if the school were raised to a proper efficiency.

8244. Could you make the school to such efficiency as to induce the children to leave Hardwicke-street School and go to this?—No, I do not think so.

8245. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Mrs. Herbert gave a sum of about £4,000 to have a Protestant master and a Protestant mistress, and one of the schools is closed. Nobody ought to be satisfied with the work that this endowment is now doing.

Dr. Tait.—It is impossible that the present teacher could teach as well as is wanted.

8246. Lord Justice FRYGROVE (to Rev. Mr. Carr).—The first thing to determine is whether we have jurisdiction. We have ruled before, and rule now again, that the endowment is not exempt from our jurisdiction, but in re-opening it we will observe the intentions of the founders. We hold that it is not exclusively a Church school. It is not our opinion that the Presbyterians are entitled to equal representation, but they are entitled to substantial representation. We will give you time to call your committee together. Send in any proposal you wish for the formation of a proper governing body for the school, you are bound to provide for a Protestant master and a Protestant mistress, for the £4,000 is made available to keep not only one mixed school under a female teacher, but two schools under a master and mistress; and if you can provide for that, we will give your wishes the fullest consideration we can. Dr. Tait, has been calling attention again and again to the necessity of doing something for the school, and might be a useful governor. The clergyman of the parish, who also says that the school should not be left as it is, would be a valuable addition to the governing body.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—We have only about £70 to spend on the school.

8247. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—You have an attendance which, with the £4,000, if this school were put under the National Board, would enable you to maintain a first-class teacher, you could have two schools, each under a salaried teacher of the first class, if you got an increase of some 10 or 15 pupils.

Rev. Mr. Carr.—You leave out about the Penitentiary.

8248. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The testatrix gave money to the clergyman of the Penitentiary, and desired that he should give religious instruction in the school, but that did not make it an exclusive school.

8249. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The Catechism and religious sermons were excluded.

The Commissioners adjourned.

PUBLIC SITTING—SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1888.

At the Office of the Commission.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAIRN, Judges Commissioners; ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Secretary, WM. EDWARD ELLIS, Esq., LL.B., and the Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, JUN., were in attendance.

LAUREL HILL SCHOOL, KILLOWEN.—OBJECTIONS.

Mr. George Smith.

Mr. George Smith, of the firm of Messrs. Crookshank Brothers and Lench, appeared on behalf of the Rev. Robert Kyle.

8240. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—This objection, of the Rev. Mr. Kyle is a very small matter. What do you wish to say about it?

Mr. Smith.—Well, my lord, we have given in a notice of objection to the draft scheme on the part of the Rev. Robert Kyle. What he says is that the account was made out from a document which appears to have been since lost. The amount of that account is £232 12s. 7d., and he says that as far as £206 12s. 10d. is concerned, he should not be charged with it because it was for arrears which accrued during the lifetime of his predecessor, Henry Kyle. He therefore considers that he is not responsible for that sum. Besides that, he considers that there should be a qualification put in after the paragraph which states that "after payment of all expenses and outgoings, the further sum of £165 18s. 6d., accrued due on account of the said rent-charge of £50 during the time the school was closed as aforesaid after the death of the said Henry Kyle, and up to and for December 31st 1886, and the said sum of £30 12s. 10d. and £165 18s. 6d., making together the sum of £232 12s. 7d., remain due, owing, and charged upon the said lands of Tullyvarnah, on account of the said rent-charge to December 31st, 1886." He disputes any personal liability in respect thereof.

8241. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—He is not personally liable, but he is in possession of the property on which the money is due, and it can be levied from him. He can be made defendant in a Chancery suit as trustee of the property. Whatever is his position, the land is liable to the rent-charge, so that I am afraid that his personal liability, distinct from his position as trustee, would not have any practical bearing on the matter.

Mr. Smith.—No doubt the lands are liable.

8242. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—And there is no doubt that the lands are worth more than the £50 a year. We do not want to make him pay anything that he is not actually liable to pay; but it is quite plain that it is for his interest, as well as being our duty, not to leave the matter open to a suit by the Attorney-General.

8243. Lord Justice NAIRN.—When did Henry Kyle die?

Mr. Smith.—He died in 1876. The estate of Henry Kyle has been long since administered.

8244. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—But, as I understand, the present gentleman, the Rev. Robert Kyle, went into possession on Henry Kyle's death, and he received and spent a considerable amount of money since on the school. Let him bring in a running account down to the present time.

Mr. Smith.—You see that there is a great deal of vagueness about his liability for that £26 12s. 10d.

8245. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Have you any account of what he spent last year, for this account stops at the year 1885? You frame it so that he would appear to owe only £16 odd.

Mr. Smith.—That was what we were relying on the Statute of Limitations.

8246. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—But the Statute of Limitations would not apply to the last six years. In the return which is given here to the end of the last quarter of 1886, he says that he is quite ignorant as to how many years the school was closed. £15 6s. 9d.

is stated as the only portion of rent-charge remaining unpaid within the last six years. Here is your letter:—"On behalf of the Rev. Robert Kyle, we object to the proposed draft scheme, inasmuch as it holds him liable for the sum that appeared due before 1885, whereas £15 6s. 9d. is the only portion of the rent-charge remaining unpaid within the six years last specified, and as to the rest, if any, Mr. Kyle does not admit any sum to be due beyond the sum of £15 6s. 9d."

Mr. Smith.—I do not think we can go on the Statute of Limitations.

8247. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What do you consider would be the proper thing to do?

Mr. Smith.—After the words, "The said sum of £26 12s. 10d., and £165 18s. 6d., making together the sum of £232 12s. 7d.," I was about to add, "but he disputes any personal liability in respect thereof; part of it consists of £206 12s. 10d. from arrears which accrued in the lifetime of the said Henry Kyle, predecessor of the said Rev. Robert Kyle, and the said £26 12s. 10d. is not now recoverable so portion of the said sum of £232 12s. 7d."

8248. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There is never in putting in a recital that the thing is in dispute. We might put in the £26 12s. 10d., as now chargeable on the estate.

8249. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Are there any vouchers for the payments that are detailed in the account sent in here?

Mr. Smith.—I have nothing beyond that letter.

8250. Dr. TRAILL.—Who is the executor of Henry Kyle?

Mr. Smith.—His son. He took the property absolutely.

8251. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Are you prepared to make an offer of payment?

Mr. Smith.—No. I know Mr. Kyle's circumstances at present. His property is about to be sold.

8252. Dr. TRAILL.—That is the time to get the money.

Mr. Smith.—Tullyvarnah is not to be sold.

Lord Justice NAIRN.—If some settlement is not made he will have a receiver appointed over his land.

8253. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests are put to rest, they would be bound to proceed against him for the payment of this money. The sum is small enough to proceed against him in the Quarter Sessions Court, but he is bound to pay in any case. There is here a statement of accounts from 1878 to 1886, and showing a balance due of £26 12s. 10d. at the death of Henry Kyle. Is this the only account you have?

Mr. SMITH.—That is all.

8254. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If you give us such an account as that for last year we can settle the whole thing for him.

8255. Dr. TRAILL.—What are the assets left by the late Henry Kyle?

Mr. Smith.—That I do not know.

8256. Dr. TRAILL.—Was there a cash balance left?

Mr. Smith.—I do not know.

8257. Dr. TRAILL.—Who has the probate of the will?

Mr. Smith.—I have not the probate here. I dare say it is in Coleman's.

8255. Dr. TRAILL.—An executor is bound to account for the assets of his father. If all the assets are distributed it is hard to ask him to pay up. The son being the executor is asked to ask him to account for the assets of his father if no balance thereof remained over.

Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—It is not made a personal debt in any way. He has the estate. This is as to the charge on the estate.

8256. Dr. TRAILL.—What is the rental of Tully, vaneil?

Mr. SMITH.—I do not know.

8257. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—Is Robert Kyle the personal representative of his father?

Mr. SMITH.—He is his eldest son and executor. He is the appointee of the lands.

8258. Lord Justice NAISH.—Look at this account. Take the item December 1st. Income: paid manager £36. What does he mean by that?

Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—He puts down the whole income as paid to himself, and he takes credit for it as expenditure.

8259. Lord Justice NAISH.—He only puts £4 spent on the house.

Dr. TRAILL.—But there is £10 laid out on the house. He intends that account to be between the estate and the manager. The manager is to account for each £50.

8260. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—That is the income for the year 1865. In this account he puts it down—Manager, £60; but when he comes to show how it was spent there was only £47 15s. the last year.

Dr. TRAILL.—That is the account between the estate and the manager, and is correct as between the manager and the estate. It proceeds then to account for the expenditure.

8261. Lord Justice NAISH.—Has he sent in an account for each year?

Mr. SMITH.—No.

8262. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—Would there be any possibility of giving us any sort of an account within a reasonable time that we could act on—say within a week.

Mr. SMITH.—Mr. Kyle is over in England.

8263. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—We have written to him frequently, and we have only got three documents from him.

Mr. SMITH.—My last instruction was merely to protest against making him personally liable. This is the letter I received:—"Messrs. Crookshank, Brothers, and Leach.—I send you the draft scheme which will be finally settled on Saturday. There is nothing but a final protest against making me personally liable for the arrears."

8264. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—Are you satisfied except as to that?

Mr. SMITH.—I certainly, sir, would press on you to give us credit for £66 12s. 10d.

8265. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—I think we might take the £66 12s. 10d. off, and treat it as irrecoverable. We do not want to be hard on him if he admits the liability of the lands to the residue.

Mr. SMITH.—He must admit that.

8266. Dr. TRAILL.—If he paid up the £165 12s. 6d. the other sum might be struck out. Strike off the £66 12s. 10d. on condition that the other is paid up.

Mr. SMITH.—I am almost sure he will agree to that.

8267. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—I think if we let him off the £66 12s. 10d., he ought to pay the residue at once. Give us an account to December, 1867, and tell him that if he admits the balance and undertakes to pay it we will let him off that £66 12s. 10d.

Mr. SMITH.—Give him a reasonable time, say six months.

8268. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—He will have the six months in the ordinary course; this is but a draft scheme.

Lord Justice NAISH.—If he gets off this money and gets the six months, he must understand that he is to pay at the end of the six months.

Dr. TRAILL.—If this is to be litigated afterwards, the new Governing Body will claim the whole amount.

8269. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—We will give him a month from the time that the scheme becomes law to pay the money due to the new Governing Body, so that therefore he will not have to pay until next August. Send us a regular admission from yourself that the amount due to the 31st December, 1867, is so much, calculated on the basis that we let him off that £66 12s. 10d. That will relieve him from a suit in Chancery and all liability, and will settle the matter. We would like to have the account, like this of the year 1865, for 1867. Tell him that we are actually ready to sign this scheme now, and will probably sign it within a week, and that we will put him in for the whole liability if he does not answer satisfactorily before then.

The Commission then adjourned.

PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1868.

At the Ranelagh Institution, Athlone.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAISH, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLAT, D.D., D.C.; ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.B., M.D., F.R.C.S., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., was in attendance.

Lord Justice FRYNGERSON made an introductory statement.

THE RANELAGH INSTITUTION, ATHLONE.

Robert Seale, s.a., Head Master, examined.

8273. Lord Justice FRYNGERSON.—You are the Head Master of this School?—Yes.

8274. How long have you held that position?—Since 1871. I did not enter the school until January, 1875.

8275. Whom did you succeed?—Mr. McNamara.

8276. When you came, what number of boys were in the school?—From 30 to 40. About half-a-dozen day boys, the others boarders.

8277. In 1860, on the occasion of the last inquiry, 87 boys were in the School?—Yes.

8278. How many are there now?—50.

8279. Has the increase been gradual?—It was gradual.

Mr. Seale handed in the following table showing the attendance at the school:—

—	Foundation.	Boarders.	Day.	Total.
1878, . . .	85	31	18	58
1879, . . .	85	32	16	58

Mr. Robert Seale, s.a.

March 26, 1886.

Mr Robert
Bain, &c.

8280. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That is the number of individual boys attending at any time during the year?—Yes.

8281. What is the actual attendance?—It has varied from between 91 and 100.

8282. How many are here now?—55 boarders and 20 day boys on the roll.

8283. To what class do they belong?—To the middle class resident in the neighbourhood. I have 13 boys within a radius of twenty miles of Athlone, and 16 or 17 coming from the neighbouring counties.

8284. Do any come from Roscommon?—Yes, some.

8285. How many are from distant parts of Ireland?—Well, as to the remainder, I have 1 from Antum, 1 from Louth, 2 from Cavan, 1 from Wicklow, 2 from Kerry, 3 or 4 from the King's County, 2 from Dublin. Thirty-two are hall and foundation boarders, and 23 parlor boarders. The latter dine with myself.

8286. How many are on the foundation?—Fifteen.

8287. Are those free pupils paid for by the Society?—Yes.

8288. What allowance is made for them?—Ten pence for each day in the house.

8289. Is the number limited?—Yes, to 15.

8290. Where do they come from?—Roscommon, Galway, and Mayo.

8291. How are they admitted?—By competitive examination held once a year, in May or July.

8292. How many are admitted each year?—Five leave and five come in.

8293. How long are they kept here?—They used to be kept four years; now they are kept only three years.

8294. Lord Justice Nassau.—How much do you get altogether for those 15 boys?—Ten pence a day each for about 40 weeks, and £3 a year for the clothing of each boy.

8295. What competition is there for admission?—There are generally 50 or 30 boys competing for those five places.

8296. Is there any qualification required as to the position of the persons whose sons compete?—Yes; certificates are signed by the clergy as to the circumstances of the family.

8297. What are the religious denominations of the boys?—Church of Ireland, 79; Presbyterians, 8; Wesleyans, 4; Roman Catholics, 7. All the boarders are Church of Ireland, the others are day boys.

8298. You never had Presbyterians boarders?—I must take the foundation pupils as Church of Ireland.

8299. What have you out of the endowment?—A salary of £100 a year.

8300. And the school fee?—Yes; they are left to me. The Society regulates the amount of the fees. I have an allowance of £50 for one assistant master; I have four resident assistants and a visiting assistant.

8301. What distinctions have the boys obtained?—Exhibitions and other prizes, including gold medals in mathematics. One boy obtained a gold medal at the matriculation examination for the Royal University last year.

8302. Do you send boys to Santry?—Yes, nearly all the boys are placed on the list for Santry. We send them up for examination.

8303. How far do you go in mathematics?—The course includes trigonometry and Euclid. I have had boys here up to 18 or 19 years of age, but they must be under 18 when they come, and are between 15 and 16 generally.

8304. What classical teaching do you give?—We teach them for the entrance examination for Trinity College, for matriculation at the Royal University, and for the three grades of the Intermediate Examinations. The Incorporated Society seems to object to the teaching of classics, and give me no assistance in that way.

8305. What have you to say as to the premises?—The premises are very good.

8306. They are kept in repair by the Society?—Yes.

8307. What land have you?—The institution is supposed to stand on five acres.

8308. Besides the land connected with the school, have you any other land?—Yes; I rent about four acres from the Society.

8309. What do you pay for it?—I think I pay more than an agricultural rent—three guineas an acre. Then I have land from Mrs. Pidgeon at 45s. an acre.

8310. Is that part of the land belonging to the Society?—Yes. Mrs. Pidgeon is a middle peasant. I pay her 45s. an acre for ten acres of grass, and I keep cows on it for milk and butter; and the boys have the use of it.

8311. Then, in fact, that land is used for the purpose of the school?—Yes. I took it for the boys and for the purpose of keeping the school select.

8312. Lord Justice Nassau.—Tell us all the payments you get from the Society?—I have £340 per annum altogether from the Society—£100 for myself, £200 for my assistant, and then allowances for ink and light and for servants.

8313. In addition to that you have the fees for the foundation boys?—That is a negative quantity.

8314. How do you board the boys?—I don't follow the original treatment—meet three times a week. I give them meat every day.

8315. Rev. R. S. D. Campbell.—Could you keep a school on 10d. per head a day?—No.

8316. Could the boys be fairly treated on 10d. a day?—They might if the Society gave it for the whole year and did not deduct it when the boys are on vacation.

8317. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Do you examine the boys at your competitive examination?—No.

8318. Who examines them?—Generally some of the Professors of Trinity College.

8319. What sort of examinations are they?—Very elementary.

8320. Where do the boys receive their education before they come here?—In different parts of the dioceses of Tunn, Elphin, and Moath.

8321. Rev. R. S. D. Campbell.—Would you think it desirable to require a little more English in the examination for admission?—Yes, certainly. We sometimes get boys who do not know anything of simple proportion who can repeat hundreds of lines of Scripture. Very often we don't get the best boys, Scripture enters so much into the examination.

8322. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—In what proportion?—I think about half. We have a preliminary examination in Scripture, and if they don't get half marks for it often the best boys are thrown out. I have got boys admitted here by competition who did not answer a single question in arithmetic.

8323. Is the Society represented in Athlone or in the neighbourhood?—Not that I am aware of, except by the catechist.

8324. Who is the catechist?—Mr. McCaughan, the incumbent of St. Peter's.

8325. The Very Rev. Canon Meehan, &c., &c., Banagher.—I think according to the terms of the original foundation the master should be in holy orders?—Yes.

8326. You are not in holy orders?—No. That provision was never carried out.

8327. Has there ever been a minister of this school in holy orders?—I think not.

8328. There never was a chapel erected here?—No. I don't think the Society would appoint a man in holy orders.

8329. Dr. Traill.—The idea of paying a minister was perhaps intended to obviate the necessity of appointing a master in holy orders?—Yes.

8330. Lord Justice Nassau.—Did the Society give your predecessor a pension?—Yes.

8331. How long was he here?—Thirty-nine years.

Rev. George McClanaghan, Rector of St. Peter's, examined.

March 26, 1888.

Rev. George
McClanaghan

8321. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Are you the incumbent of the parish of St. Peter's, Athlone?—Yes.
8322. And as such under the Act of Parliament regulating this school you are the catechist?—Yes.
8323. You get £59 a year under the Act?—Yes, in Irish money.

8324. Have you any other emoluments for the duties you discharge in connection with the school?—No.

8325. What duties do you discharge?—I catechise an hour each week.

8326. Have you any other duties?—Yes, the Society expect that I should be fully acquainted with the working of the school, and should visit it from time to time.

8327. Do you visit the school?—No, except when I catechise.

8328. Do you "visit" the school at the same time that you catechise?—I walk through the dormitories, lavatories, &c.

8329. How often does the Society visit?—The deputation comes once a year, and there are other occasional visits.

8330. Have you acquainted yourself with the working of the school?—Yes.

8331. What class of boys attend it?—A middle class, gentlemen's sons, and the sons of professional gentlemen. The boarders in the school are of that class.

8332. Dr. TRAILL.—You don't mean the free boys?—No, not the foundation boys. The head master has clearly said that a certificate ought to be given as to the circumstances of the families of the boys on the foundation.

8333. I only want to guard against any one supposing that the sons of gentlemen are placed upon the foundation.

Rev. Mr. McClanaghan.—The sons of gentlemen are boarders here.

8334. Dr. TRAILL.—But still they indirectly get the benefit of the endowment. What do the boarders pay?—Thirty-two guineas per annum.

8335. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Do the fifteen Protestant boys on the foundation represent the whole number in need of free education in this locality?—I think that represents the number the Incorporated Society are able to maintain on the endowment.

8336. Is there any other school in Athlone or in the neighbourhood open to Protestant pupils, giving the same class of education?—No.

8337. No private school?—No.

8338. Then this school is the only one available to supply intermediate education for the Protestants of the locality?—It is.

8339. Is there anything you could suggest as to the class of education given in the school?—There is one great want. Classics ought to be recognized as part of the curriculum of the school. Classics are taught by the head master, without any assistance from the Society. We think that the Incorporated Society should give assistance in teaching classics.

8340. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—To what extent are classics taught in the school?—The boys read the course for the intermediate examinations in Greek and Latin.

8341. Dr. TRAILL.—Are the foundation boys taught classics?—Yes; they matriculate both for Trinity College and for the Queen's Colleges. Boys here have passed with honours in classics.

8342. How many are learning classics?

Mr. BAILE.—Sixty-one are learning Latin, 33 Greek, and 86 are learning French.

8343. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Have the clergy or laity of the neighbouring parishes any representation on the Incorporated Society?—No.

8344. Do you think it would be well if there were any of the clergy or laity of the neighbourhood in the Society?—The men in Dublin are perfectly acquainted with the working of the schools and the selection of the scholars. They have a printed certificate, which each candidate must send forward a week before examination, and this certificate is signed by the clergyman of the parish.

8345. Is there no local body to compare the qualifications of the different candidates?—No; the clergymen testify to their qualifications.

Mr. BAILE.—The examiners don't know where the boys come from till the examinations are over. The clergyman of the parish only certifies as to the qualifications in reference to circumstances.

8346. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—But there is no person to determine between the needs of one boy and those of another?—No; certainly not.

8347. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Are you obliged to send in reports to the Society of the working of the school?—I have never been asked, but I always do so.

8348. Has any one on the part of the Society come to see the school in working order recently?—No person for the last few years.

8349. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you visit the schools for the purpose of inspection?

Witness.—Yes. The Incorporated Society understand that I should visit them. I understood that that was part of my duty. I represent the Incorporated Society.

8350. Do you send to the Society any report of these visits?—No.

8351. Do you think there should be some person in the locality who should visit the school?

Mr. BAILE.—I should be very glad that such a thing did occur.

Rev. Mr. McClanaghan.—I should not object to it.

8352. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—The more efficient the master is the more we have always found he wished for something of the kind.

8353. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would it be possible in Athlone to find suitable persons to constitute a local committee?—I have known schools of the Incorporated Society in reference to which a local committee met once a month—it was in Dundalk, but the Incorporated Society was so fully trusted that it was considered unnecessary.

8354. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think there is too much Scripture taught in these schools?—There is not too much Scripture, but I think there is too little arithmetic. I would also be in favour of boys learning a little Euclid.

8355. What are the boys examined in besides Scripture?—Reading, writing, English grammar, and the geography of Europe, Palestine, and Asia Minor, and arithmetic as far as the rules of three, practice, and vulgar and decimal fractions.

8356. Any history?—No history.

8357. Do many of the boys come from National schools?—A great many.

Mr. Joseph Vaughan examined.

8358. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—You are assistant to Mr. Colomby, the agent of the estate?—Yes.

8359. What is the income of the estate which forms the endowment of the Ranelagh schools?—About £3,000 a year.

8360. What is it?—Tithes-rectorials from certain parishes in the counties of Roscommon and Galway; some property in the town of Athlone, and landed property in the county Roscommon.

8361. Has Mr. Colomby the management of the whole estate?—Yes.

8362. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Is the entire property in Roscommon?—No; some of it is in Westmeath.

8363. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—How many schools share the endowment?—Only the two Ranelagh schools, the girls' school in Roscommon, and this.

8364. What is the net income?—About £1,660. There are head-rents, tithes-rectorials, and taxes.

Mr. Joseph
Vaughan.

March 26, 1888.

Mr. Joseph
Vaughan.

8375. Are the accounts of the Ranelagh estate kept distinct from those of the other endowments?—Yes.

8376. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Are the payments for the school made by you?—They are made by the secretary. We have nothing to say to the management of the schools, except as to the buildings. The money is lodged to the credit of the society in the Bank of Ireland.

8377. Dr. TRAILL.—The rents are very low, I believe.—Some of them are head-rents. There was a town lot which fell in in 1836. There were nine tenancies, and one of them was valuable. There was an increase of £100 then.

8378. Is it in contemplation to sell to the tenants?—No; and there is no desire on the part of the tenants to buy.

8379. If the tenants went into the Land Commission Court do you think their rents would be reduced?—I think it is possible that a few of the rents would be reduced.

8380. Are the rents under the Government valuation?—They are generally under the Government valuation.

Very Rev. John F. F. Croxson, Provost of Kilmacduagh, examined.

8381. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—What is your parish?—Arlington.

8382. What distance is that from Athlone?—Fifteen miles.

8383. In what diocese?—In Clonsfort.

8384. Have you had foundation boys sent here from your parish?—Yes, about fifty.

8385. How long have you been in the parish?—Since 1845.

8386. What is your experience of the school?—It has given a great stimulus to the master, and to the mistress also, of my school.

8387. What sort of a school is yours?—It is a parochial school.

8388. Is it in connection with the National Board?—No.

8389. How is it maintained?—By the Irish Church Mission.

8390. Do they give a salary to the teachers?—Yes, they give a salary to the teachers. The schoolmaster and schoolmistress are a married couple. They get about £20 a month.

8391. Do they get fees for preparing pupils for Ranelagh school?—Nothing, except a gratuity we may give them.

8392. What class of people are they whose children attend your school?—Generally they are of a very humble class—poor tenants and people of that kind.

8393. How are the pupils selected who compete for admission here?—We prepare them and send them up.

8394. Are they all day pupils?—Mostly; sometimes we have pupils from other parishes; sometimes we receive a small stipend from farmers; sometimes pupils come from Ballinacree.

8395. What distance are you from Ballinacree?—Three Irish miles.

8396. What is the course of education at your school?—Arithmetic, geography, grammar, a course of Scripture and Church Catechism.

8397. Are the children attending your school all members of your own church?—Well, all who come are received—no objection is made.

8398. Lord Justice NAIRN.—You take in Roman Catholic children?—Yes, we make no distinction.

8399. How many have you there now?—I could not exactly say at this moment. We have a few.

8400. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—What is the whole number attending your schools?—There are about 60 on the rolls.

8401. Do all these belong to the neighbourhood?—Some of them have been sent to us from other places.

8402. In what proportion?—Sometimes we have about 30 children from other places.

8403. Are those included in the 60?—Yes.

8404. Do they compete?—Yes, some of them do.

8405. Is your school an orphan home?—The school is not a orphan home, but the children of the orphan home are educated in the school.

8406. Where do the children come from?—From various quarters.

8407. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Some of the Roman Catholics, I suppose, come from these distant quarters?—Yes.

8408. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Then their qualification to come in here is that they come from your school?—Yes; they read the Scriptures, and are prepared in a course which consists of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

8409. Is not this school intended for the education of Church children?—

Mr. Baile.—No matter what they are, I take them as Church children.

8410. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Do all those children attend your church?—(Witness).—Yes.

8411. Is this "Home" a Church Mission Society's house?—No; it is a private affair altogether.

8412. What are the ages of the children when they enter the Ranelagh Schools?—The girls must be under 13, and the boys must be under 16.

8413. How long are the girls retained at the Ranelagh school?—Four years.

8414. Then they must be under 17 when they leave?—Yes.

8415. What is the character of the education they receive?—Some are educated to become teachers.

8416. Do any of them go to Cambridge?—Yes.

8417. Are they about the same class as the boys who come here?—Yes.

8418. How many children come from your school to the Ranelagh Schools in the year?—Sometimes we fall—the competition is very sharp. Sometimes we succeed.

8419. About how many in the year do you send?—On an average about a couple. There have been times when we took the whole of the places, but the competition has increased. We did not get in any boy last year.

8420. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Do you know with what class of boys your pupils compete?—They must be sons of poor persons not able to pay for boarding and education. We never know who will be against us. They are gathered here and there. Their names are not given until after the examination.

8421. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Who conducts the Scripture examination, which is considered of so much importance?—I forget the names.

Mr. Baile.—Sometimes Dr. Stahle, and Dr. Mac Donagh, and Dr. Walsh.

8422. Lord Justice NAIRN.—How many of the 60 children at your school are Roman Catholics?—Taking the children of mixed marriages into account, I should, at a rough guess, say about one-third.

8423. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—You said that some children come to your parish to be instructed in your school—do they pay fees?—No.

8424. Dr. TRAILL.—Is it a sine qua non that the candidates you send in here are to be returned as members of the Church of Ireland?—No; there is nothing of that kind required that I recollect.

8425. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—To be entitled to share in this endowment, they must be Protestant boys?—I don't know.

8426. Mr. Vaughan.—They must have studied Scripture.

8427. They attend your church?—Yes.

8428. Lord Justice NAIRN.—It is quite plain the intention is to bring them up as Protestants and to get Roman Catholic children also to attend.

Mr. Baile.—According to the will, they must be Protestants when they are received here.

8429. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—What course is life do the boys learn after they leave this school?—

Many boys who have been in this school have entered the ministry, several have gone into the Exchequer, others have become tutors in various schools in England and elsewhere, many have become clerks, and they occupy various respectable positions.

8432. An education is given here which enables them to maintain themselves respectably?—Yes. Some have gone through college, many are in college at present. A great many have emigrated, and are doing well abroad.

8433. Could you suggest any mode by which the people of the locality might have a voice in selecting the right candidates?—I don't see any advantage. The present system appears to me to work admirably.

8434. It works well for some schools, but it strikes me that a poor Protestant boy of Athlone would have a bad chance against boys specially prepared in such a school as yours. Whom, if any responsible people of Athlone had a voice in it they would be likely to look after their own candidates. The course of examination I see is as follows:—Old Testament, Deuteronomy and Second Kings; New Testament; St. Luke's Gospel and the Epistle to the Hebrews in its references to Genesis and Exodus; the Church Catechism, and the Scriptural references showing its doctrine to be in conformity with the Word of God. In secular subjects—Reading, writing, rudiments of English grammar, geography of Europe, Palestine, and Asia Minor, and arithmetic, as far as the rule of three and practice, inclusive, and vulgar and decimal fractions.

(To the Rev. Mr. Croxall).—If you exclude all children who do not pass in that course would you say that those admitted must already have received a considerable amount of education?—Yes.

8435. Professor Deane says (I believe).—I think you send the children sent to the school are drawn from the poorer classes mainly?—Witness.—Yes.

8436. Is any assistance given them by way of stipend when they leave school?—Not that I know of.

8437. Has the appropriation fund mentioned in the Act of Parliament been discontinued?—I don't know.

8438. Lord Justice Fitzgerald read the form of certificate as to the circumstances of candidates for admission, stating "that the candidate was a suitable person for admission to the school" was to be signed by the minister of the parish and accompanied by a doctor's certificate that the candidate was of sound health.

8439. The Rev. Canon Mowbray.—Would a certificate from a Roman Catholic priest be accepted?—I think not. I could not accept it except from a Protestant clergyman.

8440. Would the baptismal certificate not be required?—That would be after the election.

8441. Have you any certificates signed by a magistrate?—I have not. I have nothing to do with the baptismal certificate. It is not sent until after the boy is elected, but before admission is given the baptismal certificate must be produced.

8442. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you see the baptismal certificate?—Yes.

8443. Lord Justice Mowbray.—Have you got certificates from Roman Catholic clergymen?—There was one sent here last week with a foundation boy from Castlemore. The certificate was from the parish priest of Castlemore.

8444. And the boy was registered as a Protestant here?—Yes; he was a Protestant some time before he came to me.

8445. Lord Justice Fitzgerald (reading from one of the rules).—"The certificate of birth must be forwarded to the Secretary, 73, Harcourt-street." Am I right in taking it that the only evidence required here is, that the boy presents himself as a Protestant, and produces a certificate of his being "suitable" from the minister of the parish?—Yes, I have nothing to do with the religion. If I got the certificate from the boy I admit him.

8446. Lord Justice Mowbray.—Did the boy from Castlemore come to you direct?—No, he came from Tuam; his father resides there.

8447. Canon Mowbray.—From whom do you get the baptismal certificate?—It comes from the Secretary, when he sends the direction to me to admit the boy.

8448. Dr. Traill.—May the baptismal certificate be signed by any person?—Yes, by anybody.

8449. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If I wished to compete to whom should the clergyman's certificate be sent?—It should be sent to me before examination.

8450. And if I passed the examination you must admit me when directed by the Secretary from Dublin?—Yes, I don't know what other rules there are, but when I get the certificate from the Secretary, I am to take in the boy.

8451. Lord Justice Mowbray.—What is the form of the order?—Admit this boy on the foundation of the Rathfarnham School.

8452. Dr. Traill.—You are only the administrator under the Central Board in Dublin?—That is all. I have nothing to do with the admission. All these certificates come to me from the clergymen the week previous to the examination, and I retain them till the examinations are over. The boys are examined by numbers not by names. When the examinations are over the Secretary, Mr. Hackett, takes the numbers to Dublin and then he sends the orders of admission to me.

8453. And every boy is received as a Protestant?—Yes.

8454. Have you ever had a boy here as a scholar while he was a Roman Catholic?—Never, it is thirty-eight years since I was admitted myself.

8455. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What religious instruction is given here?—There is the reading of the Bible morning and evening, and the Catechism is taught once a week. That is limited to the boarders and day boys.

8456. Dr. Traill.—Do any of the Roman Catholic boys attending the school as day boys attend religious instruction?—No, they leave always.

8457. What do you do with the Presbyterians?—No matter what they are, I treat them as members of the Church of Ireland. They are taught the Church Formulary, I mean the foundation boys, I treat them as Church of Ireland boys. The Presbyterian boys not on the foundation don't attend, they count themselves very fortunate when they get outside.

The Rev. E. S. D. Campbell, M.A., Rector of St. Mary's, examined.

8458. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I believe you are not long in this neighbourhood?—No, only a few weeks.

8459. What position do you hold?—I am Rector of St. Mary's, Athlone.

8460. Have you seen the working of this school?—No; but I was Rector of Leeney for nine years, and was rector of the Farna School for seven.

8461. Can you tell us how the Protestant boys are selected to compete for the endowments of the Incoporated Society?—Circulars are sent out by Mr. Hackett stating when the examinations are held, and the clergymen and others prepare the candidates.

8462. Dr. Traill.—When you say clergymen, you don't mean Presbyterian clergymen?—No; Church of Ireland. The clergymen generally prepare the boys themselves and send them here, or there may be a school in the neighbourhood specially devoted to preparing boys for these examinations. Then there is the qualification of poverty.

March 26, 1898.

Rev. H. S. D.
Campbell, M.A.

8450. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Can you tell us how the information on that subject is obtained?—Mr. Hackett used to press questions rather closely in particular cases as to whether the parents were poor; but as regards the general run, it is by certificate.

8451. Do you not think that it would be well to have an examination by some local committee to see that Protestants, and none but those really poor, should get the benefit of the endowments?—I think it would be important. I think there should be a local committee of influential men who should have a general supervision over the school.

8452. Give us fully your idea of what would be useful?—As regards the certificates, they are sent in by anybody, and generally they can be got up and signed no matter what they contain. As regards Farrs, there was no person who took any interest in the place. Many things could be done about a school in which the assistance of a local gentleman would be very useful. I wrote recommending Mr. Thomas Tighe Chapman as a gentleman who should look after the school. He was elected a member of the Society, and I found Mr. Chapman very valuable. He encouraged the boys, and took an interest in the school. He gave prizes, which were a great benefit to the school. A great deal might be done in this way by a local committee. The committee of fifteen are the governing power of this Society; but I think there should be three, or four, or five independent gentlemen in the neighbourhood of each school who could advise, and would make themselves generally useful.

8453. Lord Justice NAHE.—What power would you give them?—I would give them the power of consulting with and advising the Board; and of visiting the school, and making representations to the Society; but I would not divide the responsibility with the master.

8454. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Could not the local committee decide between the claims of candidates?—I think so.

8455. Lord Justice NAHE (to Rev. Mr. McClenaghan).—Do you get any boys from Achill Island?—Yes, now and again. The local committee could not decide on their qualifications. We sometimes get them from Galway and Clifton.

The Rev. Mr. Campbell.—At present the catechist has large powers. No bills can be paid without his certificate; he has a large control over the school; no expenditure can be incurred which the catechist does not sanction.

8456. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—You are speaking of the Catechist of Farrs?—Yes, if there are repairs to be done or any other expenditure to be incurred, it cannot be done without the consent of the catechist.

8457. (To Rev. Mr. McClenaghan).—Do you look after these things here?—No.

8458. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Did you ever receive instructions from the Society as to the manner in which you should discharge your duties?

Rev. Mr. McClenaghan.—Never, but if there were anything wrong, I understood what my duties were.

8459. How did you arrive at a knowledge of them?

Rev. Mr. McClenaghan.—I was acquainted with the Incorporated Society, I was a boy in one of the schools, I was a master in another, and for the last ten years, I have been a catechist.

Rev. Mr. Campbell.—The catechist must look after the food, the clothing, and the sanitary arrangements, and he is to have a general supervision apart altogether from that of the master.

8470. Would it be some advantage to have a local committee to look after those matters?—Witness.—Yes, I would think so. The responsibility is too much for the catechist.

8471. Dr. TRAILL.—A duty, such as that of an inspector of nuisances, is hardly a suitable one for a catechist?—I take every duty put on me.

8472. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—People must look after the sanitary arrangements of their own houses, and somebody ought to be responsible for looking after the school?—If we had two or three gentlemen of the neighbourhood as a local committee it would be an immense advantage in every way. I think it would have been an advantage if there had been a small committee in Farrs. The school was in a shameful condition when I first knew it.

8473. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Was there an annual visitation of that school?—There have been annual examinations, and an annual inspection, but then the visitors hurry off to the train. The building was going into dilapidation. We got accustomed to it. We had great difficulty in getting anything done at Farrs.

8474. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—In what condition is Farrs School at present?—It is in a vigorous healthy condition, thanks, in a large degree, to the present master.

8475. Professor DOUGHERTY.—With regard to the character of the education given in those schools have you any suggestions to offer?—There ought to be an allowance made for classical teaching.

8476. The intention of the founder was to provide schools for the poorer classes, and not education for the middle classes?—All classes, I think, should get a chance. Many bright boys are to be found amongst the children of the poor. I should like to see the opportunity afforded to them of obtaining a University education. I should like to see them extending their vision.

8477. Is there any provision for teaching drawing?—No.

8478. Has any provision been made for teaching experimental science?—We had a committee formed in Farrs to consider those matters.

8479. Would you think it desirable to give anything in the nature of technical education in these schools?—At present there is a foundation for a mathematical education.

8480. Drawing is not included?—Drawing is taught in Farrs, but not as drawing. It has been occasionally taught to boys studying mathematics.

8481. On the whole, you would be in favour of making these schools a place of preparation for the intermediate examinations?—I think the entrance examination should be altered.

8482. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—What do you suggest on that subject?—It should require the boys to know a little algebra and Euclid.

8483. Would you make the examination harder?—I think portions of the entrance examination might be altered.

8484. Lord Justice NAHE.—At what age are the boys supposed to come here?—From 12 to 16.

8485. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would you diminish the theological element?—I would by altering its character.

8486. In what way—would you omit the Church formularies?—I would not. I would like the proportionate weight of Scripture reduced, and the Examination less difficult and catchy.

8487. Lord Justice FRYGIMSON.—Here is the instruction which the founder desired:—"The twenty boys and twenty girls to be named by the trustees of the major part of them, with the advice of some of the chief inhabitants of the town and manor of Athlone, but none of the boys or girls so admitted to be under the age of seven years nor above the age of twelve years; the boys to be taught in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the girls in reading, writing, spinning, and knitting, and such other works as the trustees, or the major part of them, should direct;" and boys are described as "the poor Protestant boys of the town and manor of Athlone;" and the girls as "the poor Protestant girls of the town and manor of Roscommon."

How would you propose to select some principal inhabitants for a local committee?—I would be willing that the names should be submitted to the Board.

8488. A sum of £30 per annum is given to the minister for the time being having the care of souls in the parish for acting as catechist?—Yes.

8488. There is a parish at each side of the river here?—Yes—St. Mary's and St. Peter's.

8490. Would you think a member or two of the committee might be taken from the Select Vestry of either parish?—I think so. I should think that the committee in Dublin would be most anxious for it. I never know any of the schools to be so efficiently managed as this; but of course the committee in Dublin cannot see everything.

8491. Are there not a considerable number of poor people residing in your parish—St. Mary's?—Yes.

8493. How many Protestants are there in the parish?—About 800.

8494. Are there not amongst them boys to whom it would be an advantage to get in here?—Yes, certainly.

8495. Are there many of the artisan class amongst them?—Yes.

Mr. Baile.—At present there are three here from that parish.

8496. Are there any day boys attending here who do not pay fees?—No.

8497. According to the intention of the founder, poor Protestant boys of Athlone were to get instruction here, and now all the benefit goes by competition to boarders?—Yes.

8498. Is there any possibility of free admission for a poor Protestant day boy?—No; but the fee is low—£1 a quarter.

8499. Professor DUFFIN.—That is a considerable fee. In the North of Ireland it would be considered high.

Mr. Vaughan.—We have people here who can afford to pay it.

8499. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Yes, but Lord Russell intended that poor Athlone boys should not have to pay it.

Mr. Vaughan.—There is a good Roman Catholic school which has been recently established here.

8500. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Is there a Model School here?

Rev. Mr. Campbell.—No.

8501. Is there any other National School under Protestant management?—No, St. Mary's School is not a National school.

8502. Lord Justice FITZGERSON (to the Rev. Mr. McCloskey).—About how many of a Church population have you in your parish?—About 120 and about 600 military. If you took in the boys of this school we should have 250.

8503. What school is available for them besides this?—We have no Protestant school except the Russell School in this parish.

8504. Would it not be an advantage to the poor boys of your parish to have free admission here?—If a boy is sufficiently advanced his best way is to get in on the foundation.

8505. But for the cost of one boy on the foundation you could teach twenty day boys of the class for whom the school was founded?—I don't think such a number of day boys would require the education given in this school. They are better educated in the parish, on St. Mary's side.

Robert Baile, B.A., re-examined.

(Mr. Baile here produced a book, for which Lord Justice Naish had previously asked, containing the names of the foundation boys in the school, and the parishes from which they came.)

8506. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I see that in 1884 you had twenty-two candidates?

Mr. Baile.—Yes.

8507. Lord Justice NAISH.—Two candidates were from Tuam?—Yes; neither of them succeeded.

8508. The next two were from Spiddal?—Yes; one succeeded.

8509. Then there were two from Clonsilla?—Yes; one succeeded.

8510. Then one from Ballinakil?—Yes; he did not succeed.

8511. Then four from Ballinacree?—Yes; one succeeded.

8512. Where were they prepared?—In the Ballinacree schools.

8513. Then from Athlone there were three candidates of whom only one succeeded?—Yes.

8514. His name was William McEwing?—Yes.

8515. Did his parents live in this neighbourhood?—No.

8516. Then there was a boy from Kilkenny; three from Loughmacore; and two from Aughrim?—Yes, and one succeeded.

8517. The last on the list was from Castlebar?—Yes.

8518. On the list of candidates for 1887, the two first were from Athlone?—Yes; one succeeded.

8519. Then there is another boy again from Kilkenny, West; a boy from Tossan; a boy from Ballinacree; one from Westport, and one from Achill Sound?—Yes.

8520. What class of boy was he?—I don't know; he is a native of Achill.

8521. Then there were two from Aughrim; two from Farnstown; three from Ballinacree; three from Loughmacore; one from Tuam; two from Ballinacree; one from Frankford; and one from Spiddal?—Yes.

8522. Then there appear to be in all about a dozen parishes from which the candidates come?—Yes.

8523. Why is it from those parishes only that the boys come?—I dare say the masters in many of those schools have been pupils here, and took an interest in the place, and knew how to prepare the boys for the examination. And unless they did know how to prepare the boys their pupils would not pass the examinations.

8524. Dr. THOMAS.—The examinations, I believe, are of a catchy nature?—Yes, if the boys were not specially prepared in Scripture they would have no chance.

8525. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Then the competition is practically in the hands of a few schools in different localities?—Yes.

8526. Do you give any advantage to local boys as day boys?—No, the regular charge is £1 a quarter.

8527. Would it not be an advantage if boys were admitted at reduced fees?—Yes, I have taken boys from Nenagh.

8528. There are Protestant day boys in this neighbourhood to whom it would be an advantage?—Yes.

8529. How many would your school be capable of accommodating?—About 100, I think. As it is we are pretty full.

8530. Are you in connection with the Science and Art Department?—Yes.

8531. Who form the committee?—Mr. Langrishe, the Rev. Mr. McCloskey, the Secretary to Mr. Watson's congregation, Mr. Price, the Wesleyan clergyman, Mr. Dickson, a resident in the town.

8532. What Science and Art subjects do you teach?—Mathematics, electricity, and magnetism.

8533. What apparatus have you?—I got them myself.

8534. Did you apply to South Kensington for any?—I did not.

8535. What results did you get?—I got from £60 to £100 in each year.

8536. How many boys do you send up?—Generally about forty.

8537. Do you teach any drawing?—We are limited for drawing, Mr. Hampton, the mathematical teacher, teaches drawing to any boy who wishes it.

March 19, 1885.

Robert Taile,
Esq.

8538. Dr. TRAILL.—Why did you not take it as a subject for South Kensington?—The other subjects are better.

8539. Is the examination harder for drawing than for magnetism, for example?—Yes.

8540. Would it not be quite as beneficial for the boys?—Yes.

8541. Professor Deconmunt.—Can you tell us in what proportion the boys go to trade or business?—I could not.

8542. What proportion of your boys go to the University?—In 1885 five matriculated in Trinity College and one in the Royal University.

8543. What becomes of them afterwards?—I have lost sight of them. Some of them went into banks. No classics were taught here till I introduced them.

ST. MARY'S PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

Mr. Joseph Vaughan examined.

Mr. Joseph
Vaughan.

8544. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—On which side is St. Mary's?—On the Westmeath side.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald (reads the bequest by William Hancock as a foundation for a Protestant school).—What is the present condition of the school?—We get still from Lord Castlemaiden's property £30 a year Irish, £4 10s. 6d. from the Commissioners of Charitable Donations, and £3 a year from the London Society. The rest is made up by the parish. The school is under the Erasmus Smith Board which is the chief source of supply.

8545. What number of scholars are in attendance? About sixty.

8546. Are those children of a poorer class than those who come to the Renshagh school?—They are of the class on the foundation here, and some are considerably poorer.

8547. Would it not be an advantage if the cleverer children could come here as day pupils?—You would have St. Mary's School broken up.

8548. Why not put it under the National Board?—Because the Erasmus Smith's Board contributes to it.

8549. Dr. TRAILL.—How much?—About £30 per annum.

8550. Is it a voluntary subscription?—It is voluntary.

8551. Are any of the Erasmus Smith estates in this county?—No. They are in the King's County.

8552. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In London a school from which they withdrew a substantial contribution was put under the National Board, and became one of the best schools we have seen. Now, who pays the rent-charge?—Lord Castlemaiden.

8553. Have you any other assistance in the way of dividends?—No.

8554. Dr. TRAILL.—The Town Council do not contribute anything?—No. Formerly they used to subscribe £10 a year.

8555. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What land have you?—None.

8556. Who owns the building?—The incumbent of the parish and the select vestry.

8557. Have you an inspector?—Yes—a very efficient inspector under the Erasmus Smith Board. The teacher is supposed to be appointed by the select vestry.

8558. The Rev. Mr. Campbell.—There was an inspection recently, and an admirable report was given of the schools by Mr. Rodkin.

8559. Have you any prejudice against the National Board?—I am very unprejudiced.

8560. As far as we see your school is an ordinary parochial poor school which has the misfortune of getting a small contribution from the Erasmus Smith Board which prevents it from being placed under the National Board?—Yes, we are a poor school, but I do not regard the contribution from Erasmus Smith Board as a misfortune.

8561. What do Christian Brothers have done for their clever boys should he come here?—Every facility should be given to the admission of such boys here as day boys.

Mr. Taile.—I hope it will not be at the expense of the master.

Mr. James Hart sworn and examined.

Mr. James
Hart.

8562. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Are you the Head Master of St. Mary's Parochial School?—Well, strictly speaking, I am not.

8563. But you are actually master?—Yes.

8564. What number of pupils have you?—We never have 60, but there is an average attendance of 50 or over.

8565. Does that include boys and girls?—Boys and girls. The attendance in the infant department is about 50. The teachers are myself and two women. There is one head teacher and an assistant.

8566. Your school is elementary?—Yes.

8567. Are you a qualified teacher?—Yes.

8568. Where did you train?—In Kildare-street.

8569. What is your class?—First class.

8570. When did you leave the training school?—In 1877.

8571. When it was under the Church Education Society?—Yes.

8572. You are not classified under the National Board?—No; I should not wish it.

8573. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you afraid of the test?—No, but I should not wish to lose £50 a year.

8574. How is that?—I should have an average attendance of over 50 before I could have it. My wife now teaches the girls, and under the National Board I should have to teach all. I could not have an assistant without having an average attendance of 70. Not having an attendance of over 50, my wife's salary would be lost.

8575. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What salary do you get?—I get £60 myself between the parish and the Erasmus Smith's Board, and my wife gets £44.

8576. How is your wife paid?—£35 from the local source, and £19 from the other sources.

8577. How much do your own entire emoluments amount to?—£60 from the Erasmus Smith's Board, and £30 from local sources.

8578. Do the local sources include the endowment?—Yes.

8579. Dr. TRAILL.—Could not the local endowments make up the difference between the National Board grants and the present salaries of your wife and yourself?—They could not, for they have enough already to do to pay £50 a year and £24.

8580. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If you were a classified teacher under the National Board—say a second-class teacher—you would have £56 a year and results fees, which come to about 13s. per head.

The Rev. Mr. Campbell.—His wife is to be considered.

8581. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—He gets £30 from the Erasmus Smith Board, and £19 for his wife. That is £49, and if the schools were made a mixed school, and you joined the National Board, you would get a salary and results fees, which, even at 1s. per head all round, would be £13 10s., amounting, with the salary, to £58 10s., as against £49 which you get now, so Erasmus Smith's Board are throwing away

£49 per annum, only with the effect of enabling you to decline £28 10s. from the National Board.

Mr. Hart.—I don't want to get under the Board at all.

8582. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you children of all denominations attending the school?—Yes.

8583. How many Presbyterians?—Eight or nine.

8584. What is the nature of the religious instruction given in the school?—The Bible and the Church Catechism.

8585. Do you teach the Catechism yourself?—I do. I don't teach it to any children who object to it.

8586. You observe the conscience clause?—Yes. The Presbyterians, Methodists, or other denominations are not taught religious instruction unless their parents wish.

8587. Have you consulted the parents of Presbyterian children?—Yes.

8588. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you teach the Presbyterian Catechism?—No.

March 21, 1888

Mr. James Hart.

THE RANELAGH INSTITUTION (continued), and THE MARIST BROTHERS' SCHOOL, ATHLONE.

Most Rev. Dr. Woodlock, Lord Bishop of Arlath and Clonmacnoise, sworn and examined.

8589. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Your lordship's diocese are the united dioceses of Arlath and Clonmacnoise?—Yes.

8590. How long have you been Bishop?—Nearly nine years.

8591. Your lordship has heard the evidence given here to-day in reference to the endowments existing here?—Yes.

8592. Is there anything you wish to say in reference to them?—I have a very strong view in reference to the Incorporated Society, which has the management of this institution. I don't want to say a word against this institution; but, on the contrary, if the funds which support it were three times what they are, and that it met the views of the Protestants of Athlone, I should only be happy to see it well conducted according to their wishes; but I have something to say to the Incorporated Society, which has received very large funds from the public purse—£1,600,000, or more than one million and a-half sterling, and I make this statement from a book which I think is correct, and which gives reports in reference to the working of the Society, and I say, that having regard to the fact that from time to time the Incorporated Society has received such large sums for the purpose of promoting education, it seems hard that in a town such as Athlone, where five-sixths—perhaps not so much—where four-fifths of its population are Catholics, no provision whatever has been made to enable us to promote education amongst our people where there is such a fine endowment for the promotion of education amongst Protestants. We have at considerable expense within the last three or four years introduced the Marist Brothers to Athlone, and they are now doing here what they have done so well in England and Scotland and what is so eminently needed in a town like Athlone, giving education to the upper and middle classes. They have sent up boys to the Science and Art Department and to the Intermediate Examinations, and, on the whole, they have succeeded in attracting to themselves a large number of boys.

8593. What buildings have they?—They have been living in a house which we purchased from Dr. Gleeson. We got a lease for 205 years from Mr. Dames-Longworth, but the building is totally insufficient for the purpose of the school. Seventy-four boys are going to this school, which, as a building, has much more the character of a private house. We have also to find accommodation for the residence of the Brothers in the same building.

8594. How is the expense of maintaining the Brothers obtained?—Some of the Brothers have charge of the National school, which is erected on part of the original tithes, now leased to local trustees for the purpose. Three of the Brothers teach in the National school and four in the other school. The expense of the Brothers is borne by the school fees and by the salaries allowed by the National Board of Education. They are paid as salaried teachers.

8595. There are two schools?—Yes; some of the Brothers are classified teachers under the National Board. They went in for classification after they came here. One had been classified before he joined the Order. The teachers for the Intermediate School are not classified.

8596. How are they maintained?—By the school fees and by the generosity of the people of the town who purchased the premises, fitted them up, and furnished them, at a cost of about £2,000.

8597. Was that made up by local subscriptions?—Yes, I went from door to door with some of the trustees and collected subscriptions towards getting up this place. I also borrowed some money from the Board of Works. The National Board helped to build the National school.

8598. The National Board could not give help towards the Intermediate school?—No.

8599. Dr. TRAILL.—Is the National school a vested school?—It is vested in trustees. The Catholic Bishops do not wish the schools vested in the Commissioners, but allow them to be vested in local trustees, on certain conditions.

8600. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Your school is vested in trustees; and, therefore, you were entitled to get a building grant?—Yes, for the building of the National school.

8601. Lord Justice NAUM.—How are the trustees nominated?—The mode of nomination is provided by the rules of the National Board. The lease was executed by the Rev. Mr. Martin and me to the local trustees. We held under Mr. Dames-Longworth.

8602. Then the school which you have under the National Board is provided for by a State grant?—It was built in part by the Board's grant, and is supported in part by the salaries paid to the teachers.

8603. What number of pupils attend?—The Brothers only get charge of the National school last year. The average number in attendance last year was 194; but allowance must be made for a visitation of measles. The average daily attendance might practically be set down at between 200 and 220.

8604. Does that represent all the Catholic children?—No; the number on the rolls is 240. [I am not sure whether this is the number on the rolls, as given to me and stated by me, but I shall inquire, if the Commissioners wish]. Before the Marist Brothers came we had an excellent teacher. He was highly qualified, classified as first-class, or first of second. He had only an average of 100 in attendance. We have now an average of about 194. The old buildings were condemned, and the Commissioners gave us a grant for a new site. It seems to me that what is really wanted is an extension of the Intermediate School premises.

8605. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What are these premises?—A private house which had belonged to Dr. Gleeson, and which the Catholics of the town of both parishes purchased. We contracted a loan to help us to purchase them, and the Brothers of the Intermediate School are now in them.

8606. In whom are they vested?—In the Rev. Mr. Martin and me.

8607. And the funds for the purchase were provided by voluntary subscriptions?—Yes, and by the Committee of the town. We borrowed money from the Board of Works and from the bank. I fully expect that the school will more than pay its way.

8608. What fees do you charge?

The Rev. Mr. Martin.—£4, £3, and £2, according to class.

8609. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The average daily attendance at the Intermediate school is 75 boys? Bishop Woodlock.—Yes.

March 24, 1892.

Most Rev. Dr.
Woodlock.

8610. What provision is there for female education?—A National school, and a Convent school for boarders.

8611. What order of nuns?—Les Sœurs de la Sainte Union. They have a boarding school for young ladies.

8612. That is a good class of school?—Yes; the National school is not in charge of those nuns. The building was condemned, and it has been pulled down. The Board have, in fact, now given us a grant to re-build the female and infant school, which will be under the charge of the sisters. The school is now a temporary one, and under a teacher not highly classified.

To return to the Boys' Intermediate School.—The premises at present are completely inadequate for the purposes for which they are required—the schools are over-crowded, and the Brothers living in the same house. If we had £3,000 or £4,000 we could erect buildings which would be suitable. We would have an increased attendance, which would render necessary the building of an Intermediate school, at a probable cost of £1,000. We also require a laboratory for teaching of practical chemistry. The probable cost of fitting up and furnishing it would be about £500. The additional staff necessary would mean an annual increase in the expenditure of £200. I believe that boys would come to the school from both sides of the river. At present we have three country boys from the Comraght side, and six from this side of the river. The population of Athlone is 4,000. The number of non-Catholics is, I understand, about 100.

8613. Rev. Dr. McEneaney.—Is this the principal school available for the intermediate education of Catholics in Athlone?—It is.

8614. It is attended exclusively by Catholics?—Yes.

8615. There is no public endowment for the intermediate education of Catholics in Athlone?—No. It is only four years since this school has been opened.

8616. Is there a considerable want amongst Catholics in Athlone for intermediate education?—Yes—for the study of the French language, a school in which boys may be educated for the public services for merchants' offices and for various other positions in life. One of my laymen teaches Latin in the school two hours a day.

8617. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Is there no Greek taught in the school?—I don't encourage them to go on learning Greek. I prefer that such as require Greek should learn it in a regular college, and that this school should be kept for the boys, for whom it is chiefly intended.

8618. Dr. TRAILL.—Your lordship made a claim on the funds of the Incorporated Society on the ground that they had received £1,000,000. Can you tell us are there any public funds in their hands now?—I don't know. They may have spent their own pocket and spent out of the public pocket.

8619. Can you refer us to any book in reference to it?—There was a book published by Gill and a committee of Catholic gentlemen.

8620. We took a great deal of evidence in Dublin and traced every item of money which they had, and we found that there was no public money now in their hands.—There was a bequest of Baron Vryhovetz of £24,000 and another bequest of £40,000. That was £24,000. Is it fair that the Incorporated Society should spend the public money and economise their own?

8621. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—This Ransleigh endowment seems to have been a special local endowment by a particular person, of which they were made trustees. We have not been able to find out that this benefit got even its full share. The endowment is £1,500 per annum in round numbers—£800 for this and £200 for Roscommon. Mr. Baile and his assistants get £240, and the buildings are maintained, so that Athlone has not got even all the private money to which it was entitled. We went through the money matters in Dublin, and found that the Society spent all the public money they got.

Mr. Baile.—I think this institution costs £200 a year.

8622. Dr. TRAILL (to Dr. Woodlock).—I suppose your lordship, after hearing the evidence as to Lord Ransleigh's bequest, would not think of making a claim against it now? I think that after reading this document you must see that it was intended for Protestant boys?—Yes.

8623. Rev. Dr. McEneaney.—If the resources of your Brothers could be enlarged by giving them a share of public endowments they would be able to provide more ample accommodation than they have at present for the education of Catholic boys?—Yes.

8624. Are they at present very much hampered?—Yes, in point of space, and they require greater facilities and appliances for the work they are carrying on.

8625. Dr. TRAILL.—Do they prepare boys for the Intermediate Examinations?—They do. They have already made a beginning. I think they sent five or six, or perhaps ten boys to them.

Canon Meehan, S.S.—You presented yourselves, and six passed.

Most Rev. Dr. Woodlock.—We have a local committee who kindly assist Mr. Martin and me when we want money from the bank. They assist as in obtaining loans. I should be happy to see enriched under some such management as that which your lordship's Commission provided for the Swords School. I would place it in charge of the Bishop's Administrator of St. Mary's Parish and of the parish priest of St. Peter's, assisted by a small committee as in Swords.

8626. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—If we cannot give you money we may be able to save you money. We can form an incorporated body to hold property devoted to educational purposes with perpetual succession. Your school is a Roman Catholic foundation, and we have no jurisdiction except with your own written consent. If you give us particulars of the property and the heads of what you wish should be done we shall be glad to do whatever you think advisable.

The Most Rev. Dr. Woodlock.—I don't know what funds are at your disposal. If you could make a building grant of £3,000, £3,000, £4,000, or £5,000, or an annual sum we should then be very happy to put our institution in legal form.

8627. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Our object at present is to obtain evidence as to the wants of the locality. The great want here seems to be intermediate education, we were fortunate in being able to give some money to Father McNeely, at Swords, but here I know of no fund available for Roman Catholic education.

8628. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Did you receive any grant from the Science and Art Department for instruments?—I think they got £35.

8629. Dr. TRAILL.—Mr. Baile did not get any grant from that department for instruments.

Mr. Baile.—I said I should prefer my own instruments, and the instruments in the school are my own.

8630. The Rev. Dr. McEneaney.—The instruments granted by the Science and Art Department remain the property of the Department?—Yes, every year the Inspector comes round.

The Rev. Thomas Martin, Administrator of St. Mary's Parish, examined.

8631. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—You have been connected with St. Mary's School?—Yes, since its foundation.

8632. The Bishop looks forward to the Intermediate school being able to maintain itself?—We have to guarantee the Brothers a certain sum for their support. That sum comes out of the fees of the school and is supplemented by the people.

8633. Then the gentlemen who would be responsible for the funds are the local committee?—Yes.

Rev. Thomas

March 24, 1888.

Rev. Thomas Martin.

8634. What is the expense of the school?—At present there are four brothers engaged, and they receive £50 each.

8635. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—They live in community?—Yes, there are three brothers attached to the National schools, but their salaries are not equal to their expenses. They are only getting £25 each at present. They only passed the first examination.

8636. Are you under terms to make that up to £100?—According as they classify.

8637. Are the local committee to provide £50 for each?—Yes, they are to increase the salary to £100. We have to furnish the whole establishment. We have to repair the furniture and also to repair the buildings.

8638. Your gross expenditure comes to something like £400 per annum?—Yes, and more. The support of the Brothers costs more than £400, and then there is the cost of the repairs of the establishment.

8639. It would be between £400 and £500 a year?—Yes.

8640. What is the rent of the premises?—£45.

8641. For the National school and all?—Yes. The use for the National school is supposed to be free, but then it is on the premises.

8642. What are the fees?—About £50 a year. The greater number of the children are free. The fees for the Intermediate school are £4, £3, and £2. The higher fees are for the more advanced boys.

8643. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Previous to the establishment of this school was there any attempt to meet the demand of Catholics for intermediate education?—A priest made an attempt but it was a failure.

8644. This school provides intermediate education for a large number of boys who, otherwise, could not get any?—Yes.

8645. How many day boys are there?—Seventy-five.

8646. Do you think that the numbers would increase if your funds were increased?—Yes.

8647. What are the ages of these boys?—From twelve to sixteen. Some are younger.

8648. Professor DODDGEY.—Of seventy-five, ten entered for the intermediate examinations last year?—Yes.

8649. How many this year?—Many more. I could not exactly say, perhaps three times as many as last year. Twelve were presented for the Science and Art Department examinations, and ten out of the twelve passed.

8650. Dr. TRAILL.—Are any of the boys living out, aside the town?—Some come and lodge in the town.

8651. Have you any boys up to eighteen or twenty years of age?—Few are up to twenty—some are up to eighteen. Some of those boys were neglected in their youth.

8652. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Where do the boys mostly come from?—From the town.

8653. What class of boys are they—sons of shopkeepers and farmers?—Yes.

8654. Professor DODDGEY.—Are any of them sons of bankers?—Yes, one.

8655. What professions are those boys educated for?—For mercantile pursuits, or anything else they choose.

8656. Have you any theological students?—No.

8657. It is principally a day school?—Yes.

8658. Do you teach drawing?—No.

8659. Have you classes in connection with the Science and Art Department?—Yes.

The Very Rev. Canon MONAHAN, F.R., Banagher, Vice-General of the Diocese, examined.

8660. Lord Justice FRIZZGROVE.—Can you give us a statement as to the educational requirements of the laity?—First, I wish to know if I may assume that Lord Banagher's intentions or the main objects of his bequest since it was passed over to the Incorporated Society, are the objects of that society?

8661. The Incorporated Society hold the property for the purposes of Lord Banagher's schools here in Athlone and in Roscommon. I believe they have about a hundred pieces of property in different parts of Ireland held on different trusts.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—You may assume that the Incorporated Society hold the property on the trusts of Lord Banagher's will.

Canon MONAHAN.—Although it was originally a private endowment it is now administered by a public body and for public purposes.

8662. Lord Justice FRIZZGROVE.—Not for public purposes. It was vested in the Society by Act of Parliament of 1 George III., vesting the estates passed by the Earl of Banagher for erecting and supporting two charity schools in Athlone and two day schools in Roscommon.

8663. Dr. TRAILL.—It was a private Act.

Canon MONAHAN.—It appears to me, from the evidence given here, that practically this school belongs to the Incorporated Society, for, according to the evidence, the intentions of Lord Banagher have not been carried out as all. It has practically merged into the Incorporated Society, and it has merged into it although it had a private origin. First of all, the master should be in Holy Orders, and that condition has not been kept.

8664. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you anxious to have that carried out?—Oh, I am not anxious about it.

8665. Do you think that is a reason why they should vary the trusts of the endowment and give it over to another denomination?—That is one reason.

8666. Lord Justice FRIZZGROVE.—The Act provides that the Incorporated Society shall "out of the yearly profits of the lands pay to a clergyman, for the time being, having care of souls in Athlone, £50 a year for ever, and the like sum to the minister of Roscommon, and out of the remainder of the yearly profits of the lands build good houses in or near Athlone and Roscommon for the reception, maintenance and education of so many poor Protestant boys and girls, as the clear income of the lands will properly maintain." These trusts bind the Society.

Canon MONAHAN.—I put the question to the head master whether he was in Holy Orders, and he said that such a condition was never insisted on.

8667. Dr. TRAILL.—Under that Act it was provided that two clergymen were to be paid £50 a year each, instead of requiring the head master to be in Holy Orders.

Canon MONAHAN.—I am looking to Lord Banagher's intentions, and, according to the bequest, the students admitted should be Protestants.

Mr. BAILEY.—I have nothing to do with the religion of the boys as they come here. I only get an order from the Incorporated Society to admit such boys. I have nothing to do with the appointment of them as Protestants.

Canon MONAHAN.—I only wish to say that the conditions contained in Lord Banagher's will have not been observed. The admission of boys here is not confined to Protestants. The head master has admitted that Presbyterian boys have been admitted.

8668. Dr. TRAILL.—Are they not Protestants?—I don't think they are. When Lord Banagher made his will did the word "Protestant" include Presbyterian?

8669. Dr. TRAILL.—What the head master said was that when the boys came in here they had to be taught as Church children, and considered as such.

Canon MONAHAN.—The boys were to be over seven years of age and under twelve. The head master gave evidence that boys from ten years of age to seventeen were admitted here, and no provision is made for poor boys. There again Lord Banagher's intentions have been departed from, and practically the school belongs to the Incorporated Society. Then the children were to be taught the true religion, and I take the true religion to be the Christian religion, and on that ground we can fairly rest a claim to a portion of the funds.

8676. Dr. TRAILL.—We should look to the evidence as to the intentions of Lord Ranelagh's will.

Canon Mendenhall.—The Incorporated Society has taken a different view, and has subjected the endowment to its own rules. The Incorporated Society have departed altogether from Lord Ranelagh's intentions, and my contention is that this school comes in under the general fund of the Incorporated Society, and as such we believe we may fairly lay claim to a portion of that fund.

8677. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you hold that a bequest left for Roman Catholic purposes might be confiscated and applied to Protestant uses if its original terms were not strictly carried out?—If there were a parallel case.

8678. This is a private Protestant foundation, and your contention is that the intentions of the founder have been departed from, and therefore that a portion of the funds should be applied to Roman Catholic purposes. If a public body like the Incorporated Society are entrusted by Act of Parliament with the fund, and bring it under new regulations altogether, though still for Protestant purposes, then you say you have a right to lay claim to a portion of the fund for Roman Catholic purposes?—I think that would make a great difference so as to form a judgment as to what ought to be done; if the case were perfectly parallel.—

8674. Have you got a Royal School there?—Yes.

8675. Is Banagher your parish?—Yes.

8676. Rev. Dr. McLEOD.—You don't want to have the endowment of the Banagher School transferred to Athlone?—No, but if it were to be taken away from Banagher I should be glad to see Athlone getting it.

8677. Have you the Marist Brothers at Banagher?—No.

8678. Is there anything further that you wish to add?—No, except that I wish to refer to one point which his lordship, Dr. Woodlock, brought out, that is in reference to the parliamentary grants for the last 160 years. It seems to me that there might be some unexhausted funds arising from them.

8679. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We went into that subject in Dublin. The Incorporated Society were trusted by the Government as trustees with power to spend the money. Year by year they received the money. They had charge of chartered schools and they maintained them partly out of their own funds and partly out of the public grants, but there was no accumulation of income from either public or private funds. The money received appears to have been spent from year to year.

8680. Dr. TRAILL (to Canon Mendenhall).—Would you hold that with respect to all the grants made to you for National schools, your community should for all future time be called upon to account for them as public money?—I cannot see the application of the question.

8681. Dr. TRAILL.—The application is obvious. If money be granted from public sources, and be given over to individuals or to societies to be administered along with other funds which have been given for private purposes, is it for all future time to be accounted for as public money?—I say that we are accountable for the property as long as we have it.

8682. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—With regard to the Incorporated Society's schools the question is immaterial. There is no accumulation of public money in respect of Ranelagh. It would be a perfectly legitimate subject of inquiry whether they had spent their private endowment by spending the public endowment, but there is no accumulated fund, public or private. Aldermen Dillon and Mr. Canten went into the whole question in Dublin before me.

8683. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—There was £20,000 in the Court of Chancery in England, and £40,000 also, both private gifts.

The Rev. Canon Mendenhall.—Well, my lord, I think we have a claim to Erasmus Smith's Fund.

8684. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—That is a different matter. The only benefit given to this neighbourhood is a grant which the Board might withdraw at any time.

The Rev. Mr. Campbell.—I propose nothing as to that.

8685. Dr. TRAILL.—You are ready to take a National Board grant for that instead?—Yes.

8686. (To Canon Mendenhall).—Have you anything to say as to St. Mary's?—I think we have a claim to a portion of that. I find from a Commission which sat in 1834 that there were repeated interpositions by the Legislature in reference to the Erasmus Smith's Schools, and that they may now be considered as public institutions and as a public grant I think we should rest our claim on the members attending our school.

8687. Would you take the money with the conditions attached to it by Erasmus Smith?—Yes.

8688. He states his object to be "to propagate the Protestant faith according to the Scriptures," and under his charter it was provided that "the school-master shall publicly read the Scriptures and pray and catechise the children in Primæ Usher's Catechism." I don't say on those conditions.

8689. Have you a wish to carry out those intentions of Erasmus Smith?—I have not. Not the slightest regard has been paid to his intentions. I find that this advanced stage of the world these intentions have been departed from, and for the future these intentions are to be looked on as being administered, the intention of the donor being departed from.

8690. Are they looked on as Protestant institutions?—As Protestant institutions as administered or as Erasmus Smith's Schools. I don't know how you look on them.

8691. If a Protestant endowment is used for one Protestant purpose rather than for another, do you think it should become a Roman Catholic endowment?—I think that according to the terms of the Act we can advance a very fair claim to those endowments.

8692. Having regard to the spirit of the founder's intentions could you carry out those intentions by devoting the funds to Roman Catholic purposes?—The intention of the founder was to have the English language taught in the school.

8693. And the children were to be educated as Protestants?—Yes, but on that point, perhaps, the founders laboured under erroneous opinions or delusions.

8694. We ought to carry out their delusions, at this matter at least, whatever they were?—He speaks of the true religion, and I find in the same document the words "idolatry" and "superstition," and although they directed Protestant schools to be established I hold that the intention was to teach the Christian religion.

8695. You want to drop the words "Protestant" and "Christian religion" and to give the endowments to Roman Catholics. Erasmus Smith's intention was to predestinate; Lord Ranelagh's was not. Erasmus Smith said in effect:—"If you don't take it on my own terms you won't get it at all."

Rev. James Kelly, Administrator of St. Peter's Parish, Athlone, sworn.

March 15, 1888.

Rev. James
Kelly.

8598. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What do you wish to tell us?—There are two distinct parishes—St. Mary's on the Westmeath side and St. Peter's on the Roscommon side. The population is larger on St. Peter's side than on St. Mary's. In St. Peter's there is no provision for intermediate education.

8599. Do boys in St. Peter's parish go to St. Mary's school?—I am sure they do. I am not long here, but I know that there is no provision made for intermediate education. In making any future provision I think St. Peter's should be considered. There is only one school for St. Peter's in the town of Athlone and the girls' National school. As the Protestant rector has mentioned there are only 250 Protestants in St. Peter's parish.

8601. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How is the population divided?—In Connought, 3,691, and in Leinster, 3,545, exclusive of the military. There are at present 250 soldiers, but there is accommodation for 1,500.

8602. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—The average at present attending the National schools is 75 or 80?—That is about the average attending the male National school. The female National school is under the Sisters of Mercy, and the average is about 90.

8603. Do any of the boys require Intermediate Education?—Yes; but they have no opportunity of getting it in St. Peter's parish.

8604. Are any of the boys sent to boarding schools?—No.

8605. Is there a Diocesan school here?—No; there is one in Sligo.

8606. It used to be here?—It used to be at Sarsfield.

8607. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think there would be room for two Roman Catholic schools in Athlone, one on each side of the river?—Well, that is a thing I have not considered.

8608. Would not a second school have a tendency to injure the Marist school?—I dare say.

8609. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—If you had an endowment would you be able to work it on the Westmeath side?—The Bishop could manage that.

[The Rev. Mr. Kelly then referred to the appendix to the second report of the Commissioners of Education Inquiry, 1856—Parliamentary Papers, House of Commons, 1826-7, vol. xii., and said that two or three Catholic schools had disappeared. In Bolton-street there was an endowment of £50 a year connected with St. Michael's.]

8610. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—Was that an Intermediate or a primary school?—I say there were six Protestants in it and sixty-four Catholics.

8611. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Does it state where the endowment came from?—No.

8612. That was in Roscommon?—Yes. Then there was another Roman Catholic school in Connought-street. That had an endowment of £17 a year. Twenty-three males and five females, all Roman Catholics, attended it. There were no Protestants attending it. There was another school at Bastion-street described as having an endowment of £26 10s.

8710. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—It is a curious thing that nothing should have been known about this.

The Rev. Canon MOWLA.—That must have been Bastion-street.

8711. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—The endowments are put down as "eight shillings a quarter." Manifestly they are what the teachers got as school fees and not endowments.

Witness.—The rector of Anghrima appeared to state that one-third of those attending his school were Roman Catholics, and that they could be sent on here. That seems to be contrary to the intentions of Lord Rensleigh.

8712. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—He intended that the endowment should be for Protestants.

Witness.—And it now appears to be used for Catholics.

8713. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—We shall now visit the schools. Our Act of Parliament says that where the founder of any endowment has expressly provided for the education of children of the poorer classes of any locality the endowment for such education shall continue. This Rensleigh endowment was given for the endowment of free schools for poor Protestant boys and girls. The school for boys is here in Athlone and the school for girls is in Roscommon, and the management of the endowment has been transferred to the Incorporated Society which is a controlled body. We shall have carefully to consider the objects which the endowment was intended to serve. We must see that poor boys of this locality shall be admitted as day boys, and under favourable terms. This particular trust was for Protestants, not to convert Roman Catholics, but for those already Protestants. Protestants were the objects of the trust, and we must see that they get the benefit of it. As regards the Roman Catholic endowments, I may refer to what was done by this Commission in reference to the endowed school at Swords, and suggest that similar arrangements may be made here for the management of the schools in the hands of Roman Catholics. We can qualify them to obtain any money that may be made available through the State or otherwise. We see the great need that exists of further provision for Intermediate Education, but we cannot create money, nor divert money from its proper purpose, even for the purpose of supplying Intermediate Education when it is badly wanted.

The Inquiry then terminated.

May 12, 1888.

PUBLIC SITTING.—SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1888.

At the Courthouse, Londonderry.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice FRY, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.S.C., ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, JUN., was in attendance.

GWYN'S CHARITABLE INSTITUTION AND YOUNG'S BEQUEST.

CHRONICLE.

Mr. John Cooke appeared as Counsel for the trustees of the Young Bequest, and Mr. J. J. Sloss for the trustees of Gwyn's Institution.

Lord Justice FITZGERSON made an introductory statement.

Mr. J. J. Sloss.—I appear on behalf of the Gwyn trustees, who held a meeting on May 18, 1888, and passed a resolution approving generally of the draft scheme published by the Commissioners, and particularly approving of the principle of amalgamating the Gwyn and the Young Endowments. Mr. Cooke appears for the Young trustees to object to that, and it would be more convenient to hear what he has to say in the first instance.

Mr. J. Cooke.—I appear on behalf of the trustees of the Young endowment to object to the scheme. My clients recognize the ability with which the scheme has been prepared, but they think their views were not sufficiently before the Commission at the former sitting, and therefore ask a hearing of what they consider matters of principle in connection with the separate establishment of these endowments. The trustees of the Young endowment, one and all, are opposed to amalgamation with Gwyn's Institution, and especially the two trustees who are clergymen—the Rev. Robert Ross and the Rev. Robert Nevins. Unfortunately these gentlemen are absent in Scotland, but we have a statement of their views, which I shall read. The trustees of the Young endowment object to the amalgamation of Gwyn's Charitable Institution and the Educational Endowments founded under will of Joseph Young for the following amongst other reasons:—“(a) The same will not extend the usefulness thereof, in our opinion.”

8714, Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—The Young Institution has not got started at all, as I understand, so that there is no question of extending its usefulness.

Mr. Cooke.—The trustees say: “(b) The same is in effect a transfer of Young's property to Gwyn's Institution, and virtually a removal of it from the persons whom the testator himself selected by his will as best fitted to carry out his intention, inasmuch as the nominal representation given to the present trustees upon the proposed governing body is only four out of twenty-two members, and two out of the four are already on the Gwyn's Board. (c) Such amalgamation will practically result in the obliteration and absorption of the Young endowments by the Gwyn Institution. (d) The individuals of a smaller Board would take a much greater interest in the trust (especially when previously associated with it), and administer the same better than a larger body, who, to a great extent, look upon the position as honorary, and leave the duties to officials. (e) The existence of two distinct boards administering trusts with somewhat similar objects would promote a healthy rivalry in a place of the educational importance of Derry. (f) No saving of expense can be shown to justify such amalgamation.”

“In the event of an amalgamation being ultimately approved, we object to the governing body for the reasons already given, and hold that more power should be accorded to our endowment. We propose that in any matter affecting the expenditure or investments of the property of the Young endowment it shall be necessary to have the approval or consent of a majority of the present trustees of that endowment, viz.—the two ex-officio Governors and the two life Governors (and if the next proposal is adopted, the five Governors then referred to). We also propose that the said trustees should have the power of nominating five Governors in the room of any five (to be selected by lot or ballot) out of the representative Governors named, who should retire (or in the event of this not being accepted to), should have the right of filling the first five vacancies which arise.”

We did not file these objections in any cynical spirit, but on a matter of principle we think the charity can be administered better as a separate institution. Mr. Young clearly expressed his intention that it should be managed as a separate endowment; and unless it can be shown that overwhelming advantages are to result from amalgamation, there is no reason for it. The testator knew the Gwyn Institution. He saw its benefits and he saw its defects. The aim of showing that amalgamation would be advantageous lies on those who support it.

8715, Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I may save trouble by telling you that we consider the objects of the two funds to be distinct; one is entirely for boys, and the other for girls, and we are prohibited by our Act of Parliament from mixing them up. Therefore, in one sense, there can be no amalgamation. The real question is—Who are to be the governing body? If we can get a good governing body for the one institution why should it not be as good for the other? We are prepared, in framing the Scheme, to provide that there shall be no absorption of the Young charity by reason of its being placed under the same management as the Gwyn Institution.

Mr. Cooke.—I understand the Scheme to propose to conduct two wholly separate institutions under one governing body, and to control two wholly distinct charities by one board. There are only two arguments in favour of that. One is that you may save expense, and the second that you may not have material in Derry for constituting two good boards. We say that if you have two bodies in a place of the educational importance of Derry administering two separate charities, it would promote a healthy rivalry between them that should benefit the charities.

8716, Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What do you mean by rivalry? One body would have to provide for boys, and the other for girls.

Mr. Cooke.—There is sufficient comparison between them to create a healthy emulation, and, if you hand over the control of both those institutions to a numerous body, a result will ensue such as I believe took place in the case of the trustees of the Gwyn Institution, who went to sleep over the conduct of the charity, and only waked up to seek power to sell out the whole establishment. You have a variety of reasons in a place like Derry for keeping the two bodies distinct. As to the argument that you would save expense—where is the expense to be saved? Only by having the same building and the same secretary. The whole staff might be different, and it would be impossible to utilize either the building or the ground of the Gwyn Institution for the purposes of the Young charity. The secretary would require his salary to be increased if he acted for both charities, and there is nothing to prevent the two boards employing him on those terms at present. There is no expense for a board-room, because, if the Young Charity is to be carried out, a separate building must be erected. In reference to the saving of expense by utilizing the Gwyn premises, if the Gwyn board are going to sell their building and the plot on which it stands, it would seem undesirable to occupy premises of that class. Other similarly situated institutions took the reverse course. The Dublin Masonic Schools for boys and girls are managed by different boards, and the boys and girls occupy different grounds and buildings, one school is situated close to Dublin, and the other at Glasneagh, miles off. The Masonic School for boys is conducted by one board, and the school for girls by an entirely separate board.

8717. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—They have only one office and one secretary.

Mr. Cooke.—It is clearly a saving of expense if a secretary can be got to act for the two boards. We ask you to adopt these lines.

8718. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The scheme contemplates having the same body to elect governors of both institutions.

Mr. Cooke.—We would have no objection to representatives joining our board in the same way as in the Gwyn Institution.

8719. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—As I understood, some of the representatives would be the same persons even if we formed separate governing bodies. Remember the question is not the separation of the trust, but whether the governing body for both is to be the same.

Mr. Cooke.—I understood your lordship to ask whether we would allow or wish that the governors of our school should be elected in the same way as the governors of the Gwyn School.

8720. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Yes.

Mr. Cooke.—We have no objection whatever to sign against such a mode of election as you propose.

8721. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That is a step towards what I was asking. If you have a certain number of seats it means the same, and if you have a certain number of elected trustees, and the electing bodies are the same, unless they choose to elect different people your boards will become the same in spite of you.

Mr. Cooke.—There is no necessity for their being the same.

8722. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—There is no necessity for it, but if they are the same, don't you think their acts are just as likely to induce healthy criticism as if they were nominally distinct bodies? I have not heard of any advantage to be gained by keeping up a separate body for each place.

Mr. Cooke.—We say no advantage can be shown for amalgamation.

8723. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I must say that having the same officers and the same agent to manage the property would be a distinct advantage to my mind. Again, in the working of these charities you really have the same object in view in both. The joint management will save both expense and time and lead to a better selection of objects. Take a body consisting partly of boys and partly of girls. According to your proposal, the boys seek the benefits of the Gwyn charity, and when they have been elected by the Gwyn Governors, the Young Governors must go over the same ground again as regards the girls, or possibly each may not without regarding the benefits obtainable from the other charity. You get rid of all this by amalgamation.

Mr. Cooke.—The founders' intentions were to have these institutions conducted on a separate basis.

8724. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I am with you entirely that the objects are distinct. Mr. Young clearly intended that there should be a Young School for girls, and that there will be in any case.

Mr. Cooke.—It may be said there will, but we would like to know how this scheme is to work. What representation have we on this governing body?

8725. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That is another question altogether. If you look at your representation in the scheme in the light of a representation of the Young charity as a sort of separate property, it seems entirely inadequate, but it is to be always borne in mind that the object of forming the body is not to represent any particular person, but to form the body that will best administer the charity. It looks, I admit, as if it tied on the Young charity to Gwyn's.

Mr. Cooke.—It really is handing over these funds to the Gwyn Institution to supplement their own.

8726. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—No; they could not apply our penny of Young's Endowment to the purposes of Gwyn's Charity.

Mr. Cooke.—No, of course not.

8727. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If we had in the Gwyn charity a perfectly managed boys' school under an extraordinary governing body, and a sum of money was given to establish a similar school for the benefit of girls of the same class, prima facie, the best thing to do would be to place it in the same hands.

Mr. Cooke.—We say that it would be very much better to have the two institutions working in rivalry, as it were, for there is great fear that notwithstanding all that has been said the Gwyn Governors may go to sleep in the future as they have done in the past; that is one reason why we prefer a separate governing body. Then again the only additional power you have given us in respect of the large endowment is two clergymen associated with us in carrying out the management of the Schools, for the real governing body of the Young charity, according to your Act of Parliament are the persons in whom the fund is vested.

8728. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The governing body for the purposes of the Act will be in future not the Messrs. Cooke, but the body to be elected in the manner prescribed.

Mr. Cooke.—The regulation and management of the school are vested in the Messrs. Cooke, and the ministers are not given control of the funds in any way. The administration of the funds of the endowment is clearly in the hands of the trustees.

8729. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The estate is vested in the Messrs. Cooke, but their trust is to pay over the money for the purposes of the school to four trustees, and the management of the school is entirely in the hands of those four—the Messrs. Cooke and the two clergymen.

Mr. Cooke.—You propose to raise that number to seven.

8730. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Adding three to be co-opted by the others, and three more in case subscriptions should come in. Although the testator died in 1843, the Young Endowment was not made the subject of any inquiry until 1854, and even now nothing has been done to start the charity.

Mr. Cooke.—Referring to the number of the Board, it is the opinion of the existing trustees that a small board would take a far greater interest in administering a charity of this kind than a large board such as you propose. When you have a large body of that kind it is always left to two or three members to do the whole business.

May 27, 1886.

8731. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Any large body having the administration of a charity generally do as the Incorporated Society does—appoint a committee of management that has been found to work satisfactorily. If desirable you can have a separate committee to manage each school.

Mr. Cooke.—Appointing sub-committees to manage the two endowments, we say, shows the objection to the whole thing. Now, let me call attention to this fact, that the testator had before him the existing Gwyn Institution when he made the provision for this endowment. He saw how that institution worked, and he could have given this fund to supplement that institution if he so desired; but he did not do so, and he provided that it should not be expended in the same extravagant way as the Gwyn charity.

8732. Lord Justice NASH.—Where does he say anything about extravagance. I cannot find it.

Mr. Cooke.—He saw it in the Gwyn Institution.

8733. Dr. TRAILL.—I have looked through the will and I can't find it out.

Mr. Cooke.—He saw the large sums that had been expended.

8734. Dr. TRAILL.—How do you make that out?

Mr. Cooke.—People that lived with him knew it.

8735. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I am afraid we cannot work out his intention of building a house for £500.

Mr. Cooke.—We won't ask you; but I would ask you to infer that the testator never intended his money should go to Gwyn's Institution. There is no reason for handing over the management of this endowment to Gwyn's Governors, on the contrary the way they have conducted their own institution shows that it should not be handed over. They did not ask for it on the preliminary inquiry, and we gave evidence against it. Under those circumstances we say we should have a separate governing body, and that the two endowments should be managed by separate bodies. I come now to the governing body. I ask is it fair to have only give the representation you have given us. I have looked over several Schemes prepared by you in other cases. In the Dublin Working Boys' Home you constituted a board of 13 altogether.

8736. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is a case in which the trustees of two funds came in and asked us to unite the institutions.

Mr. Cooke.—And this is a case in which I wish to show reasons why the endowments should be considered separately. In that case the two Harding trustees named four others, six in all, and they selected a Committee of the Dublin Working Boys' Home of a similar number, and the 12 manage the endowments dealt with in the Scheme. If the government of Young's Charity is to be joined to the Gwyn Institution, you should give us equal representation at least in the same way.

8737. Lord Justice NASH.—There are four ex-officio governors proposed and sixteen representation. How many do you say should represent the Young Endowment?

Mr. Cooke.—We say five.

8738. Lord Justice NASH.—In addition to the two present trustees?

Mr. Cooke.—Yes. But it is distinctly understood that I have been instructed to oppose amalgamation altogether.

8739. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If you oppose amalgamation, tell us what you propose as your separate governing body.

Mr. Cooke.—Our wish with regard to a separate body would be to have a body of twelve in all. We have no objection whatever to elect a board on the lines we suggested in our draft Scheme.

8740. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is the Fountain-street Congregation still existing?

Mr. Cooke.—No; it has been transferred.

8741. Dr. TRAILL.—Is the fact that it has a large endowment your reason for anticipating that there won't be subscriptions towards the institution?

Mr. Cooke.—I think it would be perfectly possible that subscriptions would come in. Some churches are ready to subscribe largely.

8742. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If there is to be an amalgamation, tell us what body you propose to constitute. I suppose you would retain the seven in the original Scheme?

Mr. Cooke.—Yes.

8743. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—You propose a body of twelve?

Mr. Cooke.—I would have representative governors selected from the Presbyteries of Derry and the Diocesan Council of Derry.

8744. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have your trustees considered this proposal?

Mr. Cooke.—Yes.

8745. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are we to understand that the ex-officio trustees wish to admit members of the Diocesan Council?

Mr. Cooke.—Well, in a general way they have considered the matter, and they said they would have no objection to them joining in a similar manner as on the Gwyn board. I do not mean, however, to include the Rev. Robert Ross and the Rev. Robert New.

8746. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You see it is rather remarkable that having the Gwyn Institution with a mixed governing body before his eyes, Mr. Young constituted an exclusively Presbyterian governing body for this endowment; and it is a serious question whether we can now introduce members of another denomination.

Mr. Cooke.—It is a matter of very great weight. I have a letter from the Rev. Dr. Ross here. We propose to have these seven in our Scheme as Governors, and we have no objection to make the number up to twelve by having representative governors. Here is the letter:—

"Granville, Barwickshire, N. B.,
May 10th, 1886.

"Messrs. J. and J. Cooke.

"GENTLEMEN,—I have to thank you for your kind letter and for the opportunity you have given me of expressing my objections to the objections and amendments to the Draft Scheme of the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Commission, which we prepared and forwarded in August last. I have now changed the opinions I entertained relative to the above Scheme some few days ago when it was before us for consideration. I still think the objections to the Scheme which we forwarded to the Commission are still, and that the amendments we propose are reasonable and just. I believe the usefulness of the Educational Endowments founded by the will of the late Mr. Young will be seriously impaired by the proposed amalgamation of these endowments with Gwyn's Institution, that is that the endowments would benefit a larger number of destitute female children in the city and suburbs if administered and managed by the trustees appointed by Mr. Young's Will than they will do if the charity comes under the management of the Governing Body to be created by the Scheme of the Commission. I am also of opinion that the Young Endowments, according to the provisions of the Draft Scheme, will not be used in accordance with the intention of the founder. There is no evidence in the will, at least as far as I can now remember its provisions, that any portion of the funds were to be expended in 'enabling and encouraging deserving and capable foundations to receive their education longer than they could otherwise do'—that is, longer than the term of years to be spent in the school, or that any portion of the funds may be given to meet the cost of special or more advanced education or training than that provided in the school. And it is certain that the creation of a Loan Fund from which may be drawn tuition of girls who desire, but are unable without such aid, to obtain an education at a higher school, training institution, or college, is entirely foreign to the intention and wish of the founder of the charity. It would, in my opinion, be a deliberate application of the endowments to ends for which they were not left in trust, and would, to a large extent, frustrate the intention of the testator. The Draft Scheme has been prepared without due regard for the intention and wish of Mr. Young in founding this charity. He meant to relieve the wants of poor girls during the years of their helplessness and poverty, and to give them such education as would qualify them for such situations as persons in their circumstances would naturally be expected to seek, not to enter colleges and obtain degrees and become members of learned professions. This is to benefit the few capable ones who are able to help themselves at the expense of the many less gifted ones who need the aid provided by this charity. The Scheme furnishes no evidence that the Young Endowment would be more economically managed by the new Governing Body than by the Governors mentioned in Mr. Young's will, or that the management would confer greater benefit on those for whom the charity was provided. I regard the Scheme as an unnecessary interference with the will and intentions of a generous philanthropist and friend of the poor, and its operation would, I fear, be productive of very uncertain good, while it expends a Scheme prepared by the trustees, which would not be essential in its operation and intention, and which would, as far as practically, carry out the intention of the testator. Regretting my inability to be present at the meeting of the Educational Endowment Commission on Saturday,

"I remain,

"Gentlemen,

"Ever faithfully yours,

"R. Ross."

8747. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—He wants to prohibit the spending of any money on clever girls in giving them a more advanced education than they can get in the school.

Mr. Cooke.—What he says is, "he meant to relieve the wants of poor girls during the years of their helplessness and poverty, and to give them such education as would qualify them for such situations as persons in their circumstances would naturally be expected to seek, not to enter colleges and obtain degrees and become members of learned professions."

8748. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—He shows he does not know the intentions of the testator, for he states the testator's intention to be to provide clothing and education for destitute poor children. There is nothing about destitute children in the will.

Mr. Cooke.—He said the founder wished to sweet a school to clothe and educate so many children under the age of sixteen.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Yes, and he puts in the word "destitute," which is not in the will.

8749. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—All his points are distinctly narrow. His objections are not so much against amalgamation as against giving a good education. He says, "there is no evidence in the will that any portion of the funds may be given to meet the cost of special or more advanced education or training." He would not allow you to assist a clever girl who would show an aptitude for education and a desire to rise above the level of a servant. He thinks he would be going beyond his limit if he allowed you to give better teaching. He says, "It is certain that the creation of a loan fund, from which may be drawn the tuition of girls who desire, but are unable without such aid, to obtain an education at a higher school, training institution, or college, is entirely foreign to the intention and aim of the founder of the charity. It would, in my opinion, be deliberate application of the endowments to such for which they were not left in trust, and would, to a large extent, frustrate the intention of the testator." But this will has left it open to liberal-minded trustees to give a proper education to deserving objects. The trustee does not say his endowment is for children of the lower orders, or for elementary education, and yet this trustee is of opinion that he ought to cut it down to this level and give no advanced education.

Mr. Cooke.—His idea is that the charity should not be merely diverted from the poorer classes of society.

8750. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Why do you say diverted? The founder does not say anything about the poorer classes of society.

Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Mr. Ross sums up the whole thing in the next sentence—"He meant to relieve the wants of poor girls during the years of their helplessness and poverty, and to give them such education as would qualify them for such situations as persons in their circumstances would naturally be expected to seek, not to enter colleges and obtain degrees and become members of learned professions." That is the paroloid idea of a charity school.

8751. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are you aware of his objection to amalgamation is founded on an opposition to pass under a mixed governing body a purely Presbyterian charity?

Mr. Cooke.—So far as I can state, we were willing to supplement the trustees by election. I have not authority direct from the Rev. Dr. Ross to answer the question as to how he proposes to control the governing body.

8752. Dr. TRAILL.—Is it intended that it should be confined to Presbyterians?

Mr. Cooke.—There is nothing about that.

8753. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Well, looking at this will, it is clear, from the fact of his giving large summes, that the testator knew he was ultimately dealing with a large property. The only limit is that the trustees were not to spend more than £500 in providing a schoolhouse, and all the children were to be educated in that house. I would gather that the testator's idea was "I want a substantial house costing £500, for as many girls as the funds will educate. I am going to spend £1,500 a year on them." He does not say they are to be children of the lower orders, and if the will was carried out in its entirety, his idea would seem to be an institution like Finsbury Asylum in Dublin, where a large income would be spent on the institution of a comparatively small institution, and not a more charity school. Mr. Ross's idea would seem to be that he only intended to qualify the girls for domestic service.

Mr. Cooke.—The question is whether the funds are to be devoted to a class of poor girls, or are to go to supplement middle class people in getting a better education.

8754. Dr. TRAILL.—Suppose a girl of the poorer class displays great ability and aptitude for learning, is she not to be forwarded in life?

Mr. Cooke.—I don't think that was Mr. Young's intention. I go on what his intention was as expressed in the will, and what it was known to be, and if we are to be confined to what his intention was, as derived from his will, I think it was entirely confined to the clothing and maintenance of children.

8755. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—You could not spend £1,000 a year on clothing and feeding the number of children who could live in a house costing £500.

Mr. Cooke.—But it is to be said that the poorer children of Derry, who stand more in need of this charitable endowment than persons of the middle class, who are to be forced into a university, are to be put out of consideration.

8756. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Certainly not, but I confess to a preference, as objects of charity, to children left destitute by the death, or misfortune of their fathers who were in a good position in life, over children who have been all their lives in poverty. To my mind there is no child so poor or so deserving of assistance as the child whose father was not poor in his lifetime, but who left nothing behind him for his family.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—It was evidently Mr. Young's intention to make provision for children of respectable parents who have been reduced to poverty, and there are none poorer than these. The State provides for the children of the poor, but it does not provide for children of the better class for whom their parents are unable to make provision.

Mr. Cooke.—I am not to be taken as arguing how I would frame the scheme.

May 15, 1886.

8757. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—No, but you are putting a limit on the intentions of Mr. Young.

Mr. COOKE.—I say the intention of Mr. Young was not primarily the case you put at all. His intention was to clothe and maintain as many children as the fund which he left enabled them to do. That necessarily conveys the idea that they were in need of clothing and maintenance and support.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—But not that they belonged to the poorer classes, for unfortunately there are many more destitute than the children of the poor.

8758. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—How many children could be boarded in a house built for £1,000?

Mr. COOKE.—I think eighteen or twenty.

8759. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—You propose to devote £1,000 for the erection of a school-house in which some 30 children could be provided for and educated at the cost of some £40 apiece.

Mr. COOKE.—But this house would only be a commencement.

8760. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—The will fixed £500, and you propose £1,000 as the limit of expenditure on the erection of the house. It is quite clear that Mr. Young meant to have a school in which the children would be maintained and educated, and the fund is ample to supply a want to children who need it most—children of a middle class reduced to poverty. There are many such institutions—Marston's School, and others in Dublin.

Mr. COOKE.—But that is arguing only on the limit of £1,000.

8761. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—It is arguing it on the basis on which you put 2, for £500 at the date of his will was building for about £1,000 now. I find he gave £500 for the erection of the school-house, for the purpose of clothing, maintaining and educating so many female children under the age of 16 years, as the amount of the fund would admit of. That charity secures a boarding-school—and £1,000 would build a good substantial house that would hold at least 30 children, and the fund would give a first-class education to that number. This shows he did not intend a number of walls and scraps to get what Dr. Ross described as "an education suitable to their circumstances."

Mr. COOKE.—You are assuming that he had in mind the amount to be devoted to this charity, so that according to education each child would cost about £40. I don't think he had that in his mind when he fixed on £500 for the school, or that he thought of what the balance would be. The exact fund that Mr. Young left was £18,500. Since his death, £38,871 of interest on that money has been paid to the legatees, and the shares of the legatees who died were carried over from year to year, amounting only to £5,848, which, by investment, was brought up to £15,610. Mr. Young had not before his mind the amount this fund would arrive at by judicious investment and the death of legatees. I think only two legatees had died up to within about six years of the present time, and then two more dropped off.

8762. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We were told when last here only four had died.

Mr. COOKE.—Yes. I only mention it now on the argument that because he only devoted £500 to building the school, he contemplated the large sum of £40 a year such to be devoted to maintaining the boarders in that school. He thought that small sum would accomplish it, and probably he had also in his mind that this charity would be started earlier than it was.

8763. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Mr. Cooke, do you admit that Mr. Young did not put any limit in his will as to the kind of education to be given, except that it was to be given to female children belonging to Derry, who are in need of it? There is no explicit limitation that I can see.

Mr. COOKE.—There is not, but having regard to the general tenor of the will, it is evident he did intend to confine it more or less to children of the poorer class.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—That is a matter of interpretation. My interpretation would be that it was for that class of children who wanted education.

8764. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you not assume that if he wanted to give it to the poorer class of children he would have mentioned it?

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think we may come now to the classes in reference to the trustees. In your original scheme you proposed a body of seven, and I understand it is your wish to adhere to that, but you would be willing to add five more, if the Commissioners thought it desirable.

Mr. COOKE.—Yes.

8764a. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You represent the whole of your trustees in making that statement?

Mr. COOKE.—Well, not altogether.

8764b. Professor DOUGHERTY.—As I understand, your trustees have not considered this question of extending the number beyond seven.

Mr. COOKE.—No, they have not.

8765. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How would you propose the other five should be elected, if they are to be added?

Mr. COOKE.—This is a matter that we have not directly considered. Our scheme was for seven, but we are willing to increase the number by five; and I think it would be advantageous to have the representatives elected from the Presbyteries of Derry, as proposed by the Scheme for the amalgamated endowments.

8766. Dr. TRAILL.—Is there to be any representation of the Church Diocesan Council?

Mr. COOKE.—Well, that is a matter I cannot answer in the absence of Dr. Ross.

8767. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you think we should have any regard to the fact that the founder of the charity intended an exclusively Presbyterian governing body?

Mr. COOKE.—You can alter it to a certain extent.

8768. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We may take it, then, that the seven mentioned in the original Scheme you propose to retain, but that your body would not object to five more to be elected in such manner as may afterwards be agreed on?

Mr. COOKE.—Yes.

8769. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Would they object to a Roman Catholic representative on the Board?

Mr. COOKE.—That is a matter I am not prepared to answer, but I think they probably would.

8770. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—I suppose you don't press the objection as to spending the money on any thing but elementary education? Would your trustees object to have a power, by a capital outlay of £1,000, to establish a boarding house, without a teaching staff—such as the Methodists have in Dublin—they have a small endowment, and send their children to the Training College in Kildare-street, and have made provision to send them to the Alexandra College and places of that kind. A house that, as a boarding school, could educate only twenty pupils might, as a boarding house, accommodate thirty or forty children. Some of these would be young, and would receive suitable instruction in a good National School, while others would be able to go to better schools, such as you have in Derry, if you paid fees for them.

Mr. COOKE.—That is a matter we have not considered. So long as these things are permissible we don't object to them. I am sure if that would be an advantage for the Young charity, they would not object.

8771. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you not got an excellent elementary school in the Model School, which you could use?

Mr. COOKE.—Yes; but we think a separate education could be formed for the endowment, in the shape of technical education to girls of a certain class.

May 13, 1888.

5772. Professor DOUGHERTY.—If you proceed to take these children into your school and train them technically, would you not first have to give them an elementary education, such as is to be obtained in the Model School?

Mr. Cooke.—Yes.

5773. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The question Lord Justice Fitzgerald put to you was, whether you could not get that elementary education outside—say, in the Model School?

Mr. Cooke.—I have answered that question by saying to a certain extent you could, but you could not get technical education—education in sewing and other things of that sort.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You will get all that under the National Board.

5774. Rev. Dr. Mottet.—Would you not consider technical education necessary for a girl preparing to be a schoolmistress or a governess?

Mr. Cooke.—I would not, but I might be wrong altogether.

5775. Rev. Dr. Mottet.—There is a certain ambiguity about the words "poor children." Would the trustees have any objection to have the money used for children of parents in reduced circumstances?

Mr. Cooke.—I don't think they would have any objection. I don't know whether you will decide now or hold the matter over for further consideration.

5776. Rev. Dr. Mottet.—We should like to hear the other side.

Mr. J. J. Shaw.—As to all my learned friend has said about the constitution of the separate governing body for the Young Institute, we have nothing to say if the endowments are to be separate; but in reference to the scheme for amalgamation, the Gwyn trustees, although they did not ask that the two trusts should be amalgamated, having had the joint scheme before them, and considered the whole matter deliberately, came to the conclusion, and passed a resolution that they considered it would be for the benefit of both endowments, and for their usefulness, that they should be amalgamated, and that they should be governed by one governing body. It seems to me that the objections of the Young trustees against the amalgamation have no ground whatever, and were drawn up under a misapprehension of what the proposed amalgamation is. The two chief objections are—first, that the amalgamation is a transference of the trustor's property to the Gwyn Institution; and secondly, that the amalgamation would practically result in the obliteration of the Young endowment. That seems to be an entire misapprehension of the scheme, because the Gwyn Institution is an institution for the education of boys. There is no proposal that any part of the trustor's property should be appropriated to the Gwyn Institution. It is intended to have a separate institution for the girls. The Gwyn Institution, so far from absorbing the Young endowment, would have it applied side by side for the education of girls, and for purposes entirely distinct from the Gwyn endowment, keeping the two endowments separate, but having them managed by one governing body. The real question we have to consider here is—whether it would be more expedient and more beneficial that the two endowments should be under the control of one body. There seem to be obvious considerations in favour of having one body and not two managing these two endowments. The two endowments are in their character almost identical, except that the one is for the education of male children and the other for the education of female children. In all other respects the two endowments are exactly alike in character, and the circumstances in which they are to be applied. If you already have in existence or have formed the best body that can be found for the application of the endowment for male children, it seems rational that that same body should be selected also to administer the endowment for female children. Separate governing bodies will lead to a large additional expense while if you confine the management of the two institutions to one body there will be very great economy. The same set of officers; the same building; the same agency for the investment and management of the property will do for both, whereas if you have two distinct governing bodies you must have two secretaries, two sets of people looking after the education of the children, and two separate agencies for the management of the property. There is another matter which seems very important, that there should be as far as possible, in the city of Derry, something like unity and harmony in the administration of these two funds. We have two distinct bequests, practically, for the same class and purpose, and it would be extremely awkward and inconvenient if you had two distinct bodies managing these funds. You would have diverging principles and you would create great discontent. For example, if one body held that the female children of a particular family were fitting objects of the Young charity, and the Gwyn Body held that the male children of the same family were not proper recipients of their endowment, it would lead to great irritation and discontent if there was any manner of conflict as to who were proper objects of the charities. Derry is not a very large place, and the number of men who are most competent for managing institutions of this sort is somewhat limited, and unless you have the same men upon both bodies—and in that case there would be no need for separate bodies—you would have one institution, perhaps, with a better management than the other. If you get the best men to be had all on the one board, you must have inferior men on the other, unless you take the same for both and then the reason against amalgamation would fall altogether. For these reasons the trustees of the Gwyn Institution support the scheme for amalgamation. It does not seem to them that there is anything in the suggestion that a small board would take a greater interest in the institutions than a large one. That objection was raised not to amalgamation, but to the constitution of the new trustees; and as to rivalry between the two institutions, I don't know what rivalry could possibly tend to the benefit of either. They are not trading institutions competing for custom. They are two charitable institutions conferring benefits on children in need of aid, and any rivalry between them would inevitably tend to the injury of the charities, for it must lead to an inefficient application of the funds. That is really all we have to say on the question of amalgamation, but there are some details of the scheme as to which we propose amendments.

5777. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—One point that seems to trouble Mr. Cooke is, that a governing body of twenty-two would be too large. As a matter of fact how many of the Gwyn governors really take an interest in the institution?

Mr. Shaw.—I am not able to tell you, but Mr. Cooke, who takes a great interest in it, says one-half.

5778. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In small bodies the work generally devolves on one or two men, but where you have a large body a working committee of their best men can be selected.

Mr. Shaw.—There is a committee of the Gwyn trustees who superintend the actual management and working of the charity, and they meet oftener than the trustees—about once a week.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I wish you could see your way to keep up the distinctive character of these institutions, both in memory of the founders and because they are distinct things. We all feel that there would be great waste in having separate governing bodies and separate staffs.

Mr. Shaw.—There might be a committee specially to take charge of the Young endowment and a committee to take the active management of the Gwyn institution.

5779. Rev. Dr. Mottet.—Would your governors

May 15, 1925.

be disposed to meet the proposition from the other side, namely, that in case of amalgamation the Young board should have a larger representation than is proposed in this scheme?

Mr. Shaw.—There is a difficulty in that, for we have to deal with existing trustees, and the proposal made by Mr. Cooke is that five of the existing trustees should retire and that the Young trustees should nominate five in their place.

8780. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—That particular way of carrying out the scheme adds to the difficulty, but would your body object to a larger representation of the Young trustees, for if they agreed to that we might find a way out of the difficulty?

Mr. Shaw.—The Gwyn trustees cannot find out what is the meaning of the objection.

8781. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—At present there are two bodies, each having the exclusive management of a large endowment. One of these bodies, if they be amalgamated under the proposed scheme, would have a very much larger representation than the other, and there is a possible danger that the views of the trustees representing the Young endowment might be overborne by the trustees of the Gwyn institution.

Mr. Shaw.—The Gwyn trustees fail to see why they should have any special interest in the Gwyn endowment more than they would have in the Young endowment. They think they would be equally interested in both, as the endowments would be under the management of a board having no interest in one fund more than in the other.

8782. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—Even in the selection of pupils the Gwyn representatives would practically, if they wished to exercise it, have the power of selecting the pupils for both institutions.

Mr. Shaw.—No doubt.

8783. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—It might be that the representatives of the Young institution would be in favour of providing for one family and the Gwyn representatives for another; and it would seem hard on the Young representatives that they should be overborne by the Gwyn representatives.

Mr. Shaw.—If you have a united board no conflict of interest can arise, and even if it did the new members in who would be interested in both institutions might be relied upon to counteract any such influence.

8784. Dr. TRAILL.—Suppose the nomination of a girl was left to seven of the body, and that four of these were Gwyn representatives, would not that give them the majority and controlling influence?

Mr. Shaw.—No doubt; but that contingency cannot arise where you have a united board interested in one institution as much as in the other.

8785. Dr. TRAILL.—Would it not be reasonable that the trustees of the Young endowment should have an equal voice?

Mr. Shaw.—No doubt a large concession should be made.

8786. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If we create two separate bodies, we cannot find any warrant in Mr. Young's will for putting on an Episcopalian representative on the governing body of his endowment, for though Church Protestants are nearer to Presbyterians than to Roman Catholics, the argument that might be used for putting on the Protestant Bishop might not unreasonably be used to bring in a Roman Catholic also. Then if we keep the Young endowment under exclusively Presbyterian management, unquestionably, if a Presbyterian family applies for help from the Gwyn endowment, the Church people on the Gwyn body may be unwilling to acknowledge their claim and may tell them they have a better claim on the other people, and vice versa.

Mr. Shaw.—The trustees of the Gwyn endowment are entirely in favour of the principle of amalgamation. They are willing to concede a great deal to the Messrs. Cooke, but they do not see the meaning of keeping up a perpetual difference of representation between the two wills. The two charities ought to be of equal interest to all the members of the Governing Board; and we propose to extend the provision in the scheme by which the Messrs. Cooke will be life governors and have the power to nominate successors.

8787. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If we do form an amalgamated body, the perpetuation of the distinction between the Gwyn trustees and the Young trustees will keep up the inequality of the founders.

Mr. Shaw.—Some difficulty may arise in reference to the question of co-option—whether it is the whole body or each separate body that is to co-opt.

Mr. Cooke.—There are on the board at present people of different denominations, and if the Young trustees pick out the members of one particular denomination, they may have an insufficient number for the others.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We never sign these schemes without letting the parties see them, and when you see the names this point can be disposed of.

8788. Professor DENHAM.—Is there any vacancy on Gwyn's Governing Body that could be filled by one of the Young trustees?

Mr. Shaw.—There is no vacancy at present. I think the matter can be settled by making it a matter of co-option by the whole body. There is another thing I desire three or four amended. We want to make it compulsory on the Diocesan Council to proceed to an election at a proper time.

8789. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We will provide for election within proper time.

Mr. Shaw.—In clause nine we wish to put in—"to provide clothing and maintenance, or education alone."

8790. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I hope you do not want to cut down your power of boarding out.

Mr. Shaw.—We ask for that power.

Mr. Cooke.—We do not ask it.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But it can't harm you—the power is only permissive, and you may find it the cheapest and best in the end.

8791. Mr. Shaw.—In reference to clause ten we are of opinion it ought to be made more distinct. Some powers are merely discretionary which ought to be compulsory.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We can settle that.

8792. Mr. Shaw.—In clause eleven, in reference to the election of Foundationers, we think if applications are to be sent in within a week of the election, the public who are interested ought to have a month's notice.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You ought not to have an election more frequently than half-yearly.

8793. Mr. Shaw.—The trustees are of opinion that the notice of the manner and form of election is too vague. It would be sufficient to say that public notice be given of the time and place of election, and that papers can be had of the secretary.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You must give public notice of each election.

8794. Mr. Shaw.—In section twenty-one, in reference to receiving aid from the Commissioners of National Education, the trustees desire power to withdraw their connection from the National Board, or any other body, whenever they please. As to clause twenty-three they think the chaplains' salaries should not exceed £10 per annum each.

8795. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—Are they afraid to take a discretionary power to fix the salary?

Mr. Cooke.—We want a discretion as to whether we shall appoint chaplains at all.

8796. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—As regards the appointment of chaplains to the Gwyn Institution, there is some difficulty; for the testator said no chaplain was to visit the school without the permission of the governors, and the governors have agreed not to give that permission, as I understand. As he is greatly provides that all persons, without religious distinction, shall be admissible to his institution, would it not be right that the trustees should be bound, if they nominate a chaplain at all, to nominate one for each persuasion?

Mr. Stow.—We have no objection to appoint chaplains, but we think there ought to be a limit to the salary.

8797. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you propose to fix a minimum limit as well as a maximum?

Mr. Stow.—I think if you say not to exceed £10 each it will do.

8798. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What is your reason for objecting to a discretionary power in fixing the salary?

Mr. Stow.—It might give rise to a great deal of discussion.

8799. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The clergy don't fare so well in the matter of money at all events; but difficulties might arise if you were left a discretionary power. One chaplain might get more than another.

Mr. J. Cooke.—We would not object to have each chaplain get the same money.

8800. Dr. TRAILL.—You might put in as a limitation "if the chaplain is disposed to act." Suppose there was no chaplain undertaking to go to you at all?

Mr. Stow.—I don't suppose we would pay any money then.

Mr. J. Cooke.—We say that, where the building is kept at present, with fifty children in it, £10 would be ample to pay each chaplain for looking after their spiritual wants.

8801. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How much is that a week?

Mr. Cooke.—It would be 15s. a piece.

8802. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Would it answer then if we put it that the salary was not to exceed a certain sum per head for each child?

Mr. Cooke.—We have no objection. We only want not to let the religion give the power to have the funds taken in this way.

8803. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There is certainly a strong motive to put on a limit, but it ought probably to be a double limit—proportionate to the work done.

8804. Professor DOUGHERTY.—If this endowment were in Dublin I might think it was necessary to put a limit on the chaplain's salary, but from my experience of Derry I should say the governors are perfectly capable of protecting themselves against clerical pressure.

Mr. J. Cooke.—We are satisfied by putting it before you.

Mr. Cooke.—We desire that the employment of chaplains should be left discretionary to us, for it might be more convenient that the children should attend their own Sunday schools.

8805. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I should be more inclined to do what we did in the Bertrand School, Dublin, where there was no salary; we provided that the children should attend their own places of worship and attend religious instruction under their own clergy, and then the clergy would have to look after them.

Mr. Cooke.—We don't wish to be threatened with the salary of chaplains when there might be no need for them.

8806. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—In the Gwyn Institution you don't admit chaplains at all?

Mr. J. Cooke.—No, but we don't object.

8807. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Of course the Roman Catholic chaplain would consider himself bound to attend and look after his own flock if the other chaplains were admitted; but if full security is given that the children of all denominations shall attend their several places of worship and be at liberty to receive religious instruction from their own clergy, we might leave out the salary.

Mr. J. Cooke.—If you leave it out altogether, let there not be power to appoint chaplains.

8808. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You need not pay them.

Mr. Cooke.—We think to leave the appointment discretionary would be best.

8809. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Would you be prepared to adopt a clause providing that as long as Catholic and Protestant children are elected there shall be a chaplain—each denomination with a chaplain?

Mr. Cooke.—Of course they could receive instruction.

8810. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—But would you object to have them taught?

Mr. Cooke.—No; but we don't see the necessity of chaplains visiting the institution. We would prefer to let the children go out for instruction.

8811. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—They would want religious instruction of some sort every day.

Rev. James CARMICHAEL.—There is a provision in Mr. Gwyn's will for giving religious instruction, and the trustees must provide for that. The Gwyn trustees are prepared to appoint chaplains for all denominations, and it seems but reasonable that if a clergyman goes to give that instruction at the institution it is an addition to his ordinary duties, and he ought to be remunerated for it in some way.

8812. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If you once lay down that you may exclude clergymen of any denomination, you ought also to exclude the children belonging to it.

Mr. Cooke.—We don't want to exclude them at all, but just to have it left discretionary.

8813. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If you have in the school a Church child you could not give a discretionary power to governors not belonging to that denomination to prohibit a Church chaplain from coming in.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—It would be a very unfortunate thing if amalgamation took place and the Young representatives should dream of excluding a large section of the population now receiving benefits from the Gwyn Endowment.

Mr. Cooke.—They have no idea of anything of the kind.

8814. Professor DOUGHERTY.—I know they have no idea of it, but if the appointment of a chaplain be left discretionary that may prove the practical result.

Mr. Cooke.—They can receive instruction by attending their own chaplain outside.

8815. Professor DOUGHERTY.—In the Gwyn institution half the children are Catholics, and what the scheme proposes is that the Roman Catholic clergymen should have access to those children, and that you should not have power to exclude him.

Mr. Cooke.—We think you should put all on the same footing, and let them get instruction outside.

8816. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—There is nothing more reasonable than to provide that, when a clergyman of any denomination attends to give instruction, the children of his denomination should be brought to him by themselves, or that in case a child was ill he should be allowed to see it. In the alternative, don't take the children at all if you won't give them religious instruction.

Mr. Cooke.—If you could give the alternative in the case of sickness and cases of that, but otherwise I have a pretty strong feeling to exclude all clergymen.

8817. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What is there objectionable in each of the chaplains coming separately and catechising his own children? If you had this discussion, you speak of, and exercised it adversely to one denomination of children, the immediate result would be that they would be all withdrawn from the school.

May 10, 1886.

Mr. Cooke.—The only way I can answer that is that all would have an equal opportunity of attending their own Sunday school.

8818. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do you propose that no religious instruction whatever should be given within the walls of the building, or do you propose that religious instruction should be given within the walls to children of one denomination but not to those of another?

Mr. Cooke.—No, we do not.

8819. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Then what do you propose?

Mr. Cooke.—We propose that religious instruction should be given to them outside.

8820. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Then inside the walls of the institution you propose that no religious instruction should be given at all?

Mr. Cooke.—That the chaplain who calls should be given the power of coming in.

8821. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How do you propose then to give the religious instruction?

Mr. Cooke.—The teacher of the children can bring them out for it.

8822. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—That is fact no religious instruction should be given inside.

Mr. Cooke.—That it is to be left discretionary.

8823. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How is that discretion to be exercised—is the schoolmaster or schoolmistress to give no religious instruction? Will the children be taught to say their prayers each day, or is it only on Sundays they are to say them?

Mr. Cooke.—They can get religious instruction outside.

8824. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—And not inside?

Mr. Cooke.—Yes.

Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—One of your proposals is to take children in at five years of age—surely they would want some one to look after their spiritual welfare inside the school.

8825. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Then the practical result of your proposal would be, that you would have Protestant school-masters and other teachers in charge of the children, and that all the Protestant children will be taught their religion inside the walls of the institution from day to day, and the Catholic children will be allowed to go out for religious instruction on one day in the week.

Mr. Cooke.—They can go out every day in the week if they wish.

8826. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—I would say don't elect them at all if you don't teach them, and if you do elect them let some one be responsible for their religious education.

Mr. Cooke.—All I want is to have certain limitations.

8827. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What I would propose is that if you resolve children of different denominations, you must make provision to give them religious instruction according to the principles of their own denomination.

8828. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—That scheme has been put into many of our schemes, and there was never any objection to it up to the present. It seems to me that the only other alternative is that they should be brought up without any religious instruction at all.

Mr. Cooke.—Of course if you think it desirable I can only say it would be equally essential that we should be compelled to pay the clergymen to whom the children walk across the street to their prayers.

Mr. Shaw.—The Gwyn trustees think the Loan Fund proposal a speculative thing. To take a power to give a loan to young women to advance their education, would give rise to canvassing and would be inconvenient. They think if assistance was to be given for such a purpose, it should be by some form of examination.

8829. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—A girl going out on the world at the age of sixteen is helping, and at that age a small sum enables a child to go on, and that is all the Loan Fund provides for.

Mr. Shaw.—The Loan Fund is for the payment of tuition fees—for the purpose of obtaining an education in higher schools—surely girls who are qualified to take the advantages of higher schools ought not to be pushed forward at the expense of those less fortunate who are not qualified for a higher school, but require elementary education. We are opposed to this.

8830. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—The evidence we got on this point was, that if there was any money over at the end of this year it could be usefully employed in procuring a higher education for girls who showed an aptitude for it—the same as in Cambridge.

Mr. Shaw.—There are objections which the trustees see. One of them is that it is proposed to give a loan to girls who are not foundationers at all—who are outside. In the second place they think that the loans are to be given entirely without reference to the educational standard of the applicant, and would thereby become a matter of favoritism.

8831. Professor DOUGHERTY.—This will be a matter for the Young trustees.

Mr. Shaw.—I am going on the assumption that there is to be amalgamation, and that the Gwyn trustees will have their share of this trust fund.

8832. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—I suppose you will have no objection to insert a provision to provide them with appropriate fees?

Mr. Shaw.—No, if it is confined within the objections I have stated.

Mr. J. Cooke.—The objection is that the whole thing might be decided without regard to the abilities of the child, or whether it was likely to make progress or not.

8833. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Do you wish it confined to pupils of the school?

Mr. J. Cooke.—We are not particular. We understand a loan fund of this character is often subject to considerable abuse, and we object to it on that ground.

8834. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—There ought to be a limitation that it should never interfere with the other objects of the endowment.

Mr. Cooke.—On the part of the Mount Cooke I may mention that they had a conference in regard to the funds with the trustees of the Gwyn institution who consented to the amendments I have handed in.

8835. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—How many amendments are to drop now?

Mr. Cooke.—One-third of the original number.

8836. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—There would be enormous expense in postponing the vesting of the legal interest in the Young fund in a corporate body under the scheme until all the amendments cease, for you would have to take out letters of administration, and would have great difficulty and expense in getting administration, as it is a charity trust. Do you object to vest the legal estate in the funds immediately in a corporate body?

Mr. Cooke.—We do not. We have agreed to the amendments on all but clause 7. In the interest of the legacies we think the investments should be retained in the hands in which they are at present, so long as the representatives exist. The amendments have been all drawn to carry out that.

8837. Lord Justice FRYGIBSON.—In all probability the ultimate survivors will be one or two annuitants. You wish to keep up a personal representative of the last surviving trustee, so long as any annuitant lives.

Mr. Cooke.—We can't ask to carry it further than the executor of the present trustee.

8838. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—That is reasonable.

Mr. Cooke.—There are other objections, but if there are to be two separate boards it will not be necessary to raise them.

8839. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I suppose you would like it to be accurately provided that the property of Young's trustees should not be disposed of except with the consent of the governors representing that endowment.

Mr. Cooke.—Certainly; and some of the amendments we suggested went that length.

8840. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We will let the investments remain in their present state so long as the majority of the Young trustees think proper, and put in a provision that there shall not be a change of the existing investment during the lives of the Messrs. Cooke without their concurrence.

Mr. Stowe.—There is another point in reference to the provision for the appointment of a master. (Clause 38 at the bottom of page 14 and top of page 15 gives power to the governors to appoint the officers. This will provide that the master and his assistants shall be Protestants, or Protestant Dissenters, and the trustees of the Gwyns clearly think that ought to be copied into the Scheme.

8841. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We are clearly of opinion that there must be distinct institutions, because the objects are different—the Gwyns School being for boys, and the Young School for girls. The property that belongs to each of these institutions will necessarily be preserved for its own use only. The only joint charge that will fall on the property of the two will be any charge incurred for the benefit of both, such as the cost of management, as to which there might be a considerable saving if they were managed together. But you have the institutions separate, and the property separate, and accordingly separate accounts will have to be kept. Then comes the question—who is to administer them? As long as there are private trusts for annuities under the Young will the trust of administering the will is given to the Messrs. Cooke, and they must have, in the administration of this property, a dominant position. The question thus resolves itself into this—whether the ultimate governing body, who will have two sets of property and two sets of trusts, is to be one or two. If you can get the two properties managed by the same gentlemen, with the same staff and the same agent, anybody will see the advantage. Can we create one governing body? My own opinion is that the advantages are so great in having only one governing body, that we ought not to abandon the attempt to get it; and therefore I think we should recast the Scheme for the purpose of securing that object, at the same time preserving the rights of the Messrs. Cooke, the executors appointed by the testator, and keeping up the trusts of the separate property. We will not sign the Scheme until both parties have seen it, and if we fail to come to a final solution we may be driven back to separate the two Schemes, but I do hope we will not have pressure put on us by the Messrs. Cooke to do so. Mr. Reid will please send us a schedule brought down to date of the property constituting the Young endowment. We also want a list of the annuities that still survive, and the accounts for the last year. Mr. Cooke will kindly send marked in the list of the existing Gwyns trustees any names that he would desire to have elected as Young's trustees in the event of our having separate bodies. We wish to have the names of the existing governors, and additional names, up to the number of twelve, from which to select governors of the Young charity. As regards the Gwyns fund, we would wish to be furnished with the latest schedule of the property.

The inquiry terminated.

PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1888.

June 21, 1888

At the School, Oldcastle.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAISH, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.C., ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., M.B., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., was in attendance.

OLDCASTLE ENDOWED SCHOOL.

WILLIAM JOHN DE VEE, Head Master, sworn.

8842. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—When were you appointed head master of the boys' school?—On December 1, 1867.

8843. You were selected from a large number of candidates?—I believe so.

8844. Who appointed you?—The trustees.

8845. Where were you trained?—In St. Patrick's Training college, Drumcondra.

8846. How long were you in training?—Ten months.

8847. What class have you under the National Board?—First division of the first class.

8848. Dr. TRAILL.—I thought you should have been a certain number of years under the National Board before you could get that class?—I had ten years' experience before I went into the training college. I was in Louisa and in a school in Killeenore, and was second division of the first class there.

8849. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—After that service you went to Drumcondra Training college and spent ten months there?—Yes; at the end of the year an examination was held by the Board, and, as the result of that examination, I got first division of the first class.

8850. In what year were you in Drumcondra?—In 1866. I had more than ten years' service. I was appointed under the Board on the 1st July, 1874.

8851. What is the number of boys on the roll here?—Two hundred and twenty-seven.

8852. What is the average attendance?—On the William John De Vee.

June 11, 1886.

De Vos.

21st May last it was 1250; but that is a reduced attendance. There had been an epidemic for two or three months in the locality that considerably reduced the attendance.

8853. What would you regard as the normal attendance?—I imagine 145 or 150.

8854. There is an infants' school in the building to which the younger boys go?—Yes.

8855. Of your boys how many are in the sixth class?—Twenty-four on the roll of that class, of whom eleven are in attendance to-day.

8856. How many are in the fifth class?—Fifty-four.

8857. Have you any monitors?—Yes, three.

8858. What is your staff besides yourself and these three monitors?—Two assistant masters and seven trustees' monitors in addition to those allowed by the National Board.

8859. Two assistants and three monitors is the staff allowed under the rules of the Board?—Yes.

8860. And you have seven trustees' monitors?—Seven besides.

8861. What are your emoluments?—Seventy pounds a year class salary from the National Board; £10 a year for coal and light, and £10 a year for acting as secretary from the trustees.

8862. Besides that you have a residence?—I have a residence; about half the dwelling-house—I have five rooms and a garden.

8863. Have you anything to do with the management of the land?—No.

8864. Your duties are entirely in the school?—Confined to the school, and to acting as secretary for the trustees.

8865. How often do they meet?—Quarterly; sometimes they call special meetings.

8866. Is there any teaching in the school beyond the National Board programme?—Nothing beyond the extra subjects that are recognised by the National Board.

8867. What are those extra subjects?—Latin, Greek, French, Drawing, and Music. I give an extended course myself to the tender boys in Algebra and Euclid.

8868. How many are learning Latin and Greek?—About seven, but I think the number will increase by-and-by.

8869. You have results sent from the National Board?—Yes.

8870. How much did your results fees come to?—The results fees for the last year amounted to 267 1s. 5d. from the board of guardians—this is a contributory union—and £29 7s. from the National Board, £156 8s. 10d. altogether.

8871. Dr. TRAILL.—For your side of the school only?—Yes; for my side only.

8872. I thought you were only appointed on the 1st of December last?—I am speaking of the results fees of the school for the last twelve months. I am not speaking with regard to myself.

8873. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—What distance do the boys come from to attend the school?—I think within a radius of three and a half or four miles.

8874. The original endowment was for the parishes of Oldcastle, Loughcorry, Moyla, Killa, and Killybride; have you boys coming from all those districts at present?—I don't know the parish of Killybride under that name. It is Mount Nugent. We have boys from Mount Nugent.

8875. Are there any school fees?—Yes, for those outside the parishes of Oldcastle and Moyla, but they are very inconsiderable.

8876. How much comes to you?—The assistant master in charge of the classical department gets school fees for each boy attending his class.

8877. Lord Justice NARIN.—Any boy attending his class has to pay for the instruction he gets?—Yes. For the year ending December 31st, 1885, the amount of the school fees was £12 10s. 2d., of that he received about £8, leaving a margin of £4 16s. to be divided between himself and the other master.

8878. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—Is there any intermediate school in Oldcastle or its neighbourhood?—None.

8879. Then the locality is entirely dependent on this institution for its education?—Yes.

8880. Is there any school competing with you?—No. There are some National schools in the outlying parts—in Moyla.

8881. There is no other National school in Oldcastle?—No.

8882. Lord Justice NARIN.—What are the religious denominations of the pupils?—Of the 227 boys 58 are of the Irish Church, and the remainder are Roman Catholics; the former are about 12 per cent. of the whole.

8883. Is there any restriction on any child coming to the school?—None, whatever.

8884. And all whose parents wish them to be educated receive their education here?—They receive their education here; and they are supplied gratuitously with books. £70 is allowed by the trustees for supplying the children with books—the copy-books and ordinary books required in the different classes.

8885. Rev. Dr. MOLLOR.—What proportion does the average attendance bear to the number on the roll?—For the month ending the 31st of May, it was 66·2 per cent.

8886. From your experience of National schools is that under or over the ordinary average attendance?—It is pretty much normal, but I expect it should be 65 or coming near to 70.

8887. We find that the general average attendance is about two-thirds of the number on the roll?—Yes.

8888. That corresponds to 66 per cent.—That is what it should be; but I have spoken about the epidemic and other matters connected with a rural district like this; and it is a very fair percentage in this season of the year.

8889. I find that at the time of the last inquiry in 1880, the attendance was about 58 per cent., and it struck me that that was a good deal lower than what we find generally in the best class of National schools?—Yes, I think it is under what I had myself in Louth, I had a very large attendance at the National school there. I have frequently had 70 per cent. on the roll.

8890. Is there any reason in this locality why the attendance should be low?—No, but I imagine there is some hindrance on the part of parents about sending their children to school.

8891. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—Does your experience enable you to say whether that hindrance is an ordinary symptom where there are no school fees?—I would imagine so.

8892. Do you think it any advantage that there should be no school fees and no charge for books?—I think it is a disadvantage not to have some charge for books in the case of children whose parents can pay. A very large proportion are of the labouring classes, and I think it is very well that the trustees allow money for the purchase of books for the poorer classes.

8893. Do you think it would be an advantage that the gift of free books should be restricted to the children of really poor parents, and that there should be some charge to those who are not poor?—I think there should be some charge to those who are able to pay in order to induce the parents to endeavour to get value for their money.

8894. Where do the children of the shopkeepers of Oldcastle get their education?—In our school.

8895. What proportion of the pupils are the children of the townspeople?—I imagine about twenty-five per cent. There might be more.

8896. Dr. TRAILL.—And of the children of farmers and labourers I suppose there are about fifty per cent?—I think so. You cannot exactly describe them as the children of labourers, for some of the labourers are farmers having five, or six, or seven acres of land.

8817. Rev. Dr. MELLOR.—Then practically all the people of Oldcastle are educated here?—Yes. Some of those who are in pretty fair circumstances afterwards send their boys to college when they have received elementary education here.

8818. Is there any education given in agriculture?—Yes.

8819. How?—From Professor Baldwin's books. I give it to my class, and the first assistant master gives it too.

8820. Is any practical instruction in agriculture given?—None.

8821. Was there not a farm attached to the school?—Yes; it is still attached to the school, but it has been discontinued as an agricultural firm since 1863.

8822. You are not able, perhaps, to give any explanation of that, as you have come so recently?—No; I could not give any explanation why it was discontinued; but I think the explanation can be found in numerous parts of Ireland where agricultural farms have been mostly closed as failures.

8823. Had you any experience of the practical teaching of agriculture in any of the schools with which you were previously connected?—No.

8824. And you think the normal condition of agricultural school farms is that they are failures?—That's my impression.

8825. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you any reason to give why it should be a failure here?—My own opinion is that the farmers are somewhat averse to adopt any new system of agriculture.

8826. Have your farmers the idea that their children can learn farming at home?—I believe the rising class of children who have been studying agriculture will introduce some of the notions they are at present studying in the management of their farms afterwards.

8827. Do you mean such subjects as agricultural chemistry?—The adoption of a proper system of rotation of crops.

8828. Do the farmers of this country not adopt the rotation of crops?—I think this is a grazing country, except the outlying districts, about a range of hills where there are a number of the poorer class of farmers; but I don't think they adopt any recognised system of rotation.

8829. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Isn't there room for agriculture on plots of ground connected with grazing farms?—Yes; there is.

8830. And you endeavour to teach it theoretically?—Theoretically I try to explain it.

8831. But you think the farmers are prejudiced in favour of their own old plans?—I think so.

8832. Rev. Dr. MELLOR.—Had you any training in practical agriculture?—No; while I was in Marlborough-street for four months I went out twice a week to the Albert Farm. I did not get any practical education there, but I heard the lectures.

8833. Is there any kind of technical or industrial instruction given here?—Not in our school.

8834. You teach drawing?—Yes.

8835. But nothing beyond that?—Beyond that, nothing.

8836. Would it not be desirable to give industrial teaching of some kind in a locality like this?—I consider it would be a great advantage; but I think it should not interfere with the ordinary literary instruction of the school. It should be given after or before it—in the morning between nine and ten, or in the evenings between three and five.

8837. Practical instruction in such matters as the use of tools?—Yes, under a thoroughly qualified man.

8838. It does not follow that because a man is "first of the first" he could teach the use of tools?—No, it does not.

8839. If it were practicable to have a special teacher for teaching the use of tools you think that it could be done after school hours, and that it would be useful?—I think it would; but I really don't think it would suit the people of Oldcastle.

8840. Why should Oldcastle of all other places be regarded as unfit to receive instruction in the use of tools?—They don't manifest such an interest in primary education as they should.

8841. They have never seen what such instruction is, and don't take an interest in it, because it is to them an unknown thing?—An unknown thing.

8842. If a carpenter's shop were established in the school, and the boys were taught to use ordinary tools, would they not be much more useful at home after leaving school?—Yes, I believe they would.

8843. Professor DEANE.—Have the people of Oldcastle any objection to acquiring a knowledge of the natural arts?—I could not give an opinion on that. I believe a great many of them would desire to have their children taught the use of tools.

8844. Dr. TRAILL.—It is a different thing to teach trades and to teach the use of the hands and eyes by means of tools?—I think drawing and geometry would go a great way. As a matter of fact, if I had to give an opinion on technical education, I would endorse Euclid and substitute practical geometry for it.

8845. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Such geometry as is taught in drawing?—Yes.

8846. How many pupils are learning drawing here?—All from the third up to the sixth classes.

8847. And music?—Music is taught to those who have an aptitude for it in the different classes.

8848. Have you any connection with the Science and Art Department?—None.

8849. Have you ever thought of establishing it?—Yes; I have thought of it.

8850. Rev. Dr. MELLOR.—Did not the connection formerly exist?—I think there has been some objection by the Science and Art Department to establishing a class here, for the school is free, and they desire that their classes should pay something.

8851. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Have you any connection with the Science and Art Department?—No; but I was examined and have elementary certificates in magnetism, electricity, mechanics, and mathematics; and my position as a first of the first teacher would entitle me to an advanced grade certificate in mathematics.

8852. Then your status would entitle you to establish classes in connection with the Science and Art Department?—Yes.

8853. Your trustees are qualified as a committee so far as number goes?—Yes. As a matter of fact I was thinking of forming classes, but I wished to have the school in a more advanced state before I did so.

8854. What is your age?—Twenty-eight last December.

Mrs. Mary Ryan sworn.

8855. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—How long have you been head mistress of the girls' school?—Since January, 1858.

8856. What is your present number of girls?—127 on the roll.

8857. How many are in attendance to-day?—120.

8858. Is that about the average attendance?—It is slightly under it.

8859. During your thirty years' experience have the numbers of pupils in attendance fluctuated much?—Not very much, except in the case which the head master stated of the epidemic, which was an unusual occurrence. They fluctuate a little with the seasons.

8860. One year with another it would be the same?—Yes.

8861. Has the school been, all through those thirty years, as full as it is now?—Compared with the population I think it less. In the early stages of the school the numbers were very many more than they are now.

8942. The population was larger then?—Yes;

8943. What is your qualification?—First of the first.

8944. How long have you held that?—From my third year under the Board, and I was ten years under the Board before my appointment here—for eight years in Tuam Model school, and for one year in Castlepollard National school. I got my training since in August, 1849.

8945. How long were you in training?—Four months and a half was the course then.

8946. What assistance have you in teaching?—I have at present my daughter, who is a recognised teacher under the National Board, and an assistant.

8947. Have you only one assistant recognised under the Board?—Only one.

8948. How many monitors have you?—Seven paid by the trustees, and three paid by the National Board.

8949. Then your staff is one assistant less than the boys' staff?—Yes, that is in consideration of the two appointments being here; my appointment is independent of the National Board.

8950. Lord Justice NASH.—You are not under the National Board?—Not at all. When the school was transferred I was not eligible—I was beyond the years for appointment.

8951. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—When was the school placed under the National Board?—In 1863.

8952. Then the reason you are not under the National Board was that you were over the age?—Yes; I was disqualified.

8953. What are your emoluments?—The only salary I have is the trustees' salary—£80 a year. The house belongs to the Board.

8954. You have the house?—My daughter has it. She is partly paid by the trustees and partly by the National Board.

8955. Besides your salary from the trustees, what other emoluments have you?—No other.

8956. Have you no share of the results fee?—No.

8957. Do you live with your daughter?—I do.

8958. What is her salary?—She receives £34 10s. class salary, and £10 a year from the trustees, and has the house and garden in her own right—the same as the master has—and her class salary from the Board.

8959. What is her class?—First of the second; she has not been long enough teaching to have obtained the first.

8960. What were the results fees of the girls' school last year?—£27 from the union, and £137 3s. 6d. from the National Board.

8961. What pupils' fees had you?—£4 0s. 5d. for the year 1887.

8962. How are the results fees divided?—The assistant gets one-third, and my daughter gets two-thirds.

8963. Is it in consequence of your not having been qualified to be promoted that your daughter holds the position under the Board?—Yes, in consideration of my not being disturbed. She is paid by the National Board and by the trustees.

8964. What is the assistant's salary?—She gets £30 a year from the trust, besides her salary of £27 as an assistant.

8965. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—And a third of the results fees?—Yes.

8966. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What are the monitors paid?—One is paid £4 a year, £1 10s. a quarter; two receive £1 5s. a quarter, and two others £1; and the juniors get 11s. a quarter—£210 in all is allowed for them from the trust, and we apportion it as well as we can.

8967. (To Mr. De Vere).—What are the boys' monitors paid?—Mr. De Vere.—The Board's monitors get a graduated scale—I think about £10 in the third year, and the others get £5.

8968. What do the trustees' monitors get?—Mr. De Vere.—£30 a year between the seven—£3 to one, £5 to two, £4 to two, and £3 to two.

8969. (To witness).—Have you any girls learning more than the National Board programme?—No, except the extra subjects.

8970. What extra subject?—Drawing, music, book-keeping, domestic economy, and agriculture.

8971. You teach theoretical agriculture, but not practical?—We always gave them rural instruction—the management of a dairy, and of poultry and calves—on agricultural teaching; and when the school was transferred to the Board by calling it "agriculture," and adding a few other chapters in the books, it entitled us to results fees.

8972. How many girls are learning those subjects?—Of the senior division, 103.

8973. Do all these 103 learn drawing?—They do, and sixty-two others; but only those who show an aptitude for drawing are continued at it.

8974. Dr. TRAILL.—Do the 103 learn all the extras, including theoretical agriculture?—They do—dairy and poultry work are included under the head of "agriculture." We always had it before our connection with the Board.

8975. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Do you give any instruction in French?—No.

8976. And there is no instruction in either of the schools in history?—Except so far as it comes into the lesson books.

8977. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do you teach cookery?—Not practically, but it is included under the head of domestic economy—cookery, servants' work, and laundry work.

8978. In what form do you teach cookery?—Only in theory.

8979. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—From what book?—Cavell's.

8980. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Would it not be possible to teach practical cookery?—I don't mean with the present staff, but to get a special teacher from Dublin who would stay two or three months and give a course of practical cookery—would not that be very useful to farmers' and shopkeepers' daughters?—It would.

8981. It would enable them to put that theory into practice?—Yes.

8982. Dr. TRAILL.—You would not like to have your dinner cooked by a theoretical cook?—Well it is useful to know something of it. The great loss of the country people is that they have not cooking utensils.

8983. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What other branches of domestic economy do you teach?—Housekeeping and general household work, cleaning up a house, management of children.

8984. Is there any examination?—Yes, the Inspectors examine, just as they do in the other subjects.

Miss Mary Grace sworn.

Miss Mary Grace.

8985. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—You are the head mistress of the infants' school?—Yes.

8986. How long have you been there?—Five years.

8987. What class do you hold?—First of the second.

8988. What are the numbers on the roll?—113.

8989. And in attendance to-day?—74.

8990. What is the average attendance for the year?—34-4.

8991. How many of these are boys?—36.

8992. (To Mrs. Ryan).—I forgot to ask the religious denominations of your pupils?

Mrs. Ryan.—Of the 197 on the roll, 171, or 87 per cost, are Roman Catholics, and 50, or 15 per cent., are Protestants.

9301. (To witness).—What are the proportions in the infants' school?—There are 93 Roman Catholics, and 20 Protestants.

9302. What is your salary?—£45 a year from the trustees, and £34 10s. and results fees from the Board.

9303. Have you a residence?—Yes.

9304. Do you live in the house on the farm, or in the centre house?—In the central house. It is divided into three parts.

9305. Mrs. and Miss Ryan have one part, you have another, and the master of the boys has another?—Yes.

9306. How much were your results fees last year?—£19 15s. 6d.

9307. Have you an assistant?—Yes.

9308. Does she get one-third of the fees?—One-fifth, and I get two-thirds.

9309. How much is the assistant paid?—She has £2 a year from the trustees, and £27 from the Board.

9310. And her share of the results fees?—Yes.

9311. Do the results fees you have mentioned include those from the Union and the National Board?—No, the National Board results fees are £19 5s. 6d., and those from the rates £9 15s. 3d.

9312. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—What are your total payments—how much do you receive altogether?—About £105.

9313. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Is your educational programme the ordinary one for an infants' school?—Yes.

9314. Have you any extra subjects?—No.

9315. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you teach the Kindergarten system?—No.

9316. You are not qualified to do so?—No, I never studied it.

9317. Would you not think it worth your while to qualify yourself in it?—I would.

9318. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Have you ever seen the Kindergarten system in operation?—I have not.

9319. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—They give results fees for it in Northborough-street now?—Yes.

9320. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Your average attendance is much larger than those in the boys' and girls' schools?—£44.

9321. I suppose it is easier to get the infants to come—they are not wanted at home?—Yes, I think that is the reason.

9322. Dr. TRAILL.—Your attendance is 84 out of 113—that is 75 per cent.?—Yes.

9323. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—What are the religious denominations of the teachers in the infants' school?—The assistant is a Protestant and the two others are Roman Catholics. I am a Roman Catholic.

9324. What are the religious denominations of the boys' teachers?—

Mr. De Vere.—I am a Roman Catholic. The first assistant master is a Protestant; and the second assistant master and one monitor are Roman Catholics.

9325. The monitors are taken from the pupils?

Mr. De Vere.—Yes, from the best.

9326. How is it with you, Mrs. Ryan?

Mrs. Ryan.—The constant is a Protestant, and one monitor also.

9327. Did the Protestants win any of the Board monitorships?—One.

9328. I understood you to say that the trustees' monitors were appointed by competition?—Yes, there is a yearly examination, or when a vacancy occurs; and the girl who gets the highest marks is—if everything else be right—selected.

9329. At present the only Protestant monitor is one of the National Board?—Yes.

9330. All the rest of the seven are Catholics?—Yes, it is a matter of chance.

9331. Is it not a matter of merit?—There are some few Protestants, but they generally do not remain till they are of full age. The Board's monitors may be taken at a younger age.

The Rev. F. S. Dardin sworn.

9332. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—How long have you been Rector of Oldcastle?—Forty-eight years.

9333. Have you during that time been a trustee of this school?—I have been a trustee all that time, but not a manager, because there was no manager until it was put under the Board.

9334. Your Board consists of the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, the Protestant rector, the Roman Catholic parish priest, one Protestant layman, and one Roman Catholic layman?—Yes.

9335. How are the two lay trustees chosen?—Each by the remaining four.

9336. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Have they the right to sit, or does the Court of Chancery in England act on their recommendation?—I could not tell you that, but we always make the appointments ourselves. I don't know whether we recommend or not, but they always sanction the appointments.

9337. Does the Chief Secretary take any part in the management?—No; we were never compelled to call on him, for things go on very pleasantly.

9338. Dr. MOLLAY.—Do you summon him to your meetings?—No.

9339. And he never comes?—Never.

9340. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But you could have him if you wanted him?—Yes.

9341. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Do you happen to know if he was named a trustee originally, or was it the Court of Chancery in England who appointed him?—Originally by the will of Mr. Gilson the trustees were to be the Protestant rector, and the Roman Catholic priest of the parish alone.

9342. And the Court of Chancery introduced the others?—Yes.

9343. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—How often do the trustees hold stated meetings?—Every quarter.

9344. What business do you transact?—We pay the bills, and if anything arises we consider it—such as repairs, painting, or any of those things; and if occasion requires it we call a special meeting.

9345. Your money is all in Chancery?—It is.

9346. Have you much expense connected with the Court of Chancery?—Except passing the accounts and appointing trustees.

9347. What does the passing of the accounts cost you—they have to be passed, apparently, in England?—About £30 a year.

9348. How much has it cost you on each occasion to fill a vacancy in the trusteeship?—I think about the same.

9349. It would be an advantage to the charity to save these two sums?—Of course it would.

9350. The money, I presume, is in what used to be the Three per Cents?—Yes.

9351. Do you think four a sufficient number of acting trustees?—I would prefer having it as it is; if there were too many it would not be for the advantage of the charity.

9352. Have you thought at all of giving special instruction of a better class than that of a National school, or of giving intermediate education?—I was speaking to the head master introducing the South Kensington system. We had it before, and I managed it very successfully; it brought a great deal of money to the pupils, and effected them a great deal of instruction, and was a very great advantage.

9353. Why was it given up?—I was under the impression that when this school was put under the National Board we would not be allowed to do it. I thought that when we were receiving money from the Government the children would have a right to get it from North Kensington. When we had it here it was before the school was put under the Board.

9046. Have you tried what the Christian Brothers have done with so much success—and which we have also found in some Protestant schools—namely, an intermediate department in which something better than National school education could be given?—No, I have not.

9047. Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—Will you give an account of the circumstances which led to the abandonment of the teaching of agriculture. It was one of the objects specified by the testator in his will, and for which he left the endowment—I think the cause of it was that we could get no pupils.

9048. That is the people you had would not leave agriculture?—No; we had a good many the first year it was opened, but they fell away by degrees and at last we had none.

9049. Why can you not teach your ordinary pupils agriculture as you teach them other things, are they not largely the children of farmers?—We did teach them while we had a very excellent master, Mr. Smith. He used to take the boys out on the farm and instruct them. He left us and has gone down to Cork.

9050. Was the agricultural department successful while he had charge of it?—The instruction he imparted I am sure was very good.

9051. Was it appreciated by the people?—He taught in the school as well. I could not very well form an opinion as to whether they did not, but I know myself from my own knowledge that he imparted a very good education to their children.

9052. He is gone to the Cork Agricultural Model school?—Yes, and is getting on most successfully there I am told.

9053. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I find that Mr. Meade's report—as given in the report of Lord Howe's Commission of 1880—stated that the master's instruction given in this school was of a very high order, and fitted the boys not only for commercial life, but also for competition at Intermediate and other examinations. Do you not appear to have fallen back from Intermediate teaching in consequence of having joined the National Board?—We sent some very good boys out of this who got Civil Service and other appointments, and they were very good and well educated and got on very well in life, but we unfortunately got a master that wasn't very clever. We had Dr. Beattie as head master—a very clever man. He became a clergyman of the Church of Ireland. The next man that came in was not so well qualified. He was recommended to me by the Inspector that used to come round here from the National Board, although we were not under the Board at that time.

9054. Considering your numbers—and I am contrasting you in my own mind, I may tell you, with the Christian Brothers' schools and Swords school, which without any endowment established a higher class of education than the National school institutions—would there not be a possibility of your establishing a higher class from which the Oldcastle boys could go to the Intermediate examinations?—I don't know; I never thought of it.

9055. Dr. TRAILL.—Your new head master, who has been here only a short time, perhaps, after seeing his way, may be able to form such a class?—Yes.

9056. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What would you think of the idea of introducing some form of industrial teaching which would make the boys more useful when they leave school, and help them on in their career in life?—The impression on my mind is, that the better they are taught the better they can get on in the world afterwards—that they cannot by any possibility know too much.

9057. Then would you be in favour of introducing such extra subjects as the use of tools or wood carving?—Well, I think these technical subjects are very useful—as much so that when we were appointing a master lately I went to the National Board in Dublin. There was a gentleman who was very clever at technical education, and he was a candidate for this place; but, however, we selected Mr. De Vere as being the best man.

9058. I see that the foundation was originally established for the benefit of the parishes—lands, Oldcastle—of Loughcrew, Moyla, Killin, and Killa, and other neighbouring parishes. Have you done anything for the neighbouring parishes?—That does not seem to be the original foundation. The original foundation was confined to the parish of Oldcastle, and those other parishes were admitted afterwards.

9059. I am reading from the Report of 1880, and it states that Mr. O'Brien, in the year 1810, bequeathed the property for the benefit of the children of the parishes of Oldcastle, Loughcrew, Moyla, Killin, and Killa, and if there be room, of neighbouring parishes, without distinction of creed?—Well, that must be a mistake. But that was the intention of any mind.

9060. Don't you think that with such a splendid endowment as you have here you might do something, not only for the people of the immediate locality, but also for the people of the neighbouring parishes—what about coxery for the girls?—No objection to the world to it.

9061. Could you not get down a professional teacher of coxery, who would give a course of practical coxery, say for three or four months; and while you had her here you could send her to the neighbouring schools in other parishes; for all her time would not be taken up in your school? Well, I think that would be very desirable, for we all suffer very much from indigestion, and it would be well to have it.

9062. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—According to your last accounts £38 10s. 10d. is charged for the upkeep of your twenty-fourth account, and £20 10s. 6d. for the passing of your twenty-fifth account; so that I suppose the cost each year of merely passing your account exceeds £30!—Every two years now. We did pass them once a year.

9063. Lord Justice NAULT.—The trustees have power over everything, including the receipt and application of the income?—Yes.

9064. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Therefore it is quite open to the trustees to establish any class of education they like—isn't that so?—I think so.

9065. Lord Justice NAULT.—Instruction should be given in the school, besides religious instruction, is singing, drawing, reading, writing, arithmetic, history, geography, and such other branches of elementary learning as the trustees shall from time to time direct; and for the boys in algebra, chemistry, and the elements of agriculture, and for the girls in needlework. What history is taught?—Horn's; you introduced history, Mr. De Vere?

Mr. De Vere.—Yes; the National Board issues. Exclusive of that I intend to form a class on Saturdays.

9066. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—(To witness)—I see the trustees get £26 a year each?—Yes.

9067. Who are the trustees?—Mr. Gordon and myself.

9068. Have you a castle?—I have no castle.

9069. Lord Justice NAULT.—The total amount of the income for the year was £202?—About that.

9070. Is that always forthcoming?—Yes; it varies in some years.

9071. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What is your income from the endowment?

Mr. De Vere.—£780.

9072. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I make it out to be about £780. It is interest on £25,000 consols.

Rev. Mr. Dunlin.—We have repairs and painting, which cost a good deal.

9073. Lord Justice NAULT.—Have you ever a surplus?—We have.

June 15, 1888.
The Rev. T. S.
Derdin.

9074. Have you ever invested any money?—We have some invested out of the savings of women.

9075. In whose name are the investments made—those of the trustees or in Chancery?—In the names of the trustees, I think.

9076. So that you retain the control over them?—Yes.

9077. Dr. TRAILL.—Has the money owing to Mr. Naper been paid off?

Rev. Mr. GREHAN.—There is nothing due now to Mr. Naper.

9078. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY (to witness).—Can you give any explanation why the average attendance of pupils has been so low?—I think the master we had here was not an efficient man. I think the attendance will be better now that Mr. DeVere is here, and that the average will improve. With regard to technical instruction, and having a woman down to teach cookery, you know I am only one trustee, and I would like to have it brought before the whole body of the trustees before it was done.

9079. I would ask you to consider whether, in the event of our drawing up a scheme for the management of this endowment, it would not be desirable to give the trustees power to establish here in Oldcastle something like a centre for technical teaching. The small schools in the country cannot afford the expense of industrial teaching for themselves, and you have here an endowment which would enable you to form a centre from which you could send out teachers to the other schools?—Yes.

9080. And in that way enable the neighbouring parishes to get considerable benefit from this endowment, in accordance with the intention of the founder?—I would have no objection.

9081. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Could you not also have a carpenter to come here in the afternoon—not a theoretical, but a practical man to teach the boys. Would there be any difficulty about it?—No.

9082. There is another great feature in the North of Ireland—namely, evening classes to teach the boys and girls who are busy during the day?—I know.

9083. Lord Justice NADEL.—Do you think there would be an attendance at such evening classes?—Well, I don't know.

9084. Dr. TRAILL.—I suppose your teachers would find that, after they had put in four or five hours in the morning, unless they got special pay it would be rather hard to have to engage in evening work?—There is nothing so hard as teaching, and I don't think they would be disposed to do anything after a day's work—they would be worn out.

9085. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Elsewhere they have special evening classes?—Yes, if they have teachers specially for it.

9086. Lord Justice NADEL.—As for as your experience of the working of the trust goes, are there any additional powers or alterations in the scheme that appear to you to be desirable, or are you satisfied with the scheme as it works at present?—Well, I think we are working very harmoniously.

9087. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But you see very little better off than if you had not an endowment at all, as regards teaching. There is nothing taught here that is not taught in every large National School?—The only thing is, that what we teach here we teach very efficiently.

9088. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—But with such a fine endowment and the large grants you receive from the National Board, the neighbourhood could get greater advantages from the school than they do, particularly in the direction of industrial teaching?—Yes.

9089. We have found in many places a desire for industrial teaching, but that they could not afford the expense of special teachers. It would seem that here you could at least make a beginning by teaching those two subjects—to the boys the use of tools, and to the girls cookery; and that not only in this school, but in a number of schools round about?—Yes.

9090. And when once this system was established, you would have in every house in the country a boy who was a handy carpenter, and a girl who was a good cook?—It would be very desirable indeed.

9091. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Could you not also give some intermediate education to the clerical boys?—When Dr. Beattie was here he gave lectures in the evening to the boys and they went in for the Civil Service and got on very well in life. But Mr. DeVere has been only here for a short time and I don't suppose he has had time to turn it over in his mind.

9092. The master teaches Civil Service pupils in the evenings and mornings in Leamy's School, Linerick. They begin work in that school at seven o'clock in the morning.

Mr. DeVere.—A great number of monitors are preparing in our school and several of them are reading history and the higher arithmetic.

9093. Dr. TRAILL.—How many hours a day do you give the monitors?—An hour in the morning and three-quarters of an hour in the evening.

9094. What history do you use?—I have not used any yet, but I intend to use Dr. Smith's smaller history, and a class history on Saturdays.

9095. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Do all the trustees attend each meeting of the board?—Mr. Naper, Mr. Grehan, and I myself attend; Colonel Donaldson sometimes comes, but he lives at a distance.

9096. What might be the average attendance of trustees at meetings of the board?—I suppose the average attendance would be two.

9097. Yourself and the parish priest?—Yes.

9098. The Chief Secretary never comes and is never summoned; Colonel Donaldson sometimes comes; Mr. Naper comes when he is at home, so that I may say practically your board on ordinary occasions is a board of two?—Yes.

9099. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—On June 15, 1888, it appears by the minute book that there were present, Colonel Donaldson and Rev. Mr. Grehan, on May 5, 1888, the Rev. Mr. Durdin and the Rev. Mr. Grehan; on April 9, Mr. Naper, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan; on March 15, Mr. Naper, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan; on February 27, a special meeting, Rev. Mr. Durdin and Rev. Mr. Grehan; on December 10, 1887, Mr. Naper, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan; on November 7, 1887, Mr. Naper, Colonel Donaldson, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan—that was the occasion on which Mr. DeVere was unanimously appointed Head Master; on September 15, 1887, Mr. Naper, Colonel Donaldson, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan—that was a meeting to accept the resignation of Mr. Brady and to appoint two monitors; August 10, 1887, Mr. Naper, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan; August 8, 1887, Mr. Naper, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan; July 29, 1887, Mr. Naper, Colonel Donaldson, Rev. Mr. Durdin, and Rev. Mr. Grehan—that was a meeting to receive tenders for coal, to give instructions for the stationing of carts on the farm, and to make arrangements for painting; and on June 10, 1887, at which Mr. John Coyle was appointed a monitor, the Rev. Mr. Durdin and the Rev. Mr. Grehan attended. These are the attendances for the last twelve months.

(Witness.—Mr. Grehan and I are the managers of the school and we are generally here.)

9100. You are joint managers under the National Board?—Yes.

9101. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Under your existing scheme no one can be a trustee unless he is an owner of land in the neighbourhood?—He must be a land-owner resident within fifty miles of the school.

9102. (To witness).—Do you think that no one is qualified to take part in the management of an endowed school unless he is an owner of land?—Well, I don't think that would apply at the present time, I don't think it is an advantage at all for a man to be an owner of land.

June 21, 1894.
The Rev. T. S.
Dunlop.

9103. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Of these parishes of Lougherew, Moyla, Killea, and Kilbride, how many are separate parishes in your Church?—There are all separate parishes.

9104. Under separate clergymen in each?—No, Mr. Butler attends to Killea and Mount Nugent; the incumbents are not sufficient for two.

9105. Is there a parish clergyman for Lougherew?—Yes.

9106. In Moyla?—No, Moyla is a Roman Catholic division.

9107. In Kilbride?—Kilbride, or Mount Nugent, is joined with Killea, and one clergyman serves both.

9108. For the four parishes named there are then two parish clergymen, of whom one lives in Lougherew and the other in Oldcastle?—Yes.

9109. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Are there two besides the rector here?—Not reckoning me.

9110. Dr. Traill.—What is the name of your parish?—Oldcastle.

9111. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You have a Select Vestry?—We have.

9112. With how many registered members?—Well I suppose about twenty, as well as I can recollect.

9113. Are all the parishes named in the neighbourhood of Oldcastle?—They are.

The Rev. Edward Graham, P.R., sworn.

The Rev.
Edward Graham.

9119. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How long have you been the parish priest of Oldcastle?—Since the latter end of 1851.

9120. During that time you have acted as a trustee of the school?—Yes.

9121. How long have you been one of the joint managers?—Since it joined the National Board.

9122. Since the school joined the Board have matters gone on harmoniously and well?—I could not exactly say that. Now we are harmonious, but the trustees were very much divided at one time, especially when we were drawing up the new Chancery Scheme.

9123. Lord Justice Naunton.—Did you all agree to it?—Of course we had different opinions, and there were great divisions at that time, especially about the farm, and it resulted in litigation.

9124. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What was the litigation?—Mr. Naper thought to take up the farm to himself, on the ground that we were not devoting it to the purpose for which it was leased—namely, as an agricultural farm, and the matter was brought before the Chancellor in England. It was decided then, that whilst we held the farm in a state fit to be used as an agricultural farm he was not entitled to resume possession.

9125. How much did it cost the charity to get that decision?—The trustees' costs, independent of Mr. Naper's, were £170 15s. 6d.; and Mr. Naper's costs were £27 7s. 8d. It was all lost to the charity by those divisions. The costs of both sides were paid by the charity.

9126. Is there any provision in Oldcastle for the Intermediate education of Roman Catholics?—We have a classical school here that might be regarded as Intermediate in a certain sense.

9127. How is it maintained?—By a gentleman who gives instruction in classics as a junior assistant in this school.

9128. Lord Justice Naunton.—And gets his salary as such?—Gets his salary from the National Board, and it is supplemented by the trustees.

9129. Dr. Traill.—What are his classical qualifications?—At present I think he is only first of the third. He is going to stand his examination in July.

9130. I am not talking of his National Board qualification but of his classical qualification—where did he get that?—He passed through Maynooth. He has a very good knowledge of Latin and Greek.

9114. Dr. Traill.—Are there any better by trustees that could be selected here than Mr. Naper and Colonel Donalson. This would be an awkward question perhaps, except that, as the endowments have been challenged, I want to know if you could substitute anybody else better?—Well, that is a delicate question.

9115. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—It is not the endowments that have been challenged, but the condition that excludes everyone else.

9116. Dr. Traill.—I don't find fault with either gentlemen, but I want to know are there gentlemen of any other class of society who would take an interest in this matter; and who, you think, would work as well as those that have been?—I know of my own knowledge that Mr. Naper takes a great interest in the schools.

9117. Didn't his father give the ground for this school?—No sir. All Mr. Naper's tenants' children come to this school and have the benefit of the education it gives, and that is a matter which concerns him as a landlord.

9118. I suppose that is the obvious reason why landowners should have been selected as trustees?—They had different ideas then from what they have now about these matters.

9131. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Does he teach classics outside school hours?—Principally.

9132. Your trustees give him a salary for teaching in this school?—Not precisely for classics, but as an assistant under the National Board.

9133. Why could he not give instruction to an Intermediate class in this school, and be paid directly out of the endowment?—It is far economy's sake. We could do that if we went to the expense of giving him a separate salary, but we did not like to draw too much from the endowment.

9134. About what number of Roman Catholic boys are there in Oldcastle who would like to get a better education than that of a National school?—I should say if there were a special master to teach classics and the pupils would also have the advantage of learning the English course—after a while we would have 50 or 40 or 30 boys.

9135. Are there no means of teaching the girls any French?—No means, except you took it from the master.

9136. Is there any want of better teaching amongst the girls of a better class corresponding to the boys you speak of?—There might indeed; but they would be very few that would aspire so high.

9137. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The girls are less likely to go away from home than the boys?—Less likely.

9138. And have no great want of French?—I am afraid not. I don't know what they would be doing with it.

9139. Dr. Traill.—Which would French or Irish be the more useful?—They don't talk Irish here.

9140. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is there any want of industrial teaching in the plant?—Unfortunately we have no industries. There are no manufactures of any kind; and if they were to learn these things I don't know what use they could make of them.

9141. Is there no such thing as carpentry or blacksmith's work in Oldcastle?—Oh, to be sure.

9142. Lord Justice Naunton.—I suppose they learn these trades with some carpenter or blacksmith?—They do.

9143. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Would it not be a very useful thing to in a farmer's house to have a young fellow who could drive a nail or put up a board, or repair a gate, or mend a cart?—I quite agree.

9144. And if he were taught to do it would not the expense be added to the family of sending into the town for a carpenter?—Of course it would.

9145. Lord Justice FRYGIESSON.—Don't a considerable number of your boys emigrate?—We are not bound to educate them for that purpose.

9146. But when they go abroad might it not be useful to them to know how to use their hands?—Oh, it would; I am not against it at all.

9147. Rev. Dr. MONAGHAN.—Would it not be an advantage that the trustees should have the power to employ a skilled carpenter who would teach the boys the use of tools?—Yes.

9148. Do you think it would be well to teach the girls something of practical cookery?—I don't know what they would have to cook.

9149. In some places practical cookery is taught, and the materials are supplied for it; and when these are cooked in the presence of the children, they are either taken home by them or eaten on the spot. Then the children themselves are made to cook in the presence of the teacher, so that they can cook afterwards in their own homes. If that could be done here would it not be a very good way of spending part of the endowment?—I would agree to that if it could be done.

9150. Lord Justice FRYGIESSON.—Can you give us any suggestions for the extension or improvement of your course of education?—I really think that according to the scheme drawn up already the school will go on very well. It is working very well. Of course there might be little alterations that I would suggest.

9151. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—What are they?—One subject is about the appointment of trustees. I would suggest some one instead of the Chief Secretary for the time being. He is a gentleman that is very much occupied. I had to consult him on one occasion, and he knew nothing at all about the affairs of the school, and did not know that he was a trustee. I would suggest that instead of the Chief Secretary the Resident Commissioner of National Education should be appointed a trustee. I think that from his position and knowledge of the working of the Board, he would be able to assist us with advice.

9152. Lord Justice FRYGIESSON.—Do you think it would do to say the Resident Commissioner, or if he was unable or unwilling to accept the office, one of the Head Inspectors. I see that on a former occasion some great improvements were attributed to the interest taken in the school by one of the Inspectors. What you want is an educational gentleman of position?—Yes, of position. I mentioned the Resident Commissioner as the more honorable.

9153. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Sir Patrick Kennan might object to becoming a trustee. If he objected would you be satisfied with the Head Inspector of the district as a trustee?—Yes.

9154. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would not the tendency of having one of your trustees in connexion with the National Board be to restrict the application of your endowment to the programme of the National Board, while with such a splendid endowment you might go a long way beyond that?—I don't think the Commissioners would interfere at all if we kept to the rules of the National Board.

9155. What advantage would you hope to derive from having the Resident Commissioner as one of your trustees?—When we should appeal to him in a case of special difficulty we would have the advantage of his decision.

9156. Lord Justice FRYGIESSON.—What else do you suggest?—There is a difference between the pay of the trustees' members and that of the National Board members, and I would suggest that they should receive the same salary, and be governed by the very same rules.

9157. Can you not make that change now if you like?—I dare say.

9158. The scheme allows a yearly sum not exceeding £30 for monitors, and that can be divided in any way you please. At present the trustees are appointed by the English Lord Chancellor. You may recommend anybody you like, or, if you differ on go to the Chief Secretary to nominate; but though the nomination is with you, the appointment is by the Lord Chancellor. That is an expensive process, and apparently they ought to know the best men better in Ireland than in England. Could you suggest a better mode of selection, so as to avoid going to the English Court of Chancery?—I have not the slightest objection to the present trustees, Mr. Naper and Colonel Donahoe, but if they happened to die or to leave the country it would be very difficult to get men to succeed them, unless the qualification be altered.

9159. It is not only a question of qualification but of how to select the best qualified persons. How could the Roman Catholic member be selected?—Give the remaining trustees the power of selecting them.

9160. The difficulty about that would be that if Colonel Donahoe's place became vacant, the remaining trustees would be yourself, Mr. Durbin, the Chief Secretary, and Mr. Naper; three Protestants and only one Roman Catholic. In the same way if Mr. Naper vacated his place you and Colonel Donahoe would be two to one against Mr. Durbin?—The scheme provides for that, for it says that the lay trustees shall be a Protestant and a Catholic.

9161. But it leaves the nomination always to a majority of the other denomination?—The surviving trustees recommend them to the Lord Chancellor—and we could do that still.

9162. If you do it will always cost you £35 for each appointment.

9163. Dr. TRAILL.—If a vacancy should be caused by the death of the parish priest, would not the appointment of his successor cost the charity £35?—That must be a mistake, because the parish priest and the rector are trustees ex-officio, without any formality.

9164. What formality did you go through when you were appointed?—None, whatever.

9165. Did you sign any document?—I don't remember.

9166. Lord Justice FRYGIESSON (reads).—"The remaining trustees, or some of them, shall, unless an order be obtained from the Charity Commissioners of England and Wales, make application by summons before the judge," that is, to an English Chancery judge, "for an order for the appointment of a new Protestant lay trustee, or a new Roman Catholic lay trustee, as the case may be, and on such appointment being made, the freehold property shall be vested in two trustees in such manner as the judge shall direct." So that on every vacancy among the lay trustees you are not only at the expense of an appointment, but also at the expense of a new conveyance of the property.

9167. Dr. TRAILL.—The property vests in the two laymen?—In the two laymen alone.

9168. Rev. Dr. MONAGHAN.—Are the school buildings vested in the laymen?—All the charity property.

9169. Is this a vested or a non-vested school?—Non-vested.

9170. If the buildings are vested in a committee of laymen is it not a vested school?—It is vested in the trustees.

Lord Justice FRYGIESSON.—The Englishmen did not understand the rules of the National Board, and called it a non-vested school in the scheme.

Dr. TRAILL.—It is not necessarily a "vested" school because it happens to be vested in trustees.

Rev. Dr. MONAGHAN.—Under the scheme they have only power to put themselves in connexion with the Commissioners of National Education as a "non-vested school."

9171. Lord Justice FRYGIESSON (to witness).—Can you give us no suggestion as to how on a vacancy for a Roman Catholic lay trustee, a fit person should be selected without applying to Chancery in England?—The way it has been done is that I looked out for a lay gentleman, and my brother co-trustees answered his appointment.

9172. They agreed to whomsoever you named?—Yes.

9173. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Is it desirable to exclude all persons who are not owners of land?—I would not make it a qualification that the person should be a landowner, because we have very few landowners.

9174. Dr. TRAILL.—They might sell out their property under some future purchase scheme?—They might.

9175. Are there other persons available as trustees?—There are persons of business habits and intelligence, but they are not qualified by property. We have some substantial men and intelligent, but we have not men of education. We have a sufficient number of Protestant landowners. The difficulty is to get a Roman Catholic for a trustee who is qualified as a landowner.

9176. Lord Justice FRANKENBERG.—At present your money is in the Court of Chancery of England, would you object to its being transferred to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests in this country?—I would not object; I would be for it.

9177. If it were so transferred would you object to those Commissioners having the same jurisdiction in the appointment of trustees that the Court of Chancery in England now has?—I have not thought of it.

9178. Lord Justice FRANKENBERG.—They are not as expensive as the Lord Chancellor of England?—I would like to enquire on the trust as inexpensively as possible.

9179. At present if a Roman Catholic lay trustee is wanted you select a suitable person, and if your Protestant colleagues agree, there is no more trouble about it; in the same way you and your lay colleague would not think yourselves justified in objecting if the rector proposed a satisfactory Protestant. Therefore really the nomination is with the parish priest and rector. If we allowed the parish priest and his bishop to nominate the Roman Catholic layman, and the Protestant rector and his bishop to nominate the Protestant layman—wouldn't that do quite as well as going to England?—Quite so well; I would be satisfied with that arrangement.

9180. Once you had four trustees two more could be obtained by letting the four co-opt, if they should think proper, one more Roman Catholic and one more Protestant, so as to enable you, if there should be a good and useful man in the neighbourhood, to bring him in.

9181. Dr. TRAILL.—You will lose £40 a year by the change in the funds—a twelfth of your income of £720?—Yes.

9182. Lord Justice FRANKENBERG.—If you will consider the matter carefully and put down on paper any suggestions for the improvement or alteration of the existing scheme, we will be very glad to consider them, and they will be of great assistance to us?—I will be very happy to do it.

9183. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—How many Catholic parishes are there corresponding to Loughboro, Oldcastle, Moyle, Killea and Killybegs?—These are the same.

9184. Are there five Catholic parishes?—Moyle and Oldcastle form one united parish. Killea, Killybegs, and Mount Nugent are one in the Catholic sense. Loughboro belongs to Oldcastle.

9185. Lord Justice FRANKENBERG.—Then there are two parish priests and three incumbents in the district contemplated by the scheme?—Yes.

9186. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—The school affords education to all the inhabitants of Oldcastle parish?—Yes.

9187. Have the parishes of Killea and Killybegs schools of their own?—They have National schools and the children don't come here, except a few.

9188. If you had a teacher of such a subject as the use of tools, would these schools consider it an advantage that the teacher should be sent to them for one or two hours a week?—I dare say it would be a great advantage.

9189. Dr. TRAILL.—Would they not prefer the children of these National schools together any time the teacher came round?—Oh, to be sure; I think they would.

9190. Lord Justice FRANKENBERG.—Is there anything else that you wish to tell us?—The assistant teacher at present only gets a salary of £18 from the endowment, which is out of proportion to the work he has to do in the school. That with his salary from the National Board is inadequate. Under the new scheme the assistant teacher is only allowed to get £18, and it is not enough at all, it ought to be increased.

9191. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—What is the "new scheme" that you refer to?—The scheme of 1833.

9192. Dr. TRAILL.—That was obtained to allow you to get under the National Board?—Yes.

9193. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Was that given by the English Court of Chancery?—Yes.

9194. The old scheme was the scheme of 1837?—Yes.

9195. Dr. TRAILL.—How much did the scheme of 1833 cost you?—It cost £189 19s. 11d.

9196. Lord Justice FRANKENBERG.—It may interest you to know that the expenses of some schemes settled by us for larger institutions did not cost the charities as many pence as you paid pounds. We have seen the school, and we understand its position. It seems to be working well and quietly, but not much better than an unendowed National school of the same size ought to do. The trustees should have a special meeting, and consider carefully any changes in the existing constitution, which might be advantageous. Any change whatever can now be made without expense, and with fuller effect than any Chancery scheme. We can incorporate your governing body, so as to relieve you from going to Chancery for the appointment of new trustees. You will also consider about the money; it is in England at present. The only body in Ireland that I know of, to whom it could be transferred with advantage, are the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. They could hold it in Ireland, and pay you the dividends half yearly without expense. Putting your accounts in England is expensive; that can be put an end to and a system substituted of passing your accounts before an auditor appointed or approved by the Local Government Board, which costs between £1 and £2 a year. Then as regards education, we would like you to consider whether you could not do more with your endowment. Your teaching is admirable as National school teaching, but you could make some provision for the intermediate education of children. I suppose you have doctors, shopkeepers, agents, gentlemen farmers, and others in the place who want education for their children which you could give by the formation of intermediate classes. Then at the other end of the line there is the industrial teaching, intended by the founder of the charity but abandoned, and technical instruction; also for infants there is the Kindergarten system, and there are all the branches of Science and Art. We can give you power to introduce all these arrangements. As to the nomination of lay trustees, you might consider whether the parish priest and the rector might not, with the concurrence of their respective bishops, be empowered to name two, and the whole body empowered to co-opt others. If you will send us suggestions on these points we will give them the fullest consideration, and will draw up a scheme calculated to improve the place.

Witness.—We require to do something now in the way of painting and repairs, and we have money in hand, but by the terms of the scheme we are obliged to return it, and invest it in consols in London. Can we retain it now by your authority?

9197. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—We have no authority except to settle a scheme; and until it is finally approved it has no effect. But practically, if you execute your repairs without waiting for three or four months, the scheme would make that right.

Rev. Mr. Durdin.—We would like to do it during the holidays.

Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—Let us have a copy of the lease under which the farm is held, and also a copy of the old scheme.

The inquiry then closed.

PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1888.

At Dempsey's School, Kells.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAISH, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLAY, D.D., D.Sc., ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.S., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., was in attendance.

DEMPSEY'S SCHOOL, KELLS.

Lord Justice NAISH read the devise in the Will of Miss Dempsey.

WILLIAM FORD, Esq., sworn and examined.

9200. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—You are solicitor to the trustees of Miss Dempsey's school?—Yes.

9201. How long have you acted on their behalf?—Since the death of my father in 1865.

9202. He was their solicitor previously?—Yes.

9203. The foundation is under the will of Miss Catherine Dempsey?—It is solely managed under the will.

9204. Under the will the governing body consists of the Roman Catholic bishop and archdeacon of the diocese, and one layman nominated by them?—Yes.

9205. Lord Justice NAISH.—Who is the present layman?—Mr. James Killeen.

9206. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—How long has he been acting?—Since 1873—since the death Mr. Crotty, formerly member of parliament for this county.

9207. Since 1865 how many changes of trustees have there been?—There was a change of trustees in 1863, caused by the death of the Rev. Father McEvoy, who was parish priest, and again on the appointment of the Rev. Father Ganghoun in 1876.

9208. How long has the present Dr. Nulty been bishop?—Since 1868.

9209. On the occasion of each vacancy have you had a conveyance of the property executed?—Yes, by the survivors.

9210. Did they consider it necessary to have a deed of conveyance executed every time there was a change?—Yes, under the advice of the late Sir Michael O'Loughlin.

9211. Give us roughly the expense of the transfer of the property on the occasion of each vacancy?—£5 was the outlay for the deed, and 30s. stamp duty.

9212. What does the property consist of?—All land.

9213. How are the school premises held?—Under a lease from Lord Rossmore for 999 years, given in 1847 to the three trustees for the purpose of building a school.

9214. What rent is paid for the school premises?—£40 a year.

9215. What is the quantity of land?—The take on which the school stands is about three acres.

9216. Is £40 a full rent?—Yes.

9217. There is no valuable interest in the leasehold except that created by the befalling?—None.

9218. What was the expenditure on the building?—The school was built under contract for £3,300.

9219. The first item of property bequeathed by the will is the estate of Balmaine—what does that consist of?—About 178 acres 1 rood 35 perches, held in fee, purchased by the late Sylvester Dempsey, father of the testatrix.

9220. What is the present condition of that property?—The rental at present is £321 6s. 4d.; it is set to three tenants. It was originally let by lease, but the lease expired in 1878 and 1879. The lands were held on a tenants from year to year, and 1887 the lands were valued and set to the same tenants at the present rental.

9221. They are not present tenants under the Land Act?—No.

9222. How does it compare with the old rent under the lease?—The old rent under the lease was £150 more. The lands were originally let on lease in 1846 to three tenants.

9223. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—Then the successors to the three tenants to whom the lands were let in 1846 still hold, but at rents £150 less than the rents of 1846, and amounting to £321 6s. 4d.?—Yes.

9224. What are the outgoings?—Tithes-rentcharge, income tax, and poor rate. The proportion of poor rate comes to £40 a year.

9225. What is the net amount available for school purposes?—£321 in round numbers.

9226. How is the estate managed?—I receive the rents.

9227. You charge the usual poundage of 5 per cent.?—Yes.

9228. The next item bequeathed is "all her interest in the lands of Sydderath, near Kells"?—The lands of Sydderath were held under three leases of different terms. Mr. Edward Moore O'Ferrall is the head landlord. The only property the trustees now hold is 35a. 2r. 31p., for which they have a lease for ever. They originally held 141a. 0r. 28p.

9229. I see by the Report of the Commission of 1880 that Sydderath and South Park are stated to contain 333 acres statute measure, formerly leasehold property, but only part of which had been held by the trustees since the expiration of a lease in 1878.

2 X 2

June 16, 1885.

William Ferrel,
esq.

It was subject to a rent of £148 18s. 6d. and 211 2s. tithe-rentcharge. The report states that these lands were originally let to seven yearly tenants at rents amounting to £424 12s. 11d., but in 1880 this leasehold property produced £264 12s. 6d., and part of this was alien to fall out, involving a loss of income to the school of £200 a year. That has occurred since; they have at present of Sydderath only 35s. 3s. 31p., set at £24 10s. 8d.

9238. There is a head rent of £43 6s. 11d. and outgoings—namely, tithe-rentcharge £10, and the proportion of poor rate. These come to about £17.

9239. Then, practically, you have very little profit out of Sydderath?—Practically so.

9240. The main endowment available for educational purposes is £280 out of the fee-simple property?—That is all.

9241. Is there any accumulated or invested money?—None.

9242. Out of what fund was the school building erected?—There was originally a mortgage by the trustees for the purpose of building the house. It has been paid off some years.

9243. Is this place now held free from any incumbrance?—Even any incumbrance, but subject to the rent of £40 a year.

9244. Dr. TRAILL.—Was the £3,300 borrowed?—It was.

9245. And paid off since?—Yes.

9246. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Was it by means of subscription that it was paid off?—No. During the time the mortgage was outstanding the trustees kept funds for the purpose of reducing it from time to time. It was paid off out of the rents of the lands by the trustees.

9247. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The lady gave "all her estates, freehold, leasehold, and otherwise, wheresoever situated"—was there any remainder fund?—These lands are the only property.

9248. Is there any inconvenience in the management of the property, except that involved in the transfer on each appointment of a new trustee?—That is the only one. The trusts of the will have been carried out ever since.

9249. How do you account?—Once a year. The trustees meet once a year regularly for the purpose of settling and signing the accounts.

9250. Was there any occasion on which there was a vacancy for any length of time without it being filled?—No, when a vacancy occurred a meeting was called for the purpose of filling it up early.

9251. Dr. TRAILL.—Is the governing body of the institution the same now as under the original will?—Yes.

9252. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—If it happened that a layman was to die, and either of the other parties fell vacant there would be only one remaining trustee?—That is all, but the number has been kept up.

9253. What is the tenure of the tenants on the Sydderath property?—The same as on the Balraskine.

9254. Are the trustees bound by a covenant to pay the head rent?—They are bound by the lease.

9255. There is a covenant in the lease?—There is.

9256. Are they direct lessees?—The original trustees were Dr. Cantwell, Father McEvoy, and Mr. O'Reilly.

9257. Were they original lessees?—No, Mr. Dempsey, the father of the testatrix was the original lessee.

9258. If the trustees ceased to have any beneficial interest in that leasehold can they get rid of it by assignment?—I should say so.

9259. Have they any leasing powers, except that given by statute generally to trustees?—No, none.

9260. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you had any difficulty in collecting this reduced rent of £331 for the last few years?—Well, not very great difficulty. The tenants get time. They require time. In the last year there was a further reduction of twenty per cent. made by the trustees in the rent for last season—it was a temporary abatement.

9261. Are they chiefly grazing lands?—They are agricultural farms.

9262. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—You had litigation about some of this property?—There was any amount of litigation.

9263. What about?—Originally when Miss Dempsey died the poor people of the parish thought they were the best entitled to the land. It had been managed in common previous to Miss Dempsey's death. On her death the trustees thought it better to let it. The people took possession of it, and would not let it be let for twelve months or two years.

9264. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—When was that?—In 1845. The leases made by the then trustees were for thirty-one years, or the life of Prince Albert. The leases expired, and the poor people again took possession of the land in 1877.

9265. Dr. TRAILL.—Wasn't land at its lowest when the leases were made in 1845?—I don't know. They took it by proposal. 1845 and 1847 was the famine time.

9266. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—How was the litigation settled in 1877?—By an action in 1878, 1879, and 1880. We turned them out.

9267. They came in again as tenants from year to year?—From year to year.

9268. How was the present rental fixed?—The trustees appointed a gentleman to value the lands.

9269. Dr. TRAILL.—Were they the same tenants that took the new holdings?—No; there were two farms of which the tenants' representatives remained in possession; and one farm was altogether taken possession of by the poor people of the parish.

9270. But you ejected them?—Yes.

9271. Are the tenants in possession now the same tenants as formerly?—The representative of the tenant who had it previously got it after the litigation.

9272. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Between loss of rents and costs, how much did the Charity lose by the litigation?—The trustees got no costs from the defendants; they had to pay their own costs—something like £200.

9273. They lost at least a year's income, besides the land being idle?—They do.

9274. Do the present tenants hold under written proposals?—No, they attended a meeting of the trustees, and agreed to take the land at a rent settled by the arbitrator.

9275. How much have they paid since?—They have paid the rents regularly.

9276. The settlement was in 1867?—In 1867, but it went back to 1865 and 1866.

9277. Up to what time is it paid at present?—Up to November, 1887, some of it—May, 1886, and November, 1887.

9278. Dr. TRAILL.—The £321 rent was fixed when the leases expired in 1878?—It was not settled at that time, but it was calculated from that time.

9279. They have paid it from that time?—Yes.

9280. Have they got no reduction since 1880?—They got a reduction of twenty per cent.

9281. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—That is a reduction of twenty per cent. on the reduced rental?—Yes.

9282. But the dispute was only settled last year?—That's all.

9283. So that the present rent was fixed in 1877?—Fixed in 1887.

9284. Dr. TRAILL.—For how many years was the reduction of twenty per cent. given?—One year—the last year, on the reduced rent.

9285. What was the rent between 1878 and 1887?—A rent which, when we came to settle in 1887, was calculated at the rate settled in 1867. They always paid something on account. We did not close the account till 1887, and then the rents were calculated from the beginning to 1887, and the tenants got twenty per cent. off for last year.

9270. The trustees have no powers of sale or letting except what ordinary trustees have by statute?—Yes.

9271. Then powers of that sort might be useful?—In the event of their wishing to dispose of it.

9272. How are the repairs of the building executed—do you look after that?—No, I do not. I merely deal with the tenants. At the annual meeting there is a representation made by the gentlemen at the head of the establishment requiring such and such things to be done, and some of the trustees see if it is necessary.

9273. Do the trustees keep a bank account?—They do.

9274. Do you lodge the rents in the bank on account, or only when you settle your account?—When I clear off the head rents and charges; I generally lodge the balance at the end of the year.

9275. How are the outgoings paid?—The outgoings are paid by cheque drawn by me. I don't pay the allowances for teaching; I merely pay the head rents, the taxes, and charges.

9276. You leave the payments for education to the trustees?—I leave that to the resident trustees.

The Rev. Laurence Gargrave, R.P., sworn.

The Rev.
 Laurence Gargrave.

9281. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—How long are you parish priest of Kells?—Since April, 1885.

9282. Are you, ex-officio, one of the trustees of the Desmay Charity?—I am supposed to be.

9283. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is there any difficulty about that; are you the archdeacon of the diocese?—I don't know that there is any archdeacon of the diocese at all.

9284. Has there been any embarrassment arising from the provision of the will naming the archdeacon as trustee?—I cannot say. I believe my predecessor, Fisher Nicholls, had himself appointed archdeacon from Rome for that purpose.

9285. There is no Archdeacon of Meath at present upon you are cast?—I don't think there is.

9286. You have been acting as trustee?—Yes.

9287. And the property was conveyed to you as a trustee?—Yes.

9288. Dr. TRAILL.—It could be very easily remedied by making you an archdeacon?—Very easily.

9289. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—An archdeacon is not necessarily attached to any particular parish?—No.

9290. The trustees regularly meet, Mr. Ford tells us, once a year for settling the accounts; have you a fixed time for meeting?—Our last meeting was on the 24th of April last, and the previous meeting was in September, 1887; there is no fixed time exactly; it is considered desirable to meet twice a year.

9291. Do you meet at the school?—In the small room attached to this schoolroom.

9292. Where is the bishop's residence?—The bishop has two residences—one at Mullingar and the other at Navan. He is about half a year at each place.

9293. What part does the present lay trustee take in the management?—He gives his opinion of the various matters. He makes payments. I was unwell for a year, and he made the payments in my absence. The ordinary payments to the Brothers are made by cheques signed by two of the trustees.

9294. In your dealings with the tenants, who acts for you—do you leave that altogether to Mr. Ford, or do either the lay or clerical trustees meddle in it?—We leave the collection of the rents to Mr. Ford.

9295. When the tenants were looking for abatements?—Oh, well, we gave him a helping hand then.

9296. Dr. TRAILL.—Did you decide upon the abatements yourselves or did you leave your solicitor a discretionary power to do so?—We decided, as far as I remember, the question of abatement ourselves.

9297. Lord Justice FRANKS.—Having regard to his view, I suppose?—Yes.

9298. Lord Justice FRANKS.—Who ultimately made the agreement by which the rents were fixed?—The trustees. The tenants were called in, and the trustees decided that it should be left to the valuation of two men, one appointed by the trustees, and the other appointed by the tenants—two practical farmers of the locality.

9299. Did they agree?—They agreed, and everyone says they put on rather a high rent.

9300. You took 20 per cent. off £1—In order to secure the rent.

9301. I presume you would not have taken off the 20 per cent. if you could have got the 30 per cent. otherwise?—No.

9302. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The 20 per cent. was taken off an account of an exceptionally unfavourable year?—On account of an unfavourable year.

9303. Lord Justice FRANKS.—Was there any prospect of getting a full year's rent?—I fear not. I fear that even the reduction of last year hardly satisfies them.

9304. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The Christian Brothers have the boys' school?—Yes, the boys over eight.

9305. And the nuns have the girls and infants?—Yes.

9306. Including the boys and girls up to eight?—Yes.

9307. Lord Justice FRANKS.—It was stated in 1880, that four Brothers had charge of the establishment—three teaching, and one attending to domestic duties?—There are not four Brothers now, only three, and a servant is employed instead of the fourth.

9308. What stipend do you pay to the Brothers?—From £44 to £48, quarterly.

9309. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The girls' school is now under the National Board of Education?—Since 1886.

9310. Do you pay the nuns any stipend from the endowment?—Yes, they have a house; it belongs to the endowment. The two rooms underneath where we are sitting are schoolrooms belonging to the nuns, and these were erected by the Desmay Charity, and in the opposite wing the class rooms are on the ground floor, while the upper rooms are the nuns' cells. All these buildings are part of the endowment. Then they have two acres attached to the school—also part of the endowment, and the trustees took a house adjoining the school, for which they pay £30 a year, for the nuns. They give them also £26 a year for the cleaning of the schools, and a few other requisites.

9311. Dr. TRAILL.—How many nuns are there?—Twenty.

9312. Are they all employed in teaching?—All except one.

9313. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The number of girls is 296 on the roll.

9314. And the number of infants?—168 on the roll. The number of girls in attendance is 278, and the number of infants in attendance, 134.

9315. Then the total number on the roll is 464, and the total attendance, 412?—Yes.

9316. Which is an average attendance of 71 for every hundred on the roll?—Yes.

9317. What remuneration do the nuns get from the National Board, I find in the statements handed in, "Nuns' salary, £80 per annum per 100 pupils average attendance." They have an average attendance of 600, so that that would represent £240 a year, and in addition they have recital fees, £228?—Yes.

June 21, 1886.

The Rev.
Lawrence
Geoghegan.

9320. And, lastly, they have school fees, £95 15s. That appears to represent a very healthy condition of the school, both as regards attendance, results fees, and school fees. A very healthy condition.

9321. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is there any intermediate teaching by the nuns?—Not at present; there was in the beginning.

9322. Why was it discontinued?—The nuns told me that they found it very hard to manage it in a day school.

9323. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—“The following extra branches:—Sewing machine, girls’ reading book”—what is that?—The girls’ reading book treats of cookery and domestic economy, which is considered an extra by the National Board.

9324. I find also, “Cookery, physical geography, drawing, French, and instrumental music”—do you know how they teach cookery?—They bring the children into the kitchen. They put them practically through the work, and the Inspector goes round and sees it.

9325. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Then they have a practical cookery class and theoretical books besides?—They have.

9326. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Do the children take an interest in the cookery class?—They do.

9327. And find it an advantage when they go to their homes to be able to cook for their families?—Yes.

9328. The nuns have also the Kindergarten system? They have.

9329. I find that the Inspector reported in October, 1885—“The Kindergarten system has lately been introduced, and more progress made than I should have considered possible in the time.” Has it since been carried out?—It has, successfully.

9330. How did they establish it at first?—They got a teacher from Dublin.

Rev. Brother John P. O’Brien.—Two teachers came down, and stayed five or six weeks, and made it a continual study, going from one school to another. When the children were sufficiently expert the Christian Brothers were brought in to see how well the children were able to get along with it. I am able to say that ever since the Kindergarten system has been going on regularly day by day.

9331. Rev. Dr. Molloy (to witness).—And it has given satisfaction?—Certainly.

9332. Do the children like it?—Yes.

9333. And you find it develops their intelligence? Yes, to a remarkable extent.

9334. Before 1880 the nuns received £120 a year from the endowment, but were not connected with the National Board?—They were then not connected with it.

9335. Since 1880 they have been connected with the National Board, and have received only £26 a year from the endowment?—The rent and taxes of the convent are paid out of the endowment, and that house before alluded to—that is paid for also out of the endowment.

9336. Consequently the connection of the school with the National Board has relieved the endowment from a charge of about £100 a year. Are the nuns as well off as they were before?—I should say the nuns think they are much better off.

9337. Dr. Traill.—They get £240 a year now, and £228 results fees from the State, instead of £120 formerly received from the endowment?—Yes.

9338. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Their connection with the National Board has also improved their school?—Benefited it immensely.

9339. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The endowment was much larger formerly than it is now. Since 1880 the income fell from £700 a year to £300. Was it this circumstance that induced you to join the National Board?—The nuns had to join the National Board on that account.

9340. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The practical result is, that notwithstanding the diminished value of the endowment, the work is as well done as it was before, and the nuns are as well off!—As well off, and the work as well done.

9341. Dr. Traill.—While they lost £120 a year, they got £570 a year from the State.

9342. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The last report that you received from the Inspector of the National Board, dated 10th October, 1885, states:—“The members of this staff each in their own sphere, have with great diligence and considerable skill laboured in teaching and instructing the classes. The result is satisfactory. Besides the ordinary branches of the school course in which the answering was decidedly good, the following extra branches are taught with great care and credit:—The sewing machine, girls’ reading book, French, drawing, instrumental music, cookery, and physical geography. Taken in its entirety the school is very efficiently conducted.” He makes no mention here of the Kindergarten system, but in the preceding year, 1885, the report was that the “Kindergarten system has been lately introduced and more progress made than I should have considered possible.”

9343. Dr. Traill (to witness).—Do any Protestant children attend the school?—Protestant children have attended the Christian Brothers’ school.

9344. The school is open to them?—The school is open to them, but I don’t know that there is any Protestant in it at present.

9345. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is there any parochial school in Kells connected with the Protestant church?—The Protestant school of the town.

9346. Is it a National school?—It is.

9347. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I find that for the 40 children in Miss Dempsey’s schools, there are nine monitors?—Nine monitors acknowledged by the board.

9348. And the trustees pay £40 a year additional for assistant teachers?—No, this is paid by the nuns themselves.

9349. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You understand what our powers are. We can make any alteration that may be thought desirable in the governing body of the school, and can also make it a corporation with legal succession, so that instead of having fresh deans at each change of trustees the mere appointment would make the new trustee a member of the corporate body.

9350. I presume you think the parish priest ought to be trustee, no matter who the archdeacon is?—Yes.

9351. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—All difficulty would be got over by naming the parish priest of Kells for the time being?—I think so.

9352. And if you are archdeacon in addition is much the better?—Yes.

9353. Dr. Traill.—But you would not like the archdeacon to have the management to the exclusion of the parish priest, if there was an archdeacon?—I think not.

9354. That is the awkward part of the will, for if there were an archdeacon you would be ousted?—I suppose we can only supply the deficiency.

9355. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is the archdeacon appointed by the Bishop in your Church?—As a rule he is appointed by the Bishop.

9356. You say that your predecessor was appointed archdeacon directly from Rome?—I was told that.

9357. There has been no appointment of an archdeacon since?—No appointment.

9358. The office has been vacant since 1821?—Yes.

9359. Do you remember whether the clergyman mentioned in the lady’s will was archdeacon?—He was not, he was not even parish priest at the time; but this was a bishop’s parish, at the time the will was made.

9360. For looking after your affairs and matters connected with your treasury, do you think it would be an advantage to have more than one layman associated with you as trustees?—I cannot say.

9351. That is a matter about which we would be glad you should consult your bishop; and we shall be glad to hear from you any suggestion that you think worth while to make. The expense of any scheme of ours does not exceed £2; but there are two matters which we are obliged to put into every scheme. One is, that the schools sharing in the endowment shall be subject to inspection; and the second is that they must submit their accounts once a year for audit, either by the Local Government Board Auditor, at a cost of say from £1 to £2, or by an auditor to be approved by the Local Government Board; and the Local Government Board have informed us that as a rule they will approve any qualified accountant who is independent.

9352. Rev. Dr. Motter.—I think a board of five would be convenient, and in that case we might add another layman and another ecclesiastic. Five would be the smallest number we would incorporate as a body of trustees. To what extent do the nuns teach needlework?—Plain sewing.

9353. Do they teach any lace work?—No, I think not.

9354. Or any fancy needlework?

Rev. Brother J. P. O'Brien.—One of the young ladies told me that they embroidered things for surplusage. Witness.—The Christian Brothers are about leaving the schools here. The trustees are now engaged in making arrangements with them to get a separate establishment. The schools are in course of erection near the railway. My predecessor commenced the work; but at his death a large balance remained due. That debt has been cleared off by us. None of the money was taken out of the Dampsey fund. The Bishop gave me not only what cleared off the balance of debt on the place, but also what was required for the erection of two schoolrooms in order that by moving the Brothers there the nuns might have some single rooms here to give instruction to poor girls who are idle in the town.

Rev. Brother John P. O'Brien sworn and examined.

9355. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How long have you been among the Brothers teaching here?—In this place two years and a quarter; I was teaching in Kells twice before, as far back as 1860.

9356. You are now the head teacher?—Yes.

9357. What other Christian Brothers' schools have you been teaching in?—In several, Limerick, Newry, Ennis, Drogheda, Thurles, and some others.

9358. At what dates have you been here?—I was here in 1865, also from 1880 to 1883, and now I have been here since March, 1886, as principal.

9359. What are your present numbers in attendance and on the rolls?—In 1887 the daily average attendance was 154, and 180 on the roll.

9360. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Your average attendance is 61 per cent. of the number on the roll?—Yes, the attendance is very good; three things have brought about this figure—first, the visits of the nuns to the houses of the children, these advise parents to send the boys to school; secondly, the frequent exhortations of the clergy to the parents; thirdly, the schools have a good reputation being well taught and well conducted.

9361. The parents become interested?—Exactly so, and then we have the South Kensington Art examination.

9362. Then the cause of the good attendance is that the people are kept up to their duty by the nuns and priests, and the teaching is up to a good standard?—Yes.

9363. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I see that in 1887 it was stated that there were 220 boys on the roll, and in 1880 that there were 240, so that there must have been a reduction in the number?—Yes; 9364. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Then you will make this exclusively a female school?—Female and infant boys' school.

9365. Then it might be wise to take authority to utilize this building for girls only, for the original trust is for children of both sexes?—For boys and girls still, but the boys would be infants. There is ample room beyond for workshops, and Mr. Hooge, of Ararat, promised me technical instruction for fifteen boys, if I could give £200 a year to pay the teachers.

9366. It might be worth while to take authority to transfer part of the money from this endowment for doing these things—would it not?—It would.

9367. Rev. Dr. Motter.—All that you have expended up to the present is in paying teachers?—And in meeting current expenses.

9368. Dr. Traill.—Are the premises here too small for the girls?—They are small enough.

9369. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Are these two rooms the entire accommodation for the boys?—Yes, for the Brothers' boys.

9370. Dr. Traill.—If you take 150 boys over to the other school, will you fill this place with 150 more girls or infants?—The nuns wish to give additional training in domestic matters—sewing and needlework—and they would utilize this space for that purpose.

9371. Rev. Dr. Motter.—There are 554 pupils on the roll, and the average attendance 402. I suppose that the whole building is required to afford sufficient accommodation for that number?—That is quite so.

9372. The average attendance in the Nuns' school is 71 for every hundred on the roll; that is a very high percentage. Can you tell us how it comes to be so high. At Oddon the attendance is only 58 per cent.?—There is very little of a country population here. It is a town population; and the Nuns everywhere are certain to secure a good attendance. They have the means of bringing up the children.

9373. Dr. Traill.—I suppose they visit them in their houses when they miss them from the school?—They send children in search of the absentees.

a change came about then, in 1881 the Dampsey Trust did not seem sufficient to meet the expenses of the Sisters of Mercy and the Brothers. I understood that on sundry accounts Father Nicolls, R.N., was advised to apply to the Superior General of the Brothers for a transfer of the boys under eight years of age from our care to the care of the Nuns; the Superior General directed accordingly, and some sixty young boys were sent out; a regulation was subsequently entered into, that all young boys were to be sent to the nuns first, and continue with them until eight years old; this arrangement cut off the feeding power for our three schools, the attendance sensibly diminished so that after some four years the boys of our three schoolrooms found plenty accommodation in two rooms. In 1880 the local superior had charge of a school, and so could give no supervision over the other two rooms, but at present the case is altogether different.

9374. Dr. Traill.—Does 189 represent as many boys above eight years old as you have?—Yes, it represents all the boys we have in the two schools.

9375. Rev. Dr. Motter.—The infant boys formerly came to your school?—Yes.

9376. Under the present arrangement they go to the nuns?—Yes.

9377. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In 1887 there were 220 in the boys' school, and only 113 pupils in the girls' school; but in 1879 there were 240 boys on the roll, and 339 girls. Now they have got over 500; so that there is a larger number in attendance at the two schools than there was then?—Yes, that is so, but the nuns have plenty school accommodation for the increased number. The Brothers have no cocommodation for an increase in number. The school-room in which we now sit accommodates seventy boys, but at the outside eighty. The next school (No. 2) suits sixty or so. No. 1 schoolroom is thirty-eight feet by thirty feet, No. 2 room is thirty feet by thirty. The schools which we shall have at Sharpe's will be of equal dimensions, and will enable us to distribute the boys equally. At present No. 2 school is over-filled.

9388. What number of children pay fees?—In No. 1 school four boys paid 1d. each last week, and the requisite amount was 6d., but the boys are distressed generally. In No. 2 room the boys are better conditioned and contributed 4s. 11d. school fees, and the requisite money was 3s. 4d. Between eighty and ninety boys attend No. 1 room, of whom only four paid last week. Their usual weekly payment is 6d. or 8d. The boys in No. 2 pay fairly, two boys pay 2s. per week, seventeen pay 2d., and twenty-four pay 1d. Between both schools the weekly fees are something like 6s. a week.

9389. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Do all the boys receive the same education whatever fees they pay?—Yes—no distinction is made.

9390. In teaching you make no distinction; every boy is taught what he is qualified to learn?—Precisely so; the boys of No. 1 are entitled to compete with the boys of No. 2.

9391. Each boy pays what he is able to pay, and all get the same teaching?—All the same. During 1836 we received £15 school fees; in 1837, £14 5s. was received, and in 1838 we have received £6 10s. up to this date. I expended, under the heads of school expenses, pupil teachers, and premiums and gratuities, £14 10s. 9d., in 1836. In 1837, under the like heads the expenditure was £17 5s. 3d., and in 1838 to this date the expenditure was £7 8s. The school fees received in 1836 were £15; in 1837 were £14 5s.; and in 1838 are £6 10s., thus making the receipts £20 15s. and the expenditure £29 6s.

9392. Have you any intermediate classes?—No.

9393. How were the intermediate classes discontinued here as to boys and girls?—About 1830 three schools were in operation; the local Superior had charge of one of the schools. The Brother who had the intermediate had sixty boys to teach; by reason of the additional labour of the intermediate classes it was alleged and represented that the teacher devoted himself too exclusively to the teaching of some 16 or 18 boys, to the detriment of the other boys, so the parents of some complained on that account, and at the instance of Father Nicolls the intermediate classes were discontinued.

9394. Lord Justice NALLEN.—So that it came to an end for the want of another Brother?—We should want two additional Brothers for intermediate classes and science classes.

9395. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—In Dandalk School under Mr. Yorke we found seventy boys in an intermediate class with one Brother teaching, but it was very hard work?—It was too hard work, the outcome of it will probably be disabled constitutions.

9396. Is there any provision for intermediate education in Kells now?—Not that I am aware of.

9397. No private school?—No; the intermediate was discontinued in order to secure that all the children attending the schools should get equally fair training, and some of the parents objected to their children being overworked. The teaching of Latin was likewise objected to on account of the proximity of Kells to Navan, where a seminary exists. Some time ago nine or ten boys were at the Latin grammar, and at Omeath.

9398. And you now teach no Latin?—No.

9399. How far off is the intermediate school that you say would be interfered with?—The Navan school or seminary is about eight miles from here.

9400. What is it called?—The Navan Seminary.

9401. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Will you briefly explain what is your plan of industrial and technical education for the new schools which are being built—what is the system of instruction you propose to carry out there?—We are to remove from our present place to the two new schools which can be more accommodated for us. Already an engine and machinery are on the premises. There is also a large area, say 150 feet by 70, which can be utilized for workshops. Also an income is coming in from the Bernash Pond. At present £30 a year is realized by it. I receive £20 per annum to apprentice two boys. It is proposed to transfer the £30 a year to the new place, sufficient to get a couple of workmen to teach 600m. boys some handicrafts. We shall also have at our disposal £25 per annum, which is paid as rent for our present residence.

9402. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You propose to devote the fund now available for the payment of apprentices fees to giving technical education in the new school?—Yes, the £30 for the apprenticing of the two boys.

9403. You think that would be a more useful application of the money than the present payment of apprentices fees?—Yes.

9404. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—You are going to pay it in apprentices fees still, but to boys who will get their training in your own school?—Yes.

9405. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you find any difficulty in providing suitable places for the boys with whom you are giving fees?—I have found considerable difficulty.

9406. Dr. TAGHILL.—£15 is too small a fee?—The small sometimes.

9407. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The system of apprenticeship is not so much in vogue as it was formerly?—No; the £15 is sometimes too much and sometimes too little.

9408. What do you propose to teach in these new shops?—Nothing definite has been fixed upon as yet; wheelwrighting is in contemplation, also agricultural instruments of some kind, tin smith, harness making.

9409. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—Mr. Sharpe, whose place you bought, was a tinsmith?—Yes.

9410. He had also a stonecutting establishment?—Yes, some forty men were employed by him in Kells.

9411. He has removed to Dublin and you have got his establishment?—Yes, it has been purchased, but not from the Dampney fund.

9412. You have bought his steam engine?—Yes.

9413. You say that it has been bought from another fund; in whom is the property vested?

Rev. Mr. CARMICHAEL.—It is vested in trustees, the bishop and a layman.

9414. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—The trustees are practically the same as those last?—Except the layman.

9415. But the constitution of the body of trustees is practically the same?—Yes.

9416. If you thought it desirable to get rid of debt there too, it would be quite in our power to constitute one board for both institutions?—I know.

9417. It is, I presume, an exclusively Roman Catholic endowment that you have?—It is.

9418. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The layman is not the same on the two boards; but if we prepare a scheme we could put both laymen on the common board, and add another ecclesiastic?—Yes.

9419. Lord Justice FRYGIMAN.—You propose to supply industrial education, and the teaching of handicrafts at the new school?—Yes.

9420. Have you any project for restoring intermediate education in Kells?—No, I think not. It depends partly on the trustees. If they give us an additional Brother or two, the matter could be arranged.

9421. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I suppose we may like it that your idea of technical education here is, that considering the wants and capabilities of the neighborhood, you would provide from time to time through the agency of Arizona such teachers as might be found to be most useful?—Yes.

April 11, 1887

P. O'Brien.

9421. To essential industries in this locality?—Mr. Hoop of Arizona visited Kells, and I should think he would give us much assistance in disposing of agriculture, and the products of the handicrafts.

9422. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Though this is not an industrial locality you have boys capable of learning trades?—Quite capable and desirous.

9423. They told us at Okefenokee that they had not any?—We have plenty here. Many applications have been made to me from boys fourteen and fifteen years old to get them taught trades as soon as we get the place open at Shreve's. The difficulty is want of means. We have but $25 yearly, and $100 yearly will be requisite to start with.

9424. If your schools were in connexion with the National Board have you any idea how much the grant would amount to in a year?—I can't say as I have not considered it.

9425. In round numbers it comes to from 12s. 6d. to 15s. a head. If you had that amount per annum over and above what you have at present, would you be able to supply intermediate education?—Very probably—two additional Brothers would be wanted. The maintenance of each of the Brothers is £30 a year, to do simple justice it would require £40 for each per annum.

9426. Dr. TRAILL.—The BIRTHS are getting £570 for 40 children?—I hear they have some of money from other sources as well.

9427. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Have you classes in connexion with South Kensington?—Yes, we had 125 pupils in this year, with £3 4s. as results fees.

9428. How is it that the results fees were not more?—The rules of South Kensington have been altered. Last year each boy's work was judged on its own particular merit, so that some boys were awarded "excellent," some "good," and some "fair." This season the judgment was given on the standard and efficiency of the school as a whole class.

9429. What subjects have you got?—The first five standards in freehand, model drawing, &c.

9430. All drawing subjects?—Yes.

9431. You did not go in for Magnetism or Electricity?—No; not for Science.

9432. Had you no Science classes?—No; the Brother had a certificate for Art only.

9433. They have very large results fees in Science elsewhere—what prevents you from obtaining them?—We don't prepare classes in science at present.

9434. Dr. TRAILL.—You would have to get one more Brother to enable you to do the work?—We have not a sufficient staff for additional work. When we have the technical education in hand and the two day schools in operation there will be only three Brothers as far as I can say.

9435. Technical education would be of more use to the boys?—Yes; I should say so.

9436. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Provision for two additional Brothers would give you the means of establishing an intermediate school?—Yes.

9437. And if you had three you could add on a science class besides?—Very readily.

9438. The cost of that would be about £60 for each Brother?—Yes, something about that.

9439. Something like £150 a year?—Just so.

9440. Is there any considerable number of boys in Kells of the position of shopkeepers or well-to-do farmers' sons who could pay for higher teaching?—I think not—sturdily taken they are a struggling people. Three pence or 4d. per week is about the outside they have shown a willingness to pay.

9441. The main difficulty about your taking State aid is the keeping up of your emblems and using your own books?—Yes, those seem to be the chief obstacles according as I consider. As respects the emblems the Brothers are unwilling to part with them, some similar observation applies to our books. These emblems may be regarded under two aspects—first, according as they are useful in a school, and secondly, according as they are ornamental only; these latter have not appeared to me of much practical gain in a school, but in respect of such pictures or emblems as are useful I should go in zealously enough for them, thus illustrations of the Old and New Testament.

9442. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—You can have these under the National Board if they are hung up as works of art?—Yes.

9443. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you be ready to take the State money and cover up the emblems?—No. I would not cover up the statue of the Blessed Virgin, nor any emblem which could prove useful to the boys.

9444. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The books extend over a curriculum including history?—Yes, the books include much ancient and modern history. Speaking generally in respect of them I offer similar opinions as those on emblems, namely that such lessons as are useful and practical I should retain them; thus are the lessons on the "Establishment of the Church," the "Character of St. Lawrence O'Toole," the "Monks of St. Bernard," the "Israelites under the Judges," but in respect of such religious lessons as seem to me valueless for boys I should readily agree to substitute lessons for them; examples of these are "Spiritual Blindness," "The Antiquity of Fasting," &c., &c.

9445. Dr. TRAILL.—You think you could meet the National Board half way?—Personally I certainly would meet them half way.

9446. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If you got a grant from the National Board it would leave your endowment more available for technical training?—Yes.

PUBLIC SITTING—FRIDAY, JUNE 22, 1883.

June 22 1883.

At the Courthouse, Navan.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERSON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAIR, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.S.O., ANTHONY TRAFF, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, JUNR., was in attendance.

NAVAN ENDOWED SCHOOL.

The Rev. JAMES B. KANE, M.A., sworn and examined.

The Rev.
James B.
Kane.

9448. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You are the Protestant Incumbent of Navan?—Yes.

9449. And also head-master of the Navan Endowed School?—Yes.

9450. How long have you held these positions?—Eight years.

9451. Were you appointed to both together?—No; I was incumbent first, and then a vacancy occurred and I was appointed to the college.

9452. Who was your predecessor at the college?—The Rev. Dr. White. He is the head of Wilson's Hospital now.

9453. The Navan endowment was founded by Alderman Preston?—Yes.

9454. Have you anything to do with the management of the property?—Nothing whatever.

9455. That is entirely in the hands of the Commissioners of Education?—Yes.

9456. What land and buildings are connected with the school?—A schoolroom and two residences, one for the head-master and the other for the assistant.

9457. A house at each end, the schoolroom between them, and communication from house to house through the schoolroom?—Yes.

9458. You occupy the head-master's residence?—Yes.

9459. I believe since you were appointed you have occupied it as rector as well as schoolmaster?—Yes.

9460. Is there any residence for the rector of the parish?—None.

9461. How is the other house used?—It is not used at present. My present assistant has a residence in the town; I occupy part of it as a sitting-room and bedroom, and the other part is used for storage.

9462. Your appointment is dated April 25, 1880?—Yes.

9463. And is made by John Joseph Preston, of Bellinaker, in the county of Meath, the Earl of Castle-stewart, and Joseph Faviere Ellington?—Yes, they are the heirs of Alderman Preston's trustees. Dr. Ellington was the heir of David Cairnes, the surviving trustee. It was put under the Commissioners in 1816.

9464. The persons entitled to claim the right of appointing are John Joseph Preston, as heir-at-law of the Rev. Joseph Preston; and the Earl of Castle-stewart, and Dr. Ellington as the co-heirs of David Cairnes?—Yes.

9465. Lord Justice FITZGERSON (reads from Instrument of Appointment).—By the original deeds, dated July 5 and 6, 1836, Alderman John Preston granted the lands of Cappaloughlin, in the Queen's County to David Cairnes, John Osborne, Nehemiah Donnellan and Walter Harris, and their heirs for ever in trust, to pay £25 yearly to an able schoolmaster of the Protestant religion, to be resident in the town of Navan, in the county of Meath, for his better support and maintenance and to pay £25 a year to a schoolmaster in the town of Ballyvaughan, in the Queen's County, and to pay the residue of rents and profits to King's Hospital, Ormeau; and it is stated that Samuel Preston, the eldest son of Alderman John Preston, and the heirs male of the body of the said Alderman John Preston as long as such heirs male should continue, and the said John Osborne, Nehemiah Donnellan, David Cairnes, and Walter Harris, and the survivor and survivors of them, his, her, and their assigns, or the major number of them were for ever thereafter empowered to place in, and also upon every just reason to turn out the schoolmasters. Then there is a decree mentioned of the Court of Chancery of July 28, 1827, made in a cause depending for some ninety years, by which it was adjudged that the nomination of the schoolmasters was vested in the heir male of Alderman John Preston, and in the heir-at-law of David Cairnes.

9466.—Mr. Preston is considered to be entitled to have two votes, but I don't know on what authority. I heard that if an appointment were to be made it should have two votes.

9467. What emoluments have you?—£100 Irish—£82 6s. 3d., and a free residence.

9468. In those any land connected with the house?—No, except a very small patch in front. There is a small field outside for which I pay rent.

9469. What rent?—£1 a year. It is only about a road.

9470. Is it held under a lease?—I think so. It was withdrawn at one time.

9471. Are you tenant to the Commissioners?—I pay the rent to the Earl of Essex.

9472. It is no part of the Preston estate?—No.

9473. Nor of the endowment?—I think not. Lord Essex granted it for the purpose of a playground.

9474. Do the Commissioners do anything towards keeping the building in repair?—Yes. Their architect comes once a year and inspects the premises. He inspected them about a month or two ago, and there has been an estimate made for some painting, but nothing large this year. Last year they did more for me.

9475. How are these repairs executed?—By local tradespeople. Mr. Mitchell meets the local tradesmen. There was some larger work done before I came in drainage—but that was done by some one from Dublin.

9476. Have you any voice in the direction of these repairs?—Yes. Mr. Mitchell asks me what I want. What is actually done rests entirely in the power of the Commissioners.

9477. You have nothing to do with paying?—Nothing.

9478. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Besides your salary of £100 Irish, do the Commissioners spend any more money on the school?—Only for the assistant. The assistant has £80 Irish—£62, deducting income tax. They also give prizes.

9479. How much do they give in prizes?—It is changeable—about £15 a year. At Midsummer and Christmas they give about £7 or £8.

June 27, 1888.
The Rev.
James R.
Keane.

9479. How much would be the average expenditure on repairs?—About £25 annually. It was £26 the year before last. Last year it was more, because they put a new range in the kitchen, and gave some new seats and forms.

9480. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is the assistant appointed by you?—His appointment is properly in the power of the trustees, but they virtually leave the appointment to me. It is sanctioned by the Commissioners.

9481. Do you know who the present trustees are?—Mr. John Joseph Preston. Even at Bellintra; I suppose Lord Castletewart is living. Mr. Kington is not. I suppose his son, the Rev. Charles Kington, must be the trustee now. Mr. Preston has two votes, and virtually has the power of making appointments. The others have never raised any objections.

9482. Lord Justice Naim.—He seems to represent the gentleman that gave the endowment?—Yes; Mr. Preston's property is at Cappaloughlin, in the Queen's county, near Monasterevin.

9483. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—When the testator bequeathed this property in 1686 he estimated the income of it at £50 a year, which he distributed thus: £35 to Navan, £25 to Ballyroan, and £30 to the King's Hospital in Dublin. The last Commission estimated the income at £700 and £800 a year: 1—
Yes.

9484. Lord Justice Naim.—How much is the total derived by the Navan school?—£100 Irish, and £15 in prizes, and what they spend in repairs—about £25 a year.

9485. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I make it up to be a half over £200 a year—they have spent no more than that of late years?—No.

9486. If the income to the credit of Navan exceeds that amount, what is done with the balance?—I believe it is invested and forms an endowment.

9487. At the time of the last Commission the net annual amount available for the Navan school was £281 a year?—I have their report and it states how it was distributed.

9488. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do they send you a copy of their report?—Yes. I have bought the last one. [Hands document.]

9489. This report is dated the 11th July, 1887?—The rentals of Navan and Ballyroan are named together.

9490. They must have spent money since the former Commission, for it was reported then that the Commissioners held to the credit of both schools £5,402 6s. 6d. in Government stock; and in cash £725 10s. 6d. to the credit of Navan; and £1,658 10s. 6d. to the credit of Ballyroan. That is now represented by £357 to the credit of Navan, £287 to that of Ballyroan.

Witness.—I heard that there was some loss in the management of the estate some years ago.

9491. They speak in their last report of providing new school furniture at the Navan school; what did they provide?—They provided eight new desks and benches; the old ones were very much worn.

9492. How much was the value of these do you know?—£16. Last year the expenditure was certainly over the average, as it included the new school furniture and kitchen range as well as the ordinary painting and repairs.

9493. How many pupils at present have you?—Twenty.

9494. Are these all day boys?—Yes.

9495. Have you ever had any boarders since you came?—Never.

9496. Have you looked for any?—No, I have not. In fact I have refused them; I do not think it worth my while, it would involve so much labour. I could not have enough to make it remunerative. I would require a larger staff, and the premises are not altogether suitable for them.

9497. Could not that unoccupied house be used for boarders?—Yes, but it belongs properly to the second master. The original school was over the gateway at the entrance, and certainly there was no thought of boarders then.

9498. Was that pulled down?—It was pulled down in 1829. It was a detached house facing the street.

9499. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Was the whole of the present building—the two residences and the school—built out of the fund?—It was.

9500. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What religious denomination do the twenty pupils belong to?—They are all members of the Church of Ireland.

9501. From what distances do they come to you?—Most of them come to me from long distances; and one of my difficulties is that the trains don't suit. One boy comes on a bicycle seven Irish miles every day. Another tried to come on a bicycle ten miles, but found the distance rather far. Another comes from Slane, six miles, another from Beehive, four miles, and another from Poyntown, four miles, others have come from Kells.

9502. How many boys are from Navan and its neighbourhood?—From the town and neighbourhood—I think eight out of the twenty.

9503. Are there not more than eight boys in Navan looking for intermediate education?—No, there are not. I was anxious to establish our primary school on a better foundation, because what most of our children require is a good primary education. I said that those who were of sufficient ability and the circumstances of whose parents were such as would enable them to follow up their education, I should be quite ready to promote as free pupils from the primary school.

9504. You allude to the Flower Hill school?—Yes.

9505. How many free pupils have you out of the twenty boys?—Six.

9506. What are the fees?—The fees sanctioned by the Commissioners are eight guineas, but I have told my brother clergymen round that where parents were not well able to pay I should accept reduced fees on their recommendation.

9507. How many of the twenty are paying full fees?—About six I think.

9508. And of the remainder six are free pupils?—Yes.

9509. Do you pay your assistant more than the £50 Irish a year?—I give him as present £60 English and any proceeds from the intermediates. I was at considerable loss on previous occasions in this way. One assistant that I had I promised £70 a year and his board, on condition of his taking a tuition in the afternoon. That fell through in consequence of the boy's illness and put me to considerable expense. I have to pay all the expenses of service for the house, which is a large one, and firing, and to provide the ordinary school requisites, so that I have never made much of it. At present it is in a somewhat more promising condition.

9510. What is the course of education?—Very miscellaneous indeed. The intermediates for some boys. Others are preparing for the College of Surgeons, the Bank of Ireland, and the University. I have one boy in for scholarship in Trinity College this week, and I have occasionally, during short times, to prepare pupils for college examinations of various kinds.

9511. You mentioned that you had a boy in for the Indian Civil Service?—He was taught by me up to last year. He is in for the Civil Service now, and has been with special grinders lately.

9512. I believe you are a Moderator of Trinity College yourself?—Yes—a double Gold Medalist.

9513. In what subjects?—Mathematics and Logic and Ethics; I have also obtained First Honours in Classics and a Scholarship in Hebrew and Syriac.

9514. I suppose you have no pupils in Hebrew here?—I have, preparing for the ministry. But my

June 12, 1885.

The Rev.
James B.
Knox.

chief difficulty in instruction consists in the number of subjects I have to teach. Last time I only sent in three boys to the Intermediate Examinations, but I had simultaneously to prepare them for the senior, middle and junior grades. One boy got honours in nine subjects; and the preparing of that one senior grade boy was very severe work indeed. One of his subjects for example, was Natural Philosophy—Gassiot's Physics—which is an enormous course, even exclusive of the Greek, Latin, and French.

9515. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—They have not the whole of that in one year.—For the senior grade they virtually have, though they are not required to know it thoroughly.

9516. I believe the course for the senior grade includes the junior and middle grades?—It counts but 600 marks out of 7,000; and to go through a book like Gassiot is impossible. The real difficulty in a small school like this is that you cannot have a sufficient staff.

9517. Who erected the present buildings?—The Commissioners of Education commenced them in 1829, and finished them in 1831. It was out of the endowment—that had accumulated—that they were built. They cost £4,000.

9518. You said you did not think it was intended for a boarding school. Was the whole of that large structure intended for a day school only and masters' residences?—They are undoubtedly masters' residences, comprising each three rooms, one of which is a servant's room. I occupy one of the two rooms in my residence myself. There would be no room for boarders.

9519. It seems a less than, where so large an amount of the endowment has been expended in erecting such a fine building, it should be used exclusively for twenty day boys and a master's residence?—Yes.

9520. Could not the untenanted houses be used for a boarding school?—I think it could.

9521. You say that applications have been made to you to receive boarders?—Yes, occasionally there have.

9522. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Were boarders ever taken in the school?—There were. In Dr. White's time he had I think twelve at one time; certainly twelve was his maximum.

9523. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—At that time were the two residences occupied by masters?—His brother was the assistant master, and they resided together. One of the difficulties of the foundation, I think, is the arrangement for the assistant master; very few young men would care to come and occupy the house. I have no right to the second house—if it is the assistant's by right—but very few young men would like to come for the salary that is offered.

9524. But the house would be available for boarders?—It would.

9525. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Subject to your vested interest, would it not be an advantage that the use of these buildings for the purposes of the school should be in the hands of a governing body?—Yes, I think so.

9526. Can you suggest a governing body that would be likely to be efficient?—I thought it was absolutely vested in the Commissioners of Education.

9527. So it is; but in other cases they have let the places to local trustees—as in Monaghan for instance where there is a very vigorous school—and we have vested the property in the local body. If something of that sort was done here, where would you look for the governing body of this institution?—I don't know. I was proposing to ask your Commission to incorporate a body of Diocesan trustees. I don't know whether that would be the best, or whether they would be efficient.

9528. Do you think that as a "Diocesan School for Meath" this school would be likely to attract as boarders the sons of clergy and other gentlemen of the locality?—It might.

9529. Dr. TRAILL.—How many would the school-room hold if the house were full of boarders?—About thirty.

9530. There is no schoolroom, I believe, but the one we saw?—None. I have used the rooms in the house as class-rooms when they were not otherwise occupied.

9531. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—If the school became at all a substantial one, with a number of pupils up to thirty, would it not pay its own way?—It is very difficult to compete with other large schools. I have not the staff of masters to give efficient attention in all the subjects.

9532. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—What we have been told is that the pensions paid by boarders would enable the head master to provide an efficient staff of assistants; and in fact we have found several cases in different parts of Ireland where, with an endowment of £400 a year for the head master, large and efficient schools have been established?—Yes. I don't think the pensions here are such as would admit of a large school.

9533. Dr. TRAILL.—What is the greatest number of boarders that could be put into the second house if it was given up for that purpose instead of being an assistant master's residence—there appear to be ten dormitories?—You did not see all the rooms.

9534. You would not put more than four boys in the largest bedroom?—No.

9535. And two into each of the smaller ones?—Yes.

9536. Counting these, how many could you accommodate?—In the four houses there are three other rooms, two of which are excessively small. There is one good sized room.

9537. How many boys could you board in them, allowing one to the small room, two to the middle-sized rooms, and not more than four to the other small?—Only about eleven boys.

9538. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—But you have a large accumulated fund and you could build a dormitory?—There is not much scope for new buildings.

9539. Dr. TRAILL.—I suppose you would not like to risk any more money?—It is rather a risky thing to lay out money at the present time.

9540. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—It would be a risk to begin by building; but if you had already twelve boarders and twenty day pupils, and applications were coming in from more for whom you had no room, you could then build. We had £6,500 to the credit of this school, and £1,000 of that would be sufficient to lay out in building?—Yes.

9541. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Do you think a Diocesan body would be the most suitable to utilize the place?—I don't know that there is any Diocesan body at present having sufficient experience.

9542. But I speak of creating a Diocesan body for the purpose?—I may say that we are generally in favour of it.

9543. We could not find that they take any interest in the upper part of Meath in intermediate education; but Kells is a good town, would there not be boys from that district?—There would; but the chief difficulty is that the house does not suit the town.

9544. Is there any provision for Protestant intermediate education in Kells?—There is not.

9545. Is there any in Meath except in Navan?—None whatever, Droghda is the nearest school.

9546. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—There is a school at Keshdown, is there not?—There is a private boarding school at Skryne. There was a Diocesan school at Trim, but it has been discontinued. There was one at Mullingar, but that is in Westmeath.

9547. Had not Mr. Brighton a school at Keshdown?—Yes, but that was a private school. It was in the rectory at Keshdown. Mr. Brighton had B and M on afterwards; but it was a private speculation.

9548. When a private speculation has been made successful exacting you make your school successful, with an endowment of £200 a year, and a capital fund of £5,000 to begin with?—Possibly.

9549. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—We find the larger the endowment the less is the power of competing with private schools.

9580. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Do any boys go as boarders to Drogheda from the neighbourhood of Navan?—There is one, I think.

9581. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Catholic School is a case like this, where we propose to incorporate a body composed partly of representatives of the original founder, and partly of persons elected by subscribers to the school, and the payment of the fees of boys; could not that be done here?—It might.

9582. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You would not object to sink into the governing body Protestants of other denominations?—Those mixed bodies are very hard to work.

9583. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Is there any considerable number of Protestants, besides members of your church here?—No, I think there are only three Presbyterian children at Flowerhill.

9584. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are there not a number of Scotch artisans here?—Yes. Some of them are Presbyterians and others are of other denominations.

9585. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Is there any other Protestant congregation at Navan except yours?—There is a Presbyterian meeting held here once a fortnight.

9586. Is that by the minister who resides at Kells?—Yes.

9587. Is there any Methodist congregation?—No. There was one for a short time which met in this room, years ago, but it was given up. Some children who were registered Presbyterians were Methodists.

FLOWER HILL NATIONAL SCHOOL.

The Rev. James B. Keene, M.A., examined.

9588. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We will now turn to the Flowerhill School; you are the manager of that?—Yes.

9589. It is now under the National Board?—It is, and has been for three years.

9590. What state was it in when you came?—When we broke it up and made the change there was, I think, only about a dozen going to it.

9591. The former schoolhouse was built by the Lord Lieutenant's fund at an expense of £139 10s. 3d.; what has become of it?—The tradition was that it was part of an old store, and it was a very bad house. It was a two-storey house, and the upper room was used as the school. It was a very low room. The lower part was once used for the school also. It was under the Kildare-place Society.

9592. What became of that old building?—We pulled it down.

9593. Had it become dilapidated?—Yes. Some of the materials were used in the new structure, but not much.

9594. Do you happen to have the foundation instrument?—I believe it was a Mexican foundation?—I have a copy of it. [Hands book.]

9595. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN [reads]. First there is the will of R. R. Fitzherbert, dated 6th December, 1830:

"I charge my estate for ever with an annual sum of thirty pounds for the support of the Flower Hill Male and Female Schools, founded by me at Navan, fifteen pounds for an annual salary for the master, and ten pounds for the mistress, and five pounds for keeping the schoolhouse and parts in repair, the appointment of the master and mistress to be in the inheritance for the time being of my estate, as stipulated for in my conveyance of the schoolhouse to the parish of Navan, with the concurrence, however, of the Bishop of Meath, of the Established Church, being Protestant, the said sum of thirty pounds to be vested in the said Bishop; and I hereby give him the power of distributing for the same if six months in arrears, and of apply-

9596. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have those Scotchmen any children?—There are a few. But of those Scotch name are Presbyterians; in fact those that come to the meeting here are Nonconformists of various kinds.

9597. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What denominations do they belong to?—Well, the Evangelical Union is one, the Baptist is another. They are very miscellaneous, though few in number.

9598. Where have they occupation?—At the woollen mill.

9599. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you regard it as a condition of your appointment that you should maintain a number of free pupils in the school?—No—there is no condition in the deed, and I never got any instruction of the kind. I was always quite willing to afford that advantage, and that is why I was anxious to have a good primary school.

9600. Rev. Dr. MASON.—At all events your school is much more successful than on the occasion of previous inquiries. In 1837 there were only five pupils on the roll with an average attendance of three. In 1880 there were ten on the roll, and now you have twenty.

9601. Dr. TRAILL.—I suppose if your primary school be successful it may possibly supply you with pupils for this one?—Yes, it might.

9602. Have you found any increase in your Intermediate school since the other was established?—I have only had one boy that I promoted.

9603. I saw a monitor learning algebra; would he be likely to come here?—If it were an advantage to him I should be inclined to take him. It would depend on how long he could stay.

ing it when received to the purpose herein sanctioned; provided, however, that the annuity or rentcharge shall cease as soon as the said schools shall cease to be conducted on the principles now established by the Kildare-place Society for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland, that is to say principally that the Scriptures, without note or comment, shall be read regularly once a day for at least six days in the week by the children who are sufficiently advanced in age and learning to understand them; the salaries of the master and mistress not to be paid until the Protestant Bishop of the diocese certify his approbation of their conduct;—no Papist Bishop, Priest, or Friar, to have any interference with the school in any way on pain of the excommunication."

That's the will. Are you getting the money still?—Mr. Fitzherbert gives £35 a year as a substitute for the endowment.

9604. Why do you say as a "substitute for the endowment"?—One of the conditions of the endowment was that the school should be under the Kildare-place Society, but it is not now.

9605. No; that it should be carried out on the principles of the Kildare-place Society. Is there anything to prevent your children from reading the Scriptures without note or comment once a day on each of the six days of the week?—No.

9606. Do they do it?—They do, certainly. He also permitted to give £100 towards building the new school.

9607. Has he done that?—He has paid a portion of it.

9608. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The conveyance is of the 8th October, 1831. [Read from Minute Book copy of extract from Memorial of Conveyance, as follows:—]

"By Indenture, dated 8th October, 1831, between Samuel Fitzherbert, John Ruxton, and Richard Ruxton, of Knockcastle, in the County of Meath, esquires, of the first part; the Most Rev. the Lord Bishop of Meath of the second part; the Rev. Philip Barry, minister, and William Johnston and Samuel Barry, churchwardens, of the parish of Navan, of the third part, witnessed that the said Samuel Fitzherbert, John Ruxton, and Richard Ruxton for the purpose of establishing a school in said parish, with the consent and approval of Lord Bishop of Meath and in consideration of 10s. paid by the said school and churchwardens, and in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the 50th year of His late Majesty's reign did grant unto said minister and churchwardens all that piece of ground part of the lands of Blackcastle with the house erected thereon in the street of Poolbeg, in the parish of Navan to hold the same to the minister and churchwardens and their successors for ever in trust for the use of a resident schoolmaster to be appointed by said Richard Ruxton and his heirs and to and for no other use, intent or purpose whatsoever at the yearly rent of 1s. per year.

What became of that site?—It is on that site that the present building is.

9570. I see you passed the following resolution at the Vestry of 1883:—

"The Committee appointed at a meeting of the parishioners held in the College, Navan, on September 26th, 1883, having reported that they are in bad repair and that the site is unsuitable.—Resolved that an application be made to the trustees of the Russell estate for a free grant, and that steps be taken to dispose of the Flower Hill School-house."

It is an inconvenient situation. We got the ground from the Russell estate; but Mr. Fitzgibbon, of the National Board, thought it would not be a good place.

9580. Dr. TRAILL.—It is a healthier place where it is?—Yes.

9581. Lord Justice FREDERICKSON.—The upshot was that you kept the old site?—Yes.

9582. But you surrendered the old lease, and got this deed which you produce, of December 13, 1886, from Richard Ruxton, Fitzherbert, of Blackcastle, Navan, to yourself and Richard R. Fitzherbert, and Joseph H. Moore, churchwardens, which vests that the house (R. R. Fitzherbert), is entitled in possession to the lands demised, and in which the grant is of a plot of ground in front of Flower Hill, containing one rood and thirty perches, statute measure, to hold from May, 1886, for 99 years, as a site for the schoolhouse, and for the residence of the teacher or teachers for the time being employed in or about the school, paying a rent of one shilling a year; and it was agreed that the school should be under the management of a committee, consisting of the Bishop of the Church of Ireland, for the time being of the Diocese of Meath, the Rector of Navan for the time being, one other clergyman, to be nominated by them, two laymen, nominated by the Navan Select Vestry, of the Parish of Navan, and the representative of the lessee. Then you have a committee of six?—Yes; it is one of those foundations that I would be very glad we could have under an incorporated body; but what I am anxious to know is, whether, when they are already vested in that way, there would be any expense or difficulty in re-vesting, or whether the powers of your Commission would enable you to transfer the trust.

9583. As to the expense it varies from about £8 to 15s., and difficulty there is none, excepting that, where the property exclusively belongs to one religious denomination and is for the benefit of members of that denomination, we cannot deal with the property without the written consent of the governing body.

9584. Lord Justice NISBIT.—Would your trustees object to this school being vested in an incorporated body?—No; they would be quite ready to acquiesce in that.

9585. Lord Justice FREDERICKSON.—As I understand, you have got rid of the old endowment of the Flower Hill School?—We have abandoned it.

9586. And you have got a promise of £25 a year instead of the old annuity, and this new lease instead of the old one?—Yes. It is only a promise from Mr. Fitzherbert during his lifetime.

9587. But what has been done to show that there is no longer any title to the £30 a year?—There is nothing except that lease, and the fact that the school is at present under the National Board.

9588. Rev. Dr. MULLON.—I suppose the rules of the National Board are not in accordance with the principles of the Kildare-place Society.

9589. Lord Justice FREDERICKSON.—The principle rule was that the Bible should be read without any comment. Are there any children attending the school except Protestants?—None whatever.

9590. And they all read the Scriptures daily. They do.

9591. Under the rules of the National Board?—Yes.

9592. And you have on the six days of the week religious instruction?—Yes.

9593. Who is the present representative of the lessee?—Mr. Richard R. Fitzherbert.

9594. You have a very handsome schoolhouse; how was it erected?—By subscription—about £250. A portion of it was transferred. We did not borrow any money from the National Board, it was all parochial money.

9595. Why didn't you?—We were inclined to have it our own property. We did make the application; but we commenced the work; and they would not listen to the application.

9596. Did you get a grant towards your teacher's residence?—We borrowed £180 at 2½ per cent. to improve it. There was a small house. All we pay is 2½ per cent.; the other 2½ per cent. is paid by the Board, so that the terms are very good.

9597. You borrowed £180 at 5 per cent., of which 2½ is paid by the Board?—Yes.

9598. And that expires in thirty-five years?—Yes.

9599. That is the whole property you have connected with that school?—Yes.

9600. Have you any invested fund?—No; subscriptions were promised when we were making the change. We did not know whether we would have enough children to entitle the master to a full salary from the Board; but the parishioners were very kind and promised £70 a year.

9601. How many children have you in attendance now?—Seventy-six on the roll at present; sixty-six were there the day before yesterday in actual attendance. It has exceeded beyond our expectations.

9602. What teaching staff have you?—We have a master, a mistress, and a monitor; and we are entitled now to a second monitor.

9603. You are not yet entitled to an assistant from the National Board?—No.

9604. How is your assistant supplied?—We have engaged Mr. Butler and his sister, and pay him £20 a year. The subscriptions promised were £72; we got him £30 and the rest is expended on the premises.

9605. Dr. TRAILL.—He is to provide an assistant out of that sum?—Yes. We should be in a better situation if we were to advertise again. Now that we have started we have a more secure position.

9606. He appears to be a good master?—No.

9607. Lord Justice FREDERICKSON.—He told us he was first of the second class?—Yes.

9608. Lord Justice NISBIT.—How much did the school cost altogether?—£550.

9609. Does that include the requisites and desks?—Yes, that includes the desks. I think it was cheap at that. In some places the clergyman holds the lease of the parochial schools themselves, and I am anxious for instruction as to how an incorporation of these can be effected.

9610. Lord Justice FREDERICKSON.—This report of the committee of the Diocesan Council of January 25, 1885, states that:—

"The Bishop having called the attention of the Council to the necessity for appointing a committee for inquiring into the circumstances of the schoolhouses and endowments of schools in the diocese, it was resolved that the following be appointed such a committee with power to add to their number."

And then it names the Archbishop and three other degrees, there is a report from them giving a list of school houses.

[Lord Justice FRYGIMON, read a resolution of June 13, 1883, handed in by the witness.]

9611. You propose that one board should hold all the schools in the diocese that are mentioned in the schedule to your report?—Yes, exactly so. The question has been asked by the proprietors of the properties as to how the union of them is to be effected, and whether it would be attended with any expense; and we were thinking that possibly by your scheme a large number of them might be embraced.

9612. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—That can be done if the owners of property give their consent, but we cannot take people's property from them without their consent—I thought there should be separate deeds.

9613. You will require no deed; what you want is being done in the case of the Robertson Schools for the diocese of Rangoon. There are no conveyances. The thing would be done by a scheme under our Act of Parliament which has the effect of a statute and saving order.

Witness.—The properties are very small in many instances, and if there were much expense it would deter the parties in those cases.

9614. Dr. TRAILL.—All the expenses of printing fall on the Commission.

Witness.—Another thing is that some of the schools are in Church land and are virtually vested in the Representative Body. Would you have power to change these trusts from the Representative Body?

9615. Dr. TRAILL.—I think the Representative Church Body would consent to transfers to diocesan trustees; but they would not consent to give these school-houses up to any bodies merely similar to those existing now.

Witness.—We would not have to get leases drawn up like this in order to effect the transfer?

9616. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—No; a schedule is the scheme would contain the particulars of the property; the property would be vested in a body created by the scheme, and once that is done you would have no more deeds at all.

Witness.—In cases where there is an old trust can you alter the terms of it?

9617. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—In every case where there is a denominational trust we can alter it in any way to which the administrators of the trust consent. In other cases we can alter the trustees whatever way is necessary to extend the usefulness of the endowment. I think these are the matters you wanted to know.

Witness.—Yes.

9618. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—You must officially send a copy of the report and of the resolutions to our office, and say that you wish a scheme to be prepared; the next step will be for us to send notice to all the parties concerned in each of the schools, telling them that the application has been made, and asking whether they consent.

Witness.—In many cases the schools have been closed.

9619. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—In these cases we could give your proposed body power to sell the property that can be no longer used for the benefit of the other schools. We will send you precedents, and if we frame a scheme for you you will have two months to propose any changes you like in it.

Witness.—I was inclined to wait for precedents from other dioceses where they have more legal knowledge than we have.

9620. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—You put down the Trim Model School. Do you claim that exclusively for your Church?—No. Of course some of these would not come into our scheme at all. Shall I give a written schedule? That is a report of all the schools.

9621. Dr. TRAILL.—Wherever you found Church children going you put down the schools?—Yes.

9622. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Is there a large attendance at the Model School of Trim?—Thirty.

9623. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—[Reads from Report of Committee of Diocesan Council] "Trim Model School, 30 on roll. Diocesan School-house sold. Incorporated Society School (closed) Grant, Earl of Mornington, 17th August, 1745. Site held under lease for ever, fourteen acres." Who has that?—It is occupied by the doctor now, and adjoins the barracks.

9624. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—I suppose the practical state of affairs in Trim is that the establishment of the Model School has led to the closing of the other schools?—It has.

9625. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—I see an entry here that one of the schools is the property of the landlord, and that the school-house has been lost?—A good many were lost through neglect in one way or another. I have put an analysis at the end.

9626. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Used any children to go from here to the Trim Model School?—Never.

9627. Isn't there a railway?—Yes, but the hours don't suit. That is the difficulty. There are some coming to the school at Flower Hill who arrive at 9 o'clock in the morning and cannot leave until 7 in the evening, which is an exceedingly inconvenient arrangement.

ST. FINIAN'S SEMINARY.

The Rev. John Cassidy sworn and examined.

9628. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—You are the principal of St. Finian's Seminary?—The president.

9629. How many have you engaged in the teaching staff?—Six and myself.

9630. Are they all clerical gentlemen?—All clerical men except a music master, who is a layman. He teaches the practice of music.

9631. What property have you belonging to St. Finian's?—All the property is comprised within the boundary wall. I don't know the exact acreage, but I would say about eight acres.

9632. I believe the Seminary was originally founded by Bishop Plunket, in 1862?—Yes.

9633. On the same site as is occupied now?—The grounds were not so large as they are now. In after years there were different takes made of other fields—of a playground.

9634. What quantity of land have you now?—About eight acres.

9635. What expense has been incurred in building on that?—I have no idea.

9636. Dr. TRAILL.—It is valued at £120 a year?—The rent of the building and land is £80 a year.

9637. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Paid to whom?—We have five or six landlords.

9638. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—For what terms have you taken the holdings?—I don't know. There are several leases in existence.

9639. Who are the trustees?—I think the Bishop. I have nothing to do with that.

9640. Who manages it?—The Bishop holds the leases, and whenever one has to be renewed he gets it done.

9641. Who is the solicitor to the Bishop?—I don't know.

June 21, 1888.

The Rev.
James R.
Keene.

Rev. John
Cassidy.

June 21, 1893,
Rev. John
Cassidy.

9542. How is your staff maintained?—They are boarded and supported in the seminary, and get £50 a year which is paid out of the students' fees.

9543. Have you a bursar?—I am bursar myself as well as president.

9544. Lord Justice NAHEE.—Have you any contributions from the diocese?—No—none; the seminary is self-supporting altogether.

9545. Do you know where the funds were provided for the building?—I think they were nearly altogether raised by collections in the diocese.

9546. Lord Justice FRIZGIBSON.—We found in other cases large contributions from outside the diocese—from America and England?—I don't think there was anything of that sort in this case. Some of the Catholic gentlemen about the country contributed largely.

9547. Do you know what contributions Dr. Phelan got together in the beginning?—The only tradition is that Mr. Corbally, the late Member of Parliament for Meath, gave £300; and I heard that another late member for Meath, Lord Fingall, also contributed, and also Mr. McEvoy.

9548. It is stated in the last report that the school had no endowment except the site and building; is that the case still?—Yes.

9549. As president you were appointed by the Bishop?—Yes.

9550. And the rest of the staff are also appointed by the Bishop?—They are appointed by the Bishop, but he always consults the president.

9551. Lord Justice NAHEE.—Was not the present Bishop himself principal of the seminary for a time?—No; he was a professor in St. Finian's for about six months.

9552. What is your present number of students?—We have at present actually in the house sixty-four boarders, five dropped off during the year.

9553. How many day pupils have you?—There are thirty or thirty-two. On an average the day pupils number about forty.

9554. Then you have about 100 attending?—Yes.

9555. I find that in 1889 the number on the roll was ninety-five, of whom forty-five were boarders; so that you seem to have now a greater number of boarders, but not so many day boys?—I think we had about the same number in the house.

9556. What are the fees?—£30 a year for the boarders, and £4 a year for the day pupils. That is exclusive of books and stationery.

9557. You have three boarders maintained by the trustees of the Kells Bennett Charity Fund—what is that fund?—It is a fund administered by the Parish Priest of Kells, who nominates the students; we have now only two boarders, for he told me that the fund was not able to support three continuously, and that he would have to let one place lie in abeyance for a year.

9558. Does he pay you £30 a year for each?—£38.

9559. What is the course of instruction?—The intermediate, senior, middle, and junior.

9560. How many pupils do you send up on an average to the examinations one year with another?—Between thirty and forty.

9561. How many did you send this year?—About forty.

9562. How were they divided in grades and how did they get on?—I don't know for this year, but I can read the result of the last few years. We make all our boys of the required age go in. For the last four years there were obtained by the pupils of St. Finian's twenty-three exhibitions, the money value of which was about £1,145.

9563. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you any analysis of the exhibitions showing in what grades they were obtained?—No; but I think there were about twenty junior exhibitions.

9564. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—And the money value was how much?—£1,145. Then there were obtained six medals for special excellence in certain subjects—two first places in the Ancient Classics, one of these being in the junior grade, and the other in the middle grade. Two first places in Greek were obtained in the same grade.

9565. Lord Justice FRIZGIBSON.—Were the Greek medals got by the same boys?—They were. Then there was a first place in Chondistry standard last year, in the senior grade, and another in the junior grade. Then we got in the year 1884 in the junior grade special prizes in English Composition, to the value of £3; and in 1885 in the junior grade a special prize of £3 for Latin Composition; and in 1886 in the middle grade a £3 special prize for English Composition.

9566. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—During the period within which the aggregate value of the exhibitions gained in your college was £1,145, can you tell us the total amount of the result fees that were received?—The result fees on an average were a little over £104 a year.

9567. How many years would this £1,145 include?—Four years—the last four.

9568. Then your result fees were only £400 in against £1,145 for exhibitions?—Yes.

9569. With regard to the way of estimating the £1,145 there has been some confusion at former inquiries. If a pupil gains a junior grade exhibition that lasts three years?—Yes.

9570. If the exhibition be a £30 one, you put that down as £30?—Yes.

9571. If the same pupil in the next year gains a middle grade exhibition—how much is it?—£25.

9572. That would be £35 for two years—do you put that down at £30?—Yes.

9573. Then if he got £40 in the senior grade you would put that down too, making £100, but the pupil would get only £35?—That is so.

9574. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you an account of the actual money received on foot of the £1,145?—No.

9575. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—Would the £1,145 represent £800 actually received by the pupils?—I think it would represent more.

9576. Then in point of fact your result fees are less than half what was received by the pupils?—Yes.

9577. Lord Justice FRIZGIBSON.—What do you do with the £100 a year—is it profit to you?—I divide it among the professors after having taken from that the little expenses incurred by the Secretary for the examinations.

9578. Lord Justice NAHEE.—Over and above the £50 a year that they get?—Yes.

9579. Lord Justice FRIZGIBSON.—We were told elsewhere that the result of sending boys up to the Intermediate Examinations is to involve more expensive books and staff—do you find that to be so?—Well, not in the staff. We had the same staff before the Intermediate Examinations came into operation. There is a little more expense in the matter of books. Each professor buys his own books.

9580. The professor buys his own books and gets a share of the result fees?—Yes.

9581. What means and appliances have you for teaching chemistry?—We have a little laboratory, but it is very defective.

9582. Are you in connexion with the Science and Art Department?—No.

9583. Have you thought of organising a class for it?—We were thinking of it.

9584. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—Is it not in contemplation to provide better buildings and a better site for your College?—Yes, the Bishop has actually a site already purchased on the other side of the Bays at Ashmunry Castle.

9585. Has he the funds for building?—He has invested I think nearly £15,000.

9586. Lord Justice FRIZGIBSON.—Towards building a place instead of St. Finian's?—Yes.

9587. What will you do with the existing premises?—I think we shall sell it to the best advan-top, or keep the ground as a little farm for the Seminary, for supplying them with vegetables.

9685. Is the new site in the neighbourhood?—It is just outside the town.

9686. Dr. TRAILL.—Are any buildings erected there yet?—No.

9690. What does the £15,000 represent?—Money collected—contributions. The reason he did not begin to build this year was that he thought he would get a building.

9691. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—At Ardaraun?—There is a large building there that with an expenditure of about £2,000 would make a good seminary.

9692. Dr. TRAILL.—Why did he not offer enough for it?—He thought he did.

9693. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—How far is Ardaraun from Navan?—About two miles. The only objection is that we would lose a good deal of our day scholars if we went there. We lay great stress on that, for some of our most distinguished boys were day pupils.

9694. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I suppose the Bishop would not take it unless he got a bargain of it?—Well, I think he would like to get a bargain.

9695. The value of land is not increasing in the neighbourhood?—No.

9696. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What class do your boys belong to?—We have the sons of some professional men—doctors—but very few. Mainly they are the sons of farmers and shopkeepers.

9697. What distances do the boarders come from?—They are nearly all confined to our own diocese. We have boys from Meath, Westmeath, King's County—those three counties are in the Catholic diocese of Meath. We have some boys from Cavan a few boys from Dublin, and one from Glasgow.

9698. Practically it is a diocesan school?—A diocesan school.

9699. About what proportion of your pupils are preparing for the Church?—About one-third.

9700. And the remaining two-thirds go to all kinds of professions?—Yes.

9701. Do you send any to the Royal University?—We sent one boy last year who passed the Matriculation Examination. But we don't go in for it. We confine ourselves to the Intermediate.

9702. We were told that boys come to similar schools who are too old for the Intermediate; do you suffer from that?—We suffered more from it in earlier years than we do now. The parents are beginning to send their children a little earlier.

9703. We were told in other places that when they could not pass their pupils in the Intermediate Examinations they sent them to the Royal University—does that happen to you?—My opinion of the Royal University is that it would be easier to pass the Matriculation Examination than to procure respectable places in the Intermediate.

9704. When they matriculate would it be easier to go to?—I think not for honors.

9705. You have not prepared boys for honors in the Royal University?—No.

9706. What is the nearest college that competes with your school?—I don't think there is anything nearer than Dublin.

9707. You said you had some boys from Cavan?—One or two.

9708. Lord Justice NAHE.—Does St. Maur's compete with you?—No. After the foundation of the Seminary in 1893 they used to have boys from the North, for there were no other Diocesan Catholic schools in the North; but there is a diocesan school now in every diocese.

9709. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—There is nothing within a radius of twenty-five miles competing with you?—No, I think not.

9710. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Has there been any fluctuation in your numbers for the last ten years, and if so in what direction?—Yes, downwards.

The year before last the number of boarders was down to thirty-seven, but it did not long remain at that.

9711. Professor DODDMEY.—Have you any day boys coming from a distance?—I think not.

9712. No boys from Kells?—Yes, there are some. There is one that comes by train from Kilsnash.

9713. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What provision have you for the Intermediate education of girls?—The Loretto Convent, Navan.

9714. I find from Ellis's Directory that it was founded from the Loretto Convent, Bathurst, in 1833; that the ladies are taught English, French, Drawing, Painting, and Vocal and Instrumental Music; and that it sent up 100 pupils to the Intermediate Examinations.

9715. Do you know how many ladies of the community there are teaching?—I think there are seven or eight.

9716. How many pupils have they?—About the same as we have. Of boarders about sixty.

9717. Do you know where these boarders come from?—From all parts of the country. They have boarders from Kerry, Belfast, and Dublin.

9718. Without invidious comparison, do you know any other convent school that has done so well in the Intermediate Examinations as Navan?—No, none nearly so well. I will just read you a list of honors.

9719. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—There is a young lady mentioned who is a Dublin girl?—Miss White, she got a scholarship in Modern Literature in the Royal University, and three exhibitions in the first Arts Examination.

9720. Was she prepared for the first Arts Examination in Navan?—She was. That prospectus came out two or three years ago. I will read you the following:—"Loretto Convent, Navan, won thirty-three exhibitions, of the money value of £1,055; ten medals, two of which were for first place in middle and senior grades respectively, two for second place in senior and middle grades, two for first place in Latin, two for first place in Modern Literature, one for first place in English, and one for first place in Italian; a £4 prize for first place in Senior Grade English Composition; a £4 prize for first place in Italian Composition; a £3 prize for first place in German Composition; a £10 special prize for special merit in Modern Languages; and fifty-seven book prizes. Besides these distinctions, the Convent secured first place in Latin in 1883. The result fees to teachers vary from £80 to less than £100 a year."

9721. Then the proposition that their result fees bore to the amount of their exhibitions is even less than yours?—Yes. [Reads.] "There has been a branch house established in Mullingar which gained three exhibitions, one medal, and one prize for Italian Composition, besides a number of book prizes."

9722. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—What special qualifications have enabled the nuns to do so wonderfully well; are there any specially instructed ladies amongst them?—I think not. They are hard-working nuns; and, as to the modern languages, some of them were in Germany, and they send some of the girls that they are teaching over to convents there.

9723. Is their pension £35 a year for all?—Yes, exclusive of extras.

9724. Lord Justice NAHE.—And they send girls to Germany?—Yes, and to France, to learn the languages; and they take German and French girls over here.

9725. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Have they any endowment?—Not the smallest.

Dr. TRAILL.—That is the name of their success.

9726. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—They have no prejudice against the Intermediate Examinations?—No, the contrary.

9727. Have you found the Intermediate Examinations, on the whole, a satisfactory test?—Most satisfactory, and they have been a great stimulus to the students. Of course we have had to complain, sometimes, now and then in different years, that some of the papers were not fair—that they were too difficult, and not graduated well.

9736. There has been a great prejudice in many of the Convent schools against the Intermediate system!—There is no prejudice here.

9737. What provision have you for primary schools?—About these I don't know very much. One of the priests of the town would be better able to give you information. There is a female school under the National Board, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, in which I think they have about 300 students.

9738. Girls and infants?—Yes.

9739. We were at an infants' school, and saw about 100 infants there; the boys' school looked dilapidated,—do you know anything about it?—There are four or five National schools, but not boys' schools.

9740. I speak of a boys' school?—There is only one boys' school.

9741. The master seemed a very competent man?—He gets a special prize for the superior answering of his boys, and for the superior way in which he keeps his school nearly every year.

9742. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—St. Finian's Seminary and the Loretto Convent School are exempt—except by consent—from our jurisdiction. If their governing bodies think it desirable to act through our Commission we shall be glad to undertake their cases upon their communicating with our office. But you must consult the Bishop. You may explain to him that with his consent we can form corporate bodies to hold any property that these schools have, and to take any property that should be left to them, or granted to them at subsequent times. And the same body can hold different lots of property on different trusts. Again you could take power to sell your existing property and to hold new property, or to hold both, and to spend or invest it in any way you like, and all this without executing any deed. Certain limitations are to be found in the Act of Parliament; there are only two which it is of consequence to mention. One prescribes an audit of accounts every year, either by public authority or by an auditor approved of by public authority. There must also be an inspection of each school during the endowment once a year, and a report that it is conducted in accordance with the scheme whatever that may be, but that does not interfere with the independence of the trustees. In the present case we have no endowments to distribute; but we have taken the evidence in order to ascertain the educational wants of the locality.

9743. Lord Justice NARIN.—Isn't there a college, Mullingar?—There is. It is conducted by the Christian Brothers.

9744. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—Hevy's Charitable Institution.

9745. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—It is an advanced primary school.

Witness.—It used to be provided over by a clergyman appointed by the Bishop, but he closed it up and gave it to the Christian Brothers.

The inquiry then closed.

PUBLIC SITTING.—SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1888.

At the Schoolhouse, Ballyroan.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NARIN, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.Sc., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., was in attendance.

BALLYROAN ENDOWED SCHOOL.

Lord Justice FRYGEBORN made an introductory statement.

John B. Lyon, M.A., sworn and examined.

John B. Lyon,
M.A.

9736. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—How long have you been Master of the Ballyroan Endowed School?—Since September 20, 1883.

9737. By whom were you appointed?—By Mr. Preston, the Earl of Castlestuart, and Dr. Elrington.

9738. Lord Justice NARIN.—Have you got the deed of appointment?—I have not; I sent it up to Dr. Kyle's office years ago, and I have not seen it since.

9739. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—Have you any copy of it?—No.

9740. Who had been your predecessor in the office?—My father.

9741. Had he died before you were appointed?—Yes.

9742. Had you been engaged in the school previously?—Yes; I assisted him, but I was not a master. I was appointed master when he died.

9743. Was there anything in your deed of appointment as to how long you should hold your office?—No, nothing of the sort. I only knew that I went down to Mr. Preston and he appointed me.

9744. He gave you a written appointment?—He gave me a written appointment which he signed in my presence, and which I brought to him from my solicitor's office; they then gave it up to Dr. Kyle.

9745. Do you know whether you are removable?—I believe, from what my counsel told me, I am not.

9746. What are your emoluments?—The salary is £22 6s. 6d. a year. £100 Irish.

9747. Was there any salary provided for an assistant?—There was, about £50 a year.

9748. Who appointed the assistant?—Well, the assistant was appointed when I was a child. I suppose he was appointed by the Preston family, but I don't know how or when.

9749. You had not the appointment?—I thought I had nothing to do with him, but lately I heard that I had the power of dismissing the assistant and appointing another in his place.

9750. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is he here still?—No, he is dead.

9751. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—When did he die?—About two years ago.

9752. Is there no assistant now?—No.

9753. Do you know what is done with the money provided for the assistant master?—No.

9754. Besides the £100 a year, Irish, what other emoluments have you?—I have a house and garden rent free; I did pay a rather high rent for the land adjacent, but after I was appointed about three years

July 18, 1888.
John R. Lynn,
M.A.

the Commissioners were glad the school was going on so well and they gave me three acres free, with the house and garden, but I pay rent for the rest of the land £3 18s. 8d.

9772. What land?—About seven Irish acres altogether.

9773. All belonging to the endowment?—I hold seven acres, but there are fifteen acres belonging to the endowment that I don't hold. I have nothing to say to it.

9774. Does it adjoin the school?—Yes, it is just outside the ditch here.

9775. How much land is there here belonging to the endowment?—I think twenty-five acres, but I am not quite certain.

9776. Lord Justice NAIRN.—How much rent do you pay?—£5 6s. 9d. for the land I pay rent for.

9777. Lord Justice FRASER.—Did you get the house and garden free by your instrument of appointment?—I did.

9778. How do you hold the three acres that you got subsequently?—I don't know, except that the Commissioners wrote and told me that they were glad to hear that the school had increased so much, and that they would reduce my rent by giving me three acres of the ground rent free. I rented the entire six acres from them at first.

9779. How much were you to pay?—I paid originally three guineas an acre for all, and they then gave me the two acres in front of the house free, and charged me £1 an acre for the rest.

9780. So that the endowments now are £100 a year, Irish, a house and garden, and three acres of land free, and about four acres at about £1 an acre rent?—Yes.

9781. Do the Commissioners keep the place in repair?—The place when I was first appointed was in a state of dilapidation. The rain was coming down in different places, and I was obliged to spend half my income to keep the buildings in repair. After my father died I spent much more on the house and land than I could afford, believing that I was not removable. But after Dr. Mahaffy came down, the Commissioners sent an architect, Mr. Mitchell, and he did a great deal for the house and kept it in good repair till within the last two years. They have done nothing since.

9782. Do you know anything about the expenditure or repairs?—I do not, except that when I acted up any report Mr. Mitchell came down. They did not do very much, but they repaired the roof, put up doors, and did a little each year.

9783. Are the repairs both inside and outside done by the Commissioners now?—Yes, except some trifling repairs that I did myself; I could not report everything. The architect comes round once a year and sees the place.

9784. Where do they get the work done?—For a time they left me to get it done, later they got a man named Shannon in Maryborough to do the work.

9785. Is your salary paid yearly or half yearly?—I receive it half yearly from the Commissioners.

9786. When you originally got the appointment how many pupils were there in the school?—None when I got it originally. Then they increased, but they have fallen away now again.

9787. What was the date of your father's appointment?—I heard him say he was forty years here.

9788. That would go back to 1835?—About that.

9789. How long do you remember the place?—As long as I can remember; about thirty-five years.

9790. During that time what was the largest number of pupils you ever remember here?—I don't remember more than fifteen or sixteen, but I heard that before that there were more.

9791. Do you mean before thirty-five years ago?—Yes.

9792. Now, begin with the "venerable traditions" as Mr. Mahaffy did—what is the largest number of pupils that you ever heard of being here?—Well, I heard about fifteen boarders and twenty day boys.

9793. I suppose fifteen boarders is more than this house would accommodate according to modern notions?—Indeed it is. I think eight boys would be nearer the mark—four in each of the two rooms.

9794. Coming to your own recollection, about what date do you remember the largest number of pupils?—About 1869 I remember the largest number.

9795. What was the number then?—I cannot tell exactly. I should say about fifteen day boys. There were no boarders.

9796. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Don't you remember any time that there were boarders in the house?—I remember two in my father's time.

9797. How was it that the pupils fell from fifteen in 1869 to none in 1865?—I could not tell you.

9798. Was the assistant master then?—A man named Stokes.

9799. The same old gentleman that you spoke of already?—Yes.

9800. Was your father engaged in teaching?—Yes.

9801. What age was he when he died?—He was sixty-one years of age when he died.

9802. You had been assisting him also?—Yes, he was Rector of Ballyfin, and had also a good deal to do in Mountcash; I was in college at the time, and when I was not there I assisted him here.

9803. Was he not permanently resident here?—He was, but he was Rector of Ballyfin and Curate of Mountcash as well.

9804. How far is Ballyfin from here?—Eleven miles.

9805. And Mountcash?—Seven miles.

9806. Then he was curate of a parish five miles off, rector of another parish eleven miles off, and schoolmaster here?—Yes.

9807. What were the assistant's qualifications?—He had none whatever, excepting a letter of character.

9808. Lord Justice NAIRN.—What did your father teach?—Well, he taught English, and Latin and Greek.

9809. Lord Justice FRASER.—What are your own qualifications?—I am a Master of Arts of Trinity College, Dublin.

9810. Did you keep on the old assistant till he died?—Yes.

9811. You did not know whether you were bound to keep him on or not?—I did not until lately. When he became imbecile, I wrote to the Commissioners, and they said I was quite at liberty, that I had the appointment of an assistant myself and not they.

9812. What was the largest number of pupils you ever had?—I think about 1868 I had seven boarders and thirteen day boys.

9813. Where did the seven boarders come from?—From different quarters—one from Downpatrick, two from the King's county, and two from the Queen's county—I think.

9814. From what distances did the day boys come?—Some from near Timahoe, others from Maryborough and Abberley, and some from the district about here.

9815. How did those from a distance travel to the school?—Some on their drags, others rode horses, some of them walked.

9816. To what class of life did the boarders belong?—They were the sons of respectable gentlemen—a higher class than the day boys as a rule.

9817. And the day boys?—They were the sons of respectable farmers generally speaking.

9818. I suppose it is a farming locality?—Yes, purely an agricultural district.

9819. What fees did you charge the boarders?—£40 a year.

9820. And the day boys?—£3 a quarter. At least I was supposed to charge that, but I seldom got it. That was what the Commissioners told me to charge.

9821. Were you bound not to charge more?—They left it quite to myself, and I told this to Dr. Kyle. They just said that £3 a quarter would be enough to charge in this locality.

9822. That is less than the charge in any of their other schools that we know of?—Small as it was I did not get it from all—in fact I got nothing at all from a great many.

July 25, 1886.
John R. Eggen,
M.A.

9808. What was the course of instruction in—Classics, Mathematics, and English.

9809. What were these boys preparing for?—Some for the Civil Service, three or four entered Trinity College, some passed for the College of Surgeons, some for the solicitor's profession, and some for the Veterinary College; some I prepared for the army and navy also.

9810. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Can you say where are boys of the class that formerly came here getting their education now?—I don't know, but I suppose at the National school or at the Church Education school.

9811. Where are these schools?—In the village here.

9812. Then it would seem that the kind of education formerly given here is no longer required in the neighbourhood?—Well, either that or the farmers are not able to send their sons here at present.

9813. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—What do you mean by not able to send their sons at present?—That they are not in a position to pay the fees owing to the depressed times.

9814. But have you not told us that the outside fee was £1 a quarter, that that was very seldom paid, and that frequently you got nothing at all?—Yes.

9815. You could not repay terms much lower than that?—I think farmers are not able to put their sons to professions now, and therefore don't send them here.

9816. Then your idea is that they don't now require as high a class of education as you used to give to boarders for £40 a year, and to day boys for £1 a quarter?—That is my opinion.

9817. What is the nearest intermediate school to Ballyroan?—Kilkenney College.

9818. There are few boys at school there?—Very few, none at all I think.

9819. Is there no other intermediate school in the Queen's county?—Not of this kind that I know of.

9820. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is there facility for private tuition?—I think not.

9821. The explanation that you have given for the falling off in the number of pupils does not apply to boarders?—No, but they fall off also.

9822. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—What has been the number of your pupils since 1868?—I think on an average about ten day boys; I have not had a boarder for a length of time. I think about 1870 the last went.

9823. Why did they give up?—They went into professions.

9824. Then you never had but what I might call the one crop of boarders?—I had also after that the sons of a gentleman in the neighbourhood.

9825. None succeeded those that first came?—No.

9826. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Have you any pupils at all now?—No.

9827. How long is it since there have been any boys in attendance?—I think about a year.

9828. How many had you up to a year and a half ago?—Ten.

9829. Mr. Mahaffy found here one assistant teacher, no boarders, and eleven day boys?—Yes.

9830. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Did that number diminish gradually or drop off all at once?—It diminished gradually.

9831. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Then the facts seem to be, that the boarders who used to come from a distance have ceased to come, and that the day boys who attended from the surrounding district dropped off because the class of education given was no longer wanted in the neighbourhood?—That is what I believe.

9832. Lord Justice NAIRN.—I presume there is no classical education given at either of the two schools you referred to?—None whatever.

9833. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—In the report for 1886-87 the Commissioners say:—"One of the two schools founded by Abnerman Preston, viz., Ballyroan, has practically ceased to exist, and that they originated from the head-master that there were no inhabitants in the neighbourhood to send their children to the school"—Is that your opinion?—It is, for the reason I have stated.

9834. "Mr. Mahaffy reported in 1880, that it was impossible that the position of the school should ever become suitable for the purpose. Under these circumstances they say they can do nothing but save as much as possible of the endowment for the purposes of some future scheme. They have proposed in the scheme submitted to us to vote into and refund the endowment of Ballyroan, Navan, Clonsilla, and Middleton schools for the future support of the three latter schools." Can you give us any opinion as to whether a partition of this endowment between Navan, Clonsilla, and Middleton would give any advantage to this neighbourhood?—I don't see that it would.

9835. What is the nearest locality to Ballyroan in your opinion, and from your experience, where any boys are to be found that want intermediate education—what is the nearest place where you could find materials for a school like this if we could transplant it?—I could not answer you. I heard that in Abbeyleix they tried on several occasions to establish an intermediate school and could not do it.

9836. Lord Justice NAIRN.—What is the distance from this to Abbeyleix?—Two miles and a half.

9837. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—When were the attempts you refer to made?—About thirty years ago the late Lord De Vries tried to establish a school there, and although he gave a house for the purpose rent free—as I heard—the attempt failed.

9838. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is there any other class of education that could, in your opinion, be given here that would be useful?—I think not—the National school is sufficient for the Roman Catholics and the Church Education school for the Protestants.

9839. Then you think there is quite enough education to be had in Ballyroan without this school?—I think so.

9840. Would any kind of industrial education be of advantage to the neighbourhood of Ballyroan?—I cannot say; I don't know but that it might.

9841. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are there any industries in the neighbourhood?—None that I know of.

9842. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Is there any agriculture in the neighbourhood?—Yes, it is purely agricultural district.

9843. And would it be of advantage to teach the people agriculture?—It might, but I think the farmers about this neighbourhood have sufficient knowledge in that line already.

9844. You think they could not be improved?—They might object; however, you can ask themselves about that.

9845. Lord Justice NAIRN.—To what religion did your seven boarders and thirteen day boys belong?—The boarders were Protestants, and the day boys were Catholics and Protestants.

9846. Do you never remember any Catholic boarders here?—Never.

9847. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Mr. Mahaffy reported in 1880:—"If the school be maintained in its present place it is hard to see what can be done to enlarge it except to offer some money prize at a yearly examination; for the offer of free tuition will effect nothing. The master informed me that if he made this offer the farmers were offended and took it as a tender of charity. On the other hand, when he charges £3 or £5 a year they undertake to pay it, and do not keep their promise."—That is exactly the truth.

9848. "But a couple of £5 prizes would probably stimulate the boys now at the school, and bring some more from the mines. Of course the intermediate examination makes the offering of larger prizes quite unnecessary." Did you ever send any boys up for the intermediate examinations?—Yes.

9649. What number?—I think three.

9650. How did they get on?—Some got on very well and some failed.

9651. Did you ever come into the prize list?—No; some got on very well in Trinity College.

9652. Professor DOUGHERTY.—How many boys did you pass at the intermediate examinations in your most successful year?—I only sent up two and they passed. Two went one year and one another year.

9653. Three altogether?—Yes.

9654. What were the ages of your pupils?—They varied from twenty years down to six or seven.

9655. Could you give us any suggestion as to how, in your opinion, the endowment could be made useful?—I could not.

Lord De Fries.—I would like to ask if Mr. Lyon has said whether the ten boys who were here up to a year and a-half ago are any of them getting their education in the district now?—No, they have passed their examinations and gone into some profession or other.

They are out in life?—Yes.

I would like to ask whether there ever was any inspection of this school by the Commissioners, the patrons, or an inspector on their behalf?—Not in my time—except that Mr. Mahaffy came down once.

9656. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—The Commissioners have never sent anyone down?—Never; they have had nothing to do with it, except that since Mr. Mahaffy was here they sent down an architect each year.

9657. Do you remember, at any time, the school being inspected?—I do not. There was a Commission of Inquiry held in Maryborough.

9658. Lord Justice FREDGIMAN.—That was another Parliamentary Commission?—Yes. It sat in Maryborough.

9659. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have those gentlemen who appointed you ever visited the place or inquired into the progress of the school?—No.

9660. Rev. Dr. MEEHAN.—Who appointed you?—When my father died Mr. Preston wrote to me, and I went down to him and he appointed me. The Preston family have the right of appointment; at least I always so understood.

9661. Lord Justice FREDGIMAN.—And having made the appointment he did nothing else in connection with the school?—Never. He told me to go back and do what I liked with it; that is the truth.

9662. When you say that you went down to Mr. Preston do you mean that you went to his place in the county of Meath?—Yes, down to Ballinacree.

9663. Is there any property in this neighbourhood with which the Preston family are connected now?—No. They owned, at one time, the Dooney estate, and one time fifteen boys came to the school from that property; but it was sold to the late Mr. Wrafter, and it has been what might be called a desert for the last five or six years, taken care of by a herd.

Mr. WILLIAM DAVIDSON.—Was there any condition attached to the endowment of Alderman Preston regarding a number of boys being free?—No, certainly not.

I always heard that there was a condition of that kind?—You heard what was quite wrong. I know that there was a report to that effect about, but it is without the slightest foundation.

9664. Professor DOUGHERTY.—But you have had free pupils?—Yes, I took them free of my own free will.

9665. Because you could not get the parents to pay fees?—Yes, and rather than let the school go down altogether. But it is a mistake to imagine that there was any condition attached to the endowment that free boys should be taken.

Mr. DAVIDSON.—It seems to me that there must have been something of the kind intended at some time or other, or the report would never have gone abroad as it did.

Witness.—Reports are often untrue.

9666. Lord Justice FREDGIMAN read the report of 1859, p. 107, concluding as follows:—"It was suggested in evidence that the endowment might be transferred to Maryborough, where there was, at one time, a Diocesan school, and where a great want is felt of the means of education for the middle classes. We are of opinion that the purposes of the founder would be best accomplished by uniting the two endowments and establishing one efficient school at Maryborough, which is the nearest large town to the Charity estate."—I believe the Charity estate is near Mountshill?—Yes.

9667. You see the proposal at that time was to unite the Navan endowment to Ballyroan, and carry both to Maryborough?—Yes.

9668. While Mr. Mahaffy proposed to move this endowment to Maryborough, and leave Navan as it was?—Yes.

9669. And the Commissioners of Education now propose to abolish Ballyroan, and divide the endowment between Navan, Clonsilla, and Middleton?—Yes.

9670. Captain J. L. BLAND, J.P.—Do you know the object of the endowment, Mr. Lyon?—Yes—to give a classical education to the sons of farmers in the district at the cheap rate of £1 a quarter.

9671. By tradition or otherwise, have you ever heard that the tenants of the Dooney estate were to get any prior benefit?—I did not, except that when I was down with Mr. Preston he asked me "Do you know any of my tenants?" and I said I did. He then asked "Are they going on well?" or something to that effect, and added "If any of my tenants' sons come to you take care of them."

9672. Would you say that the tenants on that estate or their representatives should get the first benefit from the endowment?—That was the idea that Mr. Preston conveyed to me, and my father always told me he was appointed in a similar manner.

9673. You never heard your father express any opinion to that effect—or state there was such an understanding?—No, except that he told me that Mr. Preston's father, who was alive in his time, used to ask him about his tenants. But he did not give me any instruction to take any one more than another. On one occasion Mr. Preston asked me "Do you know the Campbells?"—they were tenants of his—and on my replying that I did, he said if they have any boys take care of them.

9674. Would you say that if the endowment was removed to Maryborough, the tenants of this district of Ballyroan would derive any benefit from it?—I don't think they would, but there are members of the tenants here, and you can ask themselves.

9675. Would they send their children to Abbey-leix?—I think not.

9676. Though only two and a half miles distant?—Two or three of them told me that if it was moved to Abbey-leix or to Maryborough they would count it but to the Ballyroan people altogether.

9677. Lord Justice FREDGIMAN.—But where are those people sending their boys at present?—Some to the National school and others to the Church school.

9678. Rev. Dr. MEEHAN.—There is nothing in the terms of the foundation about any boys being taken free or at the cheap rate of £1 a quarter?—No.

9679. Lord Justice FREDGIMAN.—The object of the endowment, as stated in the Act, 53 George III., cap. 107, sec. 14, were, to pay a schoolmaster of the Protestant religion resident in the town of Navan, the yearly sum of £25, and to pay a like schoolmaster, resident in the town of Ballyroan, the yearly sum of 236.—I believe it is in the case, however, that it was founded for the purpose of providing a good English and classical education for the sons of farmers resident in the district.

2380. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Have you any reason for believing that the object was to provide a classical education?—Dr. Kyle, who was the secretary at the time I was appointed, told me that that was what I was to do.

2381. The usage has been to give a classical education, but experience has shown that classical education is not wanted in this locality?—Yes, but I did not confine myself to giving a classical education, although I understood that that was the object of the endowment.

2382. Professor DOUGHERTY.—And you think that the farmers of this locality have given up all idea of having a classical education for their sons?—Well, I don't think at present there are any boys in the district qualified. I walked with Mr. Mahaffy through the village and district and told him everything I could, the result being that in his opinion the school was in a wretched position, and that no man could establish a good school here.

2383. But a new generation has had time to grow up since his visit?—Well, I can only think of one farmer in the neighbourhood who has children that would be likely to receive a classical education. The man I refer to has six children, but they are all too young to go to an intermediate school.

Lord De Vesci.—Would you make it quite clear as to the total want of control or supervision by the Commissioners or patrons of the school?

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—It is quite clear, Lord De Vesci, that there was none at all; and, as a matter of fact, we are aware that the Commissioners of Education never acted, with regard to these schools, except as a sort of managing agents.

Lord De Vesci.—In fact they controlled the estate only?

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—And the school building. As a rule they only concerned themselves about the finances; the schools were left to take care of themselves.

2384. Lord Justice NAZIN.—They state that they had no power of inspection, or rather expending money for inspection.

The Witness.—When I was appointed Mr. Prouty told me, I knew, to go and do what I liked.

Mr. J. Kerr.—You said the school was intended to benefit the sons of farmers in this neighbourhood, but as a matter of fact, were the pupils received from all sorts of places?—Yes, they came from Tinsdale, Abbey-lis, and different places.

It intended to benefit the sons of farmers, were they to be Protestants necessarily?—No—it was always a mixed school; no distinction was ever made on the score of religion.

2385. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The master is to be a Protestant?—Yes, the head master must be a Protestant, and the assistant a Protestant also.

Mr. Kerr.—And the education was to be classical?—It has always been so, as far as I know.

Were the boys intended to be fitted for any particular callings in life?—No—for whatever position they were able to take.

2386. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But I understood you to say that you prepared boys for almost all callings?—Yes, and more than that; there was a policeman in the village who was educated here, and got first place at entrance into Trinity College, and got honours all through his course. He is now a Protestant clergyman, and chaplain to the Forces at the Curragh—a highly educated man—he was a common policeman, educated in this school by me.

Rev. James
Lohr, B.P.

2387. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You are the Parish Priest of Ballyroan?—Yes, and Abbeylis.

2388. Is Ballyroan in the parish of Abbeylis?—Yes.

2389. In your opinion, are there any boys of a class of life to take advantage of an intermediate school in Ballyroan or its immediate neighbourhood?—I think if the school was transferred to Abbeylis there would be sufficient material for working an intermediate school there, especially as Lord De Vesci has been good enough to interest himself in the matter.

2390. Is there any intermediate school near this for Roman Catholic boys?—I think Mountmah is the nearest, it is a school under the care of the Patrician Brothers.

2391. Is it an intermediate school?—Not professionally, but they turn out boys for the intermediate examinations.

2392. What provisions have you for elementary education in Ballyroan?—A National school.

2393. How many children attend it?—The average is low just now. The schoolhouse was formerly very good, but I think the attendance will be increased, now that we have built a new schoolhouse to accommodate 100 children.

2394. Both boys and girls?—No, boys only.

2395. Is there a separate school for girls?—Yes—the convent school.

2396. For day pupils?—Yes, only day pupils.

2397. How many attend there?—From sixty to ninety.

2398. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—You think that probably there would be 100 boys available for the boys' National school?—Yes, I think so—that number on the roll at all events.

2399. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—All of the class that want a National school education?—Some of them might take advantage of a classical school also.

2400. About how many could you expect from this neighbourhood to take advantage of a higher grammar than that afforded in the National school?—The school here has fallen away, but between Abbeylis and Ballyroan I think there is plenty of material to work upon. I could not answer the question in figures, but between Abbeylis and Ballyroan there would be a good many boys going in for a classical education.

2401. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—But is there nothing between a classical education and the elementary education of an ordinary National school?—There is nothing here between the two, at all events.

2402. Would it, in your opinion, be of advantage if you had something better than the ordinary education of the National school, but more suited to the boys who come here, than a classical education?—I think not.

2403. You want nothing between the two?—I don't not.

2404. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—What class of teacher have you in the Ballyroan Boys' National school?—First division of second class.

2405. Lord Justice NAZIN.—What is the average attendance?—The average attendance is about 40.

2406. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But you hope ultimately to get it up to 100?—Yes.

2407. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Suppose this endowment were transferred to Abbeylis, would it be any advantage to the inhabitants of Ballyroan if a teacher in agriculture was sent out from time to time free

Abbeyfeix to instruct the boys of the National School here in practical farming?—I might be an advantage, but I think the farmers about here are well skilled, and I don't know that they would like to have an instructor sent amongst them.

9908. Would it be of advantage to send out from an establishment at Abbeyfeix a teacher, say, in country?—I think that would prove of use.

9909. Lord Justice NAIRN.—If the school were transferred to Abbeyfeix, would boys be able to go from this to it?—It is only 2½ or 3 miles.

9910. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—Would it be any advantage to the boys in Ballyroan to be taught a little geography—the use of tools?—I suppose so.

9911. Wouldn't they be able to make more use of it when they got home than of Homer or Demosthenes?—They would—some of them.

9912. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Do you know whether they get results free in the National school here for extra subjects?—Not that I know of.

9913. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—Is drawing taught in the National school?—No.

9914. If they had a teacher on stated days, to teach drawing, would it not be an advantage?—I believe it would.

9915. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—But they have not even made a beginning in the drawing, cookery, or other subjects, for which they can get results free?—No, not yet.

9916. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—What do you think, taking everything into account, would be the best use to make of this endowment?—I would vote for the transfer of the endowment to Abbeyfeix to be used as here—for the purpose of giving a classical education at a cheap rate.

9917. If you established a classical school in Abbeyfeix the inhabitants of Ballyroan would get very little benefit from it?—I don't admit that, on the contrary, I say any respectable farmer could very easily send in his sons there; and at present they get no benefit at all from the endowment. I suppose there are no children in the place who wish a classical education.

9918. How far is Abbeyfeix from the estate of Doeray of which we have heard?—I think about the same distance.

9919. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Is the Protestant Rector of Ballyroan here?

Lord De Fries.—No, unfortunately the Rev. Mr. Disney is away at present.

July 28, 1888.

Rev. James
Laird, V.R.

The Very Rev. Andrew Platon, V.R., P.P., examined.

9920. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—You are the Parish Priest of Maryborough?—I am, and I was a pupil in this school myself 40 years ago, so that I can speak from experience.

9921. How many boys were there here at that time?—Forty-five years ago there must have been 18 or 20 boarders, and about 15 or 16 day boys. Mr. Lyon was quite a child at the time, and does not remember quite so far back. I was in school with him afterwards myself.

9922. What was the course of education?—Mr. Lyon was the head master, and Mr. Stoker the assistant, and they had an English master for arithmetic; they gave a very solid commercial and classical education. Mr. Lyon was a Trinity College man, and they taught Latin and Greek, English, geography, and arithmetic—general education for commercial and other pursuits.

9923. From what class did they draw the pupils?—The boarders were, as described by Mr. Lyon, the sons of gentlemen or respectable farmers from different parts of the country, and the day boys farmers' sons and shopkeepers' sons, and children from the humblest class as well.

9924. Did boys come from Abbeyfeix here at that time?—Yes, day boys.

9925. What proportion of religious denominations was there?—The boarders were all Protestants—the head master being a Protestant clergyman, and so to the day boys sometimes the number of Catholics predominated, and sometimes the Protestants. I entertained the greatest respect for the teachers who were here at that time—they never interfered in any way whatever with the religion of the pupils.

9926. Is there any provision in this neighbourhood for giving a better education to Roman Catholics than that afforded in the National school?—The nearest is Mountbellew—a boarding school and a day school—in the latter of which both Catholics and Protestants meet.

9927. Is there any school of the kind in Maryborough?—Not at present. Elementary classes are taught there, but there is not a classical school, properly so called, at present.

9928. What is your idea about utilizing this endowment?—If there was any chance of utilizing the endowment in Ballyroan I would not interfere with it, so that it is only in the event of your recommending a transfer of the endowment that I would venture to suggest Maryborough, and the reason I go in for Maryborough, if there is to be a change, is this, it is the capital of the county, and a rising and flourishing town, one of the few places that is maintaining its own in the country. Moreover, there would be certain to be such an attendance of pupils there, as would ensure the endowment being utilized. I have two boys' schools, I may say three, in Maryborough—an infants' school in the convent under the nuns, where boys are taken up to 8 or 7 years of age, a Christian Brothers' school, and a National school for boys; and the teachers at the Christian Brothers' schools, and one of the teachers at the National school can teach elementary classics. The National school has not been very long established, but I did propose having elementary classics as an extra there. At present drawing, music, agriculture, and other extras are taught, and we are prepared to take up elementary classics as well, when the occasion arises. If this endowment could be transferred there it would allow of our forming an upper school, in connexion with that National school, at once.

9929. On that point a difficulty would arise on the will—the endowment is given to pay the salary of a Protestant schoolmaster?—The endowment evidently was intended to benefit Catholics as well as Protestants, and has been so used. It has been said that the primary intention was to benefit the Doeray family, and I don't remember ever, in my time, a Protestant coming from the estate of Doeray to this school; they were always Catholics. I think the intention of the Preston family was that all the children of the neighbourhood should benefit by the endowment independent of religion, and they would naturally have intended that Catholics should receive an equal benefit, for their tenants were all Catholics.

9930. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Have you ever seen the original instrument of foundation?—Never, but I heard the recital of the trusts read to-day from the Act of George, and, as I gathered, there was nothing there making it imperative that the Head Master should be a Protestant.

9931. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Here is the recital "to pay a schoolmaster of the Protestant religion resident in the town of Navan, the yearly sum of £40 and to pay a like schoolmaster resident in the town of Ballyroan, the yearly sum of £25"—It does not say a Protestant master for Ballyroan.

9932. Lord Justice NAIRN.—No, but "a like master"—The only way of ascertaining the master Definitely would be to get the will. I am sure the Preston family intended that the Catholics should have an equal benefit from the endowment. Of course in the old ascendancy time the usage, with all patrons, was to appoint a Protestant as head master; but if your Commission has the unlimited power mentioned here, you could depart from that usage now.

9953. Professor DOUGHERTY.—In the event of this endowment being transferred to Maryborough, would you favour the establishment of a mixed school which both Protestants and Catholics could attend?—As I told you I have two very fine schools in existence now, one conducted by the Christian Brothers and the other by a staff of qualified teachers under the National Board. As I mentioned one of the teachers in the National School is a very highly qualified man, and it would be a fine place to throw the endowment into. There is at present an average attendance of seventy from the most respectable children in the town, and there are 110 on the roll, and if you throw the endowment into that National School I could get, with the excellent teacher we have at present, a still more qualified teacher to undertake classes, and all parties could come to that school, protected in the exercise of their religion by the rules of the National Board. If, however, you established a new school there, and appointed a Protestant master over it, I would have a decided objection to allowing Catholic boys to attend simply because they could not be protected as in a National School.

9954. Have you any Protestant boys in attendance at your National School at present?—There are very few just now.

9955. Lord Justice FRASER.—Is there a National School under Protestant management there?—Yes, the Protestant clergymen will explain that to you. It is a mixed school for boys and girls and presided over by a mistress only, and would not carry out your intentions, whereas, my National School would fulfil all the requirements, I think, while under the rules of the National Board all the children would be protected from any interference with their religion, so that you could have both Protestants and Catholics there, if we had the endowment the sphere of our operations could be enlarged very considerably.

9956. What has become of the class of pupils that formerly came to this Ballyroan School?—Mr. Lyon could explain that better than I can, but from time to time the population fluctuates in place like this. At one time there are boys, and at another time not so many, besides you have now the Mountcash School where the pension is very small, and for a farmer to drive his children here and pay £1 a quarter is would be as well for him to send them to Mountcash where they would be educated and boarded for £35 a year. That of course is as regards Catholic boys, but it has had a good deal to do with the falling away of that class—in my opinion.

Lord De Vesel.—Is the education given by the Christian Brothers in Maryborough primary or intermediate?—Primary, but as I said they prepare and send boys up for the Intermediate examinations.

But all the schools in Maryborough are primary schools.—Yes, but allow me to repeat that the Christian Brothers prepare boys for the Intermediate examinations, and have had boys passed for the last few years. Boys are taught classes there and sent forward for the Intermediate examinations, so that in that sense it is an intermediate school. The National schools cannot send their pupils from the schools to the Intermediate examinations, which I think is a great loss and a decided mistake.

9957. Rev. Dr. McEneaney.—They may send the boys to the Intermediate examinations, but the Intermediate Examination Board will not pay results fee for the boys who pass.—Yes, and the same holds good with the South Kensington examinations. It takes time to prepare pupils for these examinations and they might not pass, whereas, the teachers are sure of the results fee in any case.

Lord De Vesel.—I understand that your suggestion is that this endowment, which is for an intermediate school, should be moved to Maryborough to assist the schools already existing there?—Yes.

9958. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would you be opposed to the establishment of a separate intermediate school at Maryborough?—I would not like you to suppose that if a school was established in Maryborough under a Protestant teacher I could be expected to allow Catholic children to go there without any safeguard.

9959. Lord Justice FRASER.—But if the new school was placed under a Protestant teacher with the same safeguards as are now applied in National schools, would you then object?—I should know who would be the teacher, and what supervision there would be.

9960. Assume that he would be under the supervision of a mixed board of governors?—Assuming that he would be a Catholic and under Government supervision or laws, and that I would have some power of visiting, I would have no absolute objection.

9961. The school at Mountcash which you spoke of is under the Patriotic Brothers?—Yes.

9962. Do they educate boys for all professions?—They have first, under their care, a primary National school, then a boarding school where they prepare boys for all walks of life. Then they have a day school, which is properly called an intermediate school, where Protestants and Catholics meet under the monks, receiving a general English and classical education.

9963. The boys educated there go into all professions?—Yes, both out of the day school and the boarding school.

9964. It is not intended merely to bring up boys for the Catholic Church?—Not exclusively.

9965. But to some extent?—From the nature of things, being under the monks there, a number of boys go from that to the Catholic colleges; but there is no restraint put upon them—no interference of any kind.

9966. How far is the school at Mountcash from Maryborough?—I think the Mountcash school is about six Irish miles from Maryborough, and seven from here.

Captain J. L. Wood, J.P., examined.

Captain J. L.
Wood, J.P.

9967. Lord Justice FRASER.—Can you inform us about the Protestant schools in this locality?—I will give you such information as I possess, but I must draw largely on memory.

9968. Can you tell us what the Ballyroan Protestant school is?—It is a parochial school, entirely supported by private subscriptions.

9969. It is not under the National Board?—No.

9970. About how many children are in attendance?—It is very variable according to the season, but I believe there are about from fifteen to twenty of all ages.

9961. Is the school under a schoolmistress?—No, a schoolmaster—and there is also a sewing class. The schoolmaster's sister-in-law teaches sewing.

9962. The ordinary instruction is given by the master to pupils of both sexes?—Yes.

9963. Is that the full number of Protestant children that want education in this neighbourhood at present?—There are a great many more Protestant children; it is a large parish.

9964. Where do they get their education?—Up to a certain age they get it at this school. They would go to the National School.

July 28, 1888.
 Chapter 2. G.
 Bland, &c.

9954. It is under Roman Catholic management?

—Yes.

9955. How does it happen that the Protestant school is not under the National Board?—Because the matter has been there for some time, and he cannot pass the examination. If we could get him under the National Board we would derive a great deal of benefit. But I don't think we have the full number of children either.

9956. As to this Ballyroan school, can you give me any information?—I am a tenant on the Dooney estate already referred to. There are seven tenants in it.

9957. We heard something about its being a debt—is that so?—That is a mistake. The estate was purchased from Mr. Preston in the Incorporated Estates Court by the late Mr. Wrafter, who raised the money, with the result that some of the tenants refused to pay, and were evicted. Three of the tenants remained on, the others were evicted. Then the Bank of Ireland, who had advanced a large amount of the purchase-money, foreclosed, and the property came into their hands. Later, Mr. Wrafter died, and shortly the Bank has come to an agreement with the tenants who were evicted, and has allowed them to sign with an alternate intention of their purchasing under Lord Ashburton's Act.

9958. And do you include them in the seven tenants you speak of?—Yes, four were evicted and are now back.

9959. Are the seven tenants all Protestants or Catholics or are they mixed?—There are two Protestants and five Catholics.

9960. About what size are the holdings?—Large holdings—the smallest is over 30 acres.

9961. They are all holdings large enough to have well-to-do farmers upon them who would want good education for their children?—Quite so.

9962. What distance is the Dooney estate from this?—It comes up quite close.

9963. Are there any others of the same class about this district who would want a good education for their sons?—I think so.

9964. How would you, being one of the tenants here yourself, propose to make this endowment useful?—It is a hard question to answer without doing harm to people.

9965. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Do you think a classical education is wanted, or could the endowment be better applied in some other kind of education?—I would not say that a classical education is wanted, but a higher education. I was never a great believer in classics for the middle classes. As to the proposal to teach agriculture, I don't think that would do much good.

9966. You think there is no room for improvement in that direction?—I don't know that, but theoretical knowledge, as applied to agriculture, has seldom been of much advantage in this country.

9967. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you think that the children of the middle classes should not work with a view to advance themselves?—Certainly they should—but not at classics.

9968. If a farmer wanted to send his son to a profession surely classics would be necessary?—I would not deprive them of classics, I only mean that I do not lay the great stress upon a classical education that is carried so in England.

9969. Lord Justice NAULT.—You were saying, Captain Bland, that it was a difficult thing to lay down any plan for utilizing this endowment without doing harm. I suppose you meant to the present education—and you must remember that winter relief might be as much to be saved or compensated for—provided that were done, in what way do you think the endowment, worth £230 a year, could be best turned to advantage?—In Ballyroan?

9970. In Ballyroan, to commence with?—I don't say much of anything being done here—it is as much out of the way. However, I know of a school just as much out of the way that has prospered marvellously —a school in the Diocese of Elphin, under my brother-in-law, Dean Warburton. That was only a small school and a small endowment, but they give a classical education there now for a very small sum.

9971. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—It is both a boarding and a day school?—Yes—they have over forty boarders, and they are boarded and educated for £26 a year each.

9972. Lord Justice NAULT.—Supposing you were not able to get boarders in Ballyroan, do you think there would be a sufficient supply of day boys to make the endowment useful here?—I would be in favour of having it nearer a railway station.

9973. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—And what is your railway station?—Well, I go to either Maryborough or Abbeylisk.

9974. Then you see in a position to give us an unbiased opinion between Maryborough and Abbeylisk?—Well, I don't see if this endowment were moved to Maryborough how the Ballyroan district would benefit by it.

9975. Do you think it would benefit if the endowment were transferred to Abbeylisk?—I think so, and the proof of that is that farmers send their sons here from a longer distance than it is to Abbeylisk.

9976. Some Abbeylisk boys were here we have heard?—Yes, and they come from Timahoe, four miles from here.

Mr. LYON.—And from Maryborough too we have had them.

Rev. Mr. PHILAN.—They did come here from the vicinity of Maryborough. If a good school was established there it would benefit the Dooney tenants.

9977. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—What is the distance, Captain Bland, of the nearest point of the Dooney estate from Maryborough?—It is fully five miles.

9978. And what is the distance of the nearest point of the estate from Abbeylisk?—About two-and-a-half miles—about half way just.

Rev. Mr. PHILAN.—I would not say it is two-and-a-half Irish miles from the Dooney estate to Abbeylisk—it is only about two-and-a-half English miles I think.

Captain Bland.—It is exactly three English miles from the nearest point of the Dooney estate to Abbeylisk market square.

9979. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—And from Maryborough?—Leaving my gate to drive to Maryborough it takes me an hour and five minutes, and I count it between six-and-a-half and seven miles. The Dooney estate comes about a mile nearer Maryborough than my place; that would make it five-and-a-half or six miles from Maryborough.

Rev. Mr. PHILAN.—Just two fields from this will take us on the Dooney estate, and I have no doubt that the nearest point of it is five miles from Maryborough.

Captain Bland.—That is five Irish miles. I may say that members of my own family have been educated in this school, my brother was partly educated here and entered into the service, and my son received some education here and is at Sandhurst now.

9980. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Under the present master?—Yes.

9981. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—These examples would indicate the advantage of having a classical school in this locality?—No, I think mathematics count more at Sandhurst; but if removed to Abbeylisk the endowment could still be availed of.

9982. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—At all events you would require Latin for these competitive examinations—something that boys could not well get in an ordinary National school?—Yes, but modern languages would in my opinion be better than high class classical education.

9983. I find in one of the reports that the endowment includes "48a. 1a. 34r. (on part of which the school stands) close to the village of Ballyroan"—do you know that part of the Charity estate?—I don't know.

Mr. Lymn.—Irish acres. There are fourteen Irish acres set to a man named Delaney, a man named Claxton has six acres more, and I have six acres. They may be speaking of English acres, and I am talking of Irish acres.

1893. Lord Justice NASS.—Captain Ward, what do you think, on the whole, would give the best prospect of utilising this endowment?—I think if it were moved to Abbeyfeix it would give most benefit to the district.

1894. Lord Justice FIFEGRAN.—By applying it to a school there in which a better education would be given than in a National school?—Yes.

1897. Could you give us any suggestion as to how it would be desirable to appoint the master for such a school?—That is a very difficult question. I understand that he must be a Protestant.

1898. So the founder has declared?—I should say it ought to be a mixed school under a Protestant master.

1899. Do you think you could here, as in the North of Ireland, create some board for the appointment of a master and management of the school, giving a voice to subscribers and parents of pupils?—I have not thought of that, but it might be done.

1900. Do you think it would be a good plan to leave the nomination in the hands of a gentleman who only sees the schoolmaster when he appoints him and tells him to go and do what he pleases?—Certainly not, and I think that a great deal of the failure of the school has arisen from that, and from the neglect of the Commissioners of Education in looking after it.

Mr. William Davidson examined.

Mr. William Davidson.

1998. Lord Justice FIFEGRAN.—You are also one of the tenants on the Donny estate?—Yes.

1999. What number of boys are there on that property?—Not many at present, but before long perhaps there might be more.

2000. In the meantime could you tell us how many you have, to start with—or do you agree with the schoolmaster that there are none?—There are some, but not many certainly.

2001. What means of education have you there now—this school is empty?—There is the National school and the Church school.

2002. Are they good schools?—I believe they are very fair schools of their class.

2003. But they give nothing except an elementary education?—That is all.

2004. Do you know anything of the working of the Ballyroan Endowed school?—Yes, I had two sons educated here. The eldest boy went into the veterinary profession, and the youngest is now at home with me learning the farming business.

2005. What class of education did they get?—They got an English and classical education. The youngest boy was educated altogether here, but the other was at another school for a while.

2006. Have you any suggestions to offer as to making this endowment more useful to the neighbourhood?—I think it should be more sharply looked after, and if there was a good school here I am sure pupils would come from the neighbourhood to follow up the education they got in the Church and National schools.

2007. What do you call the neighbourhood?—All about here—the district about.

2008. Then do you think it is best situated where it is?—I think so. The tenants have been passing through bad times, but there is a little light ahead, and young men can do nothing nowadays without a classical education. It is necessary almost for any business.

2009. How do you account for the fact that there

1991. Rev. Dr. MALLON.—Do you think it would be desirable to have a local governing body to look after the endowment?—I think so.

1992. Would you have any objection to Catholics being on such a governing body?—I think not; I think the intention of the endowment was to benefit Catholics and Protestants alike. I don't believe, at the time the endowment was created, there were any Protestants on the estate.

1993. Professor DONNAN.—Would you be in favour of retaining the Protestant master, or would you prefer taking the best man you could get whether he was a Protestant or a Catholic?—I would be for benefiting the district for which the endowment was meant.

1994. Rev. Dr. MALLON.—If you had an intermediate school in Abbeyfeix and had special teachers engaged there, should you think it desirable to give the benefit of those teachers to the National school at Ballyroan—suppose a teacher of drawing, say for one day in each week?—I think it would be a very good idea.

1995. And the same might hold good for other subjects?—Quite so.

1996. Then if we drew up such a scheme, we might leave it in the power of the governing body as far as they thought it desirable, to give the benefit of their special teachers to Ballyroan, from time to time?—Yes.

1997. And in that way an arrangement could be made that would partly satisfy the claims of Ballyroan?—Yes.

has been no attendance at the school for over a year and a half?—The thing has been neglected by all parties. There has been no looking after or supervision of the school, and it has gone down for that reason.

2010. Could you suggest any body to look after it properly in the future?—I would say that there should be a local governing body appointed.

2011. How would you set about forming that body?—By the people in the neighbourhood, the parents of pupils, and the clergyman and farmers in the neighbourhood likely to supply pupils in the future.

2012. Rev. Dr. MALLON.—Do you think there would be any use in an attempt to teach agriculture?—I don't think it would do any good.

2013. Coming here from Maryborough we saw a great many weeds in the fields, would it not be an advantage to teach the people that the weeds attract qualities from the land that should go into the corn?—They know very well how to pull the weeds out, the whole thing is to get them at it.

2014. Professor DONNAN.—Have farmers no objection to sending their children to an agricultural school?—Yes.

2015. On what is that founded?—Simply because they have not proved of any advantage, and from the manner in which they have been managed by government in the past. They have not been a success in this country.

2016. Lord Justice FIFEGRAN.—I believe that even in England the number of successful agricultural institutions could be counted on the fingers of one hand?—I dare say they might.

2017. Rev. Dr. MALLON.—But without establishing an agricultural school, might not a little agricultural instruction be very advantageous in an agricultural district, such as this is?—Perhaps, in a small way—to children beginning, it would. But these schools have never succeeded—they never paid, and in my opinion simply because they were not worked right.

2018. Lord Justice FIFEGRAN.—There is a great deal to be taught in the way of chemistry and physical science that would be found of use to agriculturists?—Yes, and that would be most useful. I was educated in that myself, and found practical chemistry most useful to me as a farmer.

10009. If things of that sort were taught, where would there be the best chance of having materials to work upon in the shape of pupils—here in Abbeyfeix or in Maryborough?—Perhaps in one of the towns, but if the endowment is to be of any advantage to the tenants on the Doonoy estate, I don't see why the school should not be kept up here. I think if you had a school under a good master and efficient assistants here, to teach classics, and give a good plain English, with a good deal of chemistry and some agricultural training, it would prove most useful to the district all round.

10020. Rev Dr. McILROY.—But Mr. Lyon has told us that there are no children in this neighbourhood to educate in such a school?—There have been dark times passing over the tenants, but things are looking brighter now, through the Land Acts and the Land Purchase Act, and farmers might want more education for their children in the future.

10021. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—You speak of dark times "passing over," but the history of this school has been all darkness for the 303 years it has been in operation?—I don't know whether that was the fault of the master or of those who sought to have looked after him. There ought to have been some local government of a sort or sort to look after the school.

10022. Rev Dr. McILROY.—How far do you live from Abbeyfeix?—I am not living on the Doonoy estate at present, but on another farm that I have.

10023. How far is your house on the Doonoy estate from Abbeyfeix?—Three miles.

10024. If this school had been at Abbeyfeix when your sons were growing up, would you have sent them there?—Yes.

Mr. John ABBEY.—May I ask Mr. Davidson how far was Esker, where he resided when his boys were growing up, from Ballyroan where he sent them to school?—About three miles further than this—nearly four miles.

Lord De Vaux.—About how far would your house or the Doonoy estate be from Maryborough?—Over five but not six miles.

Mr. ABBEY.—You are one of the tenants on the Doonoy estate, but you don't reside there?—Not at present, but my youngest boy will go to live there in a short time I expect.

10025. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—It seems clear that on this Doonoy estate, of which we have heard so much, there are only seven families, and one could not keep up a school for that number only. At the same time we ought not to change it so that they would lose all benefit from the endowment, if it be possible to remove it to a place near enough for them and which would present other advantages as well.

Mr. ABBEY.—I believe there are no children on the Doonoy estate ready for education just now?—Yes, Mrs. Kelly has two children.

Captain BLAND.—And James Kinella has a large family of over ten children?—Yes; they were living at Abbeyfeix, but have come back to their farm on the Doonoy estate recently.

You have a son married, Mr. Davidson, and he has children?—Yes.

Then the other son might marry, and reside at Doonoy?—Yes. It is my intention either that he or I should go to live there.

And if he had children, would you consider it too far to send them to school in Maryborough?—Yes—too far to Maryborough.

But not to Abbeyfeix?—Well, I would prefer sending them here.

Viscount De Vaux, &c., examined.

10030. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—I believe, Lord De Vaux, you have been taking an interest in this Ballyroan school?—Yes, but I had no knowledge whatever of the management of the school until to-day.

10031. How near does your own property come to Ballyroan?—Within a mile.

10032. Abbeyfeix is your headquarters?—Yes.

10033. Would you kindly give me the benefit of your opinion as to how this endowment could be made more useful?—Speaking in a selfish interest, I should like to see it moved to Abbeyfeix. I believe, from what has been stated by the previous witnesses, that would be equally convenient to the tenants on the Doonoy estate, and Abbeyfeix, being a railway station and a place where a good many markets and fairs are held, with a good many villages all round, there would be abundant materials to work upon there.

10034. You have a population of about 1,100 in Abbeyfeix itself?—Yes, in the village.

10035. What villages are there about it?—Ballinacilly, Ballacolly, and Durnow, which is a good-sized village, and is four English miles distant.

10036. Is that at the opposite side of Abbeyfeix from this?—Yes, at the edge of the county Kilkenny. There are other villages as well, indeed Abbeyfeix is the centre of a fairly populous district.

10037. Is there no intermediate school in that district?—Not one at present.

10038. If this school was moved into Abbeyfeix what number of pupils requiring a classical education could be hoped for?—I have not formed an opinion as to the actual numbers, but there are a good many shopkeepers in the town of Abbeyfeix, and gentlemen living round—not farmers strictly speaking.

10039. And where do they send their sons for education now?—All that I know have been educated at home, but they must send them away, externally, to boarding schools.

10040. What premises in Abbeyfeix could be made available for a school of the kind?—There are premises which could be made available for the purpose now at very little expense. There is a large building known as the assembly rooms, that I have to a certain extent the control over, and that would not require much alteration to make it available. It is used at present, partly by the Young Men's Christian Association, part as an office for the savings bank, and the large room for public meetings; but, even if that accommodation was not available there are other places where a school could be built.

10041. Who should be entrusted with the government of such a school?—You might form a governing body on the same lines as you have proposed in the case of the Royal school.

10042. Rev Dr. McILROY.—There are purely denominational bodies—should you think it desirable to have a purely denominational body governing such a school as you have been speaking of?—No. I should wish to see this school a mixed school.

10043. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Is there a fair prospect of continuing it as a mixed school?—I would not say suddenly, but I believe there is a very fair prospect of success in that direction if it were removed to Abbeyfeix. When the school was founded here, in 1885, Ballyroan was a flourishing little town on the main road from Dublin to Cork, while now it is a perfectly out of the way place. The village has fallen into decay, and is rapidly diminishing, while since the inquiry held in 1885, Abbeyfeix has increased in prosperity, a branch railway has been made to it, and it is now a very flourishing little town.

10044. Lord Justice MAW.—Could you form any idea, supposing such a school were established in Abbeyfeix, what the attendance would be?—I have answered that already. I could not put a figure on the probable attendance, but there are a very large number of well-to-do farmers living in the district round Abbeyfeix taking a radius of five English miles.

10041. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Father Loder did not appear to anticipate any insurmountable difficulty in getting pupils of both denominations for such a day school—I would not like to speak confidently about that, but I hope not.

10042. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—If the endowment were removed into Abbeyfeix, what do you think of the suggestion to send teachers from Abbeyfeix to the National school at Ballyman, to give instruction in such subjects as might be outside to the boys there, as a sort of compensation to the scholars about Ballyman—for instance, drawing?—Assuming that an intermediate school were established in Abbeyfeix, that the teachers should go from that and give instruction, I think would be an admirable thing.

10043. Teachers, say in drawing, physical science, chemistry, and so forth, whose time would not be wholly occupied in Abbeyfeix, could come out here one day in the week and give instruction in those subjects to the boys at the National school—I think it would be an admirable thing if carried out. No doubt Abbeyfeix would be a good centre for the dissemination of knowledge and instruction.

10044. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You have a good deal of money here, and it is a substantial endowment. Some successful schools that have come under our notice have only £100 a year, and you have £300 a year—Yes, and the people about Abbeyfeix are pretty well off.

10045. What do you think of the proposition to move the endowment to Maryborough and not to Abbeyfeix?—Naturally I am interested in Abbeyfeix, but independent of that I think it is really more central than Maryborough. Though Maryborough is the county town you can reach more villages from Abbeyfeix, besides which there is the fact of this school at Mountath, and if I mistake not, there is another intermediate school, a private school, at Portarlington.

10046. What is the distance from Abbeyfeix to Portarlington?—It is the next railway station to Maryborough. It is fourteen or fifteen miles from Abbeyfeix.

10047. What is the distance of Rathleva?—Eight or ten miles from Abbeyfeix, but in a different direction.

10048. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—As regards the governing body, what number should you think convenient?—I have no experience of that, but I think the smaller the body the more chance there is of its doing good work.

10049. You would not suggest that it should be smaller than five?—No, but I confess that whoever is suggested as to a local governing body, I should like to see better control from Dublin. There is no control at all at present.

10050. Professor DOUGHERTY.—But we are bound to make provision that the school shall be inspected by an inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, who is to report to His Excellency?—That, ever and above the local governors, is absolutely necessary.

10051. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—You are the owner of a very extensive property in the neighbourhood, and take an interest in education, so that it is natural that you should be a member of the governing body; what would you say to the parish priest and the Protestant rector being also appointed?—I should say so.

10052. As the endowment was intended, more or less, for the estate of Doonoy, should you think it desirable to give the tenants on that property the right of nominating one member?—I would not speak positively as to that—it is a small body, five—and the question is whether the tenants on the Mountath estate ought not to get some voice in the matter.

Very Rev. A. Phelan.—There is a school at Kilbuckan for the Cappalonghlin tenants. There is a house with four acres of land, and a sum of £20 a year is allowed to the teacher. There was a hitch at one time about the matter, but they have placed the school under the National Board, and it is now working most satisfactorily. The tenants who support that school live on the Cappalonghlin estate, from which the money is drawn for this Ballyman endowment.

10053. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Yes—that amount is paid out of the rents, just as a landlord would pay it, to support a school there, although there is nothing authorizing it in the will.

10054. Very Rev. A. Phelan.—And the Doonoy estate is not mentioned in the will either.

10055. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—No, and Alderman Preston fixed his schools in Navan, Ballyman, and Dublin, and said nothing about Cappalonghlin.

10056. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Is there any other suggestion you would like to make, Lord De Vane, about the constitution of the governing body?—No, I have not had experience of the matter, and would not like to speak positively. But, looking to the future, in the event of any form of local government in the shape of county boards, I would not approve of these having control over such endowments.

10057. But your idea is to have a mixed school attended by pupils of each denomination?—Yes.

10058. And subject to the control of a board of local governors, on which the different denominations would be represented; but suppose such a school turned out after some years to be a failure, how then do you think the endowment could be best used?—I cannot give you any information as to that; I am so sanguine that the school would be used, if only one established in Abbeyfeix, that I have nothing of how the endowment might be utilized otherwise.

10059. I had it in my mind that it might be left open to the governing body, in such an event, to use the endowment to assist the schools in the neighbourhood that were already prosperous—that is if they found it impossible to carry on an independent school?—It might be done in that way; but I would like to see a good attempt made first to reconstitute the school in Abbeyfeix. I believe the late Mr. Loftus Blaud, the father of Captain Blaud, gave evidence in 1858 in favour of moving the school to Abbeyfeix.

10060. Captain Blaud.—I don't know whether he was in favour of Maryborough or Abbeyfeix, but he certainly was in favour of moving it from Ballyman.

10061. Lord De Vane.—I may say that I should be in favour of having a school both for boys and girls, and I would strongly press the advisability of teaching drawing.

10062. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—And you would have no objection to our putting in sewing for the girls and dressmaking?—Certainly not.

10063. And in that case you might send out your teacher of sewing and dressmaking to the girls at Ballyman?—Yes, and anything that can be done for the Ballyman primary schools might easily be done for other similar schools in the district; thus the intermediate school might be made a centre for the dissemination of special education to all the primary schools about.

10064. Then, with regard to the kind of education to be given at the intermediate school itself?—I should be disposed to leave that very much to the local authorities to determine from time to time, according as they would find the circumstances of the period or the wants of the people required. The provision which has been inserted in the draft scheme for the future management of the Royal Schools would apply very well in that regard here.

10065. Here there ought to be a discretion to undertake technical or industrial education, whereas we dealt with the Royal Schools as grammar schools pure and simple?—That could be provided for also. I might be allowed to mention that in the event of the endowment being reserved to Abbeyfeix, and a mixed school established there of the class I have indicated, I am empowered to say that there is a substantial sum of money—five hundred odd pounds—that could be applied in aid of the endowment, but it should be used purely in aid of the Protestants. The sum I speak of is the balance of an old Protestant Benefit Society fund, and therefore the trustees, of whom I am one, feel that it should be employed for the benefit of Protestants only.

10066. Professor DOUGHERTY.—How would you propose to employ it?—That would be a matter for future consideration.

10067. Would it be useful for founding exhibitions for instance?—That was one of the things in my mind, but it might be used in other ways as well.

10068. Lord Justice NANCE.—Was this fund ever used for educational purposes?—I should say not, but I believe the trustees have power to deal with it in this manner.

10069. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you think an addition, large enough to cover the school fees would be a sufficient inducement to a parent to allow his child to remain at the school after he might have thought of removing him to some employment?—I could not say but it should be an inducement, no doubt.

10070. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If a school were established in Abbeyfeix, the trustees of that fund might make it a provision for awarding the most promising boys to go into a university?—Yes—that I also thought of—to give awards to boys proceeding from the school to the university.

10071. I don't see the necessity of dealing with such a fund in the scheme to be settled by the Commission?—No, but I thought I should state the fact that the trustees of that fund have sufficient power to dedicate it to this particular use, and that, as I am informed, they will do so in the event of a school being established in Abbeyfeix. And it would be for the benefit of Protestants of all denominations, and for the district comprised in the parish of Abbeyfeix, which includes Ballyraan.

10072. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—In what form is this money at present?—I am not sure whether it is in the Savings Bank, but the trustees have full power over it, and they think it would be best applied in the interests of education.

10073. Your better course might be to wait until our draft scheme is prepared, and if it does what you wish, you might give the assent in writing required by our Act, and have your fund included in the scheme with a provision that it shall be applied as you wish?—Yes, but this being a Protestant fund, we must ensure that it will be used, in connection with a mixed school, for the benefit of Protestants only.

10074. Do you think it impossible to make this a prosperous school in Ballyraan itself?—I think it is impossible, and I believe, moreover, from the evidence that has been given here to-day, that the tenants on the Doony estate would get full benefit if the school were removed to Abbeyfeix. It is not too far for them to send their children. Two families that I know sent their children from Abbeyfeix here about three years ago.

10075. Mr. ABBINSON.—Your lordship mentioned Darrow as a locality likely to benefit by the establishment of a school in Abbeyfeix—are you aware that Darrow has the right to send pupils free to the foundation of Peacock School at Kilkenny?—I did not know that.

10076. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—That is by competition?

10077. Mr. ABBINSON.—Yes, from the local school at home.

10078. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—Any school in the country can compete also. The competition is not limited to any one school, but in practice it has been found that only certain schools have the knack of educating their boys so as to succeed.

Rev. Edmund L. Yves, M.A., examined.

10079. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—You are the Rector of Maryborough?—Yes.

10080. And you have got a memorial from the inhabitants of Maryborough?—I have.

Kindly read it!

(Reading).—"To the Educational Endowment Commissioners.—Gentlemen, in endeavouring to set before you the claims of Maryborough, as affording the most suitable site for what is now known as the Ballyraan Endowed School, we desire respectfully to draw your attention to the following facts.—The town is near the present school, and the distance from which the endowment is obtained. Maryborough is, with one exception, the most populous town in the Queen's County, and of late years has much improved. While, as the county town, in addition to the general inhabitants to be found in all large towns, not easily described, except by naming individuals, we have a large number of gentlemen, who, from their official position, or their profession, are obliged to reside in the neighbourhood, and to whom the establishment of such a school would be a matter of the very greatest importance. Such are,—the Officers of the Permanent Staff, Fourth Battalion Leinster Regiment, the County and District Inspectors, R.I.C., the Governor, H. M. Convict Prison, the Medical Physician, District Lunatic Asylum, the Medical Officers and Secretary of Queen's County Infirmary, the Officers of the Bank of Ireland, and a number of gentlemen connected with the Courts of Petty Sessions, Quarter Sessions, and Assizes, all of which are held in this town. Maryborough is, moreover, one of the most important stations on the Great Southern and Western Railway, and is a junction crossed at right angles by the Waterford and Central Ireland Railway, which now runs to Mountmellick, thus bringing it into direct communication with all the important adjoining towns. While thus desiring to bring under your notice the special advantages of Mary-borough as a position for the establishment of a good school, we by no means wish to lay claim to the endowment for the exclusive benefit of the residents in the immediate neighbourhood; on the contrary we urge this position amongst other grounds, on this, that Maryborough affords a site which will enable the inhabitants of a larger area to avail themselves of the benefits offered by the school, than any other position in the vicinity of the present school; and, in furtherance of this object we would suggest that a certain number of scholarships, offering free or partially free education be established, to be competed for at examinations, open to all boys resident in the Queen's County, and to obviate all danger of an undue preponderance of local influence in the management of the school, we suggest that the Governing Body be chosen by the Diocesan Council of Leighlin."

Then follow the signatures of twenty-six of some of the most respectable inhabitants of Maryborough—gentlemen, professional men and men of business.

10081. What school have you in Maryborough at present?—Only one, that I am connected with, a National school under my management.

10082. What number of children are attending it?—We have an average attendance of a little over forty, and between sixty and seventy on the roll.

10083. Is it a mixed school of boys and girls?—Yes, under a schoolmistress.

10084. Of what class is she?—Second Class.

10085. How many of her pupils are in the Fifth or Sixth Class?—We have not very many in the Sixth Class. There are two other schools taught by Protestants in the town of Maryborough. I believe that the best education is given in the National school, where the teacher is of the highest qualifica-them, but the other schools are of a higher character perhaps, their fees are higher, and a great number send their children there who object to the National school.

 L. Ross, M.A.

10082. Are these purely private schools?—Yes, one of them, in connection with the Methodist body has a small endowment from that body, but it is a private school.

10087. What is the other?—It is kept by two very respectable young ladies.

10083. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do they go to your church?—Well, they sing in the choir and go to the Methodist Chapel also—they are not exactly Church people.

10089. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—How large are these schools?—Both the others would be about equal to mine.

10090. Where do boys who want to prepare for professions get their education now?—In one or other of these schools, we have no intermediate school, and in my opinion, the best available for Protestants in Maryborough, is my National school.

10091. Lord Justice NASH.—What is the distance from Maryborough to Abbeyleix?—Seven miles, I think.

10092. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—That is by rail, I suppose?—The distance by road and rail is very much the same, I think, but, I only approximate when I say seven miles.

10093. Is there any chance of children going to school—back and forward by rail?—If established in Maryborough there would be a chance of children coming from Abbeyleix and Mountmellick, I think, to us.

10094. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you propose to utilize any part of the endowment in connection with your National school, as Father FENIAN urged should be done in the case of his schools?—I am opposed to that, because this endowment, as I take it, was intended for an intermediate school, and it would be wrong to apply it to a primary school like a National school.

10095. You would like to see this endowment retained for an intermediate school?—Certainly, for that purpose only.

10096. Have you any objection to that school being placed under a mixed governing body?—No, none.

10097. Then what is the meaning of the suggestion that the governing body should be chosen by the diocesan council of Leighlin?—Well, up to this the governing body has been Protestant, and on the assumption that the same state of things was to continue that is the arrangement we would suggest, and what I would like; but you will have I am objection to the school being placed under a mixed governing body, to which I reply that I have not, provided always that the interests of the Protestants were secured.

10098. Would you like to see the Methodists having a representation on the governing body?—Well, I would rather say—Up to this it has been a Church school, or at all events under a Church master, and Church patrons.

10099. Is there a large Methodist body in Maryborough?—Not numerous, but they are very active.

10100. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—They have built a very handsome new church at the entrance to the town from the railway station?—Yes. That shows that their influence is considerable, but they are not numerous.

10101. Is there any other Protestant church, except your own and that, in Maryborough?—No other.

10102. No Presbyterian church?—No, not since the last 7 or 8 years. There was not a sufficient congregation.

10103. Where is the nearest Presbyterian church?—At Mountmellick.

10104. Professor DOUGHERTY.—There is a Presbyterian church at Ballacolla also?—Yes, there is a Presbyterian congregation there, but that is near Abbeyleix. As to having this attached to a National school, I can answer, with great confidence, after an experience of thirteen years in Maryborough, that boys in any position of life that would render it desirable they should have a higher education, would not go to a National school.

10105. Lord Justice FERGUSON.—They experienced some difficulty at the Holywood schools near Belfast, but they have got over it. There they have a lower school in connection with the National school, and they promote largely by competition from the National school in the upper school, and now they have got all classes together. When we inquired how they got rid of their difficulty, we were informed that it was by the appointment of a thoroughly efficient master—don't you think the same might be done in Maryborough?—I don't know; but I would have thought maintained as an intermediate school, and, as it has always been, under Church control.

10106. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—What is the Church control under which it always was?—It has always been in the hands of members of the Church.

10107. It has been under very little control, apparently, at the hands of anybody?—The head master was always a Protestant.

Mr. Ligon.—I must say, though, that I had more Roman Catholics attending the school than Protestants.

The Witness.—And I would have no objection that Roman Catholics should still be received and treated by a conscience clause such as is used in the case of National schools.

10108. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—If there was an intermediate school established in Abbeyleix, the boys referred to in the memorial you read would more easily go to the school there than to the schools they are attending at present?—Certainly.

10109. Therefore their position would be improved?—Some of them would avail of it and go there, no doubt, but I doubt if all or even the larger number would. Our population in Maryborough is close on 3,000, and we have a large number of the class to whom such a school would be desirable, because of its being the county town.

10110. Lord Justice NASH.—Do you know the Protestant population of Maryborough?—I cannot tell you; it would only be an approximation. But I have a congregation in the morning, averaging 350 or 250.

10111. What is the nearest parish church to you—at this side there is none between you and Abbeyleix?—None. The parishes are very large, and I have two churches in my parish—a smaller one at the Rock of Dunamane.

10112. Captain ALMOND.—Portlinton was once a large centre of education, was it not?—It was, at one time.

10113. And is it now?—I believe not.

10114. How many large intermediate schools were there flourishing in Portlinton formerly?—Only two in my knowledge—Dr. Wall's school, and a small school giving a good class of education kept by Mr. Dunne.

10115. And Mr. Arthur's?—Yes.

10116. How far is Maryborough from Portlinton by train?—Ten miles, I believe.

10117. How many minutes by train?—I think between fifteen and twenty minutes.

10118. And the fare is low much?—I think, second class 3s. 6d.

10119. Then why if there is such a necessity for a superior school in Maryborough, didn't they go there?—My own idea is that if a boy has to go ten miles by train to school and ten miles back every day, it would be cheaper and better to send him to a boarding school. Remember too that the trains don't always suit the school hours.

Very Rev. A. Phelan.—And the station at Portarlington is fully a mile from the school. The railway fares, the walking, and everything would make it impossible.

Mr. Ashburn.—And might I ask Mr. Eves whether he has any idea of the expense of sending boys to Portarlington?

The Witness.—I know that they were not cheap. I would say £50 or £60 a year.

July 19, 1888

Rev. Edward
L. Eves, M.A.

Dr. David Jacob, J.R., examined.

10131. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Have you any information to give us as regards the educational wants of the neighbourhood of Maryborough?—I have conferred with some of my neighbours on this subject, and this morning—depending upon my own memory, and confined to Protestant sources, leaving it to others to supply similar figures for the Roman Catholic and other denominations, I jotted down roughly up to the number of thirty-nine boys who are either elsewhere being educated or who are on the spot without that education which their parents would desire.

10132. Do you include both boys and girls?—Boys only. And since I come into this room my erudite lie was handed to a gentleman who supplemented it by seventeen others. I took my list from those who might be classed as in a higher social position in Maryborough—I mean from the professional, official, and commercial classes, and I did not enter into the better farming class. But the total of that is thirty-nine now plus seventeen.

10133. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—And where are they getting their education at present?—Many at distant places—in England and Ireland, north and south—and a few from visiting teachers at Maryborough.

10134. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Who are the visiting teachers in Maryborough at present?—I could hardly answer that with any accuracy. A lady comes teaching music, and there have been visiting masters from time to time, but I can't say who they are at present. I believe that at present there are one or two attending classes under Mr. Campbell, others are attending the two young ladies who were mentioned as keeping one of the smaller primary schools.

10135. Professor Donohue.—Is Mr. Campbell a qualified classical teacher?—I cannot answer that; he is very capable, I know, but I cannot speak as to his qualifications.

10136. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—What proportion of the thirty-six boys are getting their education away from Maryborough—in England and other parts of Ireland?—Quite the half.

10137. Is England or Ireland?—Both. My sons have all been educated; I confined myself as far as possible to Ireland, but have also sent them to England.

10138. Professor Donohue.—Do you think that parents who now send their boys to schools in England would avail themselves of an Intermediate School in Maryborough, if one were established there?—I freely believe that the large majority of that thirty-nine would avail themselves of a local Intermediate School—certainly I do.

10139. Then you don't anticipate any social difficulties?—No. I know parties in my neighbourhood whose means are straitened now to provide education for their children.

10140. And, in face of this great necessity, has there never been any attempt made to establish an Intermediate School in Maryborough?—There was a most prosperous and thriving school there until the death of its master, the late Mr. Martin, but I am not aware of any attempt, after his death, to continue or replace that school.

10141. Why was there no effort made to continue it if it was a success?—I am not able to answer that. But I am aware that a very successful school was conducted at Portarlington later by a gentleman who left on a call to England, with good prospects, which, I regret, have not been fulfilled; I refer to the Rev. Dr. Wall.

10131. When his school was established at Portarlington had you any considerable number of boys going from Maryborough there?—It was more of a boarding school, but he had pupils from Maryborough—my sons and others.

10132. Have day boys gone to the Portarlington school in any considerable numbers from Maryborough?—I believe it has been done, but not in any considerable numbers. The school at Portarlington is over an Irish mile from the railway station, and that, together with the expense of railway fares, made the impost too heavy.

10133. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—After this successful schoolmaster that you spoke of died was there no effort made by the Protestants of the locality to get a master who would carry on the school?—I am not aware of any.

10134. Then it would seem that your condition at Maryborough is, that having had a successful school you let it die out?—Yes, but the vacancy was caused by the death of the master, Mr. Martin.

10135. And death might occur again. The point is that when you had a good school in Maryborough you made no effort to keep it up?—True, death might occur again.

Mr. M. S. Conson, J.R.—That is forty years ago, and Maryborough has materially improved since, and the population has increased. A great number of our public buildings have been erected in the interval, and there are people there now who would maintain a high class school if established. Maryborough is at the present moment one of the most flourishing provincial towns in Ireland.

10136. Professor Donohue (to the Witness).—Haven't the people of Maryborough ever thought of putting their hands into their own pockets for the purpose of providing proper educational facilities for their children in the town of Maryborough?—That would be a very serious thing for me to answer; but it would seem to me that a contribution to establish a school added to what they would have to pay for the actual education, would pay for the support of their children at one or other of the boarding schools already in existence. I might add that Maryborough is connected with two lines of railway and is therefore a more central place, besides being the county town, for utilising a public or quasi public Educational Endowment, than Abbeyfeick. Pupils might come conveniently from Abbeyfeick, from Mountlith, and from Stradbally. They would also come, I have reason to believe, from Mountlith, just as boys go from Kingstown and Monkstown into Dublin. Then, as to the source of the fund that you are dealing with, it is to be remembered that the property is as near to Maryborough as to Bellinacorney, and that a school in Maryborough would provide for the entire district including Bellinacorney, while a school at Abbeyfeick would not do so. Reference has been made very pointedly to the Dooney Estate, but there is nothing in the Endowment to the effect that Dooney is to be specially provided for.

10137. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The special relation of the endowment to Dooney is that the founder himself fixed the school at Bellinacorney, which is near Dooney, then his property.

Witness.—My argument would have the opposite tendency—that he ought to have placed the school nearer the property which gave the money for its support. As to the population of Maryborough

Dr David
Jacob, J.R.

July 26, 1885.
Dr. David
Jacob, J.P.

I am inclined to think, that it will be found at the next census to have the largest in the county; Mountmellick is diminishing and Maryborough is rapidly increasing.

Captain Blund.—Does the population include the lunatic asylum inmates?—The best answer I can give to that is, that the resident medical superintendent of the lunatic asylum has a very large family, and will no doubt contribute his share of the pupils to the school. It has been mooted in conversation amongst those with whom I am sitting, that it might be fair and proper to provide some equivalent for Ballyroan, if it should suffer any loss in connection with this matter, in the shape of exhibitions or cheaper education—or that otherwise some return should be offered to the Ballyroan people.

10138. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If we were to have a franchise for subscribers to the funds and to enable the governing body to allocate the money amongst various schools, would there be any prospect of your qualifying in Maryborough by providing some supplemental funds?—I don't think that Maryborough will be behindhand in liberality, but I fail to see why this endowment should require to be supplemented by other funds. If you refer to fees, I am quite certain that the Maryborough people are quite prepared to pay as liberally as they are doing now, and it would be a great advantage and convenience to them if they had a school of the kind there. I think that any local contribution should be in the form of fees. I am not prepared to say that it would be a success if someone went round before the school was started and said "How much will you give in addition to the fees to be charged for the education of any children you may send." It is to be remembered that the Maryborough population, including many officials, who, being "lords of passage," could not be expected to contribute to a foundation fund.

10139. Rev. Dr. Moxter.—Would they be ready to build a school if you got the endowment?—There is a gentleman who would give a suitable site with only a nominal head rent. As to the building, that represents a good deal of money.

10140. Two thousand pounds, say I—I don't think that half that amount would be found in the neighbourhood of Maryborough for building a school.

10141. Then in that respect you don't stand in as favourable a position as Abbeyfeix?—The site I speak of contains twelve acres of land, subject to a merely nominal head rent, which, I think, is a very excellent set off against the 2500 offered by Lord De Vesci on behalf of Abbeyfeix. Therefore, I claim, that as far as that is concerned we are on equal terms, and I think we have a right to fall back upon the recommendation of the former Commission which, as I understood them, were in favour of Maryborough.

Mr. Atkinson.—Might I ask you, Dr. Jacob, whether the list you made out—the thirty-one—is exclusively of Protestants?—I stated distinctly that it was so, leaving it to others to give the number of Catholics. I jotted down names just as they seemed to me—all of Protestants, and I think it is a very imperfect list still.

If the school were a mixed school, from your knowledge of the district about Maryborough, and the well-to-do position of the Roman Catholic population there, would not that list be largely augmented?—I believe that it would be too much to say trivial, considering the classes that would avail of the school, but it would be doubled at least. That is for a higher school.

And that would give an average on the roll of about how many?—Of about 150.

10142. Professor Doherty.—Do you think it likely that the Roman Catholics of Maryborough would send their children to a school, the head master of which would be a Protestant and which was exclusively managed by a Protestant Governing Body?—That is not my proposal, sir; I meant that the Roman Catholics should have their part, too, in the management of the school—that the board of governors should be a mixed board.

10143. Rev. Dr. Moxter.—Mr. Davidson, do you think it would be more advantageous to the inhabitants of Ballyroan and Doonny to have a school established at Abbeyfeix or at Maryborough?

Mr. William Davidson.—It would make no difference, so far as I am concerned.

Lord De Vesci.—Allow me to observe that, assuming the school to be removed from here, towards building a new school at either Abbeyfeix or Maryborough there is the value of this house, and the land adjoining, which is plus the noted Endowment, and its accumulations.

Mr. James M'Malen, P.L.C., examined.

10144. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I believe you were a pupil of this school?—Yes.

10145. And reside in the neighbourhood?—Yes, in Ballyroan.

10146. What views do you wish to put forward about making the endowment more useful?—I could not offer any suggestion.

10147. How many pupils were here in your time?—About twelve.

10148. Lord Justice NAIRN.—What were you taught?—Latin, Greek, French, arithmetic, and geography.

10149. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You were here in the time of the present master?—Yes, and one and a half years in his father's time as well.

10150. Mr. Lyon told us that before his father died the boys fell away altogether?—There were six or eight boys coming to the school at the time his father died.

10151. How did they fall away?—I could not say.

10152. You remained on all through?—Yes, six or seven years.

10153. Rev. Dr. Moxter.—Were you a day boy or a boarder?—A day boy. I lived just close to the school.

10154. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you think if the school was reopened, and more strictly looked after, pupils would come to it?—I think the same number would be in attendance in a very short time again.

10155. About a dozen or so?—Yes.

10156. Lord Justice NAIRN.—If it were to be removed, which would you prefer, Abbeyfeix, or Maryborough?—I should say Abbeyfeix, of the two.

10157. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is that because Abbeyfeix is nearer?—Yes—more acceptable to the people of this locality.

10158. Is Abbeyfeix your market town?—Yes.

10159. Mr. Maryborough.—Well, Maryborough is occasionally. I reside in the village here, and Abbeyfeix is only two-and-a-half miles off.

10160. Rev. Dr. Moxter.—And you think it would be of greater advantage to the people of Ballyroan and its neighbourhood to have the school at Abbeyfeix rather than at Maryborough?—Yes.

10161. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Living in the neighbourhood, could you give us an idea of what the land about this house is worth? It is all in fees, and as Lord De Vesci remarked it would be available for building a new school-house—would there be any chance of getting a good sum of money for it?—There might.

10162. Is there anything more you wish to tell us as to the school?—No, I don't know of anything.

Mr. George Jones (Town Clerk of Maryborough).—I am authorised by Mr. Thomas Turpin, solicitor of Maryborough, the landlord of the plot of ground that Dr. Jacob has mentioned, to say that he will give that site for a school if the endowment is removed there. I am the tenant of the ground in question under Mr. Turpin. It comprises twelve acres, and is situated at Killybegs, within the township of Maryborough.

Mr. James
M'Malen,

10163. Professor DOUGHERTY.—What is the value of your interest in the land?—I could not tell you, but I am prepared to give it up.

10164. You propose to make a present of your interest to the school?—Yes, if you bring the school there.

Dr. Jacob.—Subject, as I understand, to the head rent only?—Yes. I am the occupying tenant; Mr. Thomas Turpin is my landlord, and if you bring the school there I will give up the land, and Mr. Turpin will hand over the site subject to the nominal head rent.

10165. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What rent do you pay for it?—£32 a year, and I receive £12 for house rent out of that.

10166. But you pay £33 a year for this plot of ground, that is to be given up for a school site?—Yes—but £13 comes back to me out of that for house rent.

10167. Does the owner propose to give up all that land?—Yes—subject to the small head rent.

Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—I wish you would ask Mr. Turpin to write to me making this offer—for which we thank him—and stating the full particulars, so that we may have proper data to work upon.

10168. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Dr. Jacob, would the inhabitants of Maryborough, whom you represent, be prepared to establish a school if they were to get a portion of the endowment to be given as long as the educational work accomplished warranted its continuance?—I don't think the attempt would be a success, for this reason, that Maryborough is a centre for birds of passage—persons who come and go, and there are people there upon whom we have no permanent claim. The school, to be a success, should be established out of the endowment funds and provided there for them.

Lord De Foe.—In the interests of Abbeycix I would just add that the buildings I mentioned as available there, you will get on the most favorable terms.

10169. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—The evidence will be most carefully considered. We came to Maryborough, but we intend returning by Abbeycix, and we will inspect the buildings there which Lord De Vici said were available for a school-house. Subsequently we shall prepare a draft scheme, which will be duly published, and an opportunity afforded to the parties interested of raising any objections. The patrons possibly may have something to add, although they are not represented at this inquiry. Speaking for myself, I should like to see some possibility of representation on the governing body of the school of the people of the locality. If you could form a local body on which the people of the locality, including both Abbeycix and Maryborough, would be represented, a great step will be gained towards utilizing the endowment.

The inquiry then concluded.

His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Logan, Roman Catholic Primate of all Ireland; His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Walsh, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin; the Most Rev. Dr. Donnelly, Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher; the Right Rev. Dr. Stone, Protestant Bishop of Kildare; P. K. Joyce, Esq., Head Master of Banagher Royal School, appeared in person.

OBJECTIONS AND AMENDMENTS.

Mr. Patrick Coll, Crown Solicitor, on behalf of the Treasury, brought forward a claim for a balance of £225 18s. 11d. remaining due to the Crown, on account of a loan made by the Treasury in 1818, for the purpose of repairing the Banagher Royal School buildings. He stated that it was intended to proceed in Chancery for a Receiver. That Commissioners of Education had the opinion of Mr Sergeant Jelliffe, and the Government obtained the opinion of the Law Officers in 1883, and all concerned in thinking that the debt could be realised in Chancery. The object of the present application was, that if the object of the Treasury could be effected under the Scheme and be settled by the Commission, the Chancery proceedings and consequent interference with the endowment might be avoided.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The Draft Scheme preserves all existing charges and we have some difficulty in declaring the validity of this charge—if there is any question about it.

Mr. Coll.—There is no question.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You may prepare and send in a written statement of the circumstances of the claim, which do not fully appear in the evidence already before us, with the grounds upon which you put it forward now.

Mr. Coll.—Thank you, my lord.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have appointed this sitting under our Act, sec. 32, which enables us to hold collectively a public inquiry concerning the subject matter of any scheme which has been published and to which objections have been received. Though the full Commission sits here, I should mention that the jurisdiction to dispose of objections and amendments rests exclusively under sec. 33 with the Judicial Commissioners; and therefore the responsibility of any action that may be taken upon the draft scheme already published will rest upon my brother, Lord Justice Nash, and myself; though in the discharge of our duty we shall have the assistance on this, as on all other occasions, of our three colleagues.

We have received a large number of objections, and of proposals by way of amendment, to the draft scheme. They were necessarily all so diverse and disconnected that to save time and avoid confusion and repetition, we must lay down the order in which we propose to deal with them, and I have, therefore, been asked by my colleagues to commence to-day's proceedings by a statement of those facts that appear undisputed, and which form the necessary conditions of any settlement that may be arrived at; also to point out, in their natural order, the questions raised by the objections, and to say how we propose to take them up.

The first condition of considering this case at all is to understand what the property is with which the scheme has to deal. The evidence taken at our inquiries in the country and in Dublin, has been supplemented also by information received from the Commissioners of Education, who have advised us in every possible way. But from the objections and the mode in which they are put forward, it would seem that the parties claiming an interest in the Royal School Endowments have not a clear, adequate, or accurate understanding of the present condition of the property which forms the real subject matter for which the scheme is to be settled. The endowments of Banagher and Carrisfort are small and exceptional, and the Ulster Royal School Endowments are so much the most important, and present so much difficulty, that we will deal with the latter in the first instance. The endowments, as a whole, consist of three separate classes of property—first, landed estate in the hearts of tenants and producing rent; secondly, a considerable sum of accumulated money, purely consisting of cash balances, and partly of investments in Government Stock; and, thirdly and lastly, the buildings and lands constituting the school premises. The Commissioners' Reports to Parliament show that they have had what they consider, with the small exception during last year of the Raphoe Estate, a satisfactory collection of their rents during the last three years, and we have no reason to suppose that the receipts of those three years, 1885, 1886, and 1887, do not fairly approximate what the landed estates may be expected to yield, on the average, in the future. The monies acknowledged as "receipts" in the Commissioners' Reports for the last three years have not been really received in full, for the Commissioners have entered as "receipts" the abatements allowed to their tenants, and have even allowed five per cent. to their agent on these; in addition there are large charges—like rent charges, rates, and drainage charges, as well as the ordinary outgoings and expenses of management; the figure is a startling one, but it is true, that 24 per cent. of the amount entered in the accounts of the Commissioners as "receipts," has been disposed of as abatements, and the result is that the net average income for the last three years has been only £244 in Armagh; £274 in Cavan; £280 in Dungannon; £1,253 in Enniskillen, and £139 in Raphoe. It must, therefore, be understood that the total net income of the five Ulster Royal School Estates, on the average of the last three years has been £3,536, and no more. If they were sold at twenty years' purchase of this net income, they would produce £70,000, and if that sum was invested at three per cent., the income would be reduced from £3,536 to £2,118. The money funds consist in the first instance of the following sums of Government Stock: £1,019 16s. 2d. to the credit of Armagh, the proceeds of a portion of the estate that was sold; £5,255 18s. 5d. for Cavan; £346 8s. 2d. for Dungannon; £2,993 16s. 2d. for Enniskillen, and nothing for Raphoe. The Armagh £1,019 16s. 2d. is the only substantial item representing the sale of any portion of the estates. The other sums are accumulations of income of previous years, with some small exceptions not worth speaking about. Then we have cash balances, unfortunately not all on the right side. Inasmuch as the Commissioners, for some years back, have been spending more money on the Armagh school than they have been getting out of the Armagh Endowments, Armagh now owes £1,150 0s. 3d. in cash, and, therefore, instead of having any money available in addition to the estate, the Armagh find, if the Stock standing to its credit were applied at par to pay

* Appendix B, No. XXI., p. 307.

† Appendix B, No. LXIII., p. 516.

‡ Appendix B, Nos. XXII. to LXII., pp. 228-540.

is debt would still owe £110 4s. 1d. Cavan on the other hand has £1,031 18s. 1d. in cash, Dungannon £341 13s. 1d., Enniskillen £3,337 16s. 9d., and the Raphoe school, where the expenditure has for several years been larger than the whole income of the endowment, owes £1,997 17s. 1d., and has nothing except its estate where-with to pay it. The result of the whole is that there is a debt in Armagh of £110; a credit in Cavan of £6,338; a credit in Dungannon of £608; a credit in Enniskillen of £6,330, and a debt in Raphoe of £1,067, leaving a balance on the whole to credit, in money and stock, of £12,008. The only remaining endowments are the lands and buildings. The lands consist in Armagh of eighteen and a half acres; in Cavan of sixteen and a half acres; in Dungannon of ten and a half acres; in Enniskillen of fifty-four acres, and in Raphoe of two and a half acres, all English mosses. The valuation of all these lands is £197 14s., and the valuation of school buildings £713, making the total Government valuation of the school premises £910 18s. per annum. The outgoings I have already mentioned do not include one halfpenny spent on the buildings or lands comprised with them, and during the last three years, including a small outlay on three tenantry schools, there has been a further expenditure of £552 a year, partly for rents, taxes, and insurance, but principally for repairs necessary to keep these great buildings in tenurable order. We have seen them all, and they all set in tenurable order, but nothing more. Therefore the buildings and lands valued at £910 18s. are not for maintenance, in round numbers, £500 a year. Now what are these buildings? Armagh school contains accommodation for 84 boarders, and 140 pupils in all; Cavan for 50 boarders, and 100 pupils in all; Dungannon for 80 boarders, and 145 pupils in all; Enniskillen has accommodation for 164 boarders, and 150 pupils in all, and Raphoe for 60 boarders, and 50 pupils in all. Therefore you have buildings big enough to accommodate, besides the masters and domestic staff, 334 boarding pupils, and nearly 600 pupils in all for daily education. An important question for us to consider is—How can these buildings be best utilised? These buildings, unfortunately, are not to be looked at now without remembering that they really represent different periods of prosperity. When one was full there were empty, and the existing buildings represent the maximum point of success attained during the last fifty years by each school considered separately, but all were never at any one time in useful operation—or were they ever nearly full together. Therefore, time is no period in the history of these schools in which all these buildings have ever been utilised for educational purposes at the same time or anything like it. That is an important matter to be borne in mind when we come to see what is to be done with them now.

I have now given an outline of the property constituting these five Royal Endowments. Next let us see how the money received from the estates has been spent. £331 has gone upon the school premises. For education, the average expenditure for the three years upon the head master, assistant masters, and exhibitions, has been £576 in Armagh, £376 in Cavan, £885 in Dungannon, £340 in Enniskillen, and £300 in Raphoe. Taking into account the interest on the money as well as the receipts from the lands, the result has been that on the average of the three years, the Commissioners have spent £20 a year more than they got in Armagh; £28 less than they got in Cavan; £35 more than they got in Dungannon, £219 less than they got in Enniskillen, and in Raphoe they have had an annual deficit of £100, more than the whole income, amounting in the present debt of over £1,000. The whole amount spent on education has therefore been £2,820 a year, and that is short the whole sum with which we should have to deal by the scheme, on the assumption—which is very different from the truth—that we could walk into possession of it untrammelled by any vested interest. But this £2,820 has been chiefly paid away in teachers' salaries, and before the scheme can deal with it, our Act requires us to make provision, either by "saving" them, or by "making due compensation" for them, for the vested interests of all the individuals holding any endowment arising out of the endowments at the date of the passing of this Act.

The draft scheme proposes to continue by way of compensation the full life annuities which the head masters receive. These annuities, if taken at their present value in the Civil Service pension tables, at the age of the present head masters, if now allowed to retire on full pay, would take £14,225 to pay them. Besides, there would be a large sum for the assistant masters who are not freeholders, and the mode of ascertaining their due compensation must be settled. We have received by way of objection from the head masters, claims on the part of the head master of Raphoe to be compensated on the basis of his being in possession of a life interest worth £384 a year, and on the part of the other four head masters, claims, not for compensation, but to have their existing interests saved. We required them to give the particulars of the emoluments of which they claimed to be in possession, and in each case in the same terms they have claimed the salary, the free use of the school premises, to have all rates, taxes, insurance, and cost of maintenance paid for them, the profits of the lands connected with the schools indemnified against expense, the profits derived from pupils, the advantages accruing to the schools from the exhibitions, and the allowances for assistants. It will be our duty, assisted I hope by those interested in the future use of the endowments, to see that these claims are fairly tested and justly dealt with, but I should mention what they are. The head master select as the period on which, if they retire, they think their compensation should be calculated, the seven years ending in 1884, and here is the result—that the annual net income in which the head master of Armagh claims to have a "vested interest" is £2,518; Cavan, £2,633 7s.; Dungannon, £2,918 13s. 1d.; Enniskillen, £2,513, and Raphoe, £454 per annum. If we were obliged to make compensation upon these figures under the Civil Service tables, it would take something like £50,000, or nearly five-sevenths of the whole capital value of the estates of the Royal Schools at twenty years purchase of the net rental, to compensate the claims of the five head masters, though their average age is not far from 70 years! The question of their title will require consideration. One of them who has been in office for more than fifty years, was originally appointed at a salary of, I think, £200 a year. It is stated in the reports of previous Commissions that in consequence of complaints as to the management and condition of the school, the Commission reduced this salary first to £200, and eventually to £100 a year, at which it has remained since about 1847. A serious question on which we will hear argument, will be the mode of ascertaining the value of a vested interest, where the Commissioners have exercised the power of reducing the salary, making the insufficiency of the school the excuse for the reduction. But of all events, it is our duty to save or to make due compensation for these vested interests, and all I can say now is, that if it were necessary to award compensation upon anything like the scale upon which these claims have been based, we should at once feel it our duty to take the other alternative and to save the vested interests by our scheme, because, manifestly, the worst possible bargain that we could make in the educational interests of the localities would be to pay away the capital of the endowments by way of superannuation, instead of waiting for the existing interests to expire. Until the expiration of the vested interests we can simply postpone bringing our scheme into operation, and it would be much better to do that than, in order to bring it into immediate operation, to reduce the value of the endowments to little or nothing.

There is another observation which it is my duty to make on this matter. The form of these claims to have these vested interests saved, does not appear to us to be consistent with the memorials and reports repeated during the last twenty years, in which the head masters and the Commissioners have concurred in complaining of the want of power to grant reasonable retiring allowances as a grievance, and as a main cause of the decay of the schools.

Before turning to the proposals for the future, I would mention, as the last of the series of existing facts, the present condition of the schools as compared with their condition at previous periods. We have the report of the Duke of Leinster's Commission in 1850, and the report of the Earl of Rosse's Commission in 1880, and I have also the figures for 1884, the last of the seven years which the masters include in their selected period, and those of the present time. The report of 1850 does not distinguish between boarders and day boys, but there were then in the five schools 280 pupils. In 1870 there were 331, of whom 150 were day boys and 201 were boarders. In 1884 there were 265, 88 boarders and 118 day boys, and at the present time, there is one day boy more than in 1884—119 day boys now against 118, but there are only twenty-five boarders, all in Armagh, making in all but 134 pupils, upon whose education £5,805 per annum is expended. It is notable that the number of day boys—that is the amount of education given to boys belonging to the districts to which the endowments belong—has severely fluctuated at all, there were 130 in 1870, and 118 in 1884, and there are 119 now. All these pupils, with sixteen exceptions, pay fully equal to those charged in good schools elsewhere, and therefore the benefit derived from the Royal Endowments is that of having five schools maintained at which 109 boys pay fees, and 19 are educated free as day pupils. There are, in the same localities, a large number of schools, many of them established during the very period covered by the decadence of the Royal Schools, which we found by no means in a perishing condition. In Armagh, Monaghan, Carrig, and Letterkenny there are large buildings devoted to Roman Catholic Intermediate Education. The Protestants have private schools in Carrig and Newry, and one of the causes mentioned to account for the reduction in the number of pupils at Armagh Royal School, was the establishment of a private school there by an assistant master who took away pupils from the Royal School to his absolutely unendowed establishment. There are several endowed schools in and round about the district, a large one at Lurgan, one at Droghda, one at Dundalk, two at Leinster, one in Slaneau, one in Colmole, and one in Monaghan. That these schools are giving the same sort of education which the Royal Schools ought to give is indicated by the fact that their pupils have repeatedly obtained Entrance Exhibitions at Trinity College, and Colmole School on one occasion, in 1880, earned of the first, second, and third places at the Entrance Examination there. Strabane School was established by local subscription. The Protestant inhabitants of Monaghan re-established the school there, having got possession of the deserted premises of the old Diocesan School from the Commissioners of Education, and it commenced to flourish when it was established under a local committee who subscribed enough money to put it in habitable repair, and who have since managed it.

Now comes the question—how we can best proceed to settle these claims for the future government and management of these Royal Educational Establishments? Our draft scheme commences by recommending the Commissioners of Education. I do not intend in any way to derogate in relation to any of these matters with which we are about to deal. It is our duty to consider in a judicial spirit every objection to the proposals in the draft scheme, and I now only mean to state the views which weighed with us in the preparation of this scheme, and the conflicting views which have been presented to us from time to time. There are two main arguments in favour of constituting a central body to continue the work of the Commissioners of Education. In the first place, some central authority is required to do the work of distribution and of control, and to see that effect is given to the provisions of the scheme by each affiliated school, if I may so call it, which claims the benefit of the endowments. In the second place there is the important circumstance that the Commissioners of Education under their Acts of Parliament are entitled to have the expense of their administration defrayed by Parliamentary vote. These expenses are among the very small and few now available from public sources for Intermediate education in Ireland, and if the Commissioners of Education be not continued, we could not have their expense paid in that way. The greater number of the objections tend in the direction that the number of Commissioners proposed in the scheme is too large, and that would be very much our own impression, if the whole number were supposed likely to be all constantly working at once. But this central board is to have control over all the local boards, and there must be at least one representation of each of the local authorities upon it, and it should be considered whether these local representatives are not likely to act rather as delegates, who would come up to Dublin only whenever some important matter was to be disposed of, or when something specially affecting their own locality was to be considered, and they might not be always in attendance at ordinary or routine meetings of the general body. For reducing the number, the proposals of the electors are contradictory.

Another question to be considered is the area over which the functions of the Commissioners are to extend. If anyone will look at the memorandum which we addressed to the Chief Secretary of the Lord Lieutenant a year and a half ago, it will be seen that as soon as we had definitely ascertained that the amount of the Royal School Endowments was wholly inadequate to produce any appreciable effect upon Intermediate education over the whole of Ireland, we endeavoured to impress this fact on the Government, and, furthermore, pointed out that the grants from public sources for purposes of Intermediate education are practically nil, as compared with those for primary and university education. The only important fund applied to Intermediate education is a portion of our own Church surplus, an Irish fund, whereas the amount now given from Imperial taxation annually for elementary education is almost one million sterling. If the reconstituted Commissioners of Education should be empowered to deal with any public grants which might be made available for Intermediate education throughout Ireland, they must not be confined to local representatives from the districts to which these Ulster Royal School Endowments belong, and we, therefore, proposed to continue the nomination of members by the Lord Lieutenant, and also to provide representation of the various denominations entitled to advantage from the endowment which might be administered by the Board and representation of the Universities of Ireland, for which the Intermediate schools should be preparatory.

A great many objections desire that we should by our scheme fix the proportions in which the various religious denominations should be represented on this central body. We will hear all that may be said upon the point, but a difficulty is that until we know the area over which the Commissioners are to have jurisdiction, it would be hard to say what the proportions ought to be. If the schools which come under them ultimately to a very large extent belonged to one denomination, or were confined to Ulster, the limit might be wrong in one direction, which would be wrong in the other if the Commissioners had to deal with schools of all denominations all over Irehad. Therefore, what we have proposed is to leave it to the Executive Government to appoint this Government Commission, from time to time, with due regard to the proper representation of each of the denominations.

The next question is—what are to be their powers? Their powers, generally speaking, must be to superintend the working of the local bodies which will have charge of the schools. There is also a question as to the management of the estates, of which I shall speak afterwards. The educational powers of the Commissioners must be carefully defined, but the idea with which the scheme has been framed, is that it would be fatal to the efficiency and the satisfactory working of the schools, if they should not be as independent as it is possible to make them, and that each school should be locally managed by a body having the confidence of those concerned. As long as they carry out the provisions of the scheme, they must be self-governing schools, but at the same time there must be some central authority to compel them to carry out those provisions.

The next question is—what are the purposes of these endowments? There is other public provision for elementary education. There is no suggestion that these funds should be applied to university education. They were originally intended for grammar school or intermediate education. They are still needed for that purpose, and there has been no objection to our conclusion that they should continue to be applied in that direction. Further, we find them, from the earliest date, applied to the maintenance of a limited number of large schools educating both boarders and day scholars. Really efficient intermediate education can be best given in a large school, and the scheme has been framed with a view to prevent this sum of—say £1,500 a year—from being divided into such small portions that no appreciable benefit would accrue to any individual school. If small schools were in upon the endowment it would not suffice to induce what we believe to be desirable, namely, the permanent provision for maintaining at least some first-class schools in this country.

Then comes the very serious question—what is the geographical area within which this property should be applied? The Commissioners of Education in their scheme suggest all Ireland. They want to divide it among four schools, of which they are to appoint the masters—one in Meath and one in Leitrim—each under a Roman Catholic master; one in Donegal, under a Presbyterian master, and one in Armagh, under a master of the late Established Church. No one has yet advocated the adoption of this plan. Another proposal is to extend the area proposed by us by bringing in Antrim and Down, and there is a proposal to bring in the whole of Londonderry also. On the other hand there are proposals to leave out Monaghan, and to leave out part of Donegal, and to leave out that part of Londonderry which we had proposed to include. The proposal in the scheme we arrived at in this way. We found in the ancient charters and statutes that sometimes the dioceses of the bishops to whom authority was given, and sometimes the counties in which the schools were situated, were chosen as the areas to which the benefits of the endowments might be extended. By including Monaghan, the whole of which is in the diocese of Clogher, and the portion of Londonderry which belongs to the archdiocese of Armagh, we arrived at what we thought a fair proposal to put forward, at least as a basis for discussion, and, in adding the county Monaghan, we were, to some extent, influenced by the fact that the only considerable Roman Catholic intermediate school in the diocese of Clogher is in that county, and, if we were to exclude Monaghan, the Roman Catholics of that diocese would have been put to the alternative either of having no school capable of sharing in the endowment or of building a new school in Fermanagh for the mere purpose of complying with a geographical limitation. I may say also, to anticipate a good many objections, that the scheme appears to have been misunderstood as to the effect of including or excluding Monaghan, as the distribution of the money in no way depends upon geographical considerations.

The next point to consider is, who are entitled to share in the endowments? There is great difference of opinion among the objectors upon this point. From West Donegal we have an objection to any share whatever being given to Roman Catholics, and a claim that the fund is exclusively Protestant. From Fermanagh there is a claim that two-thirds of the money and all the buildings shall be given to the Protestants. From others we have claims for one-third of the fund for Church Protestants, one-third for all other Protestants, the remainder being left for the Roman Catholics. Again the Roman Catholics claim large shares. We have various objections to competing for the money. Some think competition good if the Protestants are allowed to compete among themselves for one share and the Roman Catholics among themselves for the other. Others think it bad altogether, while some object to a division according to numbers and not according to merit. Others object to what they call "scrabbling" for the money, though why they don't use the shorter word "wrestling" for it, I do not understand. Then we have a claim for distribution by population—by the counting of heads, in other words. We thought there was a great deal to be said against that. If these endowments are for grammar school education surely only those who want such education have any claim to be counted. If so, the literate population would be more properly the subject of the calculation than all the inhabitants. But, on the other hand, there was the argument that taking the literate population upon its present basis would be unfair, because one denomination might now have a smaller proportion of literate members than they would have had if they had got better encouragement in the way of teaching in the past, and great changes might take place in the future. On the whole, we thought we ought to look for some practical though elastic test rather than fix the division for all time now. Our proposal in the scheme, therefore, was that there should be three years—a period certainly necessary for preparing, and for endeavouring to get on their legs whatever educational institutions are to succeed in these districts—during which the funds should be equally divided between Catholics and Protestants, giving both a fair start. At the end of that time each locally where the schools have so long existed should be secured in the possession of the minimum sum which ought to be sufficient to give substantial help to keep up one good school for each denomination, and the rest of the money should be divided according to the work done throughout the whole district. That is really the principle upon which the Commissioners' Acts of Parliament were originally framed, and upon which the endowments ought to have been working up to the present. The migration of pupils from one Royal School to another has been going on for at least a century, and the prosperity of each school in turn has depended to it a larger share of these endowments, while the Acts of Parliament actually provide that any money not wanted for one school may be transferred to the other. Upon the question of division between the various religious denominations we are anxious to hear what is to be said, and we approach it without any bias. It is, however, right to say that the extreme claim that these are exclusively Protestant endowments is not consistent with the scheme of the Commissioners of Education, with the report of 1886, with the report of 1888; nor, in fact, with anything in the history of the schools so far as we can ascertain. The last appointment to a Royal School was an appointment of a Roman Catholic master, and if our Act has been passed upon the basis of the previous Parliamentary reports, it would appear to require a good deal of argument to satisfy us that we ought to rest on a principle of exclusion which, up to the present, so far as we can know, has never been pressed. It will be found in all the documents to which I have referred that those endowments originally granted by the King, have been treated as open to all denominations. If so, all persons ought to have an equal share in them, who belong to the class for which they were intended. But we are not prepared to say that that class includes the whole population. It is only those who want grammar school education for whose this particular benefit was really intended.

Next comes the very important question, how these endowments are to be managed in the future? At present they are managed entirely from Dublin. We propose that, subject to central control, they shall be entirely managed locally. At present they are under the management of a mixed body. We propose that they shall be managed, educationally speaking, by denominational bodies. To that proposal we have got only one objection. The Methodists alone object to our scheme as a departure from the principle of the National Board—of united secular and separate religious instruction. We will hear them with all due respect, and perhaps they may be able to satisfy those interested that schools such as these can be satisfactorily conducted, or can become successful on that principle. With that exception, everybody agrees that the Roman Catholic schools should be managed exclusively by Roman Catholics. The Roman Catholics say that they won't have anything else, and although many Protestants have declared their willingness to join with them, they do not seem to see their way to compelling them. But there is a question about the Protestants. Should there be but one Protestant Board, or more than one in each district? We received a great deal of local evidence on this point at Carran, Enniskillen, Raphoe, and Dungannon; and we have got more than evidence, for all denominations of Protestants in those localities before we came there had actually formed united committees to press their claims, and to set together in managing whatever endowments those claims might secure for them. In Armagh, on the other hand, there was a considerable body of testimony from the Church people not only that in Armagh they wished to keep the school for themselves, and to have a separate share of the endowments for themselves, but that they thought the same principle should prevail everywhere. We found it difficult thus to subdivide the Protestants. In the first place we find many schools established successfully where all the Protestants work together, and we have not met a single instance of what I may call a sub-denominational school being recently established in the whole of Ulster. Again, if we form more than one Protestant Local Board how many are we to have? There is one large body of Presbyterians, but there are several smaller ones, and there are the Methodists to be considered; and in every district there are many Protestants of other denominations than that which is such in most numerous. The scheme, however, contains a power which seems to have been overlooked in some of the objections, by which though in each case in the first instance a joint board representing different denominations of Protestants is formed, they may voluntarily divide, and if they wish, may fall in with those of their own denomination in other districts. But if in Carran, for example, it proved impossible for the separate denominations each to maintain a school of their own, and all wished to work together, we do not see up to the present why, if the Armagh people wish to act separately, they should be allowed to force their system upon Carran. Therefore the scheme says that they shall have a joint representation in the first instance, with power for any one board, or part of a board, or for more than one board, to administer the shares of the several denominations in the endowments separately through their own representatives if they think fit, but we do not propose to compel anyone to do so.

The next question is in reference to the management of the estates, which at present seems to be costly and inefficient. We thought that those people who can enjoy the money should have a direct interest in and control over the estates, and we propose to appoint a joint committee in each district, giving it a direct pecuniary interest in collecting the rents. Several objections are put forward to that. Some prefer independent agents, some prefer leaving it still with the Commissioners in Dublin, and some, curiously enough, want to manage the estates on denominational principles, though how one tenant is to be dealt with by two boards I do not at present see. Of course the scheme provides for the appointment of agents, to whom the actual working of the estate would probably in most cases be left, but there is a good deal of evidence from the present agents, that the interference of the Dublin Commissioners in dealing with tenants was more mischievous than useful, and we therefore thought those on the spot would better perform the duties of landlords, especially when their own incomes would depend on their efficient management.

The next question is the conditions to be fulfilled by the schools sharing these endowments. A good many objections relate to this part of our scheme, and will require careful consideration. Our idea was to prescribe such conditions as would secure and confine the benefit of these endowments only to a limited number of considerable schools doing real intermediate work. As to the tests of "real intermediate work," we feel that we have received valuable assistance from the objections. The list of considerations in the scheme is undoubtedly not complete. Any test which proves that a school has prepared a pupil for a calling requiring a liberal education, ought to establish its title to have given intermediate education, and consequently its claim to share in these endowments. Whether a young man is prepared for Maynooth, or for Wexford, or Santham, or for the Indian Civil Service, or for any other calling where he must display genuine "grammar school" instruction, his school should be recognized as having done its duty as an intermediate school, and it is our wish to make the test as general and complete as possible, at the same time taking care that it is sufficiently stringent.

There is another proposal which ought at once to be admitted, and which we are glad to see generally put forward, namely, that mixed schools for boys and girls should be recognized. Our Act requires us to extend the benefit of endowments to girls if possible, and we have seen in Belfast and elsewhere several institutions where intermediate education is given to pupils of both sexes with apparently satisfactory results. In many country towns female education is badly wanted, and can be best given in such institutions, and if so given undoubtedly it ought to be recognized.

I now come to really the most difficult of all the general questions. How are we to deal with the school buildings? We lay down the principle that these school buildings are part of the endowment. Whoever is entitled to the endowment has a right to share in the value of the buildings, whatever it may be, and we are bound to utilize them as part of the endowment. Now the claims are various. There is one claim that they shall be handed over free to the Protestant Board. Another is that they should be handed over at a fair rent to the Protestant Boards. The objection to handing them over free is that being part of the endowment they should be taken into account for the benefit of all in the same way as any other portion of the property, and if one denomination takes one of these buildings they ought to be treated exactly as if they had got Government stock or a part of the assets of equal value. A serious question for anyone desiring to take them is, whether it is prudent to take them remembering that as a whole they have several times fully utilized—that they require an enormous amount of expenditure to maintain them, and that they are quite unsuited to the local wants of the towns in which they are situated, being principally intended for boarding pupils. These are matters, however, for the parties themselves to consider, and of course it is only fair that if any denomination desires to invest in these buildings, means should be provided for ascertaining their fair value. Some objections to the scheme say that it would leave the possibility open either of their being sold at a sacrifice, or of those who wished to keep them for the sake of their historical associations being forced to pay an exorbitant price. No doubt these objections have a good deal in them, and they will receive full consideration at our hands. It would solve this problem if the parties interested in each case could make up their minds as to who wants the buildings and what would be a fair value to put upon them, and let the matter be settled in the scheme, but we can hardly do this except more or less by consent—that is, unless both parties are satisfied as to the destination of the buildings, and that the terms are fair to both on which either is to get them. We have had a communication from a public department who want to get the Dungannon buildings, and some people think the money would be more really beneficial than the buildings for local charities both there and in Enniskillen. In addition to the buildings we must deal with the lands comprised with them, and see whether they can be made available for school purposes profitably or not. On all these matters we should be very glad, indeed, to get the fullest help; and if the parties can come to such an understanding, as I think in many cases they might come to, as to which of them wants the school houses and what they think should be allowed for them, we should be most happy to carry out any such suitable arrangement. Take the case of Cavan. There the Roman Catholics have a very fine building, St. Patrick's College, at Cavan, which is not fully occupied; and there is the Queen Royal School, nearly empty, close by. Those who have already got St. Patrick's College on their hands might not care to have the Queen Royal School besides; and the Protestants would probably give fair value for it rather than build or buy other premises. Again, in Enniskillen, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher has got St. Macartney's, while, on the other hand, it would be fair the Protestants to consider, if they get Portlaoine, whether they could keep it up, or whether their share of the amount of money that it would fetch, if sold, would not provide them with a building more suitable to their needs and wants. Can we not ascertain what both parties think would be the present market value if put up for sale, and let the refusal of the buildings at that value be given in each case, for we should much prefer keeping them for schools than turning them to other uses. Of course treating these as part of the endowment, the local body in each case should be entitled to credit for half the price as belonging to them, and shall, subject to a proviso to which it is not necessary now to refer in detail, with reference to the fact, that in some of these buildings at least, there are portions which were built with the private money of dignitaries of the church, and at the time had the exclusive enjoyment of them. In such cases it would be unfair to divert the property so created from the denomination to which the donor belonged, and on the faith of the school continuing to belong to which he spent his money. We consider, not that the money is now a charge on the building, but that where any portion of a building can be now shown to have been built by private benevolence, the portion which it now bears to the existing value of the whole of the buildings should be regarded as a private and denominational endowment, and taken into account as such in the value of the existing buildings. A claim has been put into the scheme to that effect, and nobody has objected to it.

The last matter with which I have to deal is a serious one enough—the case of the vested interests. I can only say that we will in each case be glad to hear any evidence that may be offered in support of the claims put forward, we must require each claimant to tell us really what his claims are, we will treat him as if this was the hearing of an arbitration, and we will try to find out whether each of the head masters wants to retire, and if so, how much he would consider a fair retiring allowance, but he must show us what the value of his place is. The Act of Parliament requires us to save his interest or to make due compensation. We have power to give what we think due compensation, and if the claimant does not think the compensation adequate, he can bring the matter before the Privy Council, but he must remember that we cannot be forced to a compulsory purchase on terms which would be unfair or unjust, or more injurious to the future efficiency of the endowment than saving the existing interests would be. I should mention that the vested interest of the head master in the case of the Armagh School has caused much difficulty; it is exceptional, and the scheme is much objected to with regard to it. Armagh is at present an efficient school, and Dr. Moore Morgan has been nearly twenty years less time in office than the youngest, and more than thirty years less than the oldest of the other masters. His vested interest is subject to the obligation of continuing to perform his duties with the efficiency with which he is now, and may for a long time be able to do so. But the amount that would, in my fair view of his case, be equivalent to his vested interest would be so large that we found it really impossible for us to pay him off or bring the scheme into immediate effect in Armagh, as we propose elsewhere. I mentioned this by way of explanation of a point which does not seem to be understood by some of the objectors. It was the large value of the vested interest—which we could not get rid of except by paying due compensation—which was existing in Armagh which forced us to propose an arrangement for continuing Dr. Moore Morgan's services on exceptional terms. Finding the vested interest there we believed that we were making the best bargain we could for the Armagh endowment, and not merely for the Protestant Local Board. If Dr. Moore Morgan is to continue to receive his emoluments, there is no object in relieving him from duty; we therefore propose that until Armagh school falls into the provisions of the scheme it shall continue as it is, and we have endeavored in the meantime to make a temporary provision for the Roman Catholics of Armagh out of the other funds.

I have occupied a long time in going through the various points to be dealt with, and it now remains only to state what we think the natural and logical order of dealing with them. The first matter is to hear what is to be said as to the geographical area to which these endowments should belong; next to consider who is entitled to the benefit of them and in what proportion within that area; and thirdly, to what class of education and to what class of school should their benefits be applied. On the area question, we will consider about Monaghan, Lonsdownerry, Ulster, and all Ireland, if anyone puts forward that proposition. When we have settled that, then we will settle the questions—are the Roman Catholics to receive anything, and if anything, how much? Upon what basis are the various denominations entitled to have their shares divided? Are the Protestants to act together, or to have separate shares and sub-denominational boards? Then what is to be the class of education? How are the schools to be classified; and how are their work and claims to be tested? When we have disposed of those points, then we must discuss how the schools and the endowments are to be managed. If locally and denominationally, how are the governing bodies to be framed? With this question, the reconstitution of the supreme body, the

Aug. 5, 1885.

Commissioners of Education, will be connected, and also the smaller matter of the management of the estates. Then we will discuss the subject of the buildings; and, lastly, we will go into the matter of the vested interests.

The smaller matters of the Banagher endowment, which is in a very unsatisfactory state, and the Carysfort endowment, may be treated separately. We have an important proposal from Archbishop Walsh to widen the area of the Carysfort endowment, and we shall be glad if he can help us to satisfy the people in the Wicklow mountains, who now have the property, that it should be brought down to the plain. These matters we can take up at any time convenient to those concerned.

That will complete the whole inquiry; and now that we are going to begin it, I must say a word or two for myself, and my brother, Lord Justice Naish, which is ought not to be necessary to say at all. It is that our duties are purely judicial. We have to consider the sentiment of this Draft Scheme just as we should consider any case in the Court of Appeal, having regard to the provisions of our Act of Parliament, and to the settled law of the country with regard to the administration of charitable endowments. What our own individual opinions or wishes may be can have nothing to say to our decision, and we should be violating our duty if we allowed such considerations for a moment to weigh with us. We have to acknowledge having been treated to a good deal of strong language, and on having received a good many communications disclaiming charges stated to have been made against us, I wish our advocates and critics had answered one another instead of sending their observations to us. I didn't read either side; and I shall do my best to dispose of these matters on just and legal principles, and I am quite sure that my colleague will do the same. If anyone thinks we fail in our duty he can go to the Privy Council, which can send the Scheme back to us, if not satisfied with our decision. If anyone is still unsatisfied, he can appeal to either House of Parliament to pass a resolution to set us and the Privy Council right. Therefore there is a thorough check upon the Commission, but our experience up to the present has, I am glad to say, been very encouraging, and, following the course which the law prescribes for us, we are not without hope that these Royal Endowments, now almost absolutely useless, though not of large value, may be so used as to give substantial assistance in promoting healthy and independent action on the part of those to whom they belong, and that they may become beneficial, not as the sole support of any school, but as substantial aids to the efforts of energetic people to establish and maintain really useful schools such as their different localities require. Now we will take up the question of area, and the objections dealing with that question.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I appear for a committee of all the different sects of Protestants in the Fermanagh district, who by their co-operation and the moderation of their views, I should hope would found a claim for a favorable hearing. It appears to me and to others interested, that we are placed in a position of difficulty by the fact that the compensation is not determined beforehand. Supposing the minimum grant to the Protestant Board of Fermanagh to be £200 a year exclusive of the compensation of their present master, even with a minimum grant of £200 a year, we might feel ourselves in a position either to bid for or to take at a rent Fermanagh school, whereas if the minimum grant was only £100, or £50 a year to which it might be reduced if anything like the demands put forward in respect of vested interests were acceded to, it would be folly to have anything to do with such an extensive fabric as Fermanagh. Therefore I submit that the better way would be to ascertain if possible the amount of compensation which would enable us to determine in each instance the amount of the endowment disposable, and to determine what course we could best take under the circumstances.

10170. Lord Justice Naish.—That would entail a considerable postponement. We must hear the claims in relation to these vested interests, and then consider them.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—The other course presents no considerable difficulty. There are several facts which have been mentioned which were unknown to most of us. They were extracted from reports of the Educational Commissioners which were not open to public inspection.

10171. Lord Justice Naish.—It would not be possible for us, with the materials now before us, to put a figure into this scheme in regard to the vested interests. We would have to go through every one of the cases and hear evidence in relation to each. But how would the granting of compensation affect the question of the area, within which the endowment should be applied, or the question of local boards?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I do not say that it will be upon the question of the fabric it will have a new important effect.

Mr. R. P. Corbett, Q.C.—I appear for the Bishop of Clogher, and therefore I represent the Roman Catholics of the Fermanagh district, and my view are the same as those of Mr. Atkinson. It appears to me that we won't know what we are doing until we know the amount of the endowment at our disposal.

10172. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I have told you the amount of the endowment.

Mr. Corbett, Q.C.—Yes, but until we know the amount of compensation we do not know what will remain.

10173. Lord Justice Naish.—How does that affect the question of area, or what ought to be done with the buildings?

Mr. Corbett, Q.C.—It might very much shorten the work of the Commission, because if we definitely knew the amount of money available for the district, the ground might be cleared of a good deal of the matter in controversy.

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—That would be adjourning the general question until the next sitting, or sometime afterwards.

10174. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Furthermore, the compensation to be given in every case might be altered by the Privy Council, and Mr. Corbett and Mr. Atkinson might be dealing with the scheme on a basis which would ultimately be changed. We consider carefully the order in which we would take these different questions, and we think the order I have mentioned presents least difficulty.

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—I represent, on this branch, the Diocesan Councils of Armagh, Clogher and Derry and Raphoe, and I have some observations to offer on the question of area, but I have also general observations on all the other parts of this scheme, and I think it would be more convenient if you would allow me to open all these objections together, as they are very much in the same order as mentioned by Lord Justice FitzGibbon.

10175. Lord Justice Naish.—Then take the question of area first.

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—On the question of area we submit that no sufficient reason has been shown why the endowments should not be confined to the particular counties in which the schools are situate, nor for including the portions of Managh and Derry, which have been introduced. Section 13 of the Act provides "that the privileges and educational advantages of the inhabitants of a particular area shall be regarded." The spirit of the founder's intentions is not less to be regarded because the founder happens to be a Royal founder. The Royal Charters and Grants are in every case connected with the counties.

10176. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—What is your authority for the statement that these Royal foundations are in every case connected with counties?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I took the statement from your lordship. You stated that in certain cases that appeared to be so. I have not materials for referring you to the cases in which they were connected with counties specifically.

10177. Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—You have the same materials that I had, and if you ask us to give weight to the intentions of the founders, you ought to give us evidence of that intention.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—At any rate, we have not any evidence that it extended to Derry.

Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—The portion of Derry in question belongs to the diocese of Armagh.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I represent the Diocesan Council of Derry, and they don't want it, they don't ask you to introduce any part of the County Derry at all. They are content that the endowment should remain with us; and the case lies upon the party seeking to extend the area to show that there are good grounds for the extension.

10178. The Rev. Dr. McLELLAN.—What do you mean by "extending the area"? Extending it beyond what?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Beyond the counties in which these schools are situated.

10179. Why do you say that it should be restricted to the county? What is your ground for saying that in the founder's intention it was not connected with the diocese, but was connected only with the county?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I say that each school is established for a particular county.

10180. Why county and not diocese?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Why any part of Ireland?

10181. Why the county?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Because it is a territorial division.

10182. The diocese is also a territorial division.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—It was a territorial division, but it is no longer a territorial division.

10183. It is so as much as it ever was. But it is the founder's intention that you say we ought to go by, and how do you show that the founder's intention was not to extend it beyond the county?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—The estates are in a particular county, and there is no more reason for extending it beyond that to all the parishes in a particular diocese than there would be for extending it to every town in the county.

10184. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—If it was given to the Archbishop of Armagh to administer, would that be evidence that the area was the diocese?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—There would be some reason in that case.

But that is what occurred, for in the letter of James I. to the Lord Deputy in 1612, and the statute of 14 and 15 Charles II., the diocese are clearly stated as the areas intended to be benefited.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—In reference to Monaghan, the fact that there is a successful school in Monaghan does not seem a sufficient reason.

Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—The reason is that Monaghan is all in the diocese of Clogher.

Mr. Gorton, q.c.—It lies upon Mr. Bewley to show that the adoption of the diocese as the area is contrary to the spirit of the founder's intention. The evidence is quite the other way from the earliest times to the present. I refer to the letter of January 30, 1612, from James I. to the Lord Deputy. James I., the earliest monarch who endowed these schools, directs the lands assigned for the "endowment of several free schools, and maintenance of schoolmasters, for the increase of learning and good manners," to be conveyed to the archbishops and bishops within whose several dioceses such lands had been allotted, "as men to whose function and quality it is most proper to be careful, and always sacred to the furtherance and improvement of such good works." Then he directs that the archbishops and bishops in whose dioceses these schools were should have the nomination of the masters, and I find claims still put forward by the Archbishop of Armagh to the appointment of the masters of Armagh and Dungannon. Again section 2 of the Act 14th and 15th Charles II. remains in force though the vest is repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act of 1878, and that provides for the shifting about of these schools within the dioceses with the consent of the bishop. Mr. Bewley's contention pushed to its logical extremity would confine the area to the parish in which the school was as well as the county. The inclusion of Monaghan is the most convenient course, and, on behalf of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher I entirely support that portion of the scheme.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I object to the inclusion of the county Monaghan in the Fermanagh district. I have not had the advantage of having seen this letter of James I. nor the statute of Charles II., but so far as the charter is recited in the draft scheme it appears plain that "it was directed by His Majesty that there should be one free school at least appointed in each of the counties of Armagh, Tyrone, Donegal, Fermanagh, and Cavan." I say that it concludes that these different lands were dedicated for the maintenance of these schools in these particular counties, each school having allocated to it certain land within that county. "By Letters Patent, dated April 29, 1616, it was directed that the lands assigned in the Plantation of Ulster for the maintenance of the grammar schools in that province should be conveyed by grant from the Crown to the Archbishop of Armagh, that by him they might be distributed and allocated in form of law to the several schools as he should think fit, and the distribution of the said lands was committed to the said Archbishop as the person best able to select the most apt places for the establishment of such grammar schools." He selected the places and established the schools, but it does not appear that the archbishop had ecclesiastical jurisdiction over them, or that he was enabled, from time to time, to alter the area, on the contrary it appears that the allocation of the land was made once and for all, and not on the diocesan plan at all. The bishop and archbishop dealt only with the land, and it would be in the area of the archdiocese or of the county. The diocese does not appear to be introduced as the area at all. I am not aware whether in the several charters any jurisdiction is given to the respective bishops of the different dioceses.

10185. Dr. TRAILL.—Is not the archdiocese the province in these letters patent?—The Archbishop of Armagh has ecclesiastical jurisdiction, not merely in the diocese but the whole province.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—The schools were originally given for the entire of the province, and the Archbishop was expressly selected as the ecclesiastical head of the province.

Lord Justice FRYGUESON.—The "province" is Ulster, not the archiepiscopal province of Armagh. The letter of James I. January 30, 1612, speaks of "lands within several counties for the endowment of free schools, of the increase of learning and good manners in those parts where the same are so much wanting, and of the King's having made choice of the archbishops and bishops within whose several dioceses those lands were allotted." And he gives powers "unto the several bishops for the time being severally over so much of the said lands as are contained within the bounds and limits of their several dioceses and jurisdictions, thereby enabling the said several bishops and their successors to let the said lands within their several dioceses for ever."

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That is the letter of 1612, but the charter is the document that you have to construe and that bears date April 29, 1616. When the matter came to be carried out in the patent determining the rights, there is an entire departure from the letter of the monarch to his Lord Deputy, and there is nothing in it which shows that the diocese was the basis either of jurisdiction or of endowment.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In 1818 the Kingspeaks of "the Lord Archbishop of Armagh, to whose diocese we thought fit to commit the distribution of the said lands, as well in regard of his approved fidelity, wherof we have had long experience, as also in respect that the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of that province belonged principally to his charge, and therefore best able to inform himself of the most apt places wherein it is mete to have grammar schools established."

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—The only two divisions referred to are "provinces" and "archdioceses," and they are equivalent terms, inasmuch as he has jurisdiction over the province.

10186. Dr. TRAILL.—They are not equivalent terms. The province of Armagh includes every diocese north of a certain line.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Neither as the limit of jurisdiction nor as the limit of endowment are the dioceses mentioned at all, as far as I can see.

Mr. Corbett, q.c.—That is not so at all, the patent—and it coincides with what actually did occur—contained the direction to establish a school at Lisgole, &c., or at any other places that the Archbishop thought fit. Some of the schools were afterwards transferred.

10187. Dr. TRAILL.—Is it not a fact that the transfers were to other portions of the same county?

Mr. Corbett, q.c.—No, of the same diocese.

Dr. TRAILL.—It was always within the same county.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—In page 338, of the report of 1886, the appointment of Dr. Bullingbrooke to the mastership of the Free school at Dungannon, by letter of King James I., of May 13, 1614, is in these words:—"With the assent of . . . the Lord Deputy . . . we have resolved to erect one perpetual free school for the county of Tyrone, to be held in Dungannon, and that there shall be a schoolmaster there, at the nomination of the Lord Archbishop of Armagh for the time being, and appointed by us, our heirs and successors." And it provides that the schoolmaster shall have certain lands by way of endowment. But it establishes one perpetual free school for the county of Tyrone.

10188. Rev. Dr. MULLOV.—When do you regard as the founder of this endowment?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—The Crown is the founder of course.

10189. Then it would be necessary for you to show as that the intention of the Crown was so clear to restrict the endowment to each individual county that it is not competent for this Commission to apply it otherwise.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I should show in such a case if before the Court of Chancery on the settling of a scheme, the instrument of foundation, the charter or deed, and show the terms imposed by the founder, and how he directed "a school for the county of Tyrone." The area for that school was the area of the county, and not the area of the diocese.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I say that the diocese is a purely arbitrary division by this commission, and as far as I have learned from any document that I have been referred to it is selected for the first time as the area of the endowment. The archbishop was merely selected as being the ecclesiastical head of the province in which these schools were to be situated, but the diocese is not either the area of jurisdiction or of endowment. What would otherwise be the meaning of allotting lands in each particular county for the school erected there?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—In another passage John Bullingbrooke is appointed to teach and instruct the youth of the county of Tyrone both in good literature, and the principles of true religion.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—If it was intended that the diocese should be the unit of endowment, embracing, it may be five or six different counties, how is it that the counties or portions of counties which go to form the diocese lying outside the boundaries of the particular county in which the school is erected is not contribute at all towards the endowment. Monaghan did not at any time contribute to the endowment of Eniskillen school. The whole structure of the foundation is based upon this, that each county shall contribute to the endowment of the school erected within its boundaries. Of course, incidentally, the schools might confer benefits upon other localities; but the primary object of each particular school was to secure the benefit of education for the inhabitants of a particular county, making that particular county contribute to the institution established there. Up to this time there was no inter-communication in matters of education between Eniskillen and Monaghan. There is a great degree of union in between them, and except for the purpose of enabling the university in the town of Monaghan to participate in the endowment of the county of Fermanagh, it is difficult to say why there should be any connection between the institutions originally founded in Fermanagh, and this one founded by the energy and contributions of the Roman Catholic population of Monaghan. My clients, the Protestants of all denominations in the county of Fermanagh, feel that this additional area was in no way in the original grant, and if linked with them it will extend a great deal from the fund intended for the endowment of Eniskillen school.

10190. Dr. TRAILL.—Was there not an endowment provided for the county of Monaghan by the diocese free school there?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes, and in Fermanagh there was no diocesan school.

Mr. Corbett, q.c.—I wish to refer you to the Act 14th and 16th Charles II. The 2nd section still remains in force, and it directs the removal of the free schools from one place to another within the same dioceses if more convenient. The Statute Law Revision Act, 1878, expressly states that the portion relating to free schools is not repealed, and it shows the intention of the founder, Charles II. and his Royal progenitors, which would include James I. and Charles I., to have been that the diocese should be the area; and that each of these schools might be removed to any other and more convenient town in the same diocese.

10191. Dr. TRAILL.—In quoting the intention of the Royal founders you seem to have quoted one part of the intention only. Clearly it was the intention of the founders to give them to one denomination at that time.

Mr. Corbett, q.c.—I am not concerned with that at present. Mr. Bewley started with the assumption that the founders intended that the area should be the county and not the diocese. I say that the Act of Parliament shows that it was the diocese and not the county.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—It must be remembered, too, that they were dealing with the plantation of Ulster, and that Monaghan was outside the limit of the plantation.

10192. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—At this present moment could the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council move Portora School from Eniskillen to Monaghan?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Possibly he might.

10193. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is not that the point?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—No. I strongly rely upon this statute because I regard it as a statutory authority to enable them to remove the school from one part of the diocese to another, whereas if they were Royal Diocesan Schools it would not have required a statutory authority to do so at all; the fact that it required a statute and the consent of the Lord Deputy to change a school from one part of a diocese to another is proof conclusive that it was never contemplated that the school should be for the diocese and not for the county. If this be a statute to enable the Lord Lieutenant to override the intentions of the founder—to do by statute that which without statute he could not do—that must be done with the consent specified by the statute!

10194. Lord Justice NASH.—If the effect to be given to the intentions of the founder has been altered by statute, and particular reasons have arisen to render it expedient to change the school to another town in the same diocese, can't we act upon the principle of the statute?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—No, because it only enabled the Lord Lieutenant in certain events, and under certain circumstances, to remove the school.

10195. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—What are those events?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Events which never took place. The recital of the Authorisation provides and churches, and the second section deals with schools and houses together; therefore the recital throws light upon the object of the statute.

10196. Rather a diocesan light?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I quite admit that while it was in force, they might have either retained the previous statutes and charters or altered them. But they have left them untouched.

10197. The only provision in our Act bearing upon this question is the direction to have regard to the intentions of the founder, but under the statute of Charles II. any of these schools may be moved to another part of the diocese. The only question for us, therefore, is whether there is sufficient evidence of convenience to justify the extension of the benefits of the endowment over the diocese.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—The fact that at a particular time powers were given to the Lord Lieutenant to override the founder's intention in the case of a particular institution does not alter that intention, and does not leave you at large to deal with it as you please. The Act refers to diocesan schools, and it might be perfectly right to remove a diocesan school from one part of a diocese to another.

10198. Dr. TRAVERS.—Is there any part of the Act which shows that it deals with these Royal Schools?

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The diocesan schools were not founded by James I., and the Act 14 & 15 Charles II. extends to the schools founded by Charles II., and his "Royal progenitors." Those were what are still called the Royal School of James I., Charles I., and Charles II., and if the existing law to-day is that the Porten school may, if convenient, be removed to Monaghan, what right have we to take away that advantage from the Monaghan people?

10199. Lord Justice NASH.—And have we not a right to put that power into operation, if we see fit, for the benefit of people who have now no advantage from this endowment?

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I should like to ask a question. There is evidence both ways on this matter. They are spoken of as schools for the province, for the counties, and for the diocese. If all these areas were open to discussion, on the question of expediency, have you anything to say?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—There is nothing more independent my clients think, than that the Eniskillen School should be removed. I say that all the circumstances point to that view. I dare say it is extremely expedient for those interested in St. Macartin's Seminary.

10200. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—St. Macartin's Seminary is at Monaghan, and there is no similar intermediate school in the County of Fermanagh or the Diocese of Clogher. Are the Roman Catholics entitled to the same share of this endowment as other inhabitants of Fermanagh?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—My clients do not wish me to contend that they are not.

10201. That being so, how is it most expedient to treat the scheme?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—We say that you ought to keep it in the county, because your object should be to make the schools, wherever they are established, large and efficient, and not to have the endowment split up into parcels so small that they would be really worth nothing. The two schools if established would not be first class schools, and the result of this scheme must be that the endowment that is really only fit for one school will be split up into two, and the cause of education will not be furthered.

10202. Then on a question of geography you would leave the Roman Catholics practically without any school?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—If Monaghan must be attached to some other place, why should it be attached to Fermanagh in preference to any other place?

10203. It is not connected with any other place.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—What about Carrin? Carrin is in the Diocese of Kilmore, and has its own Roman Catholic Diocesan Seminary.

10204. Rev. Dr. MOULTON.—The object of the Commission is to extend the usefulness of endowments. If it is open to us to take in Monaghan as well as Fermanagh, can you show us that we should extend the usefulness of this endowment better by confining it to Fermanagh, than by taking in Monaghan?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I think so for the reasons I have stated. If I argue upon the minimum grant to be given to Porten, I say it will simply starve it. The idea of its being maintained by £100 or £150 a year is absurd. It could not exist on those terms. It is better to establish one efficient school in Porten, which is the fabric best known in the past as a Royal School house. The funds are not more than sufficient properly to endow it; but to divide the endowment amongst different seminaries, and to give it to one that has been doing very well without it, and to take it away from the other that cannot exist without it, is practically destroying the school in this particular place. If you have regard to the compensation that must necessarily be paid to the present head master, there won't be for the entire endowment more than £700 or £800 a year altogether, and that, or at least the greater portion of it, will be necessary for maintaining this school in this district.

Mr. HOBERTON.—I appear on the part of the Methodist conference, and I am instructed to urge their objection against adding Monaghan with Fermanagh. In addition to what has been said already, I have only to say that the addition of Monaghan would be very prejudicial to the interests of the Methodists, for Fermanagh happens to be one of those counties in which their body is most numerous, whereas they disappear almost altogether in Monaghan.

Mr. ORR, Q.C.—I appear on behalf of the Commissioners of Education, and upon this point of view I am instructed to state that if the scheme of the present Commissioners or any amendment of it was to be confirmed, they would not have any objection to the area proposed in the scheme. They do not object to the inclusion of Monaghan. They have submitted a scheme of their own, which it was thought would practically work for the benefit of the whole of Ireland, but they found that by no possibility of management could one scheme be made to agree with the circumstances of every case, and as they felt they might be standing in the way of a satisfactory settlement they preferred leaving it to your lordships.

10205. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Would they object if the area of Ulster was introduced, taking in Antrim and Down?

Mr. ORR, Q.C.—I am instructed to approve of the scheme as it stands—to accept it as it stands.

10206. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We have received objections from Dr. Henry of Belfast, asking an extension to Antrim, and from Dr. Hearn of Londonderry, asking an extension to all that county.

May 1, 1901.

Are these objections supported by anyone?—[No response.]

The Rev. Professor Maguire.—I wish to say one word on the question of the area over which the Raphoe endowment is to be available. As at present arranged, it is extended over the entire county of Donegal, and it would be much more satisfactory for the Catholics, and more expedient for all parties interested, if it were confined within the limits of the diocese of Raphoe. And for this reason, that there exists at present in the diocese one pretty efficient Catholic school, and the small share of endowment to be apportioned to them would not enable the Catholics of the county to establish a second. If the parishes of Inishowen, which is geographically disconnected from the diocese of Raphoe, is to be included within the area to participate in the endowment, then a school may be established after a time in Bannagh or some other place outside the limits of the diocese, and might qualify under the scheme for participation in the grant for a time. That of course would impair the efficiency of the existing Catholic school by curtailing its revenues, and therefore we wish that the endowment should be confined to the diocese, and we think that there would be no serious opposition to that arrangement from any side.

10207. Lord Justice NABES.—That is to say, that Inishowen should be excluded from the area?

Rev. Professor Maguire.—Yes, it is, geographically and otherwise, distinct from Raphoe.

10208. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Is that the only part of Donegal outside the diocese of Raphoe?

Rev. Professor Maguire.—Substantially, yes. There is a small portion of the remaining part of the county in the diocese of Derry, and a very small portion in the diocese of Clogher.

10209. Professor DOWDNEY.—Do you think that the people of Inishowen will offer any objection to excluding them from the benefits of this endowment which is intended for the people of Donegal?

Rev. Professor Maguire.—Greater facilities are offered to the people of Inishowen in Derry.

10210. But Derry unfortunately derives no advantage from this endowment.

Rev. Professor Maguire.—I have stated my contention and I don't think there will be any strong opposition.

Mr. John Ross.—I appear for the Diocesan Council of Kilmore, and I also represent the entire of the Protestant population of Cavan, and we strongly support the scheme so far as the question of area is concerned.

10211. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you instructed upon behalf of the Diocesan Council of Cavan to give any opinion outside Cavan?

Mr. Ross.—I am instructed to support the scheme as it stands.

10212. Have you been definitely instructed upon the question of Monaghan and Fermagh?

Mr. Ross.—No, I have not.

Mr. Dransfield.—I am instructed on behalf of all the Roman Catholic bodies of Cavan; and those for whom I appear are anxious that the scheme, including the county Monaghan, should remain as far more than one reason. The Roman Catholic Diocese of Kilmore, which includes the whole of the county Cavan, includes a small portion of Fermagh, so that the Bishop of Cavan is to some extent interested in the county of Fermagh. With regard to the last observations of Mr. Atkinson, I respectfully submit that the very opposite conclusions should be drawn to those which he thought it right to suggest so far as regards the utility of these endowments. The whole of the endowment has not been able to keep alive either the Royal School of Cavan or that of Renshaven, and it is perfectly idle, so far as the usefulness of the endowment is concerned, to say that portion of the endowment would keep alive an institution which, with the whole of it at its command, is unable to sustain itself. On the other hand, to the Roman Catholic College of Cavan and Monaghan even a portion of this small endowment will be of considerable advantage to other of these already existing and even comparatively flourishing institutions. If you equate the Renshaven endowments to Fermagh the Catholics of Fermagh will be forced to erect another similar school to the one in Monaghan, and to depend for the support of a great institution of that kind on the small endowment they would get. It is quite the reverse of what Mr. Atkinson says, and so far from being for the interests of education in this district to confine this endowment to Fermagh, the result of it would be to necessitate the building of an intermediate school by the Catholics of Fermagh, which they do not want.

10213. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you prepared on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Fermagh to give up all claims to the buildings at Portora, provided an educational endowment is given to St. Mary's?

Mr. Dransfield.—I do not appear for the Catholics of Fermagh.

10214. But you are arguing their case.

Mr. Dransfield.—I am arguing it simply because it happens to be exactly similar to the case of my own clients in Cavan, and if the question of the disposition either of the buildings or of the priory in Cavan school comes to be discussed, exactly the same arguments will apply—namely, as to the absence of the utility of endeavouring to keep up another institution alongside St. Patrick's College.

10215. Would you be prepared on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Cavan to give up all claims to the fabric of the Royal School of Cavan?

Mr. Dransfield.—On the contrary we ask that it should be sold, and the proceeds distributed in such way as the Commissioners think right. I shall be able to satisfy the council that it will be impossible to keep it up—10216. On the other hand it will be useless for the Roman Catholics to take it, because they are already supplied with buildings in St. Patrick's.

Mr. Dransfield.—It may not be utilized, for the endowment could not support it, and the same result will happen in Fermagh if Mr. Atkinson's argument is adopted. My clients do not wish to see started, side by side, two institutions which the two bodies are not able to support. As to the question of including the county Monaghan with Fermagh, as the Commissioners have done, from the three letters of 1612, 1614, and 1618, it is perfectly plain that it was intended that these schools should be under the control of the archbishop and bishops, to be managed in whatever way they thought right.

Mr. John Keele, q.c.—I appear for the Roman Catholic Priests of Armagh, and support the scheme of the Commissioners as regards area. It is quite obvious that the best possible way of acting in accordance with the intentions of the founders is by recognizing, as the Act of Charles II. declares, the diocese as the area for the purposes of each of these endowments.

Mr. J. J. Shaw.—I appear on behalf of the Intermediate Education Committee of the General Assembly, who approve of the scheme. They wish that Monaghan should be included in the Fermagh area, as they think that the school there ought to be encouraged, and that it ought to have a share in the benefits accruing to that area.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—The local Presbyterians, whom I represent, are at right angles with the committee for whom my friend appears.

Mr. Shaw.—But you don't appear for the Presbyterians of Monaghan.

10217. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If we have equal forces pulling in opposite directions is it not the best proof that the scheme should stand as it is? Is there any other party represented?

Rev. B. Monahan, p.p., Omagh.—I want to leave out that bit of Derry, and I have nothing to add to the arguments that have been already adduced.

10218. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you oppose the inclusion of Monaghan?

Rev. Father Macneven.—I have nothing to do with Monaghan. I have only to say to "Derry."

10219. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—You are interested in the Dungannon Endowment. You think it ought to be confined to the county Tyrone?

Rev. Father Macneven.—Yes. I am also interested in the county Donagall, and I wish to say that the statement made by the Rev. Mr. Maguire does not apply to the county Donagall generally. I am asked by some of the clergy, and by some other people, to oppose the restriction to the diocese of Raphoe.

10220. You do not support the exclusion of the county of Inishowen?

Rev. Father Macneven.—Certainly not. I am here to say that there is the strongest objection to that. There are two parishes—one the largest in the diocese, which are not in Inishowen at all, and still belong to the diocese of Derry, part of Donaghmore, part of Urry, and part of Carru.

10221. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You want to include all Donegal?

Rev. Father Macneven.—Yes.

10222. Professor DODDINGTON.—Does not the St. Colman's Diocesan College, Derry, do a large part of the educational work for the Roman Catholics of the county of Tyrone?

Rev. Father Macneven.—Not much, I think.

10223. Is not a large portion of the county Tyrone included in the Diocese of Derry?

Rev. Father Macneven.—Yes.

10224. Do not the boys who belong to the diocese of Derry, and who live in Tyrone go to the diocesan school in Derry for their education?

Rev. Father Macneven.—Portion of them. We have a large number educated in Omagh both of boys and girls, as directed by the number sent in for the Intermediate Examinations. On an average twenty from each of the schools are sent in for the Intermediate Examinations every year, and they are the only Roman Catholic Intermediate schools in the county.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—We submit that in any case the scheme ought to be consistent, and ought either to adopt diocesan boundaries or county boundaries—if it adopted diocesan boundaries it would not be so bad as at present, but it adopts county boundaries in some instances and diocesan boundaries in others.

10225. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is I think at error. The scheme is consistent. It includes a bit of Derry because it is in the diocese of Armagh, and it includes all Monaghan because it is in the diocese of Clogher, and also in Ulster. If we took in the dioceses together we should go into Leitrim and Connaught.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—The county Armagh includes portion of the diocese of Down.

10226. Not much: the apparent inconsistency is susceptible of the explanation, that is the two exceptional instances I have mentioned, we have taken the wider of two alternative boundaries.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—It is inconsistent in reference to the intention of the founders, when these schools are shown by the instruments to have been originally established for the counties in which they were placed.

10227. But you will admit that there is some inconsistency in the terms of these documents. On the one hand the areas are spoken of as dioceses, in the other they are described as counties.

Mr. Alderson, Q.C.—In any case I object to finding out the intention of James I., by a statute passed by Charles II.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The next question in order is the basis of the distribution of the money. That divides itself into two branches—first the denominational question, and next the claim of education. On the religious question there are a good many objections which we will take in any way that occurred may suggest.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—On behalf of the Diocesan Councils of Armagh, Derry and Raphoe, and Clogher, I object to the principle of distribution. We admit that it is reasonable that the Roman Catholics should get a share of the endowment, but the question is how that share is to be ascertained. Secondly, in reference to the Protestant bodies, these Diocesan Councils strongly object to mixed boards. First, on the question of distribution, you will have the Roman Catholics on the one side and the Protestants on the other. Distribution by population would be unfair when we are from the census of 1871 the number of persons of all denominations, more especially of the Roman Catholic denomination, who are 88,000. The object of these endowments is not to support primary schools, but Intermediate schools—grammar schools. Therefore what we consider a fair test would be to take from the census the number of persons attending the superior schools. I have got a table of statements made out from the census of 1881 of the numbers of children attending superior schools. In that enumeration are included a number of schools put down as colleges. In Armagh there are two schools which are called colleges, but which are in fact giving Intermediate education.

10228. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—These figures represent pupils of the different denominations which attend superior schools in the localities.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—Yes, in the counties.

10229. Do they include pupils from the localities going to school elsewhere?

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—There is no means of ascertaining that. If there were, the proportion of the body I represent would be enormously increased, because a large number of the Protestant youth are now educated out of Ireland, unfortunately, and if we were to take into consideration those receiving education elsewhere, the numbers of our denomination would be enormously increased. The numbers in the county Armagh attending superior schools, as appears from the census of 1881, are—Roman Catholics 515, Church of Ireland 334, Presbyterians 117, Methodists 44, all other denominations 2; making a total of 702. In Fermanagh, the numbers attending superior schools in 1881 are very few altogether. Roman Catholics 0, Church of Ireland 68, Presbyterians 0, Methodists 12, all other denominations 1; that is only 79 in all.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—It is a remarkable fact that this, which is one of the smallest counties, and has the largest endowment in Ireland, has a very small number of Intermediate pupils. It is a melancholy fact that the five counties with the Royal School Endowments, stand in the Intermediate education returns far behind almost any other five counties in Ireland.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—In Tyrone the Roman Catholics attending superior schools number 158, Church of Ireland 154, Presbyterians 170, Methodists 21, and all other denominations 7, making a total of 400. In Cavan the Roman Catholics number 131, Church of Ireland 82, Presbyterians 20, Methodists 4, none of other denominations, and the total is 217. In Donagall the Roman Catholics number 65, Church of Ireland 45, Presbyterians 48, Methodists 2, and all other denominations 1; total 161. I have had these figures converted into percentages in every case, and we will have of copy sent in by Dr. Morgan, who prepared it from the census. As another test we have the number who passed the Intermediate examinations in two successive years from the five counties—Armagh, Fermanagh, Tyrone, Carrick, and Donegal.

10232. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Can you tell us how many altogether passed from these five counties?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Last year 125 Protestants and 25 Roman Catholics from the six counties.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—For two years from the five counties 67½ per cent. were Protestants, but there is no means of distinguishing those belonging to the Church of Ireland.

10231. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—How do you know the number of Catholics?

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—The schools are stated in the return.

10233. Do you know what proportion of those who passed the Intermediate examinations came from schools? Because one complaint of the Catholics in these localities is that the Protestants, having all the endowments, they are obliged to educate their children at home by private tutors.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—At any rate the result is that 67½ per cent. were Protestants.

10234. Of those that came from schools—that does not include those who came from private tuition. The whole value of those figures depends upon whether they accurately represent the facts or not, and in order that they should accurately represent the facts, it would be necessary that some persons knowing the denominations of the various pupils should have counted up all those who passed in the Intermediate examinations.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—We will give you all the materials furnished on the returns themselves.

10234. But those materials are not sufficient to supply the information.

Mr. Curran, Q.C.—They are entirely insufficient.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—67½ in 1886 were Protestants, and in 1887 they rose to 77½ per cent., showing 10 per cent. of an increase.

10235. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But you don't tell us the total number who passed. We were working this thing out in our office as well as we could for ourselves, and the numbers that we could find to have passed in 1886 don't agree with yours. For example, what return have you for Carrick?

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—I gave no return at all. I gave a percentage.

10234. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Then what is your percentage? We have got only ten pupils passing from Carrick in 1886, eight from the Christian schools at Carrick, one from "the National school, Carrick," and one from a private address.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—My first set of figures had nothing to do with Intermediate Education. It was from the census. All that I have at present given you, as to the Intermediate Examinations, is that, in 1886, taking the whole of the five counties, 67½ per cent. of those who passed from schools in those five counties were Protestants.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—We have ascertained that out of the schools in the six counties, 125 Protestants and 25 Roman Catholics passed last year—in 1887.

10237. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We have got a return for 1885, and for the whole county of Armagh, taking all creeds, the names were—from St. Patrick's College, Armagh, 5; College-street National School, Armagh, 3; Christian Schools, Armagh, 1; Watt's School, Lurgan, 30; the Academy, Portadown, 3; private addresses, 7—making 44 altogether. If your percentage is based on those figures you are basing your claim to the Royal School endowment, to the extent of nearly 60 per cent. on the existence of Watt's School at Lurgan. Such percentages are no good.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I am not giving percentages—I am giving the figures ascertained from the schools in these respective localities, not to test the efficiency of the schools, but the relative proportions of the two denominations qualified for Intermediate education, and I say that 125 Protestants passed from those schools and 25 Roman Catholics.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—And I am pointing out, in the case of Armagh, that twenty of those Protestants are from Watt's School, Lurgan, which is principally a boarding-school, and, therefore, to that extent your figure is worthless for the purpose of ascertaining how many people there are in the county who want intermediate education.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—But I think that the argument is entirely and fundamentally wrong even as stated by yourself. It is that 125 Protestants, from schools in these counties, passed the Intermediate Examinations, and that only 25 Catholics passed, and your inference from that is that these figures represent the proportions of the two denominations which require intermediate education. You will see the fallacy of that argument. In the first place you take no account of those pupils who, for want of schools and for want of endowments, have to be content with private tuition, and, secondly, you take no account of those pupils who, for want of schools and for want of endowments, have to go elsewhere from these localities, and get their education in other parts of Ireland.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I will give you another figure. From Fermanagh, the most richly endowed county in Ireland, the Intermediate returns for 1886 show that only four boys passed in any grade whatever—three from Portora and one from "the National School, Irvinestown." I don't know whether the school is Protestant or Catholic, but on Mr. Bealey's percentage test for Irvinestown and for Portora, for your Protestant school, it would depend on the denomination of the manager of Irvinestown National school whether 100 per cent. or only 75 per cent. of the pupils of a county having a Royal Endowment of £1,800 a year were Protestant for the purpose of Intermediate education.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—I don't say that this is a conclusive, but merely to be taken into consideration, together with the fact that the pupils educated in the Royal schools have power to come from other parts of Ireland. The Royal School of Armagh has not been sending up boys for the Intermediate examinations, and if they had the number would be greatly increased. There is also a* return of the literate population in these counties from the census of 1881. For instance, in Armagh the proportions are—Church of Ireland, 34·5 per cent.; Roman Catholics, 41·1 per cent.; Presbyterians, 18·7 per cent.; Methodists, 3·5 per cent., and all other denominations 2·2 per cent.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The figures that we have are, for the six counties, 255,000 Roman Catholics and 217,000 Protestants. In the five counties, leaving out Monaghan, there are 217,782 Roman Catholics and 205,323 Protestants. Of these 204,000 Protestants, 109,000 are Church people and 95,000 are others.

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—We have got the* particulars for these five counties from the census of 1861, of 1871, and of 1881, showing the percentage of these several denominations. I propose to hand in these.

10238. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—What conclusion do you draw from these percentages?

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—That it is unfair to mix up all these endowments and to make any distribution of them in a certain proportion between the five counties. I submit that each particular endowment should be divided according to some fair basis—according to the county, or to the diocese—whichever you take as the unit of distribution; but that you are not to mix them all up and then divide them according to some general principle of representation.

10239. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you satisfied that the endowment in each county or diocese should be separately divided, according to an estimate based on the literate population?

Mr. Bealey, Q.C.—Not exactly upon the literate population. I should prefer that it would be based upon the numbers attending superior schools.

Aug. 9, 1888.

10540. How could you estimate the proportion of the Limerick population that would go to Intermediate schools? That is one of the most difficult problems, and I shall be glad of any assistance in making it out.

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—The return we got from the census of 1881 gives an accurate return of the persons of the different denominations attending superior schools, and the names of the schools are given.

10541. Lord Justice FRYGIE.—That might be an unfair basis to take for the future, as one denomination has not been as well provided as the other with Intermediate education in the past. If you took each denomination, and estimated what proportion of its numbers was likely to require Intermediate education, and based a return upon that, it would be more to the point.

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—That must to a certain degree be based upon speculation. A number of persons cannot take advantage of superior schools from the nature of their occupation. There must be a class whose education must be primary; they will never go on to Intermediate schools, and it would be unfair, though you include them among the Limericks, to treat them as persons requiring education at Intermediate schools.

10542. You think it fair to divide the endowment in proportion to the number of pupils attending superior schools?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—Yes.

10543. Then the only difference between your proposal and the scheme is that you propose to divide on the figures of 1881, while the scheme provides for a division on the figures de anno in annum for ever?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—But I propose to take the basis of distributing in each particular county and to divide the endowment in each county.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—That is absolutely impossible.

10544. Rev. Dr. MALLOY.—What you read was the number of pupils attending superior schools?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—Yes.

10545. Can you tell us exactly what are the schools that the census call "superior"? Does it include all the schools sending up pupils to the Intermediate Examinations?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—They are classified in this way:—National schools, ecclesiastical and convent schools; patronage and subscription schools, and private schools, and in a note to the census in each particular county, it mentions what different schools they consider superior.

10546. Does it include all the schools sending up pupils to the Intermediate Examinations?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—It is sure to include all that.

10547. I am sure it does not. Does it include the Christian Brothers' Schools?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—I should say that they would be included among the Ecclesiastical Schools.

10548. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If it leaves out the Christian Brothers' schools, under the belief that they are elementary schools, it is a matter of fact not generally known that considerably over one-third of the pupils sent of all Ireland pass for Intermediate education to the Christian Brothers' schools.

Dr. TRAILL.—On the other hand, it has been proved to us in Drogheda, Dundalk, and other places that the proportion of those attending the Christian Brothers' schools, who availed themselves of Intermediate education is only one-tenth, or at the utmost one-eighth of the total number of their pupils. Their success is very remarkable at the Intermediate Examinations all the same.

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—The list of schools treated as superior schools include St. Patrick's Diocesan College, Armagh, St. Columba's, Newry. This cannot be done with great accuracy, but you can get some idea of the relative proportions. I strongly insist upon the division being by county or diocese, and not by lumping them together and then dividing them equally.

10549. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Your great point is that you want a separate division made of each endowment.

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—Yes, to divide each endowment amongst the persons entitled to share it.

10550. Would you in future allow anything for such fluctuations as have occurred in the past? In other words if the Fermanagh school fails and the Raphoe school rises would you allow any money to go from Fermanagh to Raphoe?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—No, I don't think so. I don't see how or where you can stop if that is done.

10551. Then if Fermanagh continues comparatively empty it must still get its share of £1,800 a year, and Raphoe if full gets comparatively nothing, though the Act of Parliament directs that the money not required for one Royal school shall be transferred to another. Do those you represent go so far as to say that if we make a primary distribution, based upon your principle, in the different counties, and allowed the different local bodies then to join in making any re-arrangement they chose of their own money subsequently, they would object to that?

Mr. Bawley, Q.C.—We think that is reasonable; and I submit that mine is the only reasonable principle upon which the endowments can be distributed. At any rate to distribute them according to the gross population irrespective of their being Limericks would be totally wrong, and considerably at the expense of the Protestants.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I support the contention of my learned friend, that the endowments of each diocese should be dealt with separately. I represent all denominations in this matter, because the Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher agrees with us. In reference to the other point, for the Protestants, I entirely object to the present proportion, which, as I can understand it, is an equal proportion.

10552. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Not an equal proportion, but an equal minimum grant.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I submit that there is no proportion which can be suggested about which difficulties cannot be started, but I won't cross-examine one of your lordships' body as to why the scheme selects equal proportions.

10553. They were not selected as proportions at all, but as what they are described, as minimum grants; and these were made equal because the minimum necessary to give substantial aid to a school will be the same whether the pupils are Protestants or Catholics, I apprehend.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I say that almost two-thirds should be given to the Protestant population; for the Intermediate schools exist only for the use of that part of the population that is likely to send pupils to Intermediate schools, and let me say that I don't consider a school an Intermediate school while the general education that it gives is merely primary, though it educates an occasional boy in the subjects of the Intermediate Examinations sufficiently well to carry off a prize. If the general level of the education given is only primary it is not to be regarded as an Intermediate school from having in an isolated way enabled a boy to reach a higher grade. How are you to ascertain the proportion of the population likely to require Intermediate schools in the Fermanagh district? Banbridge can hardly be called a large commercial town, and certainly Monaghan is not. There are therefore no large commercial towns to supply day boys, and day boys must come from towns. I mean by "day boy" the boy who resides at home and attends school daily, and I consider a boy a boarder who is sent from a distance to live near and attend the school daily. Those whose parents do not reside in the town, and the boarders at the school are, for my purpose, all the same. Therefore you must find the population that requires Intermediate education in Fermanagh among the agricultural population, and I can find no better test than a rough one; the "Poor

Aug 2, 1916.

Low Valuation.—because the idea of a farmer whose Poor Law Valuation is under £50 requiring Intermediate education for his sons or son is very far fetched.

10254. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The practical experience of people in Ulster is against that contention.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Unless you have an Intermediate school at their door they must be sent from home. If they go to a school £45 is the minimum to be paid for their board and education in any Protestant school, and £35 to £40 in St. Mooney's seminary. A farmer of £50 valuation is usually pressed to provide for the education of one son, and how he is to afford to spend £25 or £30 a year on it seems to me far-fetched indeed. You forget that boys travel long distances to schools in the north by railway, and live at home.

10255. Dr. TRAILL.—That would cost a great deal more money.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Where would they come from by railway in this particular district? There are no railways pouring into Fermanagh.

10256. Professor DOUGHERTY.—We heard in Baniskillen that a number of pupils were expected to come by the Claghier Valley Railway to the Baniskillen school.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—That is very problematical.

10257. Professor DOUGHERTY.—It was your own clients who gave that evidence.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Even suppose they did, a railway only taps the traffic for two miles on each side of the road. If that be so, look at the enormous district in these two counties, from which, if the children are to be educated at all, they must be sent either to board in the school or in the town. Therefore the expense necessarily restricts the number of individuals who can afford to avail themselves of these schools for education. I know the valuation is not an infallible test, but I have not heard of any other one that appears equally good. The entire Roman Catholic population of Monaghan is 75,000, and the Protestant population is 37,000; the Protestant population of Fermanagh is 57,000, and the Roman Catholic population 47,000, and if it turns out that five-sixths or four-fifths of the farmers of the county have a valuation so low that by no fair probability can it be expected that they will send their children to Intermediate schools, I submit that for the purposes of this argument the gross population may be left out of consideration altogether. I have not these statistics yet, but they are being prepared by the Clerks of the Union, and to-morrow I hope to be able to hand them in. There is no test to which objections will not be raised. I submit that this is as good a test as you can apply to this rural district; Monaghan is a purely agricultural county, with no manufactures worth speaking of, and with no large town. The great mass of the population is agricultural, and if you find the valuations so low that by no reasonable probability can they be expected to send their children to the Intermediate school, I say you are to exclude these people altogether.

10258. Rev. Dr. MORTAR.—I understand your argument to be that there is a much larger proportion of Protestants in this district who are capable of bearing the necessary expenses of sending their boys into the schools, either at Monaghan or Baniskillen, than there is of Roman Catholics?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Certainly.

10259. Therefore you think that the Protestants are entitled to a larger proportion of the endowment?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Yes.

10260. And you admit that though not a perfectly satisfactory test, this is the best that you can get?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I do.

10261. Then I want to call your attention to the fact that this is principle which the scheme allows to come into full operation, because if there is a larger proportion of Protestants able to bear the necessary expenses, there will be a larger proportion of Protestant children going to the schools, and according to our scheme, after a certain amount is deducted as the minimum for each board there remains a large sum to be distributed according to the amount of educational work done, and if your argument is good—and I think it is a very fair one—it only shows that the Protestants will get a larger amount of the endowment than the Roman Catholics because they will have a larger number going to their schools. That is a perfectly satisfactory one because it distributes the surplus of the endowment exactly in proportion to the educational work done, whereas you admit that your test is not satisfactory because it is inaccurate and indefinite.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I don't admit that the distribution of the surplus will at all have those results, or that it is satisfactory; on the contrary, I shall show you that it is unsatisfactory; but I understand that these schools were intended for those portions of the population who required Intermediate education, and I wish to ascertain what the proportions are. As I am instructed it will be found that two-thirds at least of the population requiring Intermediate education are Protestants, but whatever the result may be I am willing to abide by it. I quite see the argument that my principle is not flexible. In reference to the objection things will remain as they are until there is a change, until commerce springs up in these towns or towns are consolidated. If you divide the valuations by consolidating the farms, you diminish the number of families, and that may to a certain extent also be proportion; but I have no objection that a case should be introduced to provide for periodic revisions at certain intervals—say of five, six, or of fifteen years, which is a favorite period.

10262. Lord Justice FRASER.—I can understand the strength of the argument for a final division; but if you once admit periodic revision, the best is the enemy of the good.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I don't see any reasonable anticipation of any great change. It can be only ascertained whether there has been any great fluctuation in the past. If there is no fluctuation the apprehended, the relative proportions in which the endowments are to be divided should be now ascertained by the proportions in the two denominations of that portion of the general population which is likely to require intermediate schools. It is said that that will be done by clause 43 regarding the distribution of the residue remaining after the payment of the 40 per cent. The first objection I have to that is that it makes a common fund of all the endowments.

10263. Lord Justice NASH.—What exactly is the basis upon which you would go to ascertain the portion of the general population that required intermediate education?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—As far as the farmers are concerned I would take £35 or £40 a year valuation.

10264. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you not consider that every clever boy should have a chance of rising?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Yes, if his father is able to give it to him.

10265. Whether his father is able to give it to him or not, should he not have his chance of getting to the top?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—You may as well say whether his father is able to give him a good suit of clothes or not, he should have them.

Lord Justice FRASER.—And why shouldn't he, if clothes were supplied to the most deserving at the public expense?

10266. Dr. TRAILL.—There are many people who would be willing to help along a young boy who showed signs of cleverness and industry. Would it not be possible to make some calculation of the proportion of those boys who, with help, could rise?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I don't see how it would. You must deal with generalities, and the only way out do so is to see what is the proportion of the population likely to require intermediate education.

10267. That would cut a little against one denomination when you say that such a large number of them are under this valuation. Would it not be fairer to take the class of labourers, and to give them credit—say for a tenth of their number, then to take the farmers, and to give them credit for a fifth of their number, then to take the commercial and professional classes, and give them credit for all their numbers.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Yes, but my only objection to that is that it is entirely arbitrary.

10268. Lord Justice Frothingham.—I think if you look at this question practically it will be narrowed down into reasonable proportions. If you could show how the relative numbers of each denomination of the class requiring and entitled to a share of these public endowments for intermediate education, there is a preponderance of opinion on all sides that there would be great advantage in dividing the money once and for all as it is called; but before we could divide the money in that way we should either be judicially satisfied that the division was a fair one, both now and for the future, or we should see a general concurrence of all concerned that it satisfied them. The only other alternative is to divide by results from time to time.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I fear I have not conveyed myself. I say that the first thing is to get the relative numbers of the population requiring intermediate education, and then that there should be a division, whether permanent or temporary, in the relative proportions of that population.

10269. To that everybody is agreed, if you mean that it should be divided in proportion to the numbers of those entitled to claim the benefit of it.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Then take the test as to the valuation of the agricultural population, the test as to the attendance at school, the test as to the number of literate and illiterate people in each of these places, the test as to the numbers passing the Intermediate examinations, and considering these all, you can go as far as it is possible to go towards a fair approximation of what the population is that requires intermediate education, and you can ascertain at the same time the respective religious creeds of that population. Whether there be then a permanent division for ever, or a division at periods of ten or fifteen years, if there are likely to be fluctuations, or a yearly division if you like, the division always ought to be on the existing basis of the records. Now, it is said that under this scheme, by section 43, such a division of the funds may be made, but that clause won't provide what I want at all, because it mixes up all the endowments of the different counties. It won't confine the endowment for a particular district to that particular district, and, so far from producing an equality I will show you that it produces the very opposite.

10270. If you can give us any assistance on this point we shall be very glad. There is nothing like an interchange of the views, and if you could approximate to a figure, others may be induced to tell us their approximation too. Speaking now as a juror, and as only one member of the Commission, we have had all these figures before us, and been working at them among ourselves for a year. I am satisfied that at present a division into three—one-third to the Roman Catholics, one-third to the Church, and one-third to the Presbyterians—would give rather too little to the Roman Catholics, on the other hand, a division into halves may give them rather too much, but a quarter would not satisfy the Church people. On the whole a division in halves comes nearer to all these tests, taking the endowments as a whole, than any other, but subdividing the Protestant half into quarters would not work at all if applied to each endowment separately. As between Protestants and Catholics, in fixing the proportions justly, two considerations should come in to modify mere numbers.—First into the Protestant scale you put a great number of rich people, those who are guilty of the excesses so much complained of, who send their children out of the country for their education, and who would not in any case keep them in Ireland. Rich people of that class ought not to be taken fully into account, because they do not require the benefit of these endowments, do not take advantage of them, and when they had them, gave them up. On the other hand, there is a large proportion of Roman Catholics among the poor, who do not want high schools, though such poor, clever, boys as are taken up by the Christian Brothers certainly ought to be taken into account. The net result of the whole discussion in my mind was that no really accurate division could be got at, that no approximation suggested by us would satisfy both sides. Therefore the only test that remained was some automatic test.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—The reason I say that the fund for each district should be dealt with by itself is, that a system of distribution which might be fair in one district would be grossly unfair in another; in one district the Roman Catholics requiring intermediate education might be three to one, and it might be the reverse in the next district. Take for instance Fermanagh.—

10271. The practical objection to dividing each endowment separately, and taking away the power of shifting the money from one district to another is that in many places some denominations would be left without any adequate provision. In Cavan, for example, the church people are almost all the Protestants, and the minority of Presbyterians and Methodists there would not have anything. The result in Donegal would be extraordinary, because if you take in the whole county, you would have an overwhelming majority of Roman Catholics, while if you take in the district of Raphoe only, the Presbyterians would outnumber all the rest; in short if you were to divide each of these endowments into two or three not equal but proportionate shares, the result would be fantastic in the highest degree.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Of course that drives us back to my earlier argument, that it was never intended that the funds of one district were to go in aid of the endowment of the other.

10272. I mentioned before that our difficulty in relation to that is that since 1813 it has been the law that any money not wanted in one district should be spent in any other where it was needed, and as a matter of fact large sums of Cavan money have been spent on Raphoe, and even on Banagher.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—That was under the Act of George IV.

Dr. TRAILL.—The residue could only be applied to another school after all the requirements of the original school had been provided for. You must maintain in all its integrity the original school, and after you have done that—in the event of the funds arising from the endowment being more than adequate to supply the school, and to support it—then you may apply the surplus funds to the support of the other schools. As a matter of fact there is £20,000 belonging to Enniskillen, and £5,000 belonging to Cavan, accumulated money which under that clause was not spent.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I submit that at all events there is nothing in the statutes to enable you to transfer the funds of one district to another unless you comply with the provisions of the Act of George IV., which provides that you can only do that after you have provided to the full for the maintenance and management of the local Royal schools. But even if the division was not open to that objection, I submit on the score of equality of treatment that it is not satisfactory. I am told that one of the advantages of section 43 of the scheme, is that you give a minimum grant which will enable each particular school to exist, and that the results will work out of the residue a proportionate endowment for the different denominations. I say that won't be so at all. There are several objections to it; but first as to the equality. There are several Protestant schools in Ulster, which will provide adequately for the wants of the Protestant population. There are very few such schools in the south or west of Ireland, and they are not wanted, because most of the members of the Protestant population in those districts are people of the higher class, who send their sons away to England or elsewhere; but there are a great many good Roman Catholic schools in those other portions of Ireland; and what is to prevent the Roman Catholic schools in Ulster from drawing into them the intelligent youths from different parts of Ireland, and in the result—worked out through the instrumentality of strangers and boarders—absorbing the 50 per cent.

Aug. 3, 1888.

10273. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—If the Protestants did likewise, the result would be to restore Portora, Dungannon, and Armagh to their points of highest prosperity, and then they would be entitled to get more than half the endowments.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Your lordship misunderstands me. What is to prevent the Roman Catholic seminaries in Ulster from being recruited by foreigners, if I may so call them, from other parts of Ireland?

10274. And I only ask what is to prevent the Protestants from doing the same thing?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—You cannot recruit if you have not got recruits.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—There are plenty of recruits if you look for them; they are going now to many other schools.

10275. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If you have not got recruits what do you want with the endowments?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—There are enough recruits to maintain these schools in the existing population, but if you are allowed to import foreigners into the other ones, you will, through the instrumentality of the foreigners devour sixty per cent. of the endowment.

10276. You have made a statement upon which, so far as I can see, your whole argument rests, namely, that there is not a sufficient number of good Roman Catholic schools outside Ulster for the population of the other provinces. What is the evidence of that?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I thought that one of the standing complaints of the Roman Catholics was that they had not sufficient good schools.

10277. Not at all. The complaint is that the good Catholic schools have no endowment.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Is it then the fact that there is not a complaint that there is not an adequate number of Roman Catholic schools?

10278. Not that there is not an adequate number of Roman Catholic schools, but that the Roman Catholic schools receive no State endowment. There are an abundance of Roman Catholic schools in Leitrim and Monaghan.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I am very glad to hear that they can get on so well without the endowments. Therefore it is a dog-in-the-manger feeling that objects to our having them.

We are not in the manger yet.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—If they can get on so well without the endowment I don't see why it should not be left to those who cannot get on without it.

10279. Almost the first point you made was that the schools which showed that they were doing educational work were the best entitled to get the endowments.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—These endowments are provided as prizes for enterprising teachers and not for the purpose of educating parties who are adequately provided for already.

10280. Lord Justice NAIRN.—Is your objection that the results principle should be applied only in the case of boys born in the district?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Certainly. These endowments are intended to provide for local wants, and if there are enough Protestant schools all over Ulster to provide for local wants, this school of Portora can never hope, in the altered condition of things in Ireland, either to draw away persons who would naturally go to other Protestant schools in Ulster, or to get recruits from other parts of Ireland. I was under the impression that there was an ample field to get from the other portions of Ireland, and to introduce to those Roman Catholic seminaries in Ulster such a number of intelligent boys as to absorb the sixty per cent. portion of the results.

10281. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—My object this morning, in giving you so very fully the facts of the endowment, was to show you that the whole of the money applicable to this purpose did not exceed £5,500 a year, and if any very large number of boys were educated in this district, it would leave so little per head that it would not give any substantial endowment even to the district. You really must understand that no funds are available to maintain schools, but only to aid them.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Your scheme would reduce them all to the dead level of starvation instead of leaving some £1,000 a year, we will say, for the educational advancement of this particular district, by tapping Fermanagh for the impoverished districts round it, you reduce it, in all probability, to from £100 to £200 a year for each of the denominations.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—As the scheme stands, the school is to have a mistress, not a rector, and when you speak of reducing the school to the level of starvation you ought to bear in mind that there is no fund in Ireland sufficient to maintain a large school. The schools that are successful have generally either no endowment at all, or some small sum, often only £200 or even £100 a year, which serves as a permanent fund to keep them going, and frees them from difficulties.

10282. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If people of a particular religious denomination establish a school and maintain it on a fair basis—if they get a certain amount of public endowment to help them in their work, surely they won't starve more than if they got no part of the endowment.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—Certainly not.

10283. But that is exactly the case with which you are dealing?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—That is not, with all respect, a correct view of the purpose of the endowment. If the community are able to have an efficient educational establishment without an endowment, then they don't require it at all, or require very little; but here is the contrary where you have a case in which you can have no education at all without subsidising the school, in order that learning and education may not die out in the place, you must give the endowment to keep the school alive.

10284. But take the actual facts, as you represent them yourself, in this Fermanagh district about which you are arguing. There is a large preponderance of Protestant families who are able to bear the expense of sending their children to England and other places to school. You also admit that there is only a small number of Roman Catholic families able to do so. But the Roman Catholics of the district have established schools and maintain them, which they have managed to build themselves. Surely those won't be reduced to starvation by getting some small assistance from this public endowment to enable them to carry on the work they are doing? On the other hand the large proportion of Protestant families who are able to bear the larger expense will get also a degree of help from this public endowment corresponding to their needs, so that neither party will be reduced to anything like starvation.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—I do not understand that it is intended to decrease the fees in consequence of the endowment. I thought the endowment was for the purpose of getting superior education.

10285. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN. — And your argument goes on the assumption that there must be a large endowment for that purpose. Now look at the plain facts of your own case. In 1837, 4840 in cash was laid out at Enniskillen on teachers—I don't speak of what was laid out besides on the building. During that year thirty-five day boys were taught in the place, and no boarder at all. In 1834, before our Act came into force, only twenty-four boys were at Portora, the school has increased by thirty-three per cent. since 1834, yet the 1840 was spent on those twenty-four boys. In other words the State paid the schoolmasters of Portora £35 a year for each boy they taught, in addition to what the boys had to pay. Surely that shows that anybody who wishes to utilize an endowment will not pile it on one school without regard to the amount of work that it is doing.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I think that an unfair use has been made of the failure of Portora in the last few years owing to the peculiar views, and the peculiar conduct of the man who happens to be Head Master in a particular time. I ask you to take in review a larger period of Portora's history, to go back for twenty years, and then it was one of the best schools in Ireland, and a genuine credit to the country.

10286. And if you can get it back to its former position, your argument would at once prevail and get full weight under our scheme, and the school would get not only a due share of the Enniskillen endowment, but of the others also.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I say that you should provide educational requirements for local wants, and take the local population for the basis.

10287. You cannot ride on two horses. Twenty years ago Portora had no more day-boys than now. You either want small schools for local wants or you want a big school to which you must bring pupils from outside. As the scheme is prepared, it helps every good school in the district according to its work, and at the same time, allows only really substantial schools, to share at the period when Portora was full, other local schools were empty, and if that occurred again Portora would get a very large endowment.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Nobody can suppose that Portora will get back altogether to what it was before, but the Protestant population requiring Intermediate education in the district is sufficiently large to make Portora, with an adequate endowment a fairly good school, and I say that its local wants ought to be first provided for. I object entirely, while Portora has local boys, to bringing it into competition with institutions by which may bring in others from different districts by whom the thirty per cent. surplus will be absorbed. The very last applied is unjust, because these schools will pick most who make the largest number of boys just up to the middle grade of the Intermediate examinations. They get two marks for that; while if Portora sent up a pupil who took an entrance exhibition in Trinity College, he would just get four marks for that.

10288. We ought not to get into details as to these marks. That is a separate matter on which we desire to get any help we can to improve the scheme. We are willing to take whatever test will best and most fully reward all adequate work according to its merit.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Then I say the endowment ought to be divided into two-thirds for the Protestants, and one-third for the Roman Catholics. I do not speak with confidence as to the exact proportion, because I have not yet got the return I mentioned. I admit it would not be a good guide in a commercial population, but this is not a commercial population.

10289. Lord Justice MAHELL.—You don't want to divide the Protestant share among the different denominations of Protestants?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—No, I appear for a committee which represents the Protestant population of all denominations in this district.

10290. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—In that district the Protestants of different denominations do not desire to subdivide their share?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Not at all, they all wish to work together.

Mr. Bowley, Q.C.—That is only confined to Fermanagh.

10291. Do I understand your argument to amount to this; first that the endowment should be divided once and for all; secondly, that the Fermanagh endowment should be confined to that district, and, thirdly, that two-thirds should be given to the Protestant Local Board, and one-third to the Catholic Local Board.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—If that be the proportion in which it is ascertained that the population require Intermediate education—that is, I contend, the way the funds should be disposed of.

Mr. E. P. Carter, Q.C.—I appear for the Most Rev. Dr. Donnelly, and there is one portion of Mr. Atkinson's argument in which I entirely concur. On behalf of Dr. Donnelly, I too would require that the whole of the endowment of the Fermanagh district should be applied in that district, and not outside it. In the first place, it appears to me that it is departing from the provisions of the Act of Parliament, under which the commission is constituted to apply any portion of the fund outside the particular district, and, secondly, it will work a particular hardship in the Fermanagh district, having regard to the ample provision made by the scheme for continuing the Armagh school. Clause 13 of the Act "provides that in every scheme which abolishes or modifies any privileges or educational advantages to which a particular class of persons is entitled, whether as inhabitants of a particular area or as belonging to a peculiar class in life, or otherwise, the commissioners shall have regard to the educational interests of such class of persons." Now, whether we take, as contended for by Mr. Bowley, the county as the area, or whether we adhere to the area adopted in the scheme, as I hope you will, and in which I on behalf of Dr. Donnelly entirely concur—the diocese—we have the endowment for the benefit of a particular class of persons, and due regard must be had to their educational interests. Such due regard would not be had if the scheme is carried out in its entirety as now framed. It would take away from the Fermanagh district an endowment which will be little enough for its educational requirements. There is this additional disadvantage and injustice, having regard to the provision in respect of Armagh school, that as long as the present head master is continued, and the school maintained there, there will be no fund coming from the Armagh district to supply the Armagh Catholic Board, and that board must be provided for by the other endowments. We feel it to be unfair that the Fermanagh district should be contributing to the support of the Armagh district, when the necessity for that support is caused by what we object to, the maintenance of the Armagh school in the way provided by the scheme. There is another portion of the scheme to which Dr. Donnelly had been led, by failing to understand the object of the minimum grant, to feel dissatisfaction; but having regard to the explanations given by Lord Justice Finliff and Dr. Molloy, that the object of the minimum grant was to give just such a sum as would get the school started, we withdraw our objection to the minimum grant. But we do object to the appropriation of the remaining sixty per cent. out of the Fermanagh district.

10292. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What do you propose instead?

Mr. Carter, Q.C.—That the sixty per cent. shall be applied to the schools in the Fermanagh district.

10293. You are not deprived by the scheme of any money except the matter you mentioned about Armagh, if you have the boys to earn it. I may say that the Armagh provision is certainly exceptional, and we wish to know what you suggest we should do for Armagh?

Aug. 3, 1898.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I agree with Mr. Atkinson that the endowment of each school should be applied to the district, and the Act of George IV. plainly provides that no portion of the income of an endowment shall be applied out of the district until the requirements of the schools in the district have first been satisfied.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You should say "school," for there was only one at that time, and £6,010 has been put by, which the Commissioners would not have had any right to put by if it was required for Fermagh. Furthermore, Enniskillen money has gone to Banagher and other places.

10294. Dr. TRAILL.—And you want to stop that, Mr. Carton?

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I want to propose that instead of being treated as a common fund, and being "distributed" in proportion to results, among the several local boards for the benefit of the intermediate schools situated in the several districts which fulfil the conditions hereinafter set forth, there should be substituted a provision that the 60 per cent. in the Fermagh district shall go in results fees for the schools of the Fermagh district, and in the same way in the other districts.

10295. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Do you prefer that it should go by results, or would you rather divide once and for all?

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I have no objection to results fees. I have that confidence in the Catholic schools that I believe they will be able to hold their own with the others.

10296. Take care. At present it is by no means clear that there is a single school in this Fermagh district that could come up to the conditions. St. Macarten's might, but it is near the border.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I will give you statistics in a moment upon that point.

10297. If so, no money will be diverted, for every boy from the Fermagh district who stands the test of having got intermediate education will contribute his share to the endowment; it is only in case of a greater proportionate number of boys getting such education elsewhere that any money would be diverted at all.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I say that no portion of the educational endowments of the Fermagh district should go to Armagh, if the Armagh endowment is devoted to keeping up the present school in place of going to support the Armagh Catholic Board.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—That is a mistake. There is nothing kept up in Armagh except existing vested interests. If you look at the scheme you will see that that is so. What is preserved in Armagh is only what is already included in Dr. Moore Morgan's vested interest, which we must save or pay for, even if it involves carrying on the school at the expense of the whole Armagh fund. I have shown that there is even a deficit in Armagh at present. The Commissioners are spending more on the school in which Dr. Moore Morgan has his vested interest—than the whole income. Your argument as to Armagh would result only in depriving the Armagh Catholic Board of everything so long as Dr. Moore Morgan's interest lasts.

10298. Rev. Dr. MORLEY.—Do you represent the Catholics of Armagh, Mr. Carton?

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—No, we are in conflict about that. They will complain if, until Dr. Morgan goes, they cannot get their full allowance from the Armagh endowment, but I submit that although the Armagh school is left where it is, it is unfair that the vested interests of the Armagh Board should be supplemented from the other districts. It is unfair to the school-going population of the Fermagh district. I submit also, with great respect, that it is giving the go-by to the 12th section of the Act. Then there is another point of view. It is said by Lord Justice FRANKLIN that the Fermagh boys would not be deprived of the sixty per cent. In one sense they would not, but in another sense they would, because the competition would be much more keen, if between the boys of the districts, as proposed by the scheme, than if the competition were confined to the boys of the particular district. And as I understand the scheme it does not propose to give results fees for each boy, but it distributes the 60 per cent. in proportion to the result of the marks obtained by a certain number of schools in the district complying with the conditions of the scheme. The Fermagh schools might fail in passing the requisite number of pupils, say in the Intermediate Examinations; and supposing, for instance, that the sum of £5 or £3 a head would be the result fee payable, if the total number of pupils didn't come up to the required standard, the 60 per cent. would not be paid.

10299. I think you are right. According to your proposal the whole 60 per cent. would be reserved to the Fermagh district; while according to the scheme Fermagh, instead of getting that 60 per cent., would get the right to compete for the whole surplus, and that would be loss of an educational advantage to Fermagh than it is entitled to?

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—Yes, that is putting my argument much better than I conveyed it. That is Dr. Donnelly's objection to this portion of the scheme. His idea is that we should be entitled to apply the 60 per cent. to Fermagh.

10300. You agree to the equal minimum grant?

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—Yes, when I am told that it is a minimum grant, not based on population, but the number of school-going children in the district, but a grant arrived at by the Commissioners as being the minimum which would enable a school to be started by each Board in the district.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It is a little more in the case of Enniskillen, on account of the estate being so much larger, than we would have thought necessary, but another element entered into it. We thought that if the income was to be increased there must be some pecuniary interest in the local board to secure the collection of the rents. Therefore we selected a percentage instead of a fixed sum.

10301. Rev. Dr. MORLEY.—The scheme provides that for the first three years the whole of the Enniskillen endowment shall be divided equally between the two boards. May we understand that you do not object to that?

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I certainly object to that, and I think that we ought to get a larger share. If we had been under the impression that the 20 per cent. would have been given to each on that principle, the objection to the minimum grant, which we withdrew, would have been persisted in.

10302. The division for three years was adopted rather on the ground that each board has an equal right to get substantial aid to enable it to establish at least one school.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—Mr. Atkinson's argument proceeded on the assumption that the endowment is to be retained for a body who do not want it. He says there are no Protestants in this district to take the Intermediate education, but that there are wealthy people there who send their children elsewhere. A body as wealthy as they are do not want the endowment, and yet it is said that they are to get an equal share of this endowment, which they do not require. Surely, you are not to give an endowment to an undeserving body, but, on the contrary, to a deserving body who have no fund or endowment from which to provide supplemental educational opportunities for the children of their way of thinking. He assumes that he has two-thirds of the literate population, and he says that he will hand in the figures; but if his figures are as fallacious as Mr. Dewey's, there is no reliance to be placed on them at all; and on behalf of Dr. Donnelly and the Catholics of Fermanagh, I entirely refuse to take the figures brought in by Mr. Bewley, when proved, and I will ask the gentlemen who compiled these figures how he arrived at them; they are at variance with all the information from the sources which are open to the general public. It has been stated that there is no demand for intermediate education in Monaghan. I have here a table which I will give by the Rev. Mr. McGlone, the head of St. Macartin's Seminary, which shows the state of education for the last ten years in the district of Monaghan and in the district of Fermanagh. As my table is so full of percentages, I will treat them to a few, though I have my own ideas about the fallacy of percentages. In round numbers, for a period of ten years, if we confine ourselves to the Fermanagh district, there would be on an average of fifty-nine Roman Catholic pupils receiving intermediate education, and there would be on an average of seventy-eight in the Monaghan district. But that only includes the children living in the districts. There were other pupils receiving intermediate education in both districts during those ten years, who, of course, would increase the average. The institutions in which that education is being given are—St. Macartin's Seminary, Monaghan; the Christian Schools, Monaghan; the Christian Schools, Enniskillen; the Intermediate School, Enniskillen; the Convent of St. Louis, Monaghan; and the Convent of Mercy, Enniskillen. The totals in the County Monaghan are—1879, 30; 1880, 40; 1881, 98; 1882, 71; 1883, 65; 1884, 48; 1885, 46; 1886, 57; 1887, 48; 1888, 45. The numbers in Fermanagh are—1879, 42; 1880, 32; 1881, 34; 1882, 20; 1883, 15; 1884, 8; 1885, 13; 1886, 10; 1887, 7; and 1888, 8. If we add the number of pupils receiving intermediate education who were not inhabitants of these two counties, the yearly average would be 91 for the two counties; 85 in 1879; 135 in 1880; 160 in 1881; 104 in 1882; 94 in 1883; 79 in 1884; 72 in 1885; 80 in 1886; 68 in 1887; and 64 in 1888. These figures are compiled in the only reliable way—namely, from the records of the schools which the children were actually attending. They are not compiled with a view of producing fractional percentages—percentages which are wholly misleading, and wholly insufficient for the purpose, because, as has been already pointed out by Dr. Moyley, they don't take into account the number of children who go into the Intermediate Examinations on private tuition, and they only give the children who attend some of the recognized colleges. Amongst the Catholics in the Fermanagh district you therefore have not alone a considerable demand for education, but actually a considerable number of children receiving intermediate education. You will see that the number of schools and for intermediate education among the Catholics largely preponderates over the number used by the Protestants, and so does the extent of that education supplied; and if there are not a sufficient number of Protestants there, or if they go elsewhere for their education, that is no reason why the endowment is to be retained for them, if they do not want it.

10306. Dr. TRAILL.—Can you tell us why St. Macartin's has suffered in the same way exactly as Portora since 1880? The boarders in St. Macartin's in 1880 were 58, and the day boys 90; in 1885 they had fallen—the boarders to 27, and the day boys to 5, so that the total appears in those six years to have been reduced from 148 to 32.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—The total I have given includes the Convent of St. Louis, Monaghan, and the Convent of Mercy, Enniskillen.

10304. The contrast with Portora applies to St. Macartin's individually, for it has suffered exactly as Portora has suffered.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—Not, I maintain, to the same extent.

10305. Well, it has been reduced in numbers from seventy-six to thirty-two.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—In 1880 there were forty boarders—according to this return that I have.

Dr. TRAILL.—No, there were fifty-six boarders, and twenty day boys.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—Recollect this total of mine only includes the children of the district.

10306. Lord Justice FRANKENSON.—You left out the boarders not from the district?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—Yes, quite so.

10307. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You propose to restrict the endowment to the district?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—Certainly.

10308. Do you admit the principle of competition among the schools in the district?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—Yes, we are quite prepared to accept that.

10309. Would you allow the schools in the district to earn fees on boys who did not belong to the district?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—It is utterly impossible to draw a hard-and-fast line, and to say that a boy in a school is to be excluded on a question of boundary.

10310. Then in point of fact you propose to extend the benefits of the endowment outside the locality?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—It would be utterly impossible to work a school if you were to confine the endowment too strictly in that way.

10311. Lord Justice FRANKENSON.—That was one of the arguments that prevailed with me in favour of the proposal made in the scheme, because, if there is a better school at any time in Fermanagh than in Tyrone a number of Tyrone boys will go to Fermanagh, but if, on the other hand, the Tyrone school becomes better than the Fermanagh school, those boys will go back to Tyrone, and additional ones from Fermanagh will go besides. Boys are brought to the school by its excellence, and that excellence ought to be rewarded. It appears, therefore, to be fair that the results fees should go in proportion to the number of boys at the schools all over the district. If, on the other hand, purely local considerations only should have weight in awarding this endowment, you must exclude all boys from consideration, whether boarders or day boys, who are not natives of the immediate locality.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—Boys from adjoining districts won't be attracted unless the school is a good school.

10312. Boys from the other districts, as well as from other places, will be attracted, and ought to be paid for.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—The boys of the district must necessarily go to the only school available. The boys in Enniskillen must go to the only school in Enniskillen.

10313. We have it in evidence that boys who ought to go to Portora are going to the model schools at Enniskillen. Why should Portora be paid for them nevertheless?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—If you get a good school it will be kept up not only by the local pupils but also by the pupils from elsewhere. You raise the tone of education, and that reacts for the benefit of the local boys as well as the others; and, therefore, it is worth while to spend part of the endowment on the foreign boys as one of the means of raising the tone of the school.

10314. That seems to cut against your argument for county by county, or diocese by diocese division, for if there is a good school in Fermanagh boys of all the neighbouring counties would get the benefit.

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—And the result would be a much better school for the Enniskillen boys.

10315. Yet you wish to have your competition confined to Fermanagh?

Mr. CARTON, G.C.—What I want is, that the interests of the particular class entitled to share in the endowment should have proper regard paid to them under the 18th section; and I say that that can only be done adequately and properly by confining the benefit of each endowment to the schools within the particular district.

Aug. 4, 1885.

10316. I think it is only fair to tell you that we have given this question much consideration, and to show you how your proposal would work. About 1878, when Dr. Hume was head master of Monaghan Diocesan school, he had, I think, 120 pupils, chiefly boarders. He rented one or two houses for them besides the school buildings. Under your plan Monaghan would, in that state of affairs, not have got one shilling from the endowments of the other districts, though the schools of these districts had been divided into the Monaghan school; according to our plan, as long as any district succeeded in keeping up such a good school, it would be paid, not only from its own endowment but from the other districts besides, in proportion to the number of pupils whom it attracted from them, and educated for them.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—A good answer to that is that the Monaghan Diocesan school would not be a school at all under the jurisdiction of the Fermanagh Catholic Board.

10317. But you told us you were willing to compete with schools of all denominations in your own district.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—Certainly.

10318. Therefore every boy in St. Macartin's would earn exactly the same amount for that school as a pupil of the Diocesan school would earn for it.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—I said, I would not be afraid of Catholic boys meeting their Protestant rivals if you keep the endowment in the district, and do equal justice by providing what you have described as an automatic mode of division. But if you depart from that, and go into the question of numbers of heads and numbers of school-going children, or of children requiring intermediate education, you at once establish a test which will require periodical revision.

10319. Professor DOWNHAM.—The moment you admit boys for competition, who do not belong to the district, it appears to me you extend the benefit of the endowment beyond the limits of the district.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—It would be impossible, as it appears to me, to work a school satisfactorily if you treated a certain class of boys as having exceptional privileges over the others, and the result would be that you would keep away all except local boys, and would deprive the local boys of that healthy competition which must have the effect of raising the standard of the school, and of education in the district. Therefore it appears to me that some automatic scheme—which won't require periodical revision—for once we get into the question of figures it really comes round to the question of population—would be the fairest in the end. I would refer to the evidence of Dr. Delany in your report of 1883, in which he, who had great experience on this question, goes very fully into the question and examines several tests, and shows that in the end they are open to the objection that they are rough and ready, and asserts that the only satisfactory basis is founded upon population, but that it has the disadvantage of requiring periodical revision. And in answer to the argument advanced by Mr. Atkinson, and repeatedly pressed, that there are a larger number of Protestants fit for intermediate education than there are Catholics, one should not lose sight of the fact that up to the present Catholic education was entirely unendowed—and that any education which the Catholics have got they have given to themselves, and at their own expense. Now that a better time has dawned, and that they are going to share in the State endowments, it is only natural to suppose that Catholic education will advance, and that the increased endowments will enable the Catholics to do better than they have done in the past, although the past has been a very brilliant one.

Professor DOWNHAM.—You must remember that more than half the Protestants of Ulster have been in precisely the same position as the Roman Catholics as regards educational endowments. The endowments have hitherto been practically restricted to one Protestant sect, numbering about half the Protestant population.

10320. Rev. Dr. MCELROY.—You didn't say anything, Mr. Carton, about the distribution of the endowment during the first three years?

Mr. CARTON, Q.—What I submit about that is that the principle of the scheme does not admit of an equal distribution between Protestants and Catholics. In the Fermanagh district, whether you take the basis suggested by Mr. Atkinson, on the basis of the persons receiving intermediate education, or the basis of population, the Catholics will be found to be in the majority, and entitled to a larger share of the endowment. I accept the equal division of the 50 per cent, not as a recognition of the rights of any denomination, but as given simply as a sufficient sum to keep up the schools, the principle being that there should be one school under a Catholic and another school under a Protestant board; but when you come to divide the entire endowment for the first three years you must proceed upon some principle, and it appears to me that there is no principle to justify you in saying that the Catholics on the one side or the Protestant denominations on the other are entitled to share the endowment equally. If that proposition were carried to its full extent the work of the Commission would be much simplified, because all it would have to say would be that the Catholic Board should get one-half and the Protestant Board the other half. It appears to me that the provision for the first three years is a departure from the proper rule.

10321. Dr. TRAILL.—What proportion do you suggest?

Mr. CARTON, Q.—I do not see why the scheme should not start from the beginning.

10322. Rev. Dr. MCELROY.—There would be very many difficulties in getting it into operation at once. It was with a view to getting rid of these practical difficulties that we thought we would allow each board a period of three years to put its house in order, to see what it should do. If it had a school, to put it in good condition, and if it had not a school, to accumulate funds for three years with which to build a school. We should like to know your view on the supposition that there would be a period of three years allowed, during which the full scheme would not come into operation, and what distribution you would consider equitable during that period of three years.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—I think the proper distribution would be according to the population.

10323. Dr. TRAILL.—But one-half of the population cannot read and write. There are 52,754 of the Roman Catholic population in the Fermanagh District who cannot read and write at all.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—But I take it you must have some principle to go upon.

10324. Surely one of the first principles you must go upon is that you must teach a man to read and write before he can be taught Greek.

Mr. CARTON, Q.—You must have some principle.

Lord Justice FRYGEORGE.—I told you that the result of all the tests came nearer to half and half than any other manageable figure.

Rev. Dr. MCELROY.—We wish to apply the same principle of distribution to all the localities, and taking all the localities together we consider that the Roman population are about half and half, but we shall be glad to get evidence on that subject, because it is a difficult point to determine.

10325. Lord Justice FRYGEORGE.—You may be ready to work the scheme at once, but others are not so, and we want to give a period for preparation during which we allow absolute discretion to each local board to apply its money as so ultimately to be most useful. We don't think we can do better than to give all a fair start on equal terms, and that was our reason for dividing "half-and-half" during the preparatory period of three years.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—In Monaghan and Fermagh there is a population of 58,888, of which the Roman Catholics number 33,568, and the Protestants 25,480.

10326. Dr. TRAILL.—That is about 60 to 45, and the difference between that proportion and half-and-half is hardly worth the trouble of calculation.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—Taking a calculation of half-and-half is really skirting the difficulty.

10327. Rev. Dr. MOLLOR.—It was not to skirt the difficulty that we did it, but because we took the five areas together.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—That is what I complain of. 10328. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—If you take the districts one by one, the result would be to destroy the interests of some denominations altogether in some places.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I am only interested at present in Fermagh.

10329. You must excuse us for taking a wider view. And you might remember that we have been charged with unduly favouring you by adding Monaghan where there are 75 per cent. of Roman Catholics, whereas you have only 40 per cent. of the same population in Fermagh.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—I do not understand what is to become of Armagh during the first three years?

10330. Rev. Dr. MOLLOR.—The endowment of Armagh for the first three years must go to meet Dr. Morgan's vested interests, so far as it is absorbed by these vested interests; and the 20 per cent. minimum for the Catholic Board is to be provided by a poundage rate on the other endowments.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—But the scheme does not come into operation for the three years.

10331. It does, but so long as Dr. Morgan's vested interest continues, there is nothing to be got out of the Armagh endowment.

Mr. CARTON, Q.C.—That is what we complain of.

Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—It is not a matter of complaint. It is by law a price charge which we must either save or give due compensation for. Owing to his age, and to the value of his position, the value of his interest if paid for now would cripple the Armagh endowment for ever. If his interest drops during the three years, the contribution from the other districts comes at once.

Mr. JOHN ROOKE, Q.C.—The difficulty is obvious, but what we submit is that the present provision as to Armagh is unfair, and departs from the principle upon which the rest of the scheme is based. The net income of these Armagh schools appears to be £244. The scheme proposes to give out of that income £175 towards the expense of keeping up the establishment; £400 as the salary of Dr. Morgan; £150 as the salary of the Assistant Master, and for exhibitions, say £300 a year. The result will be to exhaust the whole income during the lifetime and continuance of the vested interest of Dr. Morgan.

10332. Rev. Dr. MOLLOR.—We are bound by our Act to provide for Dr. Morgan's vested interests, and that will absorb the whole endowment. Do you propose that his services in teaching should not be taken advantage of? Somebody must get the benefit of his teaching.

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—At present I only want to call attention to the manifest anomaly of the whole thing; and then a suggestion will have to be made as to how the difficulty can be solved, so as to bring about some more equitable arrangement. The houses and premises are to remain—and what for? It is said for the benefit of Dr. Morgan. Are they not to remain for the benefit of the Protestant Local Board, with the result that the whole benefit of this endowment is to go to the Protestants of the Armagh district for the lifetime of Dr. Moore Morgan?

10333. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Has not Dr. Morgan got a freehold interest not only in his salary, but also in the schoolhouse?

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—He has a freehold interest in his residence.

Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—And in the school.

Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—You cannot possibly overstate the fact, and it may be taken down once and for all, that the practical effect of the scheme is that Dr. Morgan will receive substantially the whole income of the Armagh endowment as long as he holds his present position, and we are of opinion that as he has it now we cannot deprive him of it, unless we give him a sum of money so large that it would cripple the Armagh endowment, and run away with at least half of the Armagh capital for ever. As we therefore think that we must save his interest, we think we ought, in return, to require him to continue his teaching for the Protestants. What harm does that do to you? How will you benefit if we let him retire on full pay, and do nothing?

10334. Rev. Dr. MOLLOR.—You said you had a suggestion to make.

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—The suggestion is that Dr. Morgan's interest in his salary should be purchased, and if he has a vested interest in anything more, as he has of course in the residence, this goes for the benefit of the Protestant Local Board, and should be taken into account.

10335. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—The scheme does that. The scheme allows nothing to the Protestant Local Board so long as Dr. Moore Morgan gets this endowment.

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—It appears to provide minimum and results fees.

10336. You, but both are written off against Dr. Morgan's allowance, and the Armagh Protestant Local Board can draw nothing whatever, either by way of surplus or minimum grant, out of the common fund until they earn more than the whole amount of Dr. Moore Morgan's vested interest.

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—The true effect of it is that the Protestants of Armagh get for an indefinite period, for the whole life of Dr. Morgan, a proportion of the endowment which is distinctly contrary to every other provision in your scheme. We object to that, and think it can be adjusted. There is no equality whatever in it, no reference to the needs of the district, to the number of Catholics requiring intermediate education—it departs altogether from the principle of the scheme. Is there no means of obtaining aid from the fund at the disposal of the Commissioners so as to give the Catholics of Armagh something in support of free education beyond this miserable 20 per cent.?

10337. Rev. Dr. MOLLOR.—We should be glad to do it, if you could show us how it can be done?

Dr. TRAILL.—Don't you think it would be rather an act of dishonesty to the Protestants if your argument was acted upon—if the Protestant school should be shut up in order to pay off the vested interest, and to give the Roman Catholics of Armagh speedy aid in their educational work?

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—What are you doing with Fortum?

Dr. TRAILL.—Perhaps has worked out its own closing. It is a fast-decaying school.

10338. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—You are under a misapprehension as to what the Armagh Catholic Local Board will get under the scheme. We regarded this minimum grant as a sum which would enable them to start a school or to maintain the existing St. Patrick's College efficiently. The moment they got that done, they can compete with Enniskillen and all the other districts for the surplus of all the endowments. The only loss is the common loss which everybody has to share—namely, that so long as Dr. Morgan's vested interest lasts and is a prior charge, the amount of his vested interest will not go into the surplus nor be open for competition, we cannot take it from him, and the whole fund will be reduced by that amount.

Aug. 2, 1888.

Aug. 5, 1918.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—I think the Protestants of the district have much more reason to complain than the Catholics of Armagh.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We have considered this carefully, and if you can give us any practical suggestion we shall be glad to receive it. It cannot be denied that the position of the Catholic Board of Armagh is anomalous, but it is the consequence of an Act of Parliament which we cannot override. Without going into the question of amount at present, do you suggest that we should provide for his interest by giving him a bulk sum to compensate him for that vested interest, and then visit Armagh on the same terms as all the other endowments?

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—Yes.

10339. Do you propose that the purchase money of Dr. Moore Morgan's vested interest should be taken from the Armagh endowment, or from the whole of the endowments put together?

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—That is a matter of detail that I have not considered.

10340. If you propose to take it from the Armagh endowment it will probably absorb the whole of it for a long period of years, and if you propose to take it from the bulk of the endowments put together, then you will have them all rising up in arms against you, because there are already some matters about our giving you even the 20 per cent. out of their funds.

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—But I observe from the same matters that even Mr. Curran does not agree that you are making an equitable disposition of the funds of the Armagh district. You should not be frightened by such matters, but be firm in your determination to arrive at a just and equitable distribution of these funds.

10341. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—"Justice" and "Equity" are fine words, but they cannot do away with Dr. Moore Morgan's vested interest. If you can suggest any practical way of providing for his interest that will remove your objections, we shall be very glad of it.

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—The effect of dealing with the vested interest of Dr. Morgan in this particular manner is that the benefit of the whole of the buildings for this school goes to the Protestant Board free of rent. They get the full benefit of them.

10342. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—That is exactly the point I wanted you to come to. We consider, in the interests of education, that being obliged to pay Dr. Moore Morgan the value of the Armagh endowment for an indefinite number of years, we are bound to get some educational work from him in return. Can you suggest any way in which you can get part of that educational benefit? If your clients should desire to avail themselves of the instruction given by Dr. Morgan, we will give you the benefit of one half of his instruction during the time he remains.

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—If the Commissioners will not put in operation the power which they have to purchase out Dr. Morgan it is quite obvious that there is no process of argument by which £214 can do the work of £1,000.

10343. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The scheme is framed on the assumption that in no view of Dr. Morgan's vested interest can we reduce its value below a figure which would, if we paid him off, leave nothing for the Armagh endowment.

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—As you have only the two funds—the local and a general fund—if you don't draw from the general fund a larger sum than this 20 per cent. of course the difficulty cannot be overcome.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Your lordship, in alluding to the Curran school, stated that Mr. Prior Moore had been originally appointed as a salary of £300 a year, but that, owing to the inefficient way in which the school had been conducted, the salary was cut down in 1848 and 1849 to £100. Now, the facts of the case are these:—Dr. Moore was appointed in 1831, by Royal Letters Patent, and the very next year, in consequence of deficient funds, the salary was reduced. I was anxious to make that explanation because your lordship's observation this morning caused Dr. Moore some pain.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I am sorry if anything I said caused pain to anyone, but I referred to the account given in the reports of 1859 and 1880 as to the reduction of Dr. Moore's salary, which is important on this matter of vested interests. If you look at those reports you will see that the Commissioners had funds enough, but reduced his salary against his protest, and treated him as not having an absolute right to it. It was reduced twice I think, and the reports state that the reduction was made in consequence of the condition of the school.

The Commissioners adjourned.

PUBLIC SITTING.—FRIDAY, AUGUST 3, 1888.

In the Court of Chancery, Four Courts, Dublin.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERBON, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAISH, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.S.C., ANTHONY TRAILL, Esq., LL.D., M.D., F.T.C.D., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Secretary, WM. EDWARD ELLIS, Esq., LL.B., and the Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Junr., were in attendance.

THE ROYAL SCHOOL ENDOWMENTS, AND OTHER EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENTS
ADMINISTERED BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

The same counsel, solicitors, and parties were in attendance.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—I have further particulars in reference to the Intermediate Examinations in which the names and addresses are given. In Armagh, 1886, there were 16 from Lurgan College, 7 from Newry Endowed School, 2 from Portadown Academy, 1 from Cathedral School, Armagh, 3 from College-street National School, and 5 from private addresses. These are Protestants—35 altogether.

Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—Dr. Morgan, who prepared these* returns, has been already before us as a witness, and will kindly sign and read in the return.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—In 1886 there are five boys who give private addresses, and of whose origin or religion we know nothing. In the next year's return there are seven similar cases—in every other case the religion is ascertainable.

10344. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Can you distinguish between the various Protestant denominations?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—No, we cannot.

10345. How many years does your return cover?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—1886 and 1887.

The Most Rev. Dr. LOGAN (Roman Catholic Primate).—I have a word to say on this matter. The test proposed to be applied by Mr. Adkinson last evening for the purpose of ascertaining the number of persons likely to require intermediate education is a very fallacious test, because the greater number of our boys do not go in for the Intermediate Examinations at all on account of the limit of age. In the Armagh Sanitary we have twenty-five receiving intermediate education, of whom only four were able to go up for the examination as being within the required age. We have forty girls receiving education at our convent school, and the same do not send up any of their pupils for the same reason.

10346. Dr. TRAILL.—If the age for admission were lowered, would the same send them up?

Dr. LOGAN.—Apart altogether from the question of age, the same would send up their pupils for the Intermediate Examinations.

10347. What is the age that you complain of being too low?

Dr. LOGAN.—We don't want to alter the age test for the Intermediate Examinations, but we are giving a grammar school education to all our pupils, and yet there are but four of them whom we can send in for the Intermediate Examinations.

10348. What ages are your other pupils?

Dr. LOGAN.—Many of the boys enter the Sanitary between fifteen and sixteen, finishing the course there between eighteen and nineteen, and are then thrown out from all grades of the Intermediate.

10349. You don't call these "school boys"?

Dr. LOGAN.—The whole intermediate test is most fallacious in my opinion. In the next place, a number of our boys are going in for secular permits, and are educated at Blackrock, Castleknock, and elsewhere. Our secular school is Saint Mary's, Dondalk, where there are eighty-six boys; very many of them from the diocese of Armagh. But the pupils in Dr. Morgan's return sent in for Intermediate Examinations are from all parts of the country.

10350. Dr. Morgan does not send up boys to the intermediate examinations.

Dr. LOGAN.—He did formerly. But taking the boys that came up from a particular district is no test of the number of pupils who require intermediate education in that district. Some of the other tests brought forward here are most fallacious. I have heard of many tests both of the capabilities and the requirements of pupils in this age of supposed culture, but certainly for novelty, I never heard of any test like the one devised by Mr. Adkinson, that of the Government valuation. There has been a great deal said about Griffith's valuation of late years, but I never before heard of its being applied as a test of the capability of boys for education.

10351. It was not given as a test of education, but of the number of persons able to pay for the education of their sons.

Dr. LOGAN.—But you cannot argue against facts—and one fact is that persons of lower valuation are managing to educate their boys.

10352. They don't pay; they get assistance.

Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—On the question of valuation it must be remembered that the greater number of those needing intermediate education live in towns, where the valuation is much lower.

Dr. LOGAN.—I was engaged in the work of education myself for about twelve years, and if I had to put aside all the boys who in my experience were being educated, and whose fathers were under £30 valuation, it would totally misrepresent the needs of Catholic education. That a boy's ability, and the utility of giving him a good education are to be measured by the amount his father pays for his farm, is ridiculous.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—I am prepared to prove that in these two years no boys were sent up directly from the Armagh school to the intermediate examinations so that the return is practically against us.

Mr. J. J. SHAW.—In general terms the Education Committee of the General Assembly, having very carefully considered this scheme, are, on the whole, perfectly satisfied with it, subject to a few details which I will mention immediately. They assent entirely to the principle of the minimum grant, but there is just one point in relation to it which they wish to bring before the Commission. It is left entirely to the discretion of the Local Boards whether they shall give the whole of the minimum grant to one school, or distribute it among several, and they have the absolute discretion to which school, or to which of several schools * See Appendix B, No. LXIV, pp. 642-651.

Aug. 5, 1905.

in their district, fulfilling the conditions, the grant shall be given. It has occurred to me that possibly the scheme would work better if definite provisions were put into it in relation to the allocation of the minimum grant. In the first place, if the minimum grant be really the least sum that would be of substantial use to a school, it ought to be concentrated upon one school under the Local Board, and that the Local Board should not have power to make it anders for the purpose intended, by scattering it over two or three schools.

10353. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We are rather surprised to hear you open this view. It was our wish to have the minimum grant applied to only one school, but we were afraid of opposition from the Presbyterians if we compelled each Protestant Local Board to give it all to one school.

Mr. Stans.—Our view entirely turns upon the grant being really a minimum grant.

10354. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It is, in our opinion, as small a sum as would be of substantial use.

Rev. Dr. MILLER.—It is to be borne in mind that in a particular district there might be more than one school which would have such assistance from other sources, that something less than the minimum grant would be a substantial aid to them, and the Local Board might think it desirable to divide it between schools having such other source of income.

Mr. Stans.—If the sum is the smallest that would be of any use to set or keep a school afloat, it should be given to one school only, otherwise the effect of the whole grant would be destroyed if the small sum which was the minimum for one school were distributed over several.

10355. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We are giving to the bodies which we are trying to create the fullest freedom, which we regard as the best assurance of success. Our object has everywhere been to try to create good governing bodies, and then to let them govern themselves. To get any part of the grant the school must be a considerable school, and at present we do not think that there is a single one of these districts in which more than a very small number of schools could qualify; as a matter of fact in some of them there is but one possible school for each denomination at the present time.

Mr. Stans.—If there is only one qualified school it would get the whole grant.

10356. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Certainly. Therefore, in that case, your argument would not apply. If there were two or more qualified schools we would wish the local governing body to be free to use their discretion either to divide the endowment or to concentrate it. In Armagh, for instance, Welles' School, Lurgan, has existed for some years, and plays an important part in the educational work of that district. The Protestant Board might give the grant to the Armagh Royal School alone, supposing they kept it up under the scheme, or might give a grant to the Lurgan school. We wanted to leave it open to aid one school or more, and if different denominations had each a school, each might get a share, or if there was only one good school in the district the Board would devote the grant entirely to that school. In Raphoe, for instance, there would probably be but one, and that mainly a Presbyterian school.

Mr. Stans.—There are no special conditions attached to the school which gets the minimum grant, and we are of opinion that if one school gets the whole of the minimum grant, there ought to be special conditions of educational efficiency attached to that school more than the usual conditions which attach to other schools which receive only a share.

10357. Rev. Dr. MILLER.—There is one special condition, and that is that they must continue to possess the qualifications laid down in the scheme.

Mr. Stans.—But that is not a condition of educational efficiency.

10358. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The general conditions are intended to be so framed as to secure efficiency in all schools qualified to receive any share of the grant.

Mr. Stans.—We think that there ought to be special conditions under the circumstances I have mentioned.

10359. Rev. Dr. MILLER.—There are special conditions as to the number of pupils, but you propose to reduce that number.

Mr. Stans.—Yes, in the matter of pupil fees.

10360. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Is not that hostile to your present contention?

Mr. Stans.—No. We don't want that condition to apply to the schools getting the minimum grant. I submit that the school which gets the minimum grant ought, at least, to have twenty-five pupils in attendance, but that any other schools getting results fees should not be required to have more than ten.

10361. Dr. TRAILL.—Does not that rather work against your printed objection?

Mr. Stans.—It does not refer to those who are to get the minimum grant at all.

10362. Dr. TRAILL.—Yes, but it refers to section 45 which applies both to the residue and the minimum grant.

Mr. Stans.—That objection was intended to apply only with reference to results fees.

10363. Dr. TRAILL.—It is very important that you should state that now.

Mr. Stans.—We are anxious with regard to small schools in a district, but the Presbyterians think that small schools at frequent intervals through a district are not so satisfactory, and that it would be better for future interests if one large school were supported; and, therefore, we submit that as the Intermediate Education Commissioners have fixed ten pupils as the standard of intermediate schools in efficient operation, we ask you to take the same number of ten pupils receiving intermediate education as the condition for results fees, but that the limitation of twenty-five should apply to the school getting the minimum grant.

10364. Rev. Dr. MILLER.—I wish to call your attention to one point in connection with your objection to which you are now referring. Your proposal is that the number of pupils required to attend the school should be reduced to ten. And that the number who pass the examination should be one for every five pupils in regular attendance at the school. The effect of this proposal, if adopted, would be that a school having 100 pupils that would pass nineteen would be disqualified, whereas a school that had ten pupils and passed two would be qualified.

Mr. Stans.—Well, you thought that was a correct test of educational efficiency.

10365. And do you really propose that a school with 100 pupils that passed nineteen should be disqualified, and that a school that had ten pupils, and passed two, should be qualified?

Mr. Stans.—Yes; because the true test of educational efficiency is not the number, but the proportion that passes.

10366. Then you think a school is less qualified that passes nineteen than one that passes two?

10367. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—A school might be disqualified by the existence in it of a preparatory department. In fact junior or preparatory pupils would disqualify a school which might get a large grant if they were not taught in it.

Mr. Stans.—Those numbers all refer to those receiving intermediate education.

10368. But pupils too young to go up to the examinations may be receiving intermediate education. For example, a large school which maintained a junior or preparatory department attached to it would be disqualified from receiving any share of the Royal endowment—through your objection—while a smaller school preparing and passing a less number of pupils, but without any such preparatory department, would suffer from no such disadvantage.

Aug. 2, 1888.

Mr. Stow.—I think that difficulty could be met.

10368. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It can be met by leaving the scheme as it is.

Mr. Stow.—I don't think so, because the scheme fixes an arbitrary number for passing, no matter whether the school has 200 or twenty-five pupils—they are qualified if they pass ten pupils. We say that a school with 200 pupils in attendance that is only able to pass ten is not a school showing a high state of educational efficiency at all; whereas a school with ten pupils that is able to pass two boys is a very good school.

10370. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—Then your argument is that if a large school with 100 boys passed nineteen it should be disqualified, whereas another with 10 pupils if it passed two should be qualified?

Mr. Stow.—Yes, that would be the result, taking the proportionate numbers.

10371. Then is the school that passes nineteen doing less educational work?

Mr. Stow.—It is a less efficient school from an educational point of view.

10372. Dr. TRAILL.—It is not less efficient as regards the nineteen pupils it passes, whereas there must be something radically wrong with a school that has only 10 pupils, and only passes two.

Mr. Stow.—A school may be small not from reasons of educational inefficiency, but from the circumstances of the district in which it is situated.

10373. It is a very bad school that is so small as that. You would not have an efficient staff of masters for so few boys. You would have one master teaching all the subjects to the boys, and that always results in bad education. A large school with plenty of masters dividing the subjects is much better.

Mr. Stow.—You must take things as you find them, and if you have a country school where you could not have 100 pupils, but where you have a smaller number, and if that school is well conducted and the same proportion of your pupils pass the examination that a large school is able to pass, surely that is a true test of educational efficiency?

10374. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It may be a test of educational efficiency suitable to a village school, but it is not a test as to whether it is a school of the class to which this endowment ought to go. Your argument raises the question whether this endowment should not be applied for grammar schools of substantial size.

Mr. Stow.—It depends upon whether you should encourage large or small schools.

10375. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We have only a small sum of money, and we think we apply it to the best advantage by confining it to a small number of considerable schools.

Mr. Stow.—The minimum grant will go wholly to the large schools.

10376. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Then why is not the machine to go to similar schools? You admit that the Local Board may be compelled to spend the whole of the minimum grant upon one, and if that is a big school it must have a large claim to the residue also.

Mr. Stow.—I think that ought to be accompanied by stringent conditions that would compel a school receiving that grant to give strong evidence of educational efficiency.

10377. What conditions do you suggest?

Mr. Stow.—First, that there should be an increased number of pupils, and, if necessary, an increased proportion of passes.

10378. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—What number do you propose?

Mr. Stow.—At present the suggestion is that there should be at least twenty-five, but we propose that any school having ten pupils receiving intermediate education and passing two, should be eligible for results fees.

10379. You propose to leave the scheme as it stands for the exclusion of small schools from the minimum grant, and to reduce the qualification for the schools that share the results fees?

Mr. Stow.—Yes, and, if possible, to have imposed some more stringent conditions as to efficiency, over and above numbers, as regards the school getting the minimum grant.

10380. What more stringent conditions do you propose?

Mr. Stow.—That a large proportion of passes should be required in the case of schools getting the minimum grant.

10381. What number would you say?

Mr. Stow.—I propose that for every school receiving results fees ten in five.

10382. Dr. TRAILL.—There might be a large number of stupid pupils, and the clever boys only would be taught.

Mr. Stow.—You must take an average. The Education Committee which I represent are entirely in favour of dividing the whole of the results fees over all the districts, and not confining the income of a particular district to that particular district.

10383. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It is right to point out that your arguments, when you come to practice, seem to neutralise each other. If you reduce the qualification of the schools sharing the surplus, you increase their number and lessen the amount which each will get. On the other hand, if you distribute the surplus by results over the whole area, the very fact that you extend the area will attract the greater part of it to larger schools, therefore the schools that will suffer by increasing the number of small schools that are to share, are the biggest schools in the whole area, but those will be the very schools on which you want to impose special conditions, namely, the minimum grant schools, and so you will be injuring the best schools by withdrawing from them the amount of all the small grants expended upon the smaller ones.

Mr. Stow.—Surely if a school becomes large by attracting boarders from other districts—we have been told boarders are the best paying pupils—and, therefore, if a school by educational efficiency is able to attract from other districts a large number of boarding pupils, it will be thus, pro tanto, rendered independent of results fees and it is not at all so necessary that it should get them.

10384. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The object of your argument is to administer the endowment like cod-liver oil to consumptive patients, rather than giving it as food to healthy persons.

Mr. Stow.—We want the endowment to be administered to perfectly healthy subjects. We don't want to give the grant to inefficient schools; we only want that when a healthy, good working school is maintained that it shall not be shut out from a share of the endowment because it happens to be a small school, which may be the result of its circumstances and not from any fault of its educational efficiency.

10385. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—You are in favour of distributing the surplus over the whole area?

Mr. Stow.—Yes, and for this reason—that the result of confining the results fees to each particular district would be, for example in Fermanagh, where there is a very large surplus to be distributed, and a very small number of pupils obtaining results fees,—that the results fees in that case would be enormous; whereas in the case of Raploe where the local endowment is very small and the number of pupils who would obtain the results fees might be large—the results fees would be miserable.

Aug. 8, 1885.

10381. Dr. TRAILL.—How many teachers would you have in a school of ten pupils which passed two? What appliances could there be for education there? What money would the master have to pay for assistants? The whole education there would depend on one man teaching, every day, every boy of every age, every subject.

Mr. SHAW.—If that man is able to pass his pupils, shouldn't he be paid for the result?

10382. Dr. TRAILL.—It is a very bad result.

Mr. SHAW.—It is a very good proportion, which is just the same.

Dr. TRAILL.—You might just as well say that if a governor passed a clever boy out of a private family it would be a good general educational result.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think you are confounding two things, Mr. Shaw. No doubt it is a very creditable thing for the master to do, but it is not a very useful thing for the general education of the country, because these boys, as Dr. Traill has pointed out, of every age, would have to be taught every subject by one master.

Mr. SHAW.—Surely it simply comes to this: is this Commission to say that the educational efficiency of a country is best promoted by shutting out from education boys who are unable to come up to a large centre?

10383. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think that education should be brought home as far as possible to everybody, but I don't think it should be done with this sort of endowment, which was manifestly intended for intermediate schools; I think we ought to take care that the schools which get a share of this endowment are bona fide intermediate schools. That would be my view. But I think we understand you now.

Mr. SHAW.—There is one objection to which we attach a considerable amount of importance in section 44, the reading of the word "shall" for "may." We think it ought not to be left optional to the local boards to claim for an intermediate school within their district that fulfils the conditions. We think it ought to be made compulsory wherever an intermediate school fairly attains the conditions laid down in the scheme, it ought to be compulsory on the local board to claim for it. The local board should not have it in their power to pick and choose among the schools that are efficient in their district—or to which should get the results and which should not.

10384. Lord Justice FRASER.—Under the scheme the local board cannot claim for any school, unless it is managed by the local board itself, or by a school committee. Would you propose if a private master set up a school in opposition to the local board's schools, that they should be compelled to pay him?

Mr. SHAW.—Why should not any school be paid that complies with the conditions?

Lord Justice FRASER.—We could not allow every school that taught a certain number of pupils to come in for a share of this money; if so, any private master setting up a school of his own in opposition to the local school, and working it as a private speculation, would have the right to share this public money. We give this public money only to some sort of public institution open to supervision.

Mr. SHAW.—The next point is one which I understand the Commissioners would be glad to adopt, that mixed schools of boys and girls should be qualified. But there is another point of importance, that no results fees should be paid in respect of any pupil unless the pupil or his parents reside within the district. This is to carry out more fully the basis of this scheme to promote the educational interests of the district. We think it would be unfair that a school supplied largely, or perhaps altogether, not from the district, but from outside, should be receiving results fees and minimum grants in respect of pupils who do not belong to the district by birth, connection, or otherwise. If a school, like the Royal schools of Dungannon or Armagh, depends largely for its support upon supplies drawn from all parts of the kingdom, surely that means that it is a large boarding school, and that it would derive a very large income from boarding pupils, which are the part of a school that pays best. Surely that is a sufficient encouragement for bringing in pupils from a distance without at the same time giving them results fees, intended primarily for the protection of the education of boys born in the district; therefore we submit that results fees should not be claimable in respect of any pupils not connected with the district either by birth or by their parents' residence.

10385. Dr. TRAILL.—Would it meet your view if we were to put in a condition that each school should have a certain proportion of day boys? Would it not be very hard on a highly efficient school, in which the education of the day boys ought to become more efficient owing to the school keeping a large staff on account of boarders, that they should not get results fees for pupils coming from a distance, and that one set of pupils could earn results fees and the other could not? I think your objection cannot be a good one, for a school could hardly be a very efficient boarding school that had no day boys at all. If the school had a certain number of day boys, would it not meet your requirements?

Mr. SHAW.—Our real objection is that the boys who come from a distance do not require, as a general rule, any assistance in their education at all—they are well able to pay for their education, and for their board, and they support the school and are a great benefit to it by coming from a distance.

10386. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We don't regard it as giving help to the boys coming from a distance; but as giving help towards making the school a thoroughly efficient school in the district. When a school proves its efficiency by attracting boys from all parts of the country, the boys of the district gain the advantage of having a thoroughly efficient school in their immediate neighbourhood, and such a school we consider entitled to be maintained out of the endowment, in a degree proportionate to the work it is doing.

Mr. SHAW.—Supposing a school, either by a prohibitive tariff or otherwise, becomes a school for the children of the richer people from a distance who send their sons as boarders, and that the boys of the district do not or cannot avail themselves of the school, how does the existence of that school in the district help the education of the district?

10387. Lord Justice FRASER.—In any such case the local board would not recognize the school. They are the people to fix the fees, and to see that the boys of their own district get the full benefit of the endowment under their management.

Mr. SHAW.—There was evidence before all these Commissions that where a school became a large school owing to the influx of pupils from a distance, the local supplies always stopped.

10388. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We consider that in placing the school under a local board we are taking the best means of protecting the educational interests of the locality. You seem to assume that the local board will be so neglectful of their locality that they will administer this fund so as to exclude their own boys from the benefit of education. We think, on the contrary, that they will have the sagacity to establish an efficient school, and that they will take pains to secure that the boys of the neighbourhood will get the benefit of it.

10389. Dr. TRAILL.—Don't you think that the history of these schools shows that instead of the prospect of large fees in the future there is far more likelihood, if they are to do their work efficiently, that they will have to come down very much in their terms.

Mr. Shaw.—I think the application of these endowments to the promotion of education within the district will be best secured if you see that the results fees are paid only for boys who practically belong to the district.

Dr. TRAVIS.—And that would mean only for the day boys. You may as well say it at once.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—There is another point you have not touched upon. In this scheme we deal more or less with the endowments on denominational principles. Now, would it be a fair thing for a denomination which had no boys in a locality to establish a great school, and by attracting boys in considerable numbers from other parts of the country to swallow up a large share of this endowment in results fees for that particular establishment? I must say I don't think that would be a fair application of the endowment.

Mr. ARTHUR, &c.—That is exactly my objection.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—That could not happen unless the local board chose to recognise the school.

Mr. Shaw.—The local board might be so constituted that it would.

Mr. ROBERTSON.—On behalf of the Methodists, I object to the local board being fettered. We say the local board should be left unfettered to act in the interests of the locality.

Mr. John ROSE.—I have something to say on the subject of the basis of distribution on behalf of the Protestant Board of the Cavan district, and I differ with all my learned friends who have already addressed the Commissioners. I cannot see how you can have accurate data, and I think that all you can arrive at is a rough approximation. By taking half-and-half, that would correctly represent the proportion in the county Cavan of both religions who are likely to require intermediate education. With regard to the provision as to the first three years, we think it a very wise provision, that all parties should have some time to set their houses in order, and to put themselves into position for taking advantage of the scheme when it comes into operation. As to the university grant, I have no objection to offer, but to the division of the results by the results fees I am altogether opposed. It is not through our fault that it is impossible to educate all the boys of the district together. Those whom I represent would have been very happy indeed if the Catholics and Protestants could have been educated side by side at the same school, but that is out of the question, and the Commissioners have been driven to take the view that they are to be educated denominationally. So far as the university grant is concerned you have made the distribution share and share alike. But I ask you to go further, and not to adopt the system of results at all—it could not work. I ask you to continue the same system that you have resorted to in the case of the minimum grant, and to give the results share and share alike—an equal share for the Protestants, and an equal share for the Catholics. Whether they compete among themselves or not, I don't consider for the present it would make as much difference as a competition between the Catholics and Protestants for results fees, for I think that would break up the whole system. The system adopted in this scheme is likely to cause the greatest friction and to embroil these parties in quarrels with each other.

10395. Lord Justice NAIK.—Is there any friction in the working of the present system of intermediate education?

Mr. ROSE.—No, and if the results were ascertained by the appointment of examiners, the result might be equally satisfactory.

10396. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—They are, as a matter of fact, to be ascertained by examinations of recognised value, or held by public authority.

Mr. ROSE.—You must take into consideration more than the intermediate examinations.

10397. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Certainly, but the Commissioners must be satisfied that they are proper tests.

Mr. ROSE.—Of course, I see what you aim at in this schedule of results. That the school which did the most school work was to receive the most reward. As a test of the school work you took into consideration the tests you had at hand in the intermediate examinations, but in addition there are a number of other results by which the efficiency of a school can be tested—how many boys the school puts into a University, into the Indian Civil Service, Sanfluent, or Woolwich, or how many pass the examination of the Solicitors' Appointments. There are any number of tests which show whether a school is doing good work; and it would be a monstrous thing to leave these out of consideration and to adopt the intermediate examinations alone as the test. Very well. Let us see how the scheme works. If you look at these other matters at all you must consider them proportionately; it is not fair to put upon a matriculation examination the same amount of marks as you would put upon a less important examination. You must give as many marks for a matriculation examination, different from the number which you would allow for a scholarship examination, for the Indian Civil Service, and so on. You allow for the examination for all the Universities the same thing. That is not fair. It is quite possible that some University, for the purpose of attracting pupils, may lower its standard for matriculation. In fact you are endeavouring to compare things that it passes the wit of man to compare, you are balancing examinations varying in their character and which you can by no means estimate properly.

10398. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—There is a great deal in what you say, and it has already received consideration from the Commission and will receive it; but it does not appear to be so serious a difficulty as to make the scheme unworkable. You very fairly say that we cannot come to an exact valuation of the different kinds of examinations that different pupils pass. We cannot give exact values to the scholarship, exhibition, or entrance examinations of Trinity College, or the examination for entrance to the Royal University—we can only take a rough computation of respective value. That is true; but a system exactly like that has been in operation for several years in this country without friction, because results fees are given to pupils at the examinations under the Intermediate Education Board, and it was fixed in the schedule of the Act of Parliament that a certain amount of results fees should be paid for pupils who passed in the senior, middle, and junior grades. Amongst those who pass in the senior grade there are various degrees of excellence. Some get exhibitions, some get prizes, some get high places, some get medals for excellence in special subjects, but the same results fees are paid for each pupil that passes. The same is true in the middle grade, and also in the junior grade. That system has worked for many years without friction; and so also, we may hope, will ours.

Mr. ROSE.—I think what you have said to meet my argument only carries you a certain way. The difference between the cases is, that although there are different degrees of excellence yet still there is but one standard—the direct examination in the intermediate system. It may be a rough test, but still it is an approximation. But this is not in the same way with the proposal put forward in this scheme where you have different examinations and where you attempt to weigh one man against another by reference to these examinations.

10399. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Are you not weighing the wrong thing? You don't want to weigh

Aug 4, 1888.

Aug. 5, 1905.

the pupils, you want to weigh the amount of labour spent by the schoolmasters upon them. A master would probably rather prepare three clever pupils for scholarship than pass one stupid or backward one for the intermediate. Witness after witness told us that we must not differentiate these examinations too widely, as the result would be that a series of cramming establishments would be got up in which the clever lads who would gain credit for their teachers would be taught, and the ordinary or stupid boys would be neglected.

Dr. TRAILL.—Allowing your argument to be good as between mere passes, and passes with honours, you must see that all who compete at the intermediate examinations of every grade are practically examined by the same examiners. But when you come to the entrance to different Universities, they are examined by different examiners, and the test is different.

Mr. Ross.—Certainly. You have recognised standards competing with the examinations of Maynooth College, and for Solicitors' Apprentices.

10400. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Maynooth is not in the schedule.

Mr. Ross.—I thought it was.

10401. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We would propose to attach a different value to the matriculation for Maynooth, from that for the examination for Solicitors' Apprentices.

Mr. Ross.—That is practically impossible. You could not find any universal criterion that had been all round these different examinations, for not merely the books, but the subjects and the method of examination are different.

10402. The object of this endowment is to assist schools to prepare young men for a career in life. And when they have prepared a number of young men efficiently for their career in life, we think they are entitled to share in the endowment. We know the tests of a young man's preparation for a career in life, and when a boy passes the Solicitors' examination, we attach a certain value to that; and if he is prepared for an ecclesiastical career, and enters Maynooth College, we attach a certain value to that. But we estimate the amount of the educational work done by the number of young men prepared efficiently to enter upon a literary, scientific, or professional career.

Mr. Ross.—That looks very well when stated, but how can any man put even an approximate value upon two examinations conducted by different persons for different careers, involving a different style of education? To enter the Indian Civil Service requires a first rate man, to enter upon other careers only requires an average intellect, and an average examination.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—My answer is that we must not do an attempt to attach an exact arithmetical value to each examination, but we do establish different standards, and we attach a different value to each standard, and there is nothing in all you have said yet which shows that the system is unworkable;—which was the point that you started to prove; because the difference between the different pupils in any one grade which we have established is no greater than the difference between different pupils in the several grades of the intermediate education examinations, which have worked smoothly. I would venture to say that the difference of educational status between the first and last pupil of the senior grade of the intermediate is at least as great as the difference in any of the schedules which we have drawn.

Mr. Ross.—Comparing this with the intermediate is a complete fallacy, because there you have a definite standard, and you can arrive at an approximation even though it may be a rough one.

Lord Justice FRANKENSON.—A definite standard of what? I apprehend your objection would not arise if the scheme was confined to passes in the intermediate. We give two marks for the junior grade, three for the middle grade, and four for the senior grade. We allow the same marks only for a medal, list or exhibitioner as for a pupil who has passed in the minimum number of marks in the minimum number of subjects. There is no similarity whatever in the standard attained by the pupils. The young man who gets the first place in the senior grade is probably one of the best educated young men in the country, whereas the last on the list may be a young man of very small attainments, but we treat them as alike for our purposes, because, in order to get a place at all, probably the last has taken as much out of the schoolmaster who has got him through as the first has, and the two schoolmasters have an equal claim for work done.

Mr. Ross.—So far as your test relates to the intermediate examinations I don't object to it.

10403. Then why, though it can only be done roughly, is not the same principle to apply elsewhere? The object of all intermediate education being to prepare pupils for careers requiring literary cultivation, every young man who has been enabled to start on such a career represents one item in the number turned out complete as it were, on whom an intermediate school has done its full work, whether that young man goes to Maynooth, to Trinity College, to India, Sandhurst, or the Apothecaries' Hall, his teachers have done their duty, and it is his own choice which selects his calling. He has got all he wanted from the school, and I would give the minimum number of marks for it. The head of one of the Diocesan colleges said that the intermediate examinations were not a fair test of the work of his college; "for example," he said, "we have twenty-three pupils already holding dispensary districts, and we are entering two more districts now"; and he contended that those twenty-five young men represented no amount of educational work for which he should be paid.

Mr. Ross.—And would you propose to give him credit for that?

10404. Lord Justice FRANKENSON.—I would give him as much credit for each dispensary doctor as for each boy passed in the senior grade, because I regard his school as having turned him out fully complete for what he wanted. I, of course, for the present purpose, limit the principle to cases where a literary education of a high order is required.

Mr. Ross.—My objection is that you cannot, with any degree of accuracy, say how much credit a particular school should be entitled to for each pupil. You give a certain amount of credit for every boy that is turned out successfully on his career, but not anything like accurately. It does not deserve even the name of approximation, in the nature of things careers are so different that it is just the wit of man to arrive at anything that would be a test. Would you allow nothing more, for instance, than you allow for the matriculation examination, an entering university, for the Indian Civil Service, or for the College of Surgeons examination? and yet that is only the beginning. In order to see the amount of school work done you would have to consider also the number of boys sent to business from an intermediate school.

10405. There I meet you with the intermediate test; boys going to business either want a literary education or they do not. If a boy wants a literary education we take him as having got it if he has passed the publicly recognised intermediate education examination, if he does not pass that examination we consider that he has not got a literary education, and that is the particular grade of education which should be paid for from this grammar school endowment.

Mr. Ross.—I think it is going too far to say that boy going to business would have all his wants satisfied by the system of the Intermediate Education Board.

10406. Dr. TRAILL.—Do I take your argument correctly in supposing that your objection to Schedules I. and II. of the scheme is that you would prefer that they should embrace for larger subjects of examination for boys who are being educated for professions, but that boys who have not got what you consider a proper grammar school education should be excluded? Would your objection be met by such a definition of grammar school education as would render it a little more stringent?

Mr. Ross.—It would meet it to a certain extent. We agreed this portion of the scheme with the utmost hesitancy, and we do not think that in working it will stand the test at all. There will be continual complaints, and changes and counterchanges, not among the heads of the great bodies, but from jealous schoolmasters, who, competing with one another, would draw in a perfect apple of discord. I think we are agreed that the matter should be settled now, once and for ever. And I object to automatic changes in the middle because we all foresee all manner of difficulties, which we would be sorry for.

10407. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Supposing the test were confined to the intermediate examinations, would that meet your view?

Mr. Ross.—Certainly not. You would not be giving credit to the really good school, the real working of the school would not get credit under that, and therefore the intermediate examination would not be enough. It is absolutely impossible, by any approximation, to give fair play to a school in respect of these matters. Changes in this matter are very much to be deprecated. You are now dealing with what is not a very large fund, and there is no possibility of its ever becoming larger. And the opportunities are now exceptional of having the matter settled on a definite basis, once and for all, so that we need have no more chipping and changing and no more increasing or diminishing on one side or the other. I don't think that there can ever be a possibility of a more searching inquiry than has been made by the present Commission into the facts of this case, and, if your lordship will permit me to say so, I think the scheme is one of the most workmanlike documents that I ever read, and that it shows a great amount of labour, and of care, and of consideration for the rights of all classes. A Commission of this sort may not be in operation again in the course of ten years, so that, as I have already urged, the present is a most favourable time for dividing the money once and for ever, so that you stop all disputes between these great parties.

10408. Dr. TRAILL.—What is your idea of a fair division?

Mr. Ross.—I take the basis of the minimum grant, and give them half-and-half each. If the Protestants and Catholics are to compete among themselves, all the objections I have made to Protestants and Catholics competing would equally apply. In this country as far as examinations are concerned, we have got quite enough of competition. I advocate simply handing over to each the money to which they are entitled according to the original calculations that apply to the minimum grant. Take the case of the people I represent on one side, and that Mr. Drummond represents on the other. You give to each of us 25 per cent. of the minimum grant, and I say divide the residue in exactly the same way.

10409. Lord Justice FINCHAM.—Would you divide each endowment half-and-half, or the whole fund half-and-half?

Mr. Ross.—I would divide each endowment half-and-half.

10410. Would that satisfy the Tyrone people, where there are only 48,000 literate Catholics, and 68,000 Protestants. In the Cavan district, where you are willing to take half, there are 58,000 literate Catholics against 21,000 Protestants.

Mr. Ross.—You cannot do exact justice in the matter. You have to consider that the Catholics are coming in now for a share of those endowments from which it was thought right to exclude them formerly.

Mr. Drummond.—The test of the proportion in the population of literate people is utterly fallacious.

Mr. Ross.—I am disgusted with all these arguments about illiterate and literate people.

10411. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—If we came to the conclusion that the scheme, as it now stands, would work with such an amount of friction as you anticipate, we could hardly press it in its present form. But that anticipation is very much a matter of opinion; and we must take into account how far the other parties interested agree with you, and if the preponderating opinion is against you, we might be disposed to give our scheme a chance of working. Whom do you represent?

Mr. Ross.—The Diocesan Council of Kilmore, and the entire Protestant Board, including the Presbyterians and Methodists, of the county Cavan.

10412. And you give us the deliberate opinion they have formed.

Mr. Ross.—Yes, their most deliberate opinion.

10413. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you be satisfied if each endowment was divided in proportion to the literary population of the Protestants and Roman Catholics of the district?

Mr. Ross.—Having got the data before me, so far as Cavan is concerned, most decidedly not.

10414. In the result the Roman Catholics would obtain about half for the whole of the five counties—

Mr. Ross.—I think a fairer way of distributing it would be locally. The original intention was that what was raised locally should be spent locally, and you would find much simpler machinery needed to divide the local funds half-and-half.

10415. Your argument is that we should divide each endowment between the literate populations of the district equally.

Mr. Ross.—I don't think that the questions of the literate and illiterate population are worth serious consideration, and the solution is most misleading—in fact the most misleading thing of all is the test of the literate population. It appeared to me that the numbers of people receiving intermediate education in the county Cavan were about half and half, and I think you will find that in the county Cavan and everywhere else the equal division will work fairly enough. It is not perfectly accurate, but I think this best and fairest scheme that could be put forward is that which would give the Catholics half and give the Protestants half, and so prevent them from embroiling themselves in any disputes by the system of resale fees. At a later stage, I will ask you to hear me on the subject of taking away this 25,000 from the county Cavan.

Mr. Aldison, Q.C.—Since yesterday I have got some figures showing the valuation, which was the basis I proposed. I have not got all the returns, for in some cases they are not completed; in others the clerks of the Unions have refused to supply them. I have, however, the returns complete for Fermanagh at over £20 valuation; in the county Fermanagh there are 498 Protestant rated copyholders and 75 Roman Catholic rated copyholders, so that 498 to 75 is the proportion upon that figure. The Clerk of the Union in Clonoe returns 53 Protestants and only 15 Roman Catholics holding at over £50 valuation. In Opeahill Union there are 52 Protestants and only 3 Roman Catholics who pay rates on a valuation at or exceeding £50. The Clerks of the Union at Monaghan and Castleblayney have refused to send returns, but if you think it worth while to direct your secretary to apply for them, I have no doubt you would get them.

10416. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—The Protestants of Fermanagh have sent in an objection stating that if they do not get the buildings of the Parish school it would be impossible for them to provide means of educating their sons; at the same time they say that they have hitherto competed at immense disadvantage against the Catholics in regard to intermediate education because the Catholics have provided a magnificent school at Monaghan where they give their boys at a very moderate cost an excellent education. Now how do you defend your argument that the want of intermediate education is to be determined by that return which shows that the Protestants have a much larger property in the country than the Catholics; when they say that it would be impossible for them even to provide the buildings of a school, whereas the Catholics have provided magnificent buildings, and a complete educational staff to give intermediate education to their boys?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I shall deal with that when it is open to me to discuss the propriety of the provision for taking away these structures. At present I only give this return as one of the means of ascertaining what was the population in Fermanagh and Monaghan when one would suppose to require intermediate education.

10417. But notwithstanding this high valuation, they say it is absolutely impossible for them to provide school buildings, whereas the Catholics, with a much lower valuation, have provided splendid buildings and an educational staff.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—That would require you to go into the question of how much money was got in Fermanagh to construct St. Macartin's Bazaar.

10418. Does it not throw some light on the demand for intermediate education amongst the Catholics as against the demand amongst the Protestants?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Certainly not; that gives credit to the Roman Catholic population, who require intermediate education for constructing St. Macartin's.

10419. Do you mean to say that they have not constructed it?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—It is there, but I have no means of ascertaining whence the money was obtained that made it.

10420. Whether they provided it themselves, or whether they went abroad and got it elsewhere, is it not proof that there is so much desire for intermediate education amongst the Catholics in that district?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I don't know where the pupils come from, and I don't know where the money came from.

10421. You admit that the building is there, and that its erection is owing to the efforts of the Roman Catholics in the locality.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I don't admit that it is owing to the efforts of the Catholics in that locality. I don't know where it came from. I have not got these returns for the valuations of £40 and £50. I would be glad to know what evidence you require of the authenticity of these returns. Would you be content with the signature of the Clerk of the Union.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Let him sign the return at the bottom and state that he prepared it from the rate-books.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I have taken the figures at £50 valuation, £40 and £50.

10422. Dr. TRAILL.—And £30 you took yesterday.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I don't think that is necessary now.

Dr. TRAILL.—You might give us the return for £30 also.

10423. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—I think you will admit that if people of £50 valuation build a school, that is some evidence that they want the education.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I don't think so. The fact that a man with a valuation of £50 gives £1 to a school is no proof that he could send a boarder to it. I don't think that is any test.

Mr. Drummond.—I am instructed by the Most Reverend Dr. McGennis and the Roman Catholic Board of the County of Cavan to appear on their behalf. Dr. McGennis has lodged seven objections, three of which I will now state. The first is with reference to the marks given for the examinations, and the exclusion of the matriculation for Moyart College. The next is the mode of apportioning the minimum grant for the county of Cavan. The third question is as to the disposition of the £5,000 net which remains to the credit of the Cavan school.

10424. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—These questions do not now properly arise. The present matter that we are on is the question of division—if it is to be a division, or of distribution if it is not to be an actual division, of the whole fund having regard to the claims of the various denominations; the branch we were on at present was the proportion in which the fund should be divided between Catholics and Protestants, treating them as the two great denominations, apart so far as the latter are concerned from minor divisions, and the only matter that we have heard that affects you on this point is Mr. Rose's proposal, that there should now be a final and equal division of half-and-half's each denomination.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—My proposition is that there should be a final division now, and that the Protestants should permanently get two-thirds in my district.

Mr. Drummond.—I think it would be difficult to discuss the proportion in which the division should be made in Cavan, without taking into consideration that question of the disposal of the £5,000, because I submit that is part of the property of Cavan.

10425. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Whatever the property is, shall it be divided now, once and for all, or shall it be divided by results as the scheme says?

Mr. Drummond.—I think on the whole it is better to let it be dealt with according to the scheme. I wish to draw attention to the proposition in which the minimum ought to be divided between the two parties. I think it is far better, with a view to the real interests of education, to have the money given as it is inclusive to give a proper education rather than to hand it over in a lump to any parties; because experience proves that money so handed over was not so usefully applied.

10426. Dr. TRAILL.—The permanent division will not infer that the money should be spent without very strong educational tests afterwards.

Mr. Drummond.—Upon the whole I think the system of division provided by the scheme is the best that can be devised. Now, with regard to the proportion, and I confine myself to the division for the county Cavan, between the two boards let me call attention to the facts and figures. Mr. Rose has not given a single figure to show now or in the past the number of pupils at any Protestant school in Cavan receiving intermediate education. You are left completely in the dark as to that, and you are asked to look at Thorn's Directory to ascertain how many literate and how many illiterate people there are in the district, and then to strike a balance. But I take it that the true principle of the distribution of this money is to try to maintain the greatest amount of real intermediate educational work. What is the real educational work that has been done in the county Cavan, and is being done at the present moment?

At the present moment there are about a dozen pupils in the Royal school.

10417. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—On the point of the minimum grant are you not wandering from the true issue? We explained yesterday, and I think you admitted that you approved of that, that the minimum grant has nothing to do with the relative claims of denominations. It is a sum fixed as the smallest that could be substantially useful to a single school, and I will give you the Cavan figures now, that you may thoroughly understand what you are dealing with. The net income of Cavan for three years was £374, and it has £6,357 at 3 per cent. Take it for the present that we do not deprive you of that, add the £187 interest to the £274 from the land, and you get £461. Fifty per cent. of that is £230, and the half of that, the minimum grant, is only £115 a year; from the lands the minimum grant will be only £69; unless £69, or even £115 a year, is more money than we ought to give as a minimum to our school, Protestant or Catholic, the argument from parsimony is not applicable.

Mr. Drummond.—I am going to ask you, owing to the circumstances of the county Cavan, to put Cavan on the same footing as Raphoe—that is to distribute the whole of the income between its two schools, otherwise it would be practically useless. That is the reason why I think it well to combine with the discussion of the mode of distribution, the question of whether this £5,000 should not be given to Cavan altogether. But I shall deal with that afterwards if you wish. If you take the minimum proposed to be given it would not be of any value to the county Cavan.

10418. Dr. TRAILL.—I understood you proposed to divide the whole fund and not merely the residue by results, but I now understand you to say that the money should be divided once and for all—half and half—and that you wished to be put on the same lines as Raphoe.

Mr. Drummond.—I propose to treat the £5,000 as part of the property of the Cavan school.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—When we fixed the 50 per cent. as the minimum for Cavan we were under a misapprehension as regards the income from the Cavan estate, and I had no idea that it was in such a bad state. I think you may take it that, if we take the £5,357, we must raise the 50 per cent.

10419. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you want to go as far as Raphoe—that is to divide the whole of the money?

Mr. Drummond.—I think to be of any practical use you should divide the whole.

10420. That is inconsistent with distributing the balance in results fees.

Mr. Drummond.—I don't want to propose anything unreasonable for Cavan, but if I were offered the option between not getting the benefits of the results from the other districts and getting the £5,000, I think it would be better for my clients and also better for Mr. Ross's clients to give up whatever may be the advantages of competition, and to take this property now. I would suggest that, provided the Commission would now hand over the £5,000, you can exclude Cavan from the competition for the results fees.

10421. Would you be satisfied if the life interest of the head master of Cavan was taken out of it first and then the total divided between the two boards locally—that would be making Cavan to stand upon its own basis and would be a very fair arrangement?

Mr. Drummond.—My proposition is that Cavan should be allowed to stand upon its own basis. I wish to call your attention to an institution whose claims ought to receive recognition. In the Royal school at Cavan there are now about twelve boys; whereas, at the Roman Catholic school called St. Patrick's College, there are now fifty-one boys, thirty-three boarders, and eighteen day boys.

10422. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Eighteen day boys is the number in the Royal school also—so that there are eighteen of each denomination now.

Mr. Drummond.—Besides in another school in which intermediate education is given—the Catholic school of Ballymaguff—there are sixteen day boys, and for some years there were more, and in the Convent, in which intermediate education is given, there are sixteen, which makes the pupils in those three Roman Catholic schools in the county Cavan, at the present time, eighty-three who are receiving intermediate education.

10423. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do these schools send pupils up for the intermediate examinations?

Mr. Drummond.—One sent three in the present year. I have not been estimating the Christian Brothers' schools which prepared some pupils.

10424. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Our return shows that in 1883 the total number of passes for the whole county of Cavan was ten, eight of which were from the Christian Brothers' schools in Cavan, and all those passes were in the junior grade.

10425. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—Some of the pupils from St. Patrick's College, Cavan, enter Maynooth?

Mr. Drummond.—The case of these schools in Cavan affords a strong illustration of the principle on which the matriculation examinations for entering the different colleges should be calculated. A considerable number of the pupils of St. Patrick's go to Maynooth, and yet up to the present time the Maynooth matriculation, which is quite as high as Trinity College or the Royal University, has been excluded from the scheme. I take it for granted that the Maynooth matriculation will be inserted as one of the tests upon which marks should be given.

10426. Dr. TRAILL.—Before you leave St. Patrick's, can you give us the figures for the years 1880 and 1881?

Mr. Drummond.—In 1887 there were 40 boarders and 23 day boys. In 1888 there were 41 boarders and 24 day boys. It was only in 1885 it was opened to day boys, up to that time it was confined to boarders.

10427. Yes, but that is a very important point. With some frequency and not a little stress the desecration of the Royal school has been pointed out to us, but we find, in the present instance, that in 1869 the boarders at St. Patrick's, Cavan, were twenty-five, while in 1886 they had come down to forty, and in 1888 had come down to thirty-three. I merely wish to point out that if there is decadence in intermediate schools it does not apply to the Protestant schools only.

Mr. Drummond.—The opening of it last year to day pupils has brought in a number of boys who would not otherwise be pupils at all, and probably, being able to reside, at no great expense, in the town of Cavan, the number of boarders has been reduced in that way.

10428. Dr. TRAILL.—But still your whole number is only fifty-one, whereas eight years ago the number of boarders was twenty-five. There is the reduction; it cannot be helped, but it is a fact.

10429. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—It is no doubt partly to the depression of the times.

Mr. Drummond.—Yes, and to the want of an endowment. This school has cost £14,000, but the debt on it at present is £8,000. They have cleared off all they could, and the very means which should be going to improve the education, to pay teachers, and to supply the various appliances required for a good school, have been going in the effort to pay the enormous load of debt, so that it was rather difficult for the school to be made as successful as would otherwise have been the case. Under these circumstances it will be for the consideration of the Commissioners whether portion of this £5,000 may not be properly diverted to the promotion of this school on the one hand, and also applying the needs of a school for the Protestant population on the other hand. Now, Mr. Ross has pressed upon you again and again, in the county Cavan, to divide it half and half. Taking as a test the amount of the educational work done besides the Royal school, I am not aware that there is another Protestant school doing intermediate work.

Apr. 3, 1884.

10449. TULLYVIN is doing some work.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—That has been abolished altogether.

Right Rev. Dr. SLOVE (Lord Bishop of Kilmore).—It is a first-class school, and has been established under an independent scheme by this Commission.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—Tullyvin is treated as a primary school.

10451. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—It is largely employed in giving intermediate education preparatory for the Incorporated Society's schools.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I don't know whether you have any evidence of the number of pupils receiving intermediate education at the Tullyvin school.

10452. Professor DOUGHERTY.—We were there ourselves, and saw fifteen boarders, all of whom were receiving intermediate education.

Dr. TRAILL.—The house was as full as it could hold.

10453. Lord Justice NASH.—Tullyvin has a good endowment of its own. It does not stand in need of any additional support.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—When you proposed to deal with it, Mr. Hart objected to its being interfered with by the Commissioners at all.

10454. Dr. TRAILL.—But as regards the number of pupils getting intermediate education you should count Tullyvin, which ought to be a primary school instead of an intermediate school; for if there was a good intermediate school in Cavan, the boys that now go to Tullyvin would be sent there.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—It is a somewhat striking illustration of the amount of educational work that is being done by the Protestants with the endowments.

10455. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—I understood your argument to be that the Catholics have shown by these returns that they have a much larger number of intermediate education pupils than the Protestants in the county of Cavan, and on that ground you claim a much larger share of the endowment.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—As far as the Intermediate Education Examinations are concerned the Catholics seem to have their own way altogether, for of the ten pupils who passed during the year, eight came from the Christian Brothers' school.

10456. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Intermediate education generally you will admit must be in a rather bad way in a county where only ten pass, and those in the junior grade.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I am sorry to say that Cavan is the most backward place in the whole country. But just as you take into consideration the exceptional circumstances of Donegal, I think you ought to look at the exceptional circumstances of Cavan, and to deal with it more liberally, as far as the £3,000 is concerned, than otherwise you would be inclined to do if it was not in such a backward condition.

10457. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you give up your claim to result fees in the other four counties if you got the whole of the Cavan endowment divided between you?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—If you give us the whole of it, you can limit us as you like, as regards result fees.

10458. Professor DOUGHERTY.—I think you would do a very wise thing, if you could obtain your own endowment, to give up any competition.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I think it would be more for the benefit of the pupils, either Catholics or Protestant, to take our own endowment and to give up competition. But I press upon the attention of the Commission that up to the present time the number receiving intermediate education in Cavan are nearly two to one of Catholics as against Protestants—and that corresponds with the proportion that are literate in the population of the county.

10459. Dr. TRAILL.—That is only those who can read and write—it is not those who are receiving intermediate education and learning Greek and Latin.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—But it is a striking fact, as Dr. Delany proved, that the numbers correspond with the population, and while the literate population is larger among the Catholics, you have a correspondingly larger number attending intermediate schools.

10460. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—What proportion do you claim?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—We have eighty-three pupils receiving intermediate education under considerable difficulties as contrasted with the first that in Tullyvin, which is not an intermediate school at all, they have not half that number.

10461. Dr. TRAILL.—You admit that a considerable number of Protestant boys go out of Cavan from the want of a good school?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—And a considerable number of Catholic boys as well. I think the proportion would be found to be just as large on the one side as the other.

10462. Would you give your views as to the proper proportion?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—Taking your own view of the educational work done it amounts to two-thirds of the Catholics against one-third for the Protestants. When you find about double the number of Catholics attending these schools there should be some difference in the proportion of the endowment. It is for the Commission to say, but these figures cannot be disputed.

10463. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—It is quite right that you should put forward your figures and let your claim upon them, but before we go on percentages we must see their effects. If we give you two-thirds of an income of £300 a year, we must apply the same principle when we deal with the larger incomes in Tyrone, Fermanagh, and Armagh, and to give you two-thirds of £300 in Cavan, we might have to give the other side an similar situation, in another instance two-thirds of £1,800.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I am only instructed on behalf of the Catholics of Cavan.

10464. See, too, the possible advantage to you of the automatic principle. If St. Patrick's College, Cavan, which as a building is eminently fitted for its purpose, becomes a large and prosperous school, instead of having two-thirds of £300, it would have a large proportion of the result fees of the five counties which would be far more. On the other hand, in the Fermanagh district at the present time it is quite possible that only one school would qualify—whether St. Macartin's or any other didn't matter—and if we confined each endowment to its own district, that might get £800 a year for passing ten pupils through the intermediate examinations.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I merely put those figures before the Commission. The really important questions on the objections of Dr. McGonnan are to retain the £3,000 for Cavan—that is more important than the proportion of the minimum grant or anything else—and the inclusion of the matriculation examination of Maynooth as one of the tests.

10465. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you extend the principle of admitting the entrance examination in Maynooth to every other private college in the kingdom?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I would not class Maynooth with any private college.

10466. I mean denominational college.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I have read the papers for the matriculation in Maynooth, and I have read the papers for the entrance examination to the Royal University, and I put them side by side and ask any impartial judge to say whether one is not as high as the other?

His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Walsh, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin.—On the general question

tion of the division of the endowments between the Catholics and the Protestants, I wish to refer to those statistics that have been quoted. Counsel have brought forward three sets of figures—the Intermediate Education Returns, the Census of 1851, and the figures taken from “Griffith’s valuation.” I must object to the use made of the Intermediate Education Returns. I happen to be Honorary President of the Association of Catholic Head Masters and also President of the Standing Committee of that body, and in those capacities I have acquired a certain amount of information in reference to the Intermediate Education Returns, and I can say that the figures produced are, in effect at all events, misleading, and that there are several points connected with them which make them not a safe basis to go upon in reference to this question of division. For instance, those figures have been made out from the school returns in which the names of the various schools, Catholic and Protestant, are given after the successful pupils’ names. Now I know of many cases in which for various reasons pupils going from Catholic schools do not put down the school address, but put down the address of their parents. I know one very large school where that is done, and therefore that test is inaccurate and cannot be relied upon.

Mr. Ansell, Q.C.—I don’t know whether your Grace was present yesterday when I was dealing with the figures which I laid before the Commissioners as to Ormagh, but I showed that there were only five in one year and six in another that were unaccounted for in that way which my learned friend, Mr. Carten, however, spoke of as “lost numbers.”

Dr. Walsh.—I know of one large school which was left out of count altogether in Mr. Berkeley’s return. It may have been that the pupils did not put down the school address. We were told that only twenty-six passed from Catholic schools in those northern counties. Now, at least ten passed from one school to which I refer, Loretto Convent School, Ormagh.

Mr. Ansell, Q.C.—My figures are only of boys.

Dr. Walsh.—But the scheme we are dealing with is for both boys and girls. That will show the Commissioners that the mere figures taken from the return are not a sufficient basis to go upon and are therefore misleading. In reference to the other basis of calculation—the Census of 1851—it must be remembered that at that time the Intermediate Education Act was only beginning to come into operation, and I think it would be very unfair to take the condition of the Catholic schools at that time as any basis for the future permanent division of the endowment between the two bodies. But the set of statistics based upon the Poor Law valuation of the Catholic and Protestant farmers as the basis of distribution in this matter seems to me to be altogether irrelevant, and indeed, so far as it has any bearing at all, seems to show that a larger proportion of the endowment ought to go to the Catholic bodies than to the Protestant. The figures show that the Catholic farmers are financially on a level altogether below that of their Protestant neighbours. That is quite true. But it is irrelevant. When the figures were brought up I was reminded of a passage in one of Lord Macaulay’s speeches. Speaking of a certain institution in Ireland, he said that it seemed to him to be founded on a principle the very reverse of that which ought to influence the action of every Christian Church, for it “filled the rich with good things, and sent the hungry empty away.” If any law is made of those statistics, the effect would be to divide these educational endowments on the principle so justly condemned in the case of the ecclesiastical endowments. I object to having that principle applied. If the figures about the Poor Law Valuation of the Catholic and Protestant farmers are to be applied here at all, they should be applied to strengthen—not to weaken—the claim of the Catholics. There is one other point. Counsel have objected here to the setting apart of a fixed minimum sum for each denomination in the first instance before coming to the proportionate distribution of the endowment, according to educational results. Now, I wish to remind the Commission that they had this question before them in reference to an endowment in the county of Dublin—the Swords case. In that case the body that happened to be in the minority was the Protestant body, and a proposal was made—to some extent by me—at any rate strongly supported by me—that before any proportionate division of the endowment there should be a minimum sum set apart for the support of an efficient Protestant school in the district. Now, I do not say it would be a breach of faith, but I say that it would be something which many people might fairly regard as a breach of faith, if that principle laid down here in Dublin for the protection of the minority, where the minority is Protestant, is to be thrown overboard when you come to deal with a district in Ulster where the minority happens to be Catholic.

10457. Lord Justice FRYGGE.—Have you any opinion to express as to the principle of the distribution of these endowments between the Protestants and Catholics? Have you considered whether a hard and fast division now, or a fluctuating division by results fees, or a fixed minimum, or a proportionate minimum, would be most desirable?

Dr. Walsh.—I think it is essential that we should have a minimum to begin with, to secure the efficient maintenance of a school for each body in the district.

10458. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you wish the estates divided once and for all between the Roman Catholics and Protestants, or would you wish to leave that division open?

Dr. Walsh.—I would wish to have it divided according to the principle in the scheme—and I think it is an admirable principle—by results fees.

10459. The scheme does not divide to except by results fees?

Dr. Walsh.—That is so, and that is what I approve of. There was some reference yesterday to two ways of doing so. Two phrases were used, “scrambling” for money and “working” for money in connection with these competitive examinations. It seems to me that this scheme of the Commissioners, as contrasted with the principle upon which the Intermediate Education Board works, marks precisely the difference between “working” for money and “scrambling” for it. I think the system of the Intermediate Education Board is to a very large extent a system of scrambling for money, and that the system embodied in your scheme is really a system of working for money, and not scrambling for it. The Intermediate system is open to a most serious objection, while the scheme is clear of that objection. In the Intermediate Examinations you have a system in which every schoolboy in the country is practically set in competition with every other schoolboy in it, and the result is that a frontier state of excitement is created among the schools and schoolboys all over Ireland, in consequence of this universal competition. In my view it would be far better if the Intermediate Education Board went rather on the principle of looking to “passers,” as this scheme proposes to do. Let them deal with each school according to its general educational work, and decide on that basis what share of the endowment the school should get.

10460. Lord Justice NAHE.—Decide on “passers” as distinguished from prizes?

Dr. Walsh.—Yes, and give a certain amount of the available endowment in proportion to that work. Then there will be a means provided for the good schools to develop each its own system with the help thus given.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—It is right that I should state that I included sixteen girls in the figures I gave just now, but I did not include some boys in the Christian Brothers’ schools. There were ten, twelve, and fourteen in the three years over and above those I referred to. In St. Patrick's College the Intermediate Examinations have not been a test at all, for out of the fifty-one pupils only three went up this year. Many were disqualified by age, and some who were prepared didn't care to go in eventually.

Aug. 4, 1886.

Mr. John Roche, q.c.—With respect to Dr. Logue's objections, the second objection deals with the minimum grant of 50 per cent. in the Armagh district, and I am instructed to say that Dr. Logue, having heard your explanation, withdraws that objection. The third crept into this objection by mistake. It was not intended to be part of Dr. Logue's objection, and there is a statement in it which he did not intend ever to put forward. With respect to that particular objection, we have obtained careful returns as to the number of children who actually are at the present time receiving intermediate education, and also of the number of children who would, from circumstances known to the parties who have obtained these returns, receive such education if facilities or an endowment were offered such as this scheme provides. We have these returns for the whole of the district of Armagh—they have been very carefully prepared, and can be given to the Commission if they are deemed to be of any value.

10451. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We should like to have them if you send them in signed with a statement as to how they were prepared, and by whom, and let Mr. Bealey have a copy of them.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—I have a summary of them here. There are at present in the Armagh district 105 boys actually receiving Intermediate education, including St. Columba's College, Newry, and excluding girls. The number, excluding Newry, is eighty-two. St. Columba's College is in the county of Armagh, but not in the diocese, and that is the reason why it was omitted here. We will give the names of the schools in the return. If you take boys and girls, the return will show the whole number of boys and girls receiving Intermediate education in the county of Armagh to be 320.

10452. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Do you include the Christian Brothers' schools?

Mr. Roche, q.c.—We do include the Christian Brothers' schools, but only for six pupils receiving Intermediate education. We do not take the whole number at all. The return was obtained by Father McNeese.

10453. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Father McNeese was examined before us, and he, like Dr. Moore Morgan, will certify these returns, and if sent in we will be glad to look at them. But it will take more time than we can spare now to really understand the force of your figures. It would be impossible to expend this endowment so as to give Intermediate education to every individual boy and girl in the county that is capable of taking it. These figures are only of use as indicating the proportion in which it would be fair to divide these endowments between the different denominations, and I have again to point out that unless we adopt the principle of dividing them into fixed proportions once and for all, these figures are of no use to us. If we stick to our principle of giving a minimum grant to each denomination, and dividing the rest by results, we do not want numerical proportions, because the proportion of the grant received by each denomination will be what its schools have earned.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—It was for that reason that I asked whether you would consider these figures now.

10454. It is only fair to tell you the main argument that ultimately prevailed amongst us against preparing any definite division. It was, that we were satisfied that it was absolutely impossible to find any principle of division that would satisfy everybody, or that would not be open to argument on the other side.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—There is another matter to which

I wish to refer before leaving this question of the Armagh endowment, which has been very carefully considered—with reference to the statement made yesterday at the opening of the sitting. On the part of the Roman Catholic Primates, I wish to say that, supposing it is found impossible to purchase out the interest of the present Head Master of Armagh School for any reasonable sum, he does not consider that it would be judicious or right that such a large sum should be paid for Dr. Morgan's interest as would permanently cripple the endowment; and unless it is possible to effect a reasonable settlement with Dr. Morgan, he would prefer that Dr. Morgan and the school should continue on their present footing in manner provided by the 55th, 56th, and 57th and 60th Articles of the Scheme. The alternative would be, apparently, to suspend the application of the scheme altogether to Armagh for the present, because the figures are unworkable. He, under these circumstances, would adopt the scheme to this extent—£175 would be fixed as the sum to be paid for repairs and maintenance; the salary of Dr. Moore Morgan, and the fees payable by the pupils would continue as at present. The payments for exhibitions would be cut down to the existing pupils under Article 58a and the other details in the scheme would remain such as they are. But seeing that the effect of the whole scheme is to give the whole income of the endowment, and besides to give the use of the buildings rent free to the Protestant Local Board—we submit that it is unfair that they should also have the chance of sharing in the residue under the 58a clause—we submit that if that clause is to be retained, there should be words added to include the "annual value of the school buildings to the sum charged against the Board, that is in substance getting the benefit of them."

10455. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Is not the right to use the buildings part of Dr. Moore Morgan's vested interest?

Mr. Roche, q.c.—No doubt; but doesn't it also in substance give the Protestant Local Board the use of the buildings?

Professor DOUGHERTY.—We cannot help that.

10456. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—I think you are under a misapprehension with regard to the meaning of the 57th clause. It was only introduced for the purpose of preventing its being supposed that if Dr. Morgan's vested interest was larger than the amount that the Protestant Board was entitled to receive under the scheme, that would create a debt against the Local Board.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—We do not object to that clause.

10457. Rev. Dr. MUIR.—I understand Mr. Roche as saying that in putting Dr. Moore Morgan's vested interest to the debit of the Protestant Local Board, we should take into account not only the salaries of Dr. Morgan and his assistant, and the money for repairs, but that we should, in addition, take into account the annual value of the buildings, and that we should put that annual value to the debit of the Protestant Local Board as well as the other items.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Just so.

Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—That is perfectly fair, but it will not make the smallest difference in the scheme, because Dr. Morgan is tenant for life of these buildings, and therefore there is no money to be charged against anybody as long as he is there. I quite agree that the value of the buildings might be taken as being an advantage to the Protestant Local Board, but that value does not come into any calculation of money under the scheme.

10458. Lord Justice NAIR.—You are calculating what the Protestant Board would get if Dr. Morgan was not there. But there is no use in your doing that, for after you have calculated the amount it was to be paid to Dr. Morgan, and the Board could get nothing unless they could earn more irrespective of that.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—The value of the school buildings is entirely omitted.

10468. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Your case is that the Protestant Board get, during Dr. Moore Morgan's tenure, the benefits of the buildings, and therefore that it should be put to their debit.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Yes, that is what we submit. Of course the Protestants would prefer a reasonable arrangement for the purchase out of Dr. Morgan, but that appears to be very difficult at present.

10470. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—As you have used the word "reasonable," you cannot convey that the scheme is in any way unreasonable, because Dr. Morgan is plainly entitled to his salary and to his house, and I showed you yesterday that the whole profits of the estate and more is now spent upon his vested interest.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Well, leaving that clause, I come to the last matter I have to mention: the 50th clause, and the arrangement suggested in the reference to the purchase and treatment of the buildings when the scheme comes into operation.

10471. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—I wish you would not take up that question just yet, because when we come to buildings we really think that the parties may be able in each case to suggest something definite about the buildings.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—I would like to say this on behalf of Dr. Donnelly. The Armagh school is practically now being kept up for the benefit of the Armagh Protestant Board, and perhaps that cannot be helped. It may be one of the necessities of the position in connection with the preservation of the vested interests. Now, so far as the Donegal endowment is concerned, the entire income is proposed to be given to the local boards, and if you decide to the request of Mr. Drummond and Mr. Ross that the entire income of the Cavan endowment shall also be applied to Cavan only, so long as the Armagh school is kept up and Dr. Moore Morgan continues Head Master, the result will be that the Armagh Catholic Board will be thrown upon the Tyrone and Fermanagh Boards. That being so I submit that it would be very unfair to allow any portion of the 50 per cent. to be obtained by the Armagh Protestant Board.

10472. Lord Justice NASH.—In effect it won't be. They never could earn so much as would entitle them to share in it.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—They might get up their school to such a state of efficiency that they might obtain a share of the results with the Fermanagh and Tyrone Boards.

10473. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If we put in the clause that Mr. Roche has suggested, I think the contingency which you contemplate has hardly sufficient probability to be worthy of notice. What do you propose?

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—That so long as the Armagh school is kept up under the terms of the scheme, the pupils under the control of the Armagh Protestant Board should not be allowed to share in the results of any of the endowments.

10474. Dr. TRAILL.—Would you go further and say that if Cavan and Raphoe get the whole of their endowments to themselves, they should also write off the amount of their results fees?

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—I think that if Cavan and Donegal are handed over the entire of their endowments it would be very unfair for them, at the same time, to burden Tyrone and Fermanagh with the cost of training their pupils.

10475. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Why is it unfair that they should own Tyrone or Fermanagh money? Their own endowments are so small that they are required for the minimum grants in the Cavan and Donegal districts.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—Tyrone and Fermanagh are burdened. The Armagh Roman Catholic Local Board is unprovided for. The Tyrone and Fermanagh Local Boards must first get their own minimum of twenty per cent. each. Then the remaining sixty per cent. for their Local Boards is diminished by so much as is necessary to maintain the Armagh Roman Catholic Local Board, and consequently the funds available for results fees in Tyrone and Fermanagh is diminished. That diminution is caused mainly by the fact that you are handing over the entire of the Armagh endowment to the Protestant Board, and if the entire of the Donegal and Cavan endowments are handed over to the Local Boards, it would be unfair if these people carried off the whole of their own endowments and then come in for a share of other endowments which are insufficient for our purposes, and carried that off too in results fees.

10476. Armagh has about £900 a year, and forty per cent. upon that is £360, out of which £180 would be the minimum grant for Armagh, but that would be charged upon the sixty per cent. of Dungannon and Enniskillen, which amounts together to £1,200, so that it would still leave you £1,080 a year. You forget that these five endowments are of very different amounts.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—The maintenance of the Armagh Catholic Board will have to be borne in proportion to the value of the endowments, and that would press very much more heavily on the Fermanagh district.

10477. Dr. TRAILL.—But there is no general fund to be competed for except from Enniskillen and Dungannon.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Now, I come to the question of the constitution of the Protestant Boards. On the first question of the division between Roman Catholics and Protestants I support the contention that there should be a division once and for all, so those I represent consider that a division, first for three years and subsequently by results, ought not to be listened to. They consider that it would be most disastrous, and would not be fair for various reasons. I propose to go now into the question of the Protestant Boards, and on behalf of the Diocesan Councils of Armagh, Derry and Raphoe, and Clogher, I have strongly to protest against mixed Protestant Boards for each district. This subject has been under very careful consideration, and these Diocesan Councils consider that the scheme in this respect is thoroughly inconsistent as to one particular denomination—the Roman Catholic—it is essentially denominational, and, as to the other denominations, it is mixed. We submit that in each district there should be constituted denominational Boards, and naturally we have no objection to the Roman Catholic Board. They wish to have it for themselves, and we also wish to have for ourselves a separate Church of Ireland Board, and there is no reason, in the nature of things, why we should not have it. If the question is looked to as to the amount of population, the amount of the literate population, or the amount of those attending Intermediate schools, we represent a very large body, vastly outnumbering any other Protestant body in these districts, and outnumbering all other Protestant denominations by about 58,000 in the five districts—in some districts being in the proportion of nearly two to one—and we do not believe in those happy families that we have heard so much about.

10478. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Who are "we"?

Mr. Roche, q.c.—These Diocesan Councils.

10479. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Let me read you the sworn testimony of one of your own bishops. Dr.

Aug. 3, 1888.

Stack, the Bishop of Clogher, in his evidence before us at Enniskillen in October, 1885, referred to what had been done at Monaghan by a mixed local committee:—

"764. Do you find the local committee work satisfactorily?—Yes, all the Protestant denominations, and we were quite prepared to invite the others to come to our help, but they had already made a large provision for education.

"765. Your governing body includes all the Protestant denominations?—Yes.

"766. How do you propose to repeat the experiment in Enniskillen?—We have raised a good deal of money in Monaghan; £500 has been spent in starting the school and repairing the building; but we could never expect it to be a great school, because we have no endowment. We have no doubt if the endowment were left to Parsons, that by mobilising the whole arrangements, as we have done in Monaghan, this would be a greater school than ours, an Anglican school.

"771. How is the Local Committee constituted?—We advertised a public meeting, and a good many of the townspeople got together, and elected a committee; I was then rector of the parish. The Presbyterian minister was one of them.

"772. Speaking generally, is the proposal brought before us to-day on the main lines that have succeeded in Monaghan—a board composed of the rectors of the two parishes; Presbyterian ministers; the Chairman of the Town Commissioners; and beyond representing each of those bodies?—On the whole it is exactly the same."

The Bishop of Kilmore said the same at Carna, and after that evidence you can hardly blame us for proposing a scheme which is in accordance with the evidence not only of these Bishops, but of all the Protestant witnesses everywhere except in Armagh. In Fermanagh and Carna, the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Church people all came forward with the bishops at their head.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—They joined to govern an endowment for Protestants generally; but when it comes to a matter of administration it is quite a different thing.

10480. No doubt the opinions of some in Armagh are different, but when you say that these three Diocesan Councils "protest" I have to remind you that it is the first time they have done so, and that it is dead against the action of the Protestant committees and Bishops to whom I refer.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—They do so when they see that the scheme would be entirely unworkable. If there was only one day school, it would be different, but when you come to boarding schools of different denominations, it would be impossible for them to work together as proposed under this scheme. I have also to say that we cannot understand how the Protestant Local Boards have been constituted in the way proposed under the scheme. In each district the number of Protestants of the Church of Ireland vastly exceed the number of Protestants of all other denominations. For instance, in Armagh there are 34.5 per cent. of members of the Church of Ireland, to 18.6 Presbyterians.

10481. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are we to understand that your clients are in favour of allocating these endowments amongst the religious denominations according to their relative numbers?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—According to those attending the schools of the higher class.

10482. But you are going into details of the population?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—I was going into details of the literate population, because it was said yesterday that that was a rough and ready way of arriving at the claims of the various denominations. My percentages are of the literate population taken from the Census of 1881, and the proportion is 84.5 per cent. of members of the Church of Ireland, as against 13.9 per cent. of Presbyterians; 3.6 per cent. of the Methodists, and 2.2 per cent. of other denominations of Protestants.

10483. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—That is the proportion upon which we have constituted the Armagh Protestant Board. In Armagh we have 31,500 Church people, 19,500 Presbyterians, 3,700 Methodists, and 2,500 others, and the scheme gives on the proposed local five members of the Church of Ireland, three Presbyterians, and one representative for the other Protestant denominations.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—But it being a fact that in every single district the Church of Ireland is in the majority, how is the result arrived at—that on the Protestant Local Boards of forty-five members altogether, only twenty-one are members of the Church of Ireland—not one-half?

10484. Your figures must be wrong, and totting all the Boards together is irrelevant. There is no possible concurrence of circumstances under which all these local boards could not together. We had to give a minimum representation to everybody that was entitled to have one representative, and these single representatives added together, no doubt, make the majority on the total number greater.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—But if there is a majority in each district of the Church of Ireland as against the other denominations you never can get it less than half, yet that has been done in this scheme—for there is not a single district, so far as the Census returns enable us to judge, of the literate population in which the Church of Ireland members are not in the majority.

10485. That is not so. In Tyrone there are 37,500 Church people, 23,803 Presbyterians, 3,000 Methodists, and 1,300 of all others.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—I have only got them in percentages.

10486. Your percentages cannot be right if those totals are right.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—In Tyrone I have the percentages as 33.68 Church of Ireland, 34.44 Presbyterians, 2.16 Methodists, and 2.89 of all other denominations.

10487. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—In constituting the Protestant Boards we gave the majority in each district to the Church that had a majority of members.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—But I want to see the foundation you have for saying that my statement is incorrect, that in everyone of these places practically the Church is in a majority.

10488. On the figures we got from the Census I believe we have given the majority in every place where it exists—representation in accordance with that fact. I will give you our figures and you can then ascertain which of us is wrong. In Armagh, in round numbers, 31,500 Church people, 19,500 Presbyterians, 3,700 Methodists, and 2,500 of all other denominations, that is about 31,500 Church people against about 20,000 of all the rest, and the representation under the scheme is five out of nine to the Church, three out of nine to the Presbyterians, and one out of nine to the others.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Now, take Fermanagh!

10489. I will take Fermanagh. I am only speaking now of the majority—for that was the subject of your objection. I admit the proportions are not, and I believe they cannot be, accurately represented. In the Fermanagh district, including Monaghan, the Church people are about 31,100, the Presbyterians about 17,500, the Methodists there are stronger than anywhere else, and are 4,500, and all the others are a little over 600. Accordingly on the Fermanagh Board we give the Church people a majority.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Yes, but not at all proportionate to the preponderance of their numbers.

10490. We cannot make it proportionate if we have to give a minimum representation of one to the Methodists. I don't want to meet two objections at once. But we have the result that the Church people having a majority in numbers had it also in representation on this mixed board.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—But my objection is to mixed boards at all.

10431. That is another matter altogether: you stated that we had replaced the majority, and I want to show you that we have not done so, unless you can correct my figures. On the Fermanagh Board there are 5 members of the Church, 3 Presbyterians, and 1 Methodist—the only possible changes which would bring it more close to the existing figures would be to give 0 to the Church people and 3 to the Presbyterians; or to leave 3 to the Church, and give 1 from the Presbyterians to the Methodists. In Tyrone we had 37,000 Church of Ireland, 20,000 Presbyterians—or nearly 2,000 of a majority by themselves over the Church—Methodists 3,000, and all the others 1,500. And accordingly we give the majority to the Presbyterians; and the Tyrone Local Board consists of 3 Church of Ireland, 5 Presbyterians, and 1 for the other denominations. In Cavan the members of the Church number 14,000, the Presbyterians 5,500, and all other denominations in round numbers 1,000. So we give to the Cavan Local Board 5 members of the Church, 3 Presbyterians, and 1 for all the other denominations. The last one is Donegal, where the whole endowment is under £200 a year. There the Church numbers 15,000, Presbyterians 15,300, Methodists 1,500; but there are 771 members of other denominations who are potentially members of "the Reformed Presbyterian Church." There, again, for the Local Board the Church gets 3 members, the Presbyterians 3, and the other denominations 1. I have confined these remarks entirely to the point of the misunderstanding of the figures which led to the statement which, so far as our information goes is entirely unfounded, that the majorities on the local boards in the scheme are not in strict accordance with the existing majorities of the literate population.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—These figures do not apparently correspond with the Census of 1881.

10432. My figures refer to those you can read and write, and they correspond with those in your return everywhere, except where the difference is so small as not to be worth talking about.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I shall take an opportunity of proving the figures of the Census refute themselves. At any rate we object to having a mixed body at all.

10433. That is another thing.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—We would rather have a sum set apart for the Church of Ireland, and given to them once and for all, and that they should be allowed to administer that sum.

10434. One great difficulty about that is that substantially the members of that Church have had the administration of the whole fund hitherto, and the result has not been satisfactory.

10435. Rev. Dr. MILLER.—You propose that the Church you represent should get its own share once and for all?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Yes.

10436. Then how would you deal with the other Protestant denominations if they claimed a right to get their shares separately too?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Let them say that—I am not concerned with them. We have just as much right to get our share as the Roman Catholics.

10437. You propose to change the scheme, and I want to see how your suggestion may be carried out.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I would substitute in each district three local boards—one a Catholic board, the second a Church of Ireland board, and the third a non-Episcopalian Protestant board.

10438. We might have the same objections to perhaps a stronger firm, from the other denominations.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I don't think so, because the Presbyterians are at present the entire body mainly interested. It is for the Presbyterians to consider whether they will accept the arrangement. We don't wish to bump up the others if they don't want to bump up themselves.

The question is, whether in meeting your views we might not have to encounter more serious objections on the part of the Presbyterians and others.

10439. Professor DOUGLASS.—Do you include the Methodists among the non-Episcopalian Protestants as you call them?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Yes.

10440. I don't think that that is a correct description of them. In America, at all events, the Methodists accept the Episcopalian form of Church government, and I suppose they might do so here also.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Having regard to the numbers of the Church I represent in these localities, we submit that we are entitled to the same right of denominational education as the Roman Catholics, and we anticipate that if there are these mixed boards very disastrous things will occur; for while they might start fair, when there comes to be a competition between different schools of different denominations in the same locality for the limited endowment, unpleasant controversies must arise.

10441. Lord Justice NASH.—You are only speaking for the districts you represent and for the Church councils you represent. Are you applying your observations to what should be done in Cavan, Fermanagh, and Monaghan?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I am, for many of those I represent come from Fermanagh and Monaghan.

10442. Lord Justice NASH.—Certainly all the evidence we had in Fermanagh and Monaghan was dead against your contention.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—It is easy to get up a meeting, and to take down the vector of Enniskillen, and to have a demonstration and to pass resolutions, but that does not, necessarily, represent the feeling of the entire county.

10443. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I wish to call your attention to clause 37, but before doing so may I take it for granted that you are satisfied for the present that the actual majority in each of these boards is in accordance with the actual majority of the literate population?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—We will assume that.

10444. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If that is so, and in Fermanagh all the Protestants want to work together, while in Armagh they do not—why should not those in Armagh who want a separate division put in operation clause 37? You can at once, if you like, form a committee of three to take the whole of the Presbyterian share. It is left in your own hands to divide the money in proportion to the relative numbers of the population. If, on the other hand, the Fermanagh people prefer to work together, they won't put clause 37 into operation, and why should we force them to separate?

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—Clause 37 can only be put into operation by agreement.

10445. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Each local body can put it into operation, or can combine with others.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—The use of that clause is that it enables the majority in any local body to do what it likes with the endowment. It enables the majority in one case, where it would be in favour of my clients, where the Church of Ireland are in a majority on the local board, to appropriate the endowment as they think fit among the different denominations; and in another place where the non-Episcopalian are in a majority in certain districts they would do the same thing.

10446. Dr. TRAILL.—If each of the denominations got its own share according to your calculation there would be no difficulty in carrying out Mr. Atkinson's view—of all these denominations joining together and making a hodge-podge arrangement and doing what they like. You evidently do not object to Mr.

Aug. 2, 1918.

Atkinson's argument because you are adopting his principle?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—If you make a permanent division of the endowment.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—That is what we strongly contend for.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—We desire to divide the minimum into three, and to take a share each.

10507. Dr. TRAILL.—You are not asking, as I understand you, Mr. Bewley, to divide the minimum, but to divide the entire sum and to give up the results fees. To talk about dividing the minimum would be absurd.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Quite so.

10508. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Is it the whole of the Royal Schools endowments you propose to divide among the three boards you would constitute, or would you divide the endowment of each locality between the three local boards?

10509. Dr. TRAILL.—It would have no meaning if it was only applied to the minimum.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—I would divide each endowment in whatever proportion is considered fair, as representing the classes who require intermediate education, but once that allocation is made, let it be final. Let there not be this three years' system.

10510. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Have you any suggestion as to what would be a fair division?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—The figures I gave yesterday.

10511. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Those figures were about dividing the entire fund between Catholics and Protestants. We are now on the point of subdivision among Protestants.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Well, I would take each particular district. In the Armagh district we would be entitled to a very large proportion.

10512. Rev. Professor DOUGHERTY.—How much?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Somewhere about the proportion of 34 to 24; about 3 to 2.

10513. Dr. TRAILL.—If you divide it according to the licentiate population you would distribute £290 among the non-Episcopalian Protestants.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—In some places it would work better for the non-Episcopalian, and it is right it should.

10514. Dr. TRAILL.—In Tyrone the Church Protestants would get £211, and there would be £254 for these of other denominations.

10515. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—To which Local Board in Armagh would you give the advantage of the education to be given by Dr. Morgan during his tenure of office?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—That is only a temporary arrangement.

10516. Dr. TRAILL.—You cannot devote his vested interest to any other church than his own.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—We object to the temporary arrangement, and to the distribution by results; there are certain special objections to the schedule, and also to certain clauses—amongst others clause 45, as to the conditions to be fulfilled to qualify a school to share in the Royal endowments. There is nothing in the scheme as to what proportion of boys are receiving this higher education, and it would be absurd if one or two per boys were kept in a school in order to get the higher education fees.

10517. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—That is provided for, because it is required that the Inspector of the Lord Lieutenant shall report in the case of every school that it has a sufficient staff and teaching appliances for the teaching of the various subjects, and no school could qualify if it had only two pupils receiving an intermediate education.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Supposing there was a school of 200 pupils, and that the majority received only a primary education, and only a few were obtaining intermediate education—

10518. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If they pass ten pupils, under the scheme they would be entitled to be considered as an intermediate school, and their share would be ascertained with reference only to those pupils who obtained marks for intermediate subjects.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—There should be some fixed proportion of the pupils receiving a high-class education in order to entitle the school to a share.

10519. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Don't you see how unjustly it would work in some cases, if you fixed a proportion, say one in five, as compared with the provisions in the scheme which treat the absolute number at ten? If the principle of proportion were adopted in the manner which has been suggested a school with only ten pupils receiving intermediate education would qualify by passing two students, whereas a school with 100 pupils receiving a similar education, and passing students, would not qualify.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—That seems hard, but we think that there should be a certain definite proportion fixed.

10520. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think it is better to fix a definite number as the scheme does.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—We think that there should be an absolute number, but a relative number or percentage of the boys receiving higher education, in order to entitle them to the grant; and I am quite willing that there should be an absolute number of boys in the school, that it should be a creditable school giving a substantial number in intermediate education.

10521. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—I have also to refer you to the ordinance taken in October, 1891, in Tyrone where a mixed committee was formed, and presented their views through Mr. Robert Stevenson. He was asked by Professor Daugherty—

Question 5003. "Did your committee take into consideration the proposal of the Church-wardens Committee?"—They did."

10522. "What conclusion did they come to?—I believe it would be much better for all the people—and I am glad to say that the others agree with me—that the Protestant denominations should not together."

That is the evidence of the owners of the endowment you wish us to divide, so far as there are owners of it.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—The Diocesan Council represents a very large number of people of this district, and they differ from the view taken by the local people's Dangan.

10523. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Are we to suppose that these local unions of Protestants are a mere sham, intended to defeat the Roman Catholic claims?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I contend that my learned friend is not entitled to speak for Foremanagh at all.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—At any rate I represent the two other dioceses. At page 77 of your report of 1891, Professor Witherspoon, at question 3215, says—I have an impression that the three denominations could at once agree in the government of any one school, and let each school be left to govern its own.

10524. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What three denominations?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—I think he means Methodist, Presbyterian, and Church of Ireland people.

10525. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—He meant Catholic, Episcopalian Protestants, and Presbyterians.

10526. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—It is singular that every successful Protestant school we see in the North of Ireland was governed by a "happy family." As a matter of fact we did not find a single school in the whole of Ulster in which there was an exclusively Presbyterian or an exclusively Church governing body. The Coleraine Academy is managed by a mixed body, and it is a boarding and day school. So is Foyles College.

Dr. TRAILL.—The majority govern.

10527. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The Head Master of Coleraine is a Presbyterian, and he has boarding and day pupils of the Church of Ireland.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—It makes very little difference where you have one or two members of different denominations, and where the preponderant portion of the governing body is represented in the school.

Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—That is the idea on which our governing bodies have been constituted.

10627. Rev. Dr. MOTTER.—I think you said that a boarding school could not be conducted on those principles.

Mr. BOWLEY, Q.C.—I said it was difficult.

10628. Rev. Dr. MOTTER.—The Rector of Enniskillen, the Rev. C. T. O'Grady, in his evidence at page 33 of our report of 1887, gave this evidence:

219. "I understand that you see no difficulty in having a small boarding school, if the head master is a Protestant?"

—Yes."

Mr. BOWLEY, Q.C.—I should think that witness had very little experience of the circumstances of Enniskillen. I beg to invite attention to an article on English schools in this month's Longman's Magazine by Mr. Focall, and to the quotations in the article from the opinions of foreign educationalists as to the non-boarding school system which he looks upon as being most disastrous, and as merely leading to cramming. If this scheme comes into operation the result would be to manufacture a number of mediocrely educated boys who would earn results. Excellence is not rewarded as it ought to be, there is no distinction between one success and another, and the nature of these examinations differs so much that it would be impossible to put them on a par.

10629. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you any better plan to propose to discover the relative excellence of the schools?

Mr. BOWLEY, Q.C.—It would be better to have one standard—that all should compete at the intermediate education examinations; if you have a number of different examinations with different standards it would be impossible to compare them. Four marks are allowed for any pupil who passes the matriculation examination of any university in the United Kingdom. I believe there is no matriculation examination in Oxford or Cambridge Universities, but there is a matriculation examination for each college which varies with each college. In some colleges it is very high, in others it is very low, and is one pupil who passes on a low standard to be put upon a par with another who passes the London University matriculation examination which is exceedingly difficult! That is, however, a matter of detail which can be arranged by-and-by. We object to the system of payment by results, and we think that the fund should be divided once and for all in whatever way may be just amongst the persons entitled to share in it, and that one share is not to be set aside for Protestants generally, but that one portion is to be set aside for the Protestants belonging to the Church of Ireland and other shares given to the other denominations.

Mr. ASHMOUN, Q.C.—This is a point which touches my clients particularly, and as one of the bodies which my learned friend represents, and whose antiquated views he puts forward, is the Diocesan Council of Clogher—to whose opinions on the question of strictly denominational boards I am strongly opposed—it gives me pleasure to find that I am in accord with him in at least one point—that with reference to payment by results, I thoroughly adopt anything that has been said by anyone against that; I go in altogether for a permanent division. I adopt also, with reference to this regulation of marks, what Mr. Ross has said showing its impracticability, and I maintain that in order to avoid all these difficulties there should be one and for all a permanent division. In reference to the splitting up of these Protestant boards, and the contention of my learned friend Mr. Bowley that there should not be a union of Protestants, I entirely object. I represent a very representative committee. The Bishop of Clogher, whom Mr. Bowley was anxious to take away from me, is at the head of it. The other members include Mr. William Teal, J.P., Chairman of the Enniskillen Town Commissioners, an Episcopalian; the Rev. Charles T. O'Grady, Rector of Enniskillen;

the Rev. C. Halahan, Rector of Rosary; the Rev. Gerald Lloyd Whitaker; the Rev. R. Crawford Johnston, Methodist Minister; Mr. Edward Smyth, J.P., a Presbyterian; Mr. William Galt, a Presbyterian; Mr. William Carson, J.P.; Mr. W. B. Conroy, Mr. Henry Plevin, and Mr. J. Whiteside Dore, Protestant Episcopalian; and Mr. S. Culbert Mitchell, who is the Honorary Secretary of this Committee, is the Presbyterian Minister of Enniskillen. They are all strongly in favour of all the Protestant denominations being united; and see no difficulty in their working. But there are also obvious objections to separation. In the first place it would be incompatible with giving a minimum grant to each school, because you would have to give three minimum grants at least. Take for instance, Fermanagh, with the largest endowment; assuming that there is left £500 a year for the Protestants, which I should think probably an extravagant figure—if you had to divide that among the different sects of Protestants, how would the matter stand? There are 51,500 Episcopalian, 11,500 Presbyterian, 4,500 Methodist, and there are 500 of all other denominations, 48,000 in all. Now, what would the Presbyterians get out of that £500 a year? If you divide it proportionately their proportion would be very little indeed. As 48,000 is to 11,500, so is £500 to their share. It would be less than £300 a year, and the Methodists would get only about £80; in other districts the shares would be much smaller.

10630. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—Are there any separate Presbyterian Intermediate schools in the Fermanagh district?

Mr. ASHMOUN, Q.C.—I think not.

10631. Lord Justice NAUGHT.—They have hitherto been working on the principle of taking advantage of the schools of each other.

Mr. ASHMOUN, Q.C.—These separate denominations have no schools in existence. There is only one school there. They are to construct schools according to my friend's proposition; but how is the Methodist body to construct a school on £80 a year? All these denominations feel that their only chance of having any efficient schools equipped in a proper way, and having competent masters, is to have a united school in each district; and that if the Protestant share of the endowment is to be disintegrated into all these fragments, it would be perfectly impossible to have any good schools at all. Most of these bodies were long ago in favour of mixed education, and many are in favour of it still, and it would be a most unfortunate thing—if, owing to the antiquity of the views, and owing to the prejudices of a number of members of these Diocesan councils, all the Protestants, at least all who are not Episcopalian, should be practically left without educational advantages. The Protestant share of the endowment in Fermanagh won't be used then enough, even if it be enough after compensating vested interests, to continue the existing school, and quite insufficient to create even one new school. Splitting this endowment into fragments is quite inconsistent with the basis that has been laid down of giving a minimum to each efficient school in the first instance; and if you make a permanent division of the endowments among these different religious communities—it would leave all the non-Episcopalian portion of the community entirely without educational advantages, because it could hardly be expected that they would send their pupils to the Episcopalian school, or that the Episcopalian would be willing to receive them, when they would have an independent board of their own and were receiving even the smallest grant. It would produce hostility amongst the different sections of the Protestant community and would be a disastrous thing upon all considerations. Besides, I understand that, although the Diocesan Council is in favour of this, the majority of the laymen of that body are in favour of the amalgamation and union of the different branches of the Protestant Church.

Aug. 5, 1905.

Mr. H. T. Dine.—That is not so, generally.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I am only dealing with Fermanagh, and the very fact that different considerations apply to it strengthens my argument that there should be united local treatment instead of having one uniform system applied to districts that are under dissimilar circumstances. I strongly contend that the union of these Protestants is the only efficient way of dealing with the educational wants of the district, and the committee, whose names I have read out, are so representative that there is no fear that they won't co-operate. They are too enthusiastic about the promotion of higher class education in the district, and all the evidence was that way so far as Fermanagh was concerned. There is no entire absence of any evidence in favour of division—all the evidence is in favour of union, and the best evidence that can be given after all is the formation of this committee.

10532. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We were met also in Raphoe by a local committee, including clergy and laymen of every Protestant denomination. The honorary secretary, Mr. Smith, and several members of the committee were examined, and their whole wish was to have their school managed by their united committee.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I wish to mention that not only in this committee I represent representative of different denominations, but their action was approved of at a very large public meeting composed of members of the different denominations.

10533. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you in favour of the representation in that board that we have suggested in the scheme of five, three, and one?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I am not instructed to make any objection to it. My objection is to the disintegration of the endowment amongst these different bodies.

Mr. FOLEY.—The Methodists object to the proportion fixed by the scheme, inasmuch as in Fermanagh our people are six to two.

10534. Professor DUNN.—But Monaghan is included, and it has 2,900 Presbyterians to 470 Methodists. In the united district there are only 4,500 Methodists, while there are 11,500 Presbyterians and 51,500 Episcopalians.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—The local Methodists are all in favour of the union of the Protestant denominations, the local Methodist elementary, Mr. Crawford Johnston, is in favour of it, and I think before the Methodist body rush blindly into opposition to this united body, which I represent, they ought to see what will be the share of the endowment ultimately coming to these disintegrated fragments of denominational bodies, and the value it would be to each of them for independent educational purposes.

Mr. FOLEY.—We do not oppose the principle of a united board; on the contrary where it has been tried we think it has worked with considerable success, and we think subsidiary boards of the Methodists and Presbyterians, in addition to an independent board for the Church of Ireland, would be little else than a farce. But we ask for better representation. Mr. Robertson will discuss that for us when the time comes. But we sustain Mr. Atkinson's contention in favour of having a united committee.

10535. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—In the evidence taken at Raphoe in October, 1884, I find Mr. James H. Smith was asked by Lord Justice NICHOL—

1443. "Would the Episcopalians and Presbyterians work together on such a board?—I have had this before my mind. Having known them intensely for twenty-eight years I have never found the slightest difficulty in their working together."

Captain Montgomery said the same thing.

Rev. W. L. Berkeley.—I acted as the present secretary of the Local United Committee of Raphoe, all the members of which are quite prepared to work together, and at the Raphoe inquiry numbers of witnesses of the Protestant Episcopal Church all said that they were quite prepared to work upon a united board.

10536. Dr. TRAILL.—There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I don't object to proportionate representation on the board, but I have another objection as to the mode of election. My objection is that while there is an annual election of members of the Protestant boards there is a different mode of election provided for the Roman Catholic boards, and my clients would wish to be permanent, and to be appointed in the same way as the Roman Catholic board. Clause 15 provides that "The first members of the Protestant Local Boards shall hold office until the 31st day of December, first happening more than twelve months after the date of the scheme, or until the election of their respective successors, whichever shall last happen," and then it provides for annual elections. But clauses 27 and 28 provide for the ecclesiastical members of the Roman Catholic board being permanent—"And that the lay members shall hold office until they die or resign, or become bankrupt or refuse to act, or become incapable of acting, or cease to reside in the district, or fail to attend one-third of the meetings in any one year, and the remaining lay members of each board co-opt to vacancies as they arise." My clients think the same mode of representation should be adopted in reference to both.

10537. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We don't see how that can work, because, for example, there is only one Methodist representative, and he would be co-opted by others who were not Methodists, so in every case the remaining members would always include those of a different way of thinking from the member who was to be elected.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I quite see that there is some difficulty.

10538. Dr. TRAILL.—Beside the practice of all the Protestant institutions is to elect for everything, but we don't find fault with those who disagree with that.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Although there is every desire for unity it is not desirable to test it too much, and we think that the annual elections are too frequent.

10539. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—These are not popular elections. They are nominations by comparatively small bodies, which, as a rule, are themselves elected annually. Every efficient man is re-elected as a matter of course, and an opportunity of dropping out inefficient men is given once a year; whereas if they were to hold office for three years or longer, or there was to be a vacancy only when a member left the district or the like, you would have men upon those boards who did not attend to their duties. The scheme gives you, in point of fact, a civil way of getting rid of a man if you don't wish him.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Although we do not apprehend that any objectionable member will be found on the body, still that is probably a wise provision, and it is not a matter that my clients regard as of vital importance, indeed they do not lay much stress upon it.

10540. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—In some of our early schemes we provided for biennial or triennial elections, but when the objections which I have pointed out were mentioned we thought it better to allow an opportunity of reconsidering the qualifications of the whole body every year.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—It is not a matter of vital moment.

Mr. Robertson.—In the constitution of the local Boards my clients think their claims have not been regarded as they might have been. The Methodist body are not very numerous, but they are respectable in numbers, generally well educated, and seeking education. The schools which they have established show that they have devoted very considerable energy and large expenditure, and that they have met with a very large amount of success.

in higher intermediate education. At the intermediate education examinations their schools have met with very great success, and they think that the same test of population should not be taken as determining the representation on these local boards or on the Commission itself. They suggest that regard should be had to the bodies who have interested themselves in education, and they ask you to consider their claim to direct representation on the Commission and upon the local boards.

10541. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—What objection have you to the constitution of the local boards?

Mr. Robertson.—They think the Wesleyan Conference ought to have at least one representative on each of these boards. If Monaghan is not joined with Fermagh the Methodists are three times as numerous as the Presbyterians in Fermagh, and they ought to have three representatives there in the event of Monaghan not being joined.

10542. Professor DOUGHERTY.—What do you claim if Monaghan is added to the Fermagh district?

Mr. Robertson.—Then we only claim one.

10543. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Which you leave.

Mr. Robertson.—Yes.

10544. Dr. TRAILL.—You have representatives on the local boards proposed by the scheme.

Mr. Robertson.—They happen to be there now, but there is no security for the future.

10545. Dr. TRAILL.—Are not Mr. Venables of Oakdown, Mr. Paul of Fortadown, Mr. James Harley of Cavan, and the Rev. R. A. McFarlane, M.P., of Stranorlar, Methodists?

Mr. Robertson.—Yes.

10546. Dr. TRAILL.—Then you have four representatives on these boards at any rate.

Mr. Robertson.—But what we want is direct representation of the Methodist Conference.

10547. Dr. TRAILL.—Are the other denominations meeting the Methodist claim?

Mr. Robertson.—I don't think they are interfering.

10548. Dr. TRAILL.—At all events they are not here.

Mr. Robertson.—But we say that population should not be the only test, but that a body found exerting itself in the cause of education has established a claim to consideration.

Rev. Dr. MORAY.—I think we quite accept that principle.

Mr. Shaw.—The Education Committee of the General Assembly are strongly in favour of the mixed boards, and for very obvious reasons. In the first place, all the evidence in the north of Ireland, in the districts to which these schemes will apply, was practically one way, that, while the Roman Catholics and Protestants of any denomination could not well work together in the management of a school, the several denominations of Protestants found no difficulty whatever in working together; that was elicited by all the facts that came before the Commission. In Monaghan, Enniskillen Dungannon, and Raphoe, the evidence was absolutely unanimous that there was no difficulty whatever in forming local committees, representing all the various Protestant denominations, who could work a common school together at which all their children might attend; and at Monaghan we had a most striking illustration, because a committee, formed of the various Protestant denominations, had set up a school which was attended by children of all religious denominations in which the head master was an Episcopalian, the second master was a Presbyterian, the committee worked most harmoniously, and the school was most successful. There was also the other fact, which ought to be kept before the mind of the Commission, that almost every successful Protestant school in the north of Ireland is under the management of a school board. The Derry and Coleraine Academic Institutions are under the management of mixed boards. In Foyle College the Moderator of the General Assembly and the Bishop of the Diocese are ex officio trustees, and Walter Ennals School, Lurgan, is similarly managed by a mixed board. These are among the most prosperous schools in the north of Ireland.

10549. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—The Strabane Academy is another case, and the people subscribed £1,800 out of their own pockets to build the school.

Mr. Robertson.—The only schools in the north of Ireland that have failed are schools that are and have been in the hands of those who now claim that a special share of the endowments should be given to the Church of Ireland, on the ground that they could work with no other Protestant denomination, the effect of which would be to get a considerable portion of the endowment under their own control.

Mr. Shaw.—Where you find Presbyterians concerned in the management of such a very large proportion of the schools which are efficient, why should the Commission perpetuate a system which has proved a failure, and refuse to follow in the lines which experience has pointed out as producing successful schools? I do not understand Mr. Bewley's argument that the Presbyterians cannot work with the Church people. He seems to think that there is no possibility of dealing with them in the working of this endowment. Whether that is owing to the larger liberality of the Presbyterians or not I don't know. But he seems to think that the Episcopalians can work with nobody but themselves.

Very Rev. R. McNAMES.—The only matter upon which I will detain the Commission is an objection in reference to the locality in the Tyrone district from which the members of the Roman Catholic Local Board are taken. After communication with the Archbishop you can give us some representatives from the Omagh district, it would be well to know it.

Archbishop LEYKE.—I wish to say that when I got a request to send in names, I had not the scheme before me, and I thought it was strictly diocesan. I therefore left out Omagh though I wanted to put in Father McNAMES. But if the Bishop of Derry and Dean Byrne, who are concerned, will agree to my nomination of mine, I will nominate representatives from Omagh.

Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—As we received the names from your Grace we did not like to make any change without communicating with you.

10550. Professor DOUGHERTY.—I should like to ask your Grace whether the fact of nearly one half of the county Tyrone, being in the Diocese of Derry, should not entitle that diocese to some representation.

Archbishop LEYKE.—That is a reason why I would not ask to nominate all the Tyrone Local Board. I think it would be well if Father McNAMES, the Bishop of Derry, and Dean Byrne agreed to some names.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—The Bishop of Derry has the largest claim to representation.

10551. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you wish, Father McNAMES, laymen from that district too?

Father McNAMES.—I wish four to be on it—two laymen and two clergymen.

10552. Dr. TRAILL.—Are there any Derry representatives on it?

Father McNAMES.—No.

10553. Rev. Dr. MORAY.—What proportion of the Catholic population of Tyrone is in the diocese of Derry?

Archbishop LEYKE.—If you give us the proportions we can agree to a certain proportion of representation.

Father McNAMES.—£1,071 in Derry, 52,745 in Antrim, 15,977 in Clogher. But as Dr. Donnelly has got a board altogether for himself he might forego his claim in connection with this district.

10554. Lord Justice FRYGESSON.—Apart from the question of foregoing a claim, what part of the county is in Clogher?

Archbishop LEYKE.—The south of the county.

Aug. 3, 1878.

10555. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—Does it possess any educational claims in the way of towns?

Archbishop LEYKE.—There are two or three little towns—Fintra is a small place, and the town of Clogher is merely a little village.

10556. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—As there are $50,000, 40,000, and 15,000, what would your Grace say if there were four representing Armagh, four representing Derry, and one representing Clogher in the county of Tyrone?

Archbishop LEYKE.—I am quite willing to agree to any arrangement which the Commissioners make.

Dr. TRAILL.—I think it would be better to have five for Armagh and four for Derry, and to leave Clogher out on account of its having a board for itself.

10557. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—This is a competing board, and we can only say that they shall accept people living in the several dioceses. Probably it would meet the difficulty, to say that there shall be at least four from the part of Tyrone in the diocese of Armagh, and at least four from the part in Derry diocese, and that would leave one unfilled.

Father M'NAMES.—I am particularly interested for the reason I stated. We have the only intermediate schools of which there is any public record.

Archbishop LEYKE.—I would propose to Father M'NAMES that he and the two others concerned should agree to a proposal among themselves, and I would agree to whatever they suggest.

10558. Professor DONAGHATY.—Have you had any consultation with the Bishop of Derry in reference to this matter?

Father M'NAMES.—I think not.

Archbishop LEYKE.—I am quite prepared to give any place to the Bishop of Derry. It would be inconvenient for me to attend that board, because I don't live in the district.

10559. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—Then may we understand that if we communicate with Father M'NAMES and the Bishop of Derry your Grace will agree to their selection?

Archbishop LEYKE.—Yes; and in order further to facilitate matters I will vacate my position on the Tyrone board.

10560. Dr. TRAILL.—Would the Bishop of Derry, one clergyman, and two laymen satisfy you, Father M'NAMES?

Father M'NAMES.—Yes.

10561. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—That would leave two clergymen and two laymen representing the Armagh portion of the county, and the other clergymen might represent Armagh or Clogher as you wished.

Father M'NAMES.—I don't want more than four.

10562. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—We would leave four for Armagh, and the fifth could be taken either from the Tyrone portion of Clogher or from Armagh as the other members of the Board thought best.

Father M'NAMES.—I am quite satisfied with that. There is one question which arose to-day, namely, if you put Armagh, Cavan, and Raphoe, in the position that was asked for to-day. I don't consider it would be fair to the districts of Tyrone or Fermanagh to distribute their funds amongst those other districts, either for the minimum grant or the result fees competition. I don't care if you put Fermanagh, Monaghan, and Tyrone to compete with each other, but the suggestion to-day was that Armagh, Raphoe, and Cavan should be treated exceptionally, and I would suggest that, if so, those should be excluded from taking any part of the Tyrone or Fermanagh endowments.

10563. Dr. TRAILL.—You think that if the Armagh Local Board gets this minimum grant they should not be allowed to compete for results?

Father M'NAMES.—I think they should compete, if at all, on an equality.

10564. Lord Justice NASH.—You think that so long as Armagh gets the whole of its own endowment, and if Cavan and Donegal retain their endowments entirely, they should have no claim on your endowments, either by way of results or otherwise?

Father M'NAMES.—Quite so.

10565. Lord Justice NASH.—Would you object to Tyrone and Fermanagh competing?

Father M'NAMES.—Certainly not, nor would I object to the others competing if they competed on equal grounds.

10566. Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—We will have to consider that matter, but you must remember that the case of Armagh is a temporary arrangement, and that, in the case of the others, the whole amount of the endowments is not as much as your minimum.

Father M'NAMES.—We have made great sacrifices in Clogher, and, while the other schools are falling off, we are advancing—that is most encouraging.

Lord Justice FRYGEBORN.—The difficulty is that there is a prior charge to any local Board on the Armagh endowment, but the Tyrone local Board will get its grant at once under the scheme, and we want to give something also to the Armagh Roman Catholic Board at once.

10567. Dr. TRAILL.—Are you anxious that the Roman Catholic portion of the endowment should be kept exclusively for the Roman Catholics, or would you wish the competition to go on between the Protestants and the Catholics?

Father M'NAMES.—I have no objection to the competition if all are on equal grounds, but I have an objection to competing without bringing into the competition the funds from all the places which are competing.

10568. Dr. TRAILL.—When you can't compete for any part of their funds?

Father M'NAMES.—Yes, exactly.

Archdeacon NASH.—May I ask leave to say a few words on behalf of the standing committee of the General Synod? It was the intention of the standing committee that we should be represented by the same central who appeared for the diocesan councils, but there was some misadventure about the instructions, and in consequence it would appear as if the standing committee was allowing those important matters to pass as if they assented to them, because no one said anything on their behalf against them. But the committee felt that they would not be justified in allowing those matters to pass entirely in silence. Substantially the amendments suggested by the committee really touch, with some very small points of detail, upon the two points—the question of a united Protestant board, and the question of the division of the money at once, as against having it claimed from year to year by results. In the points which Mr. Bewley put forward, the standing committee agree with the diocesan councils. But the committee think it would be well that I should say any one or two words on the observations of Mr. Bewley in which the standing committee, as representing the whole Church of Ireland, supports him. The standing committee occupies a perfectly independent position with regard to those different districts. It is perfectly independent in the matter, except in the wish that there should be perfect fairness to all the different districts. The standing committee, although originally inclined to support the Commissioners of Education in their desire for the admission of a larger area, now quite accept the position that it has been decided that the area is to be restricted to those particular districts. Also, the standing committee are perfectly aware that there is a difference of opinion between the members of the Church of Ireland in those different districts—that in some districts the opinion of the members of the Church of Ireland is in favour of the plan of united schools, and in other districts is in favour of separate schools. But there are two ways of arriving at the result. The way is that adopted by the scheme, of appointing a united board with power to divide; the other method is to appoint separate boards with power to unite. This scheme really is such an elaborate piece of work, so carefully drawn up, and so well balanced, and so founded on full knowledge of the whole subject, that not only the committee, but counsel must have felt very great difficulty in proposing to teach it. But the committee had a decided preference, which they desire me to express, in favour of starting the Boards in a position of independence, leaving them afterwards to unite of their own free will, rather than starting with a united committee, having power afterwards to divide. The standing committee of the Church of Ireland is convinced that the foundation of all sound education must be in religion, that religion cannot be taught without dogma, and where those who are to impart religious education are of divergent views, on important points there is apt to be a great deal of friction when it is a united body, that is to lay down all the principles concerned. Now, if you have a series of districts in one of which you have a united body endeavouring to provide a really efficient system of religious education, and to provide that such education shall be given in these higher class schools, the tendency will be to minimise religious instruction for the convenience of agreement in something that nobody will object to, and a colourless kind of religion will be taught. That is what we see in Birmingham and London under the school boards. But on the other hand if boards acting together agree among themselves in recognising the separate and independent right to give independent instruction, the likelihood is very much greater that they will agree in providing definite instruction for the separate people of the different denominations, which will be in accordance with the wishes of their parents, and with the usual teaching of the religious denomination to which they belong. I am speaking I hope with perfect liberty and equality, as to the views of all the bodies that can in any reasonable degree claim a contribution out of the public funds for providing this kind of education. To recognise the separate claim to provision for religious education of every small community of Christians would be quite impossible, but I distinctly recognise the cogency of the arguments put forward on behalf of the Methodist Conference for claiming that they should be counted as a really existing body. They have a large number of adherents.

Aug. 5, 1887.

10573. PROFESSOR DOUGHERTY.—What is the precise number of adherents of the Methodist body?

Mr. ROBERTSON.—In Ulster, 34,000.

Dr. TRAILL.—You must leave out Antrim and Down.

10576. PROFESSOR DOUGHERTY.—Do you happen to know the number of the other Protestant denominations?

Archdeacon SCOTT.—I can only answer generally—less than one half of the Methodists—taking these altogether. If there were all one body there would be something to be said for them, but when they are divided into very little bodies it could hardly be said that they have separate claims to any appreciable share, and the only possibility that exists for them to obtain intermediate instruction is that they should go to a school set up upon a wider footing than their own. In all that the standing committee ask, they do not propose to put any difficulty or hindrance in the way of united action in the Fermanagh district. If separate bodies were set up there those bodies would unite, but I think that they would unite much better and on a much more satisfactory footing if there was recognition of the independence of each different religious body, and of the right of each body to claim instruction in religious views.

10577. PROFESSOR DOUGHERTY.—Are you aware that the representatives of the various denominations in Enniskillen told us that they have agreed to unite?

Archdeacon SCOTT.—Yes, and therefore if you give them their separate existence they will unite, and I think that they would do it on a better footing, having come together of their own free will, than as being forced together by a constitution imposed on them. On the other hand I think it is very likely that in Armagh there would be another course taken, and it would be very easily taken, on the footing of their being an original and separate constitution given to them.

10578. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—Do you propose to have separate Protestant Boards in Armagh from the beginning?

Archdeacon SCOTT.—In each case I propose that there should be separate Protestant Boards constituted with full power to unite, which I take it for granted they would do in some districts.

10579. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—Then to which of the Protestant Boards in Armagh would Dr. Morgan's school belong during Dr. Morgan's tenure of office?

Archdeacon SCOTT.—During Dr. Morgan's tenure things would be on their present footing.

10579. Rev. Dr. MONTAGU.—Then you would start in Armagh with an united Board?

Archdeacon SCOTT.—There is no Board in Armagh. There was something said, if you will allow me to say so, which was not quite fair to the Church of Ireland, that it was not meeting to the Commissioners that they should be asked to give a separate recognition to the Church of Ireland in the matter of higher education, seeing that the Church of Ireland had had these schools for so many years, and had made so little use of them. But I think, it is fairly to be said that, seeing that the Church of Ireland have had these schools, and the enjoyment of them, and that the members of the Church of Ireland have had mainly the use of them, this prescriptive claim ought to be considered in regard to the proportion which should be allowed to the Church of Ireland out of the endowment. Proportion is something, and the deprivation of an advantage which has prevented their making the same provision as their Roman Catholic, Methodist, and Presbyterian neighbours, should be fairly met. The reason why the Church of Ireland has not done so well as they might have done has been, I have no doubt, that they were learning on these endowments, and possibly they may be the better for the loss of these, but I say that they should not be dealt with too severely at one sweep.

10578. Dr. TRAILL.—You are arguing in favour of disendowment and disestablishment, Archdeacon?

Archdeacon SCOTT.—I don't think that has been altogether injurious, but the Board which had the management of these schools was of a kind which is, by general consent, treated as not a hopeful one. They were under the management of a certain number of great potentates, some ecclesiastical and some lay, having very important responsibilities of their own, and having their work lying in different places, who did not find it easy to put their united wisdom together in the management of these schools, and all who have looked at all into the history of the Royal Schools know that at one time one set of Commissioners, at another time another, came together to carry on their business, and, under such circumstances, it could not be carried on satisfactorily. More than that, it was a body constituted on a principle formerly thought wise, but which is now generally admitted not to be wise, the principle of a dignified Board, hampered by its connection with Parliament, having its expenses paid out of the estimates, and the result was that, when again and again they asked means to make the schools more efficient, and for power and means to make changes, they were refused. Now, I have no doubt this Commission will give to whatever body they constitute, united or divided, power to act with freedom and according to circumstances; and, I must say that the skill which has framed this scheme, which fills me with admiration, would be very easily applied to provide means by which what the Standing Committee asks may be obtained, that is freedom for the several religious denominations to exercise their powers as they think right in their high duty of imparting religious instruction and training in morality and knowledge of the Christian religion according to their own convictions. The Standing Committee have also suggested some small alterations which the Commissioners have before them in print. I would say, finally, that the Standing Committee also agree with Mr. Bewley's argument as regards the preference of an immediate division on whatever may seem to be fair grounds to a division from year to year.

Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We must carefully consider the opinions of the Standing Committee on the general question. We understand you to support Mr. Bewley's contention on these two points, but you have put your argument in a way that was not put to us before; and it will require consideration, whether separate boards, with power to unite, would not be preferable to the proposal of the scheme—united boards with power to divide.

Dr. TRAILL.—The great awkwardness is that local opinion is dead against the opinion of the Standing Committee.

10576. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We have got evidence that if some local people were to look after the estates, the income might be increased.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—We think that great expense would be involved in having separate estate management. The Incorporated Society's Estates are scattered over Ireland, and have a rental partly in excess of that from the property of the Royal Schools, and when such estates can be managed by a single agent, there ought to be no reason why the Royal School Estates should not be managed in the same way by one central body in Dublin or in the North of Ireland.

10577. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—But the Incorporated Society has a direct interest in raising the full amount of the income from the property. We could hardly expect the same and from the Commissioners of Education who have no direct interest, and then the new commissioners will definitely be a governing body. We thought the Local Boards the best to manage the various estates, and the minimum grant was so arranged in the scheme as to give them a direct pecuniary interest in seeing that the largest amount possible was got from their property.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—We see local bodies mismanaging their estates.

10578. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We did not find any case in which they failed to raise as much money as could be got.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—But the expense of management would be greatly increased by having separate agents.

10579. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—How? Every agent is paid 5 per cent., except the Raphoe agent who gets 10 per cent.

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—But separate sets of books, and separate clerks, and separate methods of management, must involve additional expense. Besides this would create elements of discord.

Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The Commissioners have separate agents now.

10580. Lord Justice NABER.—Is your proposal to leave the administration of the estates, and the collection of the rents, in the hands of some central body?

Mr. Bewley, Q.C.—Yes.

Mr. NABER.—I think my learned friend touched the real point when he mentioned that this would create elements of discord.

10581. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you think that one-half of the board would be anxious to remit the rents?

Mr. NABER.—We think that in the county Cavan that would be a very important matter. We don't see how we could arrive at the appointment of an agent. There would be a perfect row about it. We think the central body might appoint an agent living on the spot who would be watched by the local board, and would not give them the power of appointing him; but he will be kept to his work once you appoint the local board, and make them precisely the landlords. There are many difficulties attending the management of the estates by the local committees. In the first place I doubt whether you would get gentlemen to act upon a committee who had to manage an estate, because it is a most inviolable function you would have—the local estates committee subjected to visits every other morning from the tenants; they are not the people to deal with them at all. The proper thing is to employ an experienced agent, and let him deal with them.

10582. Dr. TRAILL.—The best managed estates are those which have the agents residing locally.

Mr. NABER.—That is what I say, but the local agent should be under the control of the Board in Dublin, and not of the local body. The local bodies won't agree to the appointment of the agent, and if they did, they would be hampered by local influences in the management of the property.

Mr. O'R, Q.C.—Let me point out that ten commissioners appointed to the central body in Dublin are members of local boards.

10583. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The commissioners think it would be better that they should retain the management.

Mr. O'R, Q.C.—They do, but they think that their powers ought to be more defined. By some of the clauses their old powers are continued, and by subsequent clauses many of those powers are taken away, which they think ought to be left to them.

10584. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We should like to hear the views of the local bodies in reference to this. If they would rather shift the responsibility to Dublin it would be hardly for us to differ with them.

Archbishop Logue.—I believe that the rents would not be so well collected by a local board for the reason mentioned by Mr. NABER—the tenants would be calling on the members of the local estates committee, and making appeals to them. I think that an agent under the control of the central body would be more likely to collect the rents than any local authority. Of course the agent should be living in the locality, but he would be responsible, not to the local committee, but to the central body.

10585. Dr. TRAILL.—We thought your Grace could do a little by the power of the church to induce them to pay their rents.

Mr. Drummond.—I submit that the property should be sold and the money invested.

Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It is all very well to say so, and we may agree with you, but we cannot force a sale.

10586. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—If you look at the evidence you will see that matter was not overlooked. We asked the agents whether there was any prospect of a sale being had, and in every case we were told there was not, because, owing to the way in which the estates were managed, the tenants found themselves better off as they were.

Mr. Drummond.—The Cavan property is in the hands of tenants who would buy under Lord Ashbourne's Act.

Lord Justice NABER.—We are giving most ample powers of sale, but we ourselves cannot be the vendors.

Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—I believe we are unanimous in the opinion that although a very large loss of income would be involved in a sale it would be infinitely better for this, or for any other educational body to have nothing to do with the management of land.

Aug. 3, 1868.

Mr. Drummmond.—There would not be a loss in respect of the Cavan property. It would be very easy to find someone to purchase on the net income, and there would be a clear profit to the Cavan property if it was sold.

10387. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Whether it is the opinion of your clients that carrying out the sale should be left in the hands of the central body in Dublin and their agents, or that it should be in the hands of the estates committee, or of any other local body?

Mr. Drummmond.—My clients do not think that it would make very much difference as far as the sale is concerned, but they are very clearly of opinion that it would be an advantage to get rid of all this machinery of agents, landlords, and so on.

10388. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If you leave the scheme as it is they can carry out the sale themselves, but if you shift the management to the central board you will be dependent on the action of the central board as to whether the estates will be sold or not.

Mr. Drummmond.—Is it the intention to leave the power of sale only in case of the consent of both boards?

10389. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The power of sale under the scheme is given to the estates committee, which will contain representatives of both boards, but you could not carry out a sale without the concurrence of the body in Dublin. But we should like to know whether you would prefer that the estates should be managed by agents appointed and removable, or by agents appointed and removable by the central board in Dublin?

Mr. Drummmond.—On the whole it would be better to have the management of the property under the control of the Dublin body.

10390. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—That seems to be the predominant feeling among all parties.

Mr. Robertson.—Nearly all parties agree as to that.

Mr. Curran, q.c.—My clients prefer to adopt the scheme and to leave the management of the estates in the hands of the local boards.

Amendement Seodien, n.r. (Enniskillen).—I fully concur with Mr. Curran. On the part of the Catholic people of Fermanagh, I say that the management of the estates should be left to the local committee, subject to the supervision of the Commissioners.

10391. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The Commissioners appear to despair of collecting any more rent in Donagel, and would like to hand over the property to a local body to see what they could make of it.

Mr. Drummmond.—The reason I would be willing that the body in Dublin should have control is that my clients will sell on the first opportunity.

Mr. Curran, q.c.—I wish to call attention to the constitution of the central body. There are three objections—one from Dr. Donnelly, one from the Prime, and one from the Archbishop of Dublin.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I object on behalf of those I represent.

10392. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I believe you all object that the body is too large?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—We object also to the relative proportions.

Mr. Curran, q.c.—The objections of Dr. Logue and Dr. Donnelly are substantially the same. They do not think that Catholic interests are sufficiently protected in the election of the Commissioners. There are ten commissioners to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and there is a clause that "regard shall be had to the due representation of the several religious denominations entitled to benefit from the endowments." That is a very elastic clause, and looks very well on paper, but it is very difficult of application. Following out the analogy which the Commissioners have adopted in the other matters of division, this scheme should provide that one half of these Commissioners should be at all times Roman Catholics. It seems to be now conceded that if there is to be a division at all that one half practically represents that division.

Mr. Donley, q.c.—That is not conceded at all.

Mr. Curran, q.c.—It was conceded more than once, that taking all things together the nearest division would be into halves.

10393. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Don't misunderstand what was said about that—that related only to the parties interested in these particular Royal School endowments.

Mr. Curran, q.c.—If the persons entitled to share in these endowments are half and half, and if the endowments are to be divided half and half, what is more natural than that the central body should be also half and half?

10394. Lord Justice NASH.—How would you select them?

Mr. Curran, q.c.—I would provide that at all times ten of these Commissioners should be Roman Catholics. I may anticipate Dr. Walsh by saying that portion of his objection in which he says that words to the following effect should be added: "The persons chosen in each case being persons who, in the matter of education, enjoy the confidence of the members of the religious denomination in question." That might be open to objection for vagueness; and I would propose as a practical way of getting rid of that difficulty that the nomination should not be vested in the Lord Lieutenant, but that, as in the case of sheriffs, certain names should be selected from the local boards, and that those names should be submitted to the Lord Lieutenant, and that out of them he would be empowered to make his selection. In that way you would give the Catholic and Protestant local boards the power of selecting gentlemen in whom each denomination would have confidence, and you would have the veto of the Lord Lieutenant as a reasonable check on the appointment of persons whom he might not consider desirable. And there should be a general provision that at all times one half at least of the existing body of Commissioners should be Catholics.

10395. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Why don't you strike out "at least," and make it half and half?

Mr. Curran, q.c.—Dr. Donnelly thinks he would be entitled to have more than half on the board.

10396. Professor DONOVAN.—Then wouldn't it be as well to say so, if that is your view?

Dr. TRAILL.—You had better go for half and half.

Mr. Curran, q.c.—I will leave it to the Commission to say what the number shall be over and above half.

10397. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Do I understand you to propose that the local boards shall in every case nominate to the Lord Lieutenant, and if he selects their nomination there shall be no further election by the local boards?

Mr. Curran, q.c.—I would not ask that the Commissioners should be reduced in number. I think there should be still twenty Commissioners, ten selected by the local boards without any veto of the Lord Lieutenant, and ten selected by the local boards with the veto of the Lord Lieutenant.

10398. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—If the Local Boards have the first ten—I can see no object in their electing ten more?

Mr. Curran, q.c.—Simply because the first ten would not necessarily be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant because they were selected by the local boards, whereas the local board would have the absolute power of controlling the appointment of the second ten themselves.

10399. Dr. TRAILL.—That would ensure the local boards having the power of representing themselves on the Commission not only by the first ten, but also the second ten whom they had elected would represent the educational views of the particular body which selected them.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—The objection also arises, following on the analogy of the power to elect Commissioners by the University of Dublin, the Royal University, The Catholic University of Ireland, and the Intermediate Education Board, "that the Council of Studies of Maynooth College should have a right to elect two of the Commissioners, and that accordingly the number of Commissioners to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant should be reduced to eight, or the number of Commissioners should be increased to thirty." These are the views of Dr. Donnelly.

10500. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Would you have any objection to give the Presbyterian Colleges a similar representation, as they have a faculty constituted by Royal charter?

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—If the Presbyterian College is fulfilling as important functions in the Presbyterian Church as Maynooth is fulfilling in the Catholic Church, I don't see why that body should not get the power of nominating two Commissioners.

10501. Dr. TRAILL.—Don't you think that the representation is fully provided for in the case of the Catholic University, which has the power to nominate two of the Commissioners?

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—No, because they represent two different classes of education. The Catholic University has quite a different function to that of Maynooth.

10502. Dr. TRAILL.—Should not intermediate education be taken in a secular aspect rather than in the aspect of a religious denomination. Should the entrance examination at Maynooth be open to all denominations?

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—I fear say Maynooth College would be very glad of an Episcopalian came there announcing his intention to adopt the Roman Catholic priesthood as a profession.

10503. Dr. TRAILL.—But there is this difference between the bodies named here already—that they are practically open to all denominations.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—There is no other matter to which I wish to refer. The scheme provides that the existing Commissioners shall (so far as, if they fulfil certain conditions, continue to be members. We think that those Commissioners have not been so successful in the management of the endowments that they should have a right to continue, and it would be only fair that the Lord Lieutenant should have the power of continuing them on if he thought fit, but we object to continuing their existence as a matter of right.

10504. Professor DOUGHERTY.—If you discuss all the Commissions, Mr. Curzon, would not that be the same thing as dissolving them.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—Not dissolving them to any greater extent than this scheme does.

10505. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You destroy all continuity.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—I don't think so.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If we remove all the existing Commissioners, and put new ones in their place we may risk the Parliamentary grant of £800 a year.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—I would like the judicial Commissioners to decide that point, but as a lawyer it would occur to me that continuity would be dissolved just as much by introducing a great number of new members as by substituting an entirely new set. The corporation would remain the same although the constituent elements might be altered.

10506. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We don't like to run the risk of exposing the Treasury grant to the argument in Parliament that the Commissioners are no longer the same body. Besides, I think we ought not to preserve their identity merely in form; we ought to keep it really the same body, and to leave the appointment of a substantial part of it with the Lord Lieutenant if we expect to get the same maintenance. It is a very substantial sum.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—I would not press that with the same anxiety after your lordship's explanation.

10507. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—However, only those members of the pre-existing body are confirmed who have attended to their important business.

Mr. Curzon, q.c.—But the effect might be to wipe out everyone.

10508. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Some have attended very regularly.

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—I am glad to find that I am in agreement with Mr. Curzon that of the Commissioners appointed by the Lord Lieutenant some definite proportion ought to be arranged. But I do not approve of his system of nomination. I think it should be left to the Lord Lieutenant; but that it should be defined in the scheme, that a certain number should be of the Roman Catholic Church of Ireland, non-Episcopalian, or other persons, so that there should be no danger at a future time of the religious representation being turned one way or another.

10509. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—What proportion would you propose for each denomination?

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—That would depend in great measure on the proportion in which the Commission think the endowment should be divided.

10510. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—You would be content to let the representation follow the same proportion as the endowment?

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—I think so.

10511. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The only educated body in which the proportion is fixed is, I believe, the National Board. I think in the Intermediate Education Board and in the Royal University it is not fixed; but the Lord Lieutenant does it of his own motion. The very Commission on which we are now sitting is in the same position. There is no word in our Act about the distribution of donations among ourselves, that is a matter that the executive Government decide.

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—It would be better to have it fixed as is done in the case of the Commissioners of National Education, and we think that the total number of Commissioners is too large. We think it should be twenty-four instead of twenty-eight, and that franchises "(C)," "(D)," "(E)," and "(F)" should be dispensed with. We would confine it to nine appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and fifteen Commissioners elected by the local boards. Our proposition is that there should be three local boards in each district.

10512. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Your fifteen would be five Roman Catholics, five Church of Ireland, and five Presbyterians?

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—Yes.

10513. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—How do you propose to divide the Lord Lieutenant's nine?

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—They must be determined by the proportion at which you fix the endowment.

10514. Rev. Dr. MOLLAY.—If we adopted Mr. Curzon's suggestion and made a division of half for Protestants and half for Catholics, how could that be done?

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—I have no objection to the Lord Lieutenant's number being increased to get over the difficulty.

Dr. TRAILL.—Dr. Mollay's difficulty would be met by dividing your nine into seven and two.

10515. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But the result would be very curious. Of the twelve Roman Catholic representatives seven would be appointed by the Government, while of the Protestants only two would be appointed by the Government, and ten would be elected by local boards.

Mr. Bawley, q.c.—I think that would make very little matter.

10516. Dr. TRAILL.—I think you may give that up.

Aug. 3, 1838.

Mr. Buxley, q.c.—As far as university representation is concerned we think that can be fairly met by the Lord Lieutenant's appointment.

10617. Dr. TRAILL.—Don't you think that education would be better in the hands of educational persons than in the hands of political persons?

Mr. Buxley, q.c.—I think that when the Lord Lieutenant nominates that should be a sufficient guarantee of the suitability of the person. We entirely disapprove of Mr. Carton's proposal—that, practically, all the appointments should be local appointments. The result would be that they would be all local persons, and would not include any person taking a general interest in education, or any person of thoroughly independent position.

Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Yet on your own proposal all but two of the Protestant Commissioners would be "local persons."

10618. Dr. TRAILL.—Would not the representation of the three Universities remedy that difficulty? They would go to educational persons taking a wide view of the whole question.

Mr. Buxley, q.c.—Under Mr. Carton's suggestion the local boards might return two representatives, and one desirable person to the Lord Lieutenant. That is highly objectionable. We prefer that these Commissioners should be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and that, if possible, the proportion for each denomination should be fixed by the scheme.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I agree with Mr. Buxley as to desirability of his suggestions. My clients consider this board entirely too large. Twenty is quite large enough. We think that local interest and general educational interest should be represented, and therefore object to Mr. Carton's proposal that all the Commissioners should be locally elected.

Mr. Carton, q.c.—I propose to retain the Universities' nominations.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—It might have been desirable when these schools were more or less federated of the Universities, that there should have been a connection established by having two members from each University, but as this scheme would level them all down to mediocrity, and as the university examination is too great a test of scholarship, we say that this is entirely unnecessary. In addition it may be so worked as to swamp the Protestant representatives. We wish for equality between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants, and that the Protestant representatives should not be confined to one denomination. I submit that ten Commissioners should be elected by the local boards, and ten should be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant—five of whom should be Roman Catholic, and of the remaining five, two should be Episcopalian, two Presbyterian, and one belonging to any of the other denominations. If those figures do not exactly work I should increase the number so as to make a just and adequate representation of each of the subordinate groups; but I object altogether to the (C), (D), (E), (F), and last of all to this indefinable clause:—

"That whenever any University shall hereafter be lawfully established, the governing body may elect two Commissioners." That might be worked out to swamp any particular interest—For instance, supposing two Roman Catholic Universities sprang into existence!

10619. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Is there any appreciable possibility that two Roman Catholic Universities would be established by law in Ireland?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I think that anything is possible in Ireland.

10620. Dr. TRAILL.—Do you provide that the representation shall be half and half, or do you want to make it any different proportion?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—No. If that provision is to override the whole construction of the board, it would enhance the Universities in their election very much. I should prefer that all the University members should be disqualified, and that the representation of the general interests of education should be provided for by the members nominated by the Lord Lieutenant.

10621. Dr. TRAILL.—Surely, are not the Universities more likely to provide persons skilled in general education?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes, but the paramount object should be that no religious interest should be swamped.

10622. Dr. TRAILL.—If you put in the proviso that the Lord Lieutenant is to make up the balance, why need you apprehend that, when the balance is to make it half and half?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—We have not much confidence as to the way in which that clause might be read from time to time.

10623. Dr. TRAILL.—It might be provided that one-half should be always Roman Catholics and the other half Protestants.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That would be all very well as far as the Lord Lieutenant is concerned, but if you extend that provision to the Universities they might be very much hampered in their election.

10624. Dr. TRAILL.—The Lord Lieutenant has the power of naming a larger number than all the Universities put together.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Supposing one of the Lord Lieutenant's representatives dies, and that he is a Protestant; and that one for the Royal University dies, and he is also a Protestant—10625. Dr. TRAILL.—You assume that both die at the same instant and that both are filled up at the same instant.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Supposing then that a representative of the Catholic University dies, there would be then vacancies for two Protestants and one Roman Catholic—has supposing the Universities send up two Roman Catholics, what are you to do? Which of the Roman Catholics are you to disqualify?

10626. Dr. TRAILL.—You must leave the Universities to take care of that. But if you leave to the Lord Lieutenant the power of nominating more than the whole of the Universities' representatives it levels up the whole thing, and what you are arguing is a very remote contingency.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Supposing the Lord Lieutenant's appointments are full.

10627. Dr. TRAILL.—Would not that be met by making the provisions extend over the entire scheme?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes, if it was workable.

10628. Dr. TRAILL.—It is perfectly workable.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Then it might come in the Catholic turn to fill up a Protestant appointment?

10629. Dr. TRAILL.—How could they do that—because the vacancy would be for the Catholic University, and they would have the appointment?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—At any rate, we object to the twenty-eight Commissioners and "as many others as may be added from time to time."

10630. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Do you think that Commissioners appointed by the Local Boards could be relied upon to attend in Dublin to the routine business of the Board?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't think so. I should like Commissioners with something more than parochial views.

10631. Professor DODDINGTON.—Would provincial views satisfy you?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—No, we should like to have those whose motives spring alone from an interest in the cause of education.

10632. Professor DODDINGTON.—After all this is an Ulster endowment, and don't you think that the Ulster people could manage this for themselves?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I think you secure that if you strike off the University representatives, by giving them the proportion of representation I suggest. My board is twenty and I should allow the Ulster representatives to have ten, and it would be practically impossible to carry any question vitally affecting their interest against their wish.

10633. Professor DOUGHERTY.—The local representatives could not be expected to attend regularly in Dublin.

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—But for the general routine management the Dublin representatives might be fairly trusted.

10634. Dr. TRAILL.—The educational representatives sent in by the Universities would be more likely to represent the educational interests of the whole country than men sent in for political purposes?

Mr. ATKINSON, Q.C.—If they are appointed for political purposes, I would not have them sent in at all.

10635. Dr. TRAILL.—Then you had better strike out the Lord Lieutenant's nominations, and not have them sent in at all.

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—The views of the Commissioners whom I represent is that the proposed number is too large. The existing Commissioners consist of eleven.

10636. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—There would be far more than eleven, if the Lord Lieutenant had appointed the full number.

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—If this committee of twenty-eight all attended pretty regularly, the board will be too large to be manageable. You will never get two meetings successively attended by the same members, and there would be no continuity of action. We suggest that a very small number would work much more satisfactorily, and that eight should be the number of the new board.

10637. Dr. TRAILL.—Have you not often had only two members present, and from time to time been obliged to send out to find a third person to sign the cheques?

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—We think that with a smaller number you are likely to have better meetings. The Commissioners suggest that eight should be the number, and that there should be an abolition of the ex-officio members. That is conceded on all hands. We suggest that three should be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant with due regard to the proportion of the religious denominations likely to attend the schools.

10638. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—How could the local boards express their views unless they had representatives on the central authority?

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—We are opposed to local boards altogether.

10639. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—But supposing that local boards should exist, would it be objected to by your Commissioners if we gave ten to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and ten to be appointed by the local boards, who could go up to Dublin when business affecting their locality was before the central board.

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—I have no instructions upon that, but I suppose it would not be objectionable. But we think that one of the great objections of the scheme is that the local boards are to have complete control of education under the scheme.

10640. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—From what has taken place you may see that there is a strong feeling among all parties in favour of local boards.

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—Yes, I gathered that, and from the evidence taken before the Commission; but at the same time my board objects to local boards.

10641. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Your proposition simply amounts to the abolition of the "fancy franchises." But there are other endowments that these Commissioners will have to administer besides the Ulster ones—in any case there are the Bannagher and Caryfort Royal School endowments. Besides you will see that at a very early stage we represented to the Chief Secretary, and also reported to Parliament, that the utmost we could do with these endowments was to establish a system in five or six counties which would accommodate the fact that no similar provision was to be found elsewhere, and if this led to the extension of the system to the whole thirty-two counties, I don't think it would do to have it administered by a body of Commissioners elected by these five counties.

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—We object to local boards altogether, and it is impossible to separate the two things.

10642. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—But if the local boards stay as proposed, you support the view that there should not be more than ten Commissioners, and that all these should be nominated by the Lord Lieutenant?

Mr. O'RR, Q.C.—Yes.

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—On behalf of Dr. Logan, I support his objection that the council of studies of Maynooth College should have the right of electing two commissioners. Considering that a great many of these students who eventually come under the control of the council of studies of Maynooth College necessarily pass through intermediate schools, it seems reasonable that that body should have some representation on the commission.

10643. Dr. TRAILL.—You support the university representation generally, and then you think that Maynooth College ought to be added to the number of institutions represented?

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—Yes.

10644. Dr. TRAILL.—And Mr. CARTON also supports that view?

Mr. ROOKE, Q.C.—Yes.

Mr. DUNNE.—I support that view also.

Mr. ROBERTSON.—The Methodist body contend that the scheme should not be confined to commissioners belonging to the largest denominations; they think they are entitled, and they certainly desire to have direct representation on this central board accorded to them. They have no wish in the scheme as it is presently framed, because they have never found any favourable reception in Dublin Castle. But to the suggestion of Mr. CARTON, I certainly would most strongly object that the local boards upon which my clients sorely appear should be made the nominators of all the commissioners, and that a more power of selection than among those nominated should be given to the Lord Lieutenant. The result would be that the majority of these boards would nominate their own representatives, and the other denominations would in no case have any representation at all. We conceive that we have shown ourselves to take such an interest in education, that we are entitled to have some direct representation on the central body, and we object to leave the nomination of the central body almost entirely in the hands of these local boards.

Mr. SHAW.—The committee of the General Assembly take a different view to any that has been put forward. They think that the functions given to the central body of commissioners should be executive and ministerial almost altogether, and not at all deliberative, and that, therefore, the body should be a small one. All experience shows that where a body is not deliberative, but merely executive, a small body is much more efficient than a large body. The body of existing commissioners is very large, and it has not worked well when you have a large body doing business of this sort—what is everybody's business is nobody's business; where there are twenty or thirty looking after it no one is responsible, and considering that the functions of the central commissioners will consist chiefly in managing the financial business of the endowments, we think that a body of five at the very most should be appointed.

10645. Dr. TRAILL.—How would you distribute your five?

Mr. SHAW.—If you would take the composition of the Commission now sitting, very much the same lines that would satisfy everybody.

10646. Dr. TRAILL.—You think we are a good working body?

Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—I may say that there are some members of this Commission who would not accept a permanent appointment.

Aug. 3, 1888.

Mr. Stow.—I don't suppose that the Commission could be perpetuated, but a Commission appointed on the same lines would give every satisfaction. What is the meaning of representing the universities on a body which will have no educational functions whatever. There is nothing in this scheme which gives them control over the education.

10647. Dr. TRAILL.—I beg your pardon. There is a very serious control given in the schedule; the Commissioners may recognise examinations, and will have very strong powers.

Mr. Stow.—You may select the examinations which will be taking as qualifying tests, and it does not require representatives of the universities to deal with the matter. I take it that representatives of universities would be the very last who should be put on a commission to deal with finance and business matters. They would be elected not on the ground of financial capacity, but rather of educational capacity.

10648. Dr. TRAILL.—Don't you think that there should be much communication as possible between the universities and the schools? The common examination of the university to which I belong is not in my opinion at all suitable to the requirements of the Intermediate Education Board, and if the universities and schools and Intermediate Education Board were working in harmony under some such board as this, the probability is that there would be some strong reason to make them work more in harmony than they do.

Mr. Stow.—My contention is that if they meet for the purpose of giving directions as to the collection of moneys, or to investigate their agent's accounts the representatives of the universities will take very little interest as a general rule in matters of that sort.

10649. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—But you overlook a very important part of their work. The transaction of this central body is to act in all cases of emergency and dispute between local boards, and to adjudicate on the sides of the schools to share the moneys. There are many matters which the local boards might fight about, and which would have to be decided by some central body or authority.

Mr. Stow.—Surely all that is laid down in the scheme itself?

10650. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The conditions would lay down, but to enforce these, and to see whether any particular school or local board complies with them is another matter.

Mr. Stow.—The local boards have the selection free among the schools in their own districts which have fulfilled the conditions of those for which they will claim moneys. I don't see how the central commission could interfere with that.

10651. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—How do you propose that the Commissioners should be constituted?

Mr. Stow.—I propose that there should be a Commission of five at the utmost, and that they should be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant in certain definite denominational proportions. I would give two to the Catholic Church, two to the Protestant Episcopal Church, and one to the Presbyterian Church.

10652. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Even if this Commission satisfied anybody, which it probably would not, it would be simply creating a second board identical with the existing Intermediate Education Board, and it would be very hard to preserve the continuity of the present Commissioners.

Mr. Stow.—That board would have to do simply with the financial management of these endowments. The Educational Committee of the General Assembly are of opinion that this being an Ulster endowment, the Commission should be composed of five Ulster men, and that their place of meeting should be Armagh, Banbridge, Dungannon, or some other place in Ulster.

10653. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Your proposal amounts practically to a scheme for constituting a new educational body for Ulster, consisting of five persons in the proportions you have named, and transferring from the Commissioners of Education to that body the estates and property of the Royal Schools of Ulster.

Mr. Stow.—Yes.

10654. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Leaving the Commissioners of Education in Dublin untouched, but divested of the greater part of their property and of their functions.

Mr. Stow.—The scheme for the preservation of the vested interest of the present Commissioners might be kept up.

10655. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We should have transferred these interests to the Ulster Board. There would be nothing left for the old body to govern but Banagher and Carrifork.

Mr. Carter, Q.C.—This new body would not have the Government grant.

10656. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—And the old body might have a Government grant of £500 a year to manage a property worth £500.

Mr. Stow.—I am only proposing to substitute a body of Commissioners for that proposed in the scheme, and if the Commission put my proposition into the scheme the grant would surely then have been equally justifiable.

10657. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I may say for Lord Justice Nisich and myself, that we should not feel ourselves justified in proposing to Parliament for that is what it comes to—a continuance of the existing charge on the Consolidated Fund for an exclusively Ulster Board. It is defensible only as granted to a central body to govern endowed schools all over Ireland. If you have a merely provincial body you must make up your mind to pay for it yourselves.

Mr. Stow.—That, of course, is another matter altogether. I am not contending for anything other than that there should be a board such as I propose, and that that board should be substituted for the board proposed by the scheme.

10658. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—That Ulster should swallow up Ireland.

Mr. Stow.—The Ulster endowment is the real endowment that the new Commission, however constituted, would have to deal with, and our proposal, we think, is more practical than the proposal to constitute a board of twenty-eight persons, none of whom would be likely to take the slightest interest in the business.

Mr. Stow.—We support the argument of Mr. Addison that there should be a board of only twenty, that of the members of the Lord Lieutenant five should be Catholic and five Protestant, and we leave the selection to the Lord Lieutenant. We say that the University representatives should not be left doubtful. We particularly object to the last words of the clause because its effect is left in the dark. Your decision should be final, and everybody should see what is before them. It is clear in that case that there are materials for quelling the whole equilibrium of the board. We ask that the quorum should be increased to seven to make an efficient board. We ask you to reduce the board, but to increase the quorum; if you leave so small a quorum as five you will have no continuity.

10659. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We considered this matter carefully. If you reduce the number to twenty, of whom ten are country members, you will find it impossible to procure the attendance of seven of the ten Dublin members for the routine business.

Mr. Stow.—But I hope that the experience of the last board is not to be taken.

10660. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have efficient as well as inefficient boards before our minds, and no board can show a regular attendance of seven out of ten.

Mr. Stow.—It won't have much business to do.

10661. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Then there

Aug. 8, 1899. will be all the greater difficulty in getting them to come to do it.

Mr. Doyle.—Out of twenty they should be able to get a quorum of seven. With a quorum of five they will be reversing the action of one another, a different five will stand one day from those attending another.

Mr. Doyle, Q.C.—We think that seven out of twenty-five would be a satisfactory quorum.

Mr. Carton, Q.C.—In my opinion seven would be an insupportable quorum. They never would attend. Archbishop Walsh.—Speaking for the Roman Catholic Bishops—who have sent in a series of objections—on the point of the nomination by the Lord Lieutenant of ten of these Commissioners, I may say that our experience is that such nominations are in many instances unsatisfactory as regards Catholic interests. Your scheme declares that in making these nominations the Lord Lieutenant shall provide for the due representation on the Board, of the various religious denominations entitled to share in the endowments. Now persons are sometimes nominated by the Lord Lieutenant as the Catholic members of a board, who are publicly known to be advocates of a system of education which is condemned by the Catholic Church. We cannot consider that satisfactory. I speak now of the nomination of persons publicly known to be advocates, and even officials of an educational system condemned by the supreme authority of our Church—the supreme authority of the Holy See. We do not and we cannot consider any such system satisfactory, and manifestly we cannot recognise any such person as a suitable representative of Catholic interests in education.

10662. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—How can that difficulty be met?

Archbishop Walsh.—I have suggested the addition of certain words, which, however, I am afraid will not meet the difficulty very fully—and it may be hard to meet the difficulty very fully unless the Commission would adopt some suggestion such as Mr. Carton has made—but I should propose that that should be done in a slightly different form. I have suggested the insertion of a proviso that the persons to be nominated as representatives of any religious body should be persons enjoying the confidence of that body in matters of education. But no provision can be adequate which leaves the selection in the first instance to the Lord Lieutenant. The scheme as it stands contemplates the selection of twenty Commissioners in the first instance—ten appointed by the Lord Lieutenant—and ten elected by the local boards of education. There are ten local boards. I would suggest that each local board should be authorised to send up three names to the Lord Lieutenant, and that the Lord Lieutenant should nominate two representatives from the three persons so sent up. I keep the number as it is. And with a view to getting over a difficulty which seems to press on the minds of many of the Protestant representatives, I think that each board when sending up these names to the Lord Lieutenant should have a cumulative vote, so that the minority upon it, if of any importance, would be able to secure the presence of one at least amongst the three names to be sent to the Lord Lieutenant. The likelihood is that the Lord Lieutenant would in a sufficient number of cases take the minority representative and one majority representative, and in that way justice would be done all round. This would secure a fair representation as between the Episcopalian and other Protestants on the Protestant board, and as far as the Catholic boards are concerned the difficulty I feel would be fully met, because there would be an absolute guarantee that the Catholics whose names would be sent up to the Lord Lieutenant would really be suitable representatives of Catholic interests.

10663. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—You would not propose that they should necessarily be local persons?

Archbishop Walsh.—No, I would leave that to the boards. I should be in favour of having on the local representatives of the Universities; and I think I can say for the Catholic Bishops, that if some plan like that which I have suggested be adopted in order to secure adequate and efficient Catholic representation, the proposal of a direct representation of Maynooth College on the board would be withdrawn.

10664. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—As I understand, the body that would send forward the names to the Lord Lieutenant—in Bishops for instance—would be the local board of the Bishop's district?

Archbishop Walsh.—Yes.

10665. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—Is not that a very restricted body to nominate representatives for selection to a body for the whole of Ireland?

Archbishop Walsh.—I think the interests of the whole of Ireland are very fairly provided for by provision of representatives of the University of Dublin, the Royal University, the Catholic University, and the Intermediate Education Board.

10666. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—But it is proposed that those are to go out.

Archbishop Walsh.—Well, all I can say is that I think it would be a fatal mistake to strike them out, because those are the only safeguards you have for the general educational interests of the rest of the country.

10667. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—I am glad to hear that expression of opinion from your Grace. I thought you went with some of those who have objected to those University representatives. Supposing, in case the local boards are confined to direct representation, and the principle of nomination was adopted as to the other Commissioners, is there any central authority that could send in names from whom the selection might be made?

Archbishop Walsh.—I see great difficulty as far as the Catholic nominations are concerned. I don't think that the bishops would propose that the names should be sent forward by them as a body. We must provide for the representation of the laity as well as of the clergy. I take it that these local boards are the only nominating bodies from the Catholic point of view. Therefore, I make that suggestion, and I merely throw out that suggestion, generally, for the consideration of the Commissioners. There may be mistakes, but we think it is better that the scheme should work according to the lines I have suggested. The interests of Ulster are the principal interests to be looked after. Ulster men should have the chief control in the management of them.

10668. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—But we should not abandon all hopes of constituting a body capable of representing the whole of Ireland.

Archbishop Walsh.—The representatives from the universities and the intermediate education board will secure a sufficient safeguard in the general interests of education.

10669. Lord Justice FryGinnon.—Two large questions remain—the school buildings and the vested interests. We will take the school buildings next and then consider the vested interests. As to these interests, up to the publication of this scheme we had no definite scheme that we could rest as the basis of consideration, and we think we ought to hear to-morrow from counsel and the gentlemen interested, the general principles which will probably be the same for all, and therefore one discussion will dispose of all those cases. We cannot now go into details about length of service in each individual case. If we settle the general basis it will be the most that we can hope to accomplish at this sitting.

Mr. H. T. Don, Solicitor.—The case of Mr. Gordon, the assistant master of Armagh, stands in a peculiar position.

Lord Justice FryGinnon.—The case of all the assistant masters are in principle different from those of the freeholders, but if any special principle affects any also we will of course hear it. With regard to the schoolmasters each case will be considered on its own merits—for instance the circumstances of the residence of Mr. Moore, at Cavan, are different from those of Dr. Steele's residence, in Portora. We think each gentleman should be prepared to state, first, whether he desires to retire or to continue in office? In other words, does he claim that his vested interest should be saved, or that he should be compensated? It is for us to decide what we shall do, but he must make up his mind what he is claiming. If he wishes to go, he must tell us the existing value of what he has, and whether he desires to be compensated by a life annuity or by a capital sum, how he proposes to calculate his compensation, whether on full pay or half pay, and if by a capital sum—how he calculated it? If these details are given to us in writing, we could without any injustice discuss them subsequently, either by correspondence, or personally, but they are not of general interest, and we ought not to expose the elements to the necessity of going into these particulars in public court. The question as to the fund out of which these compensations are to be provided—whether out of the individual endowments or out of the money funds, is one which may be discussed here.

Aug. 2, 1888.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—Am I to understand that the returns headed in are not sufficient?

10676. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—The returns furnished are all in the same form—all claim to preserve the existing interest, but do not state what it is—we want to know whether each head master proposes to remain on, or under what conditions he is willing to retire—if we were obliged to admit these claims that have been sent in, we should simply say in each case that the scheme shall not come into operation until the 1860 interest drops, because otherwise the compensation would swallow up the whole endowment.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—The scheme presents two alternatives. One is a leap in the dark.

10677. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We do not ask you to elect, but each to state his claim.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—We should like to know what they will get.

10678. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—Remember we have proposed that each of these gentlemen shall retire on a life annuity equal to his full salary. There is a great deal to be said in point of law, as to what his rights are. If a man is appointed to be a schoolmaster, and the school disappears under his management, does his office continue as a matter of right? And we should like to know especially whether he funds a claim on the occupation of the school-house in a case like Portora, from which the furniture has been removed, and where the master has not resided for some time.

Mr. Bailey, Q.C.—If any of these parties says "I elect that my right should be preserved," it is quite in the power of the Commission to say "we will compensate you." So that in either case it will be necessary to go into the question of compensation.

10679. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—It may be, but do not understand me as suggesting that we can give you the option of taking either course. If one of these gentlemen says, "I elect to stay," we must refer him to the evidence of his having demanded a retiring pension, and if he now claims a retiring pension he must tell us how much he claims, and upon what title and calculations he bases his claim.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Will you hear us on this question? Some might like to preserve their interests as teachers, and some might not.

Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—Certainly. Mr. Drummond.—I should like to enter somewhat more into detail, into the question of the value of these matriculation examinations, and one very important factor, the inclusion of Maynooth College.

10674. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—What we want to get is a fair comparative test of the educational work actually done by the several schools every year. As one alternative it has been suggested to take the intermediate school examinations only, but though the compound arithmetic would be more simple you would then have the division of the endowments arrived in on the result of one single test, and we doubt that that is sufficient.

Mr. Corry, Q.C.—I understand that you would extend the area, and include the matriculation examinations.

10675. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We would not exclude the matriculation examination of Maynooth if we included the matriculation examinations of Trinity College, and the Royal University, and the Woolwich, Sandhurst, and Indian Civil Service examinations.

Mr. Corry, Q.C.—You have already included the matriculation examination of the Royal University, and the matriculation examination of Maynooth is higher than that. For example, Greek in the Royal University is optional, and in Maynooth it is compulsory.

10676. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—But I must again impress on you that our object is not to compare examinations as tests of scholarship, but to estimate the relative amount of genuine intermediate educational work done by different schools.

Mr. Shaw.—Do you require to-morrow additional information as to the claims of the assistant masters?

10677. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We know what their emoluments are, but we shall have to consider their case on general principles.

Mr. Duns.—I don't know whether you would consider the powers of the Commissioners as regards saving the existing assistant masters' interests.

10678. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—What is there to save?

Mr. Duns.—Some of them are appointed under the Act 13rd George III., which provides that they could not be dismissed by the head master without being brought up before the Education Commissioners.

10679. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We will hear you as to the general principles upon which their compensation is to be settled, but it would be singular if we were to move the position of the assistant master and to abolish the office of the head master.

Mr. Duns.—Still that would be an element of consideration in deciding the amount of compensation.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—I appear for Dr. Moore Morgan and Dr. Ringwood, and I should be glad to know if there is to be an argument against my clients both on principle and on their figures?

Mr. Corry, Q.C.—It would appear to me that there can be no controversy as to Dr. Moore Morgan's figures, but there will be various questions as to whether some of the heads under which he claims will be proper.

10680. Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—We can not now go into any controversy, for example, as to the amount of Dr. Moore Morgan's fees from pupils; but there may be a serious controversy as to how those fees should be calculated in my assessment of his retiring allowance.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—If the figures are taken as correct that will answer my purpose.

Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—The actual figures must be verified hereafter, and we would not think of now examining or cross-examining these gentlemen as to the details of their emoluments.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—Then we have sent in enough figures, I suppose.

Lord Justice FRYGROVER.—You have sent in a number of figures, but whether they are the right figures we have to inquire.

The Commission adjourned.

Aug. 4, 1888.

PUBLIC SITTING—SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1888.

At the Four Courts, Dublin.

Present.—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NAHE, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., D.Sc., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, Jun., was in attendance.

THE ROYAL SCHOOLS ENDOWMENTS, AND OTHER EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENTS
ADMINISTERED BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

The same counsel and solicitors appeared as on the preceding days.

The Rev. Bernard McNamee, P.P., V.P. (Omagh).—Might I mention one matter in connexion with the representation of the Diocese of Derry. I omitted to mention that there was a representation required for Lurichewen, which is in the county of Donegal, but belongs to the Diocese of Derry.

10481. Lord Justice NAHE.—Lurichewen is included in the Raphoe district for the purposes of our scheme.

Archbishop Legue.—*This is a matter for the Bishop of Raphoe; but I wish to mention that Father McNamee is too clever for the whole of us—for when giving the numbers in the county of Tyrone yesterday he gave 15,000 to the Bishop of Clogher, he gave us 52,000, and he gave himself 40,000, but he left out 15,000 of the Derry part of the Diocese of Armagh.

Father McNamee.—I supposed that part of Derry would be thrown out of the Tyrone district.

Archbishop Legue.—At a rough estimate there would be 15,000 or 16,000 Catholics in the part of the Diocese of Armagh which is in the county of Derry, and which is included in the Tyrone district. We are inclined to give Father McNamee fair play, but I think it would be better to leave the matter open until the parties immediately concerned have reconsidered it.

10482. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—There will be no hurry, because we want to take a holiday after we have done here.

Rev. Professor Maguire.—There is one layman, a magistrate, from Derry, on the list of names suggested for the Raphoe Board.

10483. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—Father McNamee has pointed out that there are certain localities unprovided with representation. The mistake arose partly from the archbishop not being aware of the difference between the diocesan boundaries and those of the districts, and partly from Father McNamee's not coming before us in the country. There are, therefore, now matters, and we will communicate with those concerned, of whom the Bishop of Derry is one. That would be only fair.

Bishop Donnelly.—There are six parishes of the Diocese of Clogher situated in the county of Tyrone, and we claim, therefore, to have some representation on the Dungannon Local Roman Catholic Board.

10484. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—There is no use in getting into a discussion about this matter now. It may be settled on consideration among the three bishops concerned.

Father McNamee.—I will only say that the fact that we have established the only Catholic schools that have appeared before the public as intermediate schools in the Tyrone district ought to be considered.

10485. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—If so, the scheme as it stands would give you the whole of the Roman Catholic share of the Tyrone endowment, and what more you could want, I don't know.

Archbishop Legue.—We have schools also, and we will count heads with him. But that is a matter for the future. I wish to ask one question. Two members of the Armagh Board have become non-resident since I sent in their names, would it be better to replace them?

Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—Yes, but it will be time enough to do so in a couple of months. We should wish to start these local boards with residents.

10486. Lord Justice FITZGIBBON.—The school buildings are the next matter. There was a good deal of opinion and evidence yesterday against having the estates committees, and therefore the machinery proposed in the scheme for settling by agreement with regard to the buildings has been very grossly objected to, and the question is, therefore, very open. But my judicial colleagues, and I, myself, both think, in point of law, that the buildings and the lands occupied with them are part of the local endowment, and that their value is to be taken into account as belonging to the endowment in each case. To what purposes they are to be applied is another matter; if there is to be any preferential treatment or pre-emption, only one plan for it can be recognised as it occurs to us, subject to anything we may hear, and that plan would be a proposal to utilize them for some schools already established or to be established under the scheme. We should be glad to hear in each case the views of the parties in each locality as to how the buildings ought to be used, whether other party wants to have them for the purposes of the scheme, and if not, what should be done with them; if either party wants to have them for the purposes of the scheme, then, upon what terms would it be fair that they should get them. Prices for the terms that would be fair and just would be for one party to take them on account of their own share of the endowment as per—if I may say so. That would at once raise a question of amount. Many objections have been made to this part of the scheme. It is said that if one party had a real need or even a sentimental desire to get the buildings, the other party would be able to raise the price to an extravagant figure. That objection can be fairly and completely met, if the party who does not want the buildings will name a figure for the purchase money. That party can then say to the other "you may have the premises at that price if you like, and if you won't have them at that price we will take them at that price, and make what we can of them, and in the division of the endowment will allow ourselves to be charged half the price we have put on them." If the parties cannot arrive at a valuation in that way I see no alternative except to put the premises up to sale. The scheme as it stands does not make any final arrangement about the school buildings, and we could not ask the parties to go into figures to-day, but we wish to hear to-day in each case whether the parties want the buildings for themselves, and if not how do they want them to be disposed of?

Mr. Curran, Q.C.—As I understand the scheme, it proposes that as soon as it is in working order the two parties, or estates committees if they are constituted, are to meet and, if they can, agree to a scheme; if they cannot agree to a scheme within six months, then the Commissioners are to sell them.

10682. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Everyone has objected to the scheme on this point, and there seems little probability of an agreement unless it is arrived at in time to be embodied in the scheme. The very same difficulty arose in the case of the Swoth scheme, and the parties ultimately fixed upon the figure of £5,000 at which the buildings should be taken or left, the Protestant board having the first option. If those interested in the Royal schools did likewise in each case there would be no difficulty.

Archbishop Walsh.—The arrangement in the Swoth case has apparently been most successful and most satisfactory. We should have been in a constant struggle, in all probability, if it had not been settled in that way.

10683. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It turned out very satisfactorily in the interests of harmony between the two boards; but whether the Protestants were wise to take such large buildings rather than the £5,000 is another question which those before us now might do well to consider.

Mr. Sealey, Q.C.—My clients would ask that some such scheme as your lordship has suggested should be adopted. There would otherwise be a danger either of the buildings being sold at a great sacrifice or of the price being raised at an auction to an extravagant sum.

10684. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Yes, there is that danger. If you possibly can, agree upon the principle and try to settle a figure. If you like to leave it to us to name a figure we would do the best we could, but we cannot force ourselves as valuers upon you, because one party or the other would think himself unfairly treated.

10685. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The practical proposal made in this—the parties are here present, and if we can do here now what is proposed to be done by the conference of the local boards it will be a great help in getting the scheme started.

Mr. Curran, Q.C.—Speaking for Dr. Donnelly and the Fermanagh board, we have not yet considered the question either of leaving this matter to be settled by the local board, or, if the local board could not agree, ultimately to the Commission. Until we know what the other portions of the scheme are it would be impossible to say what should be done with the buildings or which party would like to take them. We should know the definite percentage of the endowment which each denomination is to get—in other words the funds which would be at the disposal of the local boards. Mr. Atkinson has claimed for the Fermanagh Protestant local board two-thirds, and that the Catholics should receive only one-third. Under those circumstances the position of Dr. Donnelly would be different from what it would be if he got an equal share.

10686. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I think we had better go through the schools series first. The Armagh case is very special, and therefore we had better not take it first. Next in order is the Cavan case, and, if you examine it, you will see that there cannot be by any possibility a difference of more than £100 one way or the other whichever proposal we adopt. Mr. Drummond, are you satisfied with what the scheme proposes, that the Cavan buildings and land should be treated as part of the endowment?

Mr. Drummond.—Certainly.

10687. Lord Justice NASH.—Then we may ask the two bodies if they could agree to the price at which they should be sold or valued.

Mr. Drummond.—As to leaving power to the two bodies to sell in the best way they can, I am satisfied with the scheme.

10688. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Has the body you represent to provide buildings in Cavan for educational purposes?

Mr. Drummond.—No; we have St. Patrick's College buildings.

10689. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You don't want the Cavan Royal school buildings for any educational purposes under the scheme?

Mr. Drummond.—No.

10690. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Then your only interest in them is to get your share of as much money as they are worth?

Mr. Drummond.—To get my share of the money for them as part of the endowment.

Mr. Ross.—I object to the scheme on that point. The Catholics do not desire the buildings. They are over-built—if I may use the expression—already, for they have a splendid college, and larger, probably, than they require, while the Protestants have no buildings whatsoever in the whole county; and they are most anxious to retain the present buildings. They think they have a fair claim, being in possession, to get the Royal school handed over to them.

10691. Lord Justice NASH.—Our view at present is that it is public property, part of the endowment; if you object to that principle, we will hear you.

Mr. Ross.—I contend that these buildings should be handed over to the Protestants altogether, and not taken as part of the endowment at all. They were built out of the income of the estate, and the Protestant body was in possession of the income at that time. Being in possession for so long they have a fair claim to those buildings, and owing to the hopeless condition of the estate there will be no provision for the intermediate education of Protestants in the county of Cavan, if they do not get these buildings, or if they have to pay very heavily for them. The estate in the county of Cavan is, I believe, the worst of all, except, perhaps, Devergal, and the Protestant local board would be afraid to build schools. They have had intermediate education carried on in these buildings up to the present time.

10692. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—From which they have had very little advantage.

Mr. Ross.—But that was not the fault of my clients.

10693. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Whether their fault or misfortune, of this there is no doubt, that the only advantage the people of Cavan have had from the school has been that there were eighteen day boys in 1868, seventeen in 1884, and twelve in 1879, in the school. It has been increasing, and it has now a larger number of day boys than ever, so that the whole advantage of the Royal school to the Protestants of Cavan, as a matter of fact has been the privilege of paying for eighteen day boys.

Mr. Ross.—The facts of the past differ very much from the possibilities of the future. We have every hope that under vigorous management, with a good modern school there is plenty of material among the Protestants of the county of Cavan.

10694. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—No one wants to prevent you from having these buildings on fair terms, and it is manifest that it would be most wasteful to build a new school while the old one is there. The only point we have hitherto heard you dispute is that we should treat the value of these buildings as part of the endowment. The tenement valuation of the land is £28 10s., and of the buildings £70. If we took the whole at £160 a year, dividing this half and half on the same principle as the minimum grant, you would be entitled to £80; dividing into two-thirds and one-third you would get £53 against £54, so that the proportions proposed would only make a few pounds difference one way or the other.

Mr. Drummond.—I can undertake on the part of Dr. McGinnis that my friend's clients will be treated in a most reasonable spirit, and to a most reasonable valuation.

10700. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What would you say to "Griffith's valuation"?

Mr. Drummond.—I could not say at the present moment.

Mr. Ross.—Six years ago the whole thing was only valued at £55.

10701. Lord Justice Naish.—When was it raised?

Mr. Ross.—Six years ago the valuation was raised from £55 to £96 6s.; last year, £80 was taken off, so that now the entire valuation is £78.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The figures I have given you were taken from the Architect's return of last year. I suppose the reduction was made afterwards.

10702. Lord Justice Naish.—Does the £78 include not only the land forming the school estate, but also the land that Mr. Moore owns, because he has purchased land lying about the school?

Mr. Ross.—It only includes the school land.

Mr. Drummond.—I know nothing about the revaluation, and I cannot enter into that point now.

Rev. Dr. Moore (Head Master, Cavan school).—The valuation of the land is £58. Six years ago it was raised to £98, and last year the Inspector on coming round said he thought it ridiculously high and reduced it to £80.

10703. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you know, Dr. Moore, whether the reduction of £20 was on the land or on the house—they are separately valued in the rate-book.

Rev. Dr. Moore.—I don't know. I took it for granted that it was off the house he took the £20. I might mention that the lands of the school were originally given to the incumbent of the school for the time being, in the same way as glebe lands are given to the clergy; and when my predecessor was appointed, in 1808, he was entitled to two years' income from the death of his predecessor, Dr. Cottingham, in 1804. The rent was then £200 a year, and well paid, and £1,500 was handed over to him which he placed to form the nucleus of a fund towards raising sufficient money to build a school, the former house having been burned in the year 1804; £400 a year was given to him for his income, and the remainder of the income was added to the £1,500 for the building fund, until 1813, when the Act was passed which established the late commission—until 1819, the remainder of the income after paying the masters, was supposed to be handed over towards the building fund, and to be quite sufficient. The building cost £3,000, it was finished in 1818, and it is in excellent repair at the present time. Up to 1813 the management of the lands was in the hands of the masters of the school, and with the assistance of a very able agent the income was raised to £1,100 a year, which was well paid. That was gradually reduced by the Commissioners down to something like £500, which has not been so well paid as was formerly the case when it was so much higher.

Mr. Ross.—Assuming your ruling is against me on my contention that these school buildings should, under the circumstances, be handed over to the Protestant body of the county Cavan, I would ask you not to leave the scheme as it stands; because it puts it in the power of the Catholic party to bid them up to a tremendous extent. They can force a sale. Of course you have ordered that the local boards shall take into account the special wants of the school body, but who is to compel them to carry out that direction?

There is no sanction to enforce that, and it would not be a wise or just thing to leave one party at the mercy of the other.

10704. Lord Justice Naish.—What would you propose?

Mr. Ross.—I would propose to give the right of prosecution to the party in possession, and I think the Commission would be the best body to arrange the terms.

10705. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Does not the question amount to this, what would you give for it?

Lord Justice Naish.—What would you say if your body saw their way to sending in a tender?

Mr. Ross.—At what they think would be a fair thing to offer under the circumstances?

10706. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—At what you value yourselves?

Mr. Ross.—Yes, that would save any further difficulty.

10707. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Perhaps we may now facilitate some arrangement. We propose to ask Mr. Drummond to send in a statement of what his clients think these premises fairly worth per annum by way of rent to an ordinary occupying tenant—a tenant enjoying his own repairs—and if you like you may add what you think the fair selling value. On the other side we would ask Mr. Ross's clients to let us know what they estimate the thing as worth to them. We will not allow you to get into an action about it, but we will consider the matter very carefully and do our best to agree on some figure which seems reasonable, taking into account all the circumstances.

We will let you know this figure, and we would give Mr. Ross the option, if the others think it a fair figure, of taking the premises at that figure, inserting it in the scheme as the amount at which the property shall be handed over to the Protestant Board.

Mr. Ross.—Assuming that the figure is accepted, we would be entitled to credit for half.

10708. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Of course.

There is a provision in the scheme that you may take credit for your own share either as rent or capital.

Bishop of Kildare (Dr. Shaw).—Should we have to pay a bulk sum to them?

10709. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I don't think there would necessarily be any payment. It would be a matter of debt against the Protestant share of the endowment.

Bishop Shaw.—I may mention that there is as absolute necessity for our getting these buildings, otherwise the whole Protestant community will be without a school.

10710. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You had better not say too much about that, or the price may be raised on you.

Bishop Shaw.—No. It is admitted on all hands that the other side have quite ample buildings. I merely say, as the object of this Commission is to encourage intermediate education, that handing over these buildings at a moderate rate would be absolutely necessary. I represent not only the members of the Church of Ireland, but also of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches in Cavan. I am authorized by them to appear here, and I speak in their interest. And as attention has been made to the want of pupils in Cavan, I do not at all despair of having, if we get these buildings, a first-rate intermediate school under fresh management and with fresh energy.

In other parts of my diocese there are some first-rate intermediate schools, and at Elphin, a place most callously to have success, a most successful intermediate school has been established. Under fresh management there it is a most remarkable school, and I don't despair that we shall have in Cavan, under new management, a very flourishing intermediate school, if terms are come to which will enable us to obtain these buildings.

10711. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I would make one suggestion to your lordship with regard to the absolute necessity of your board getting those buildings— if some outside body would give say £4,000 for the buildings, whether one half of that purchase money, £2,000, would not be really more valuable to you if starting upon a new career than dealing over these very large buildings?

Aug. 4, 1888.

Bishop Skew.—I don't think it would. I think it would be better for us to get the premises just as they stood at a moderate figure, and to make the best of them.

10712. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What struck us in Enniskillen was that the buildings were so unwieldy as to make the cost of maintenance very considerable; that is not so, to the same extent, at Cavan.

Bishop Skew.—Not by any means. The Cavan buildings are capable of being readily used for the purpose to which they are applied.

10713. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—With reference to your estimate, we think that we ought to take into account only the fair market value of these buildings. We ought not to take into account—just as it is not taken into account in fixing a fair rent—any special price that particular people might be ready to give because they wanted the place for educational purposes.

Mr. Drummond.—Dr. Rhona has properly reminded the Commission that the Protestant community, if these buildings were taken away, would start without school premises. It is to be borne in mind that the Catholic College was built at very large expense and there is a debt at the present time of between £8,000 and £9,000, so that they start upon practically equal terms; because the Catholics having made what I may call a desperate effort to build that college, are just in the position of parties who have taken large school buildings, intending to pay for them whenever they can.

10714. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We are quite aware of that, but we don't see how you can make more of what you are entitled to get out of the Cavan Royal School premises by saying that the buildings which you have are too expensive.

Mr. Drummond.—I have no doubt that when the price comes to be fixed it will be the fair market value. When the price is once fixed I am not aware of anything to prevent the arrangement being carried out in a fair and friendly spirit on both sides.

Mr. Drummond.—Yes, Dr. Molloy.

Mr. Rose.—I ask you not to fix the price on the basis of the market value, but to remember that it is a case of pre-emption by the tenant in occupation.

10715. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What do you mean by not fixing the price at the market value?

Mr. Rose.—There are two values—a competitive value is what it would bring if the parties competed against one another.

10716. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—The competitive value in this case, as I understand the evidence, would only be higher than the ordinary market value if the price was run up against you, on account of your urgent need of the buildings, beyond what anyone else would give—we don't think it would be fair to ask you to pay that value. We have seen the place and if you called an auction to-morrow I believe you would not get the same money from an ordinary purchaser which the Protestant Board would be prepared to give for their own purposes.

Mr. Rose.—That is quite so.

10717. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Then it is the smaller of the two figures which I suggested Mr. Drummond should estimate it at. He ought only to estimate the value at what, if the premises were taken by Mr. Moore to-morrow, and they were put up for sale in the open market, they would fetch with ordinary bidders.

Mr. Drummond.—That is the only way they will be estimated. The Catholics are very well provided with buildings, all they want is the money to pay for them.

Mr. Rose.—They have a very large college for which they paid £36,000, and there is only a small portion of debt.

10718. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—They had a landed estate like the Cavan Royal School Estate, and they sold it to pay part of the debt.

Mr. Rose.—I would ask you to capitalise the value of the school and to allow us to pay interest on it at the rate of two three-quarter per cent.

10719. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—That is a highly financial way of dealing with the matter. I don't understand how these new systems of purchase could be applied where we have no public fund to be advanced.

Mr. Drummond.—It would take Mr. Goschen to understand that.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I don't see how that would work.

10719A. Lord Justice NASEM.—What interest are you paying on your debt, Mr. Drummond?

Mr. Drummond.—Four per cent.

Mr. Rose.—That of course is not the way to look at it. Suppose the money were paid down now—what would it bring—I think it would be perfectly fair to charge us no more.

Mr. Drummond.—If you would allow us to discuss the position of that £6,000 which has to be dealt with it would save the necessity of going back to that question again.

10720. Lord Justice NASEM.—You are both agreed upon that?

Mr. Rose.—Yes, we are both agreed upon this.

Mr. Drummond.—I ask you to treat that £6,000 as part of the Cavan Endowment, and to deal with it as you have dealt with the other part of the property. In the first place, Cavan, probably from an educational point of view, is in the most backward condition of any of the counties. Look at the condition of the Cavan Estate. The object of the scheme is to establish two good schools, one for the Catholics and one for the Protestants. The income of the estate is somewhere about £270, you take fifty per cent. of that, and divide it into two—that is the minimum grant, and the amount will be so small as to be practically useless. It won't pay the rent of the premises, or even the salary of an assistant master, much less that of a superior master—it would be practically of no avail at all either to Protestants or Catholics. Therefore I say the whole sum of about £270 a year, about £130 or £135 per each party, would be as small a sum as could be of use to them.

10721. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I don't know whether you understand that under the scheme the land and buildings are treated as part of the minimum.

Mr. Drummond.—We don't know what the buildings would bring. I think the estimated income of the estate was £374 net, and the valuation of the school premises is only £78. You propose to give each board 25 per cent. of the net rents plus 50 per cent. of whatever would come out of the school endowment. The whole thing would be of no substantial advantage to either side, for it would never, in any material sense, contribute either to the establishment or the maintenance of a school of the character contemplated by this scheme. I submit that the whole estate, including the school, should be devoted to the purpose. Then look at the £3,000. Estimating it at 3 per cent.—you would have £180 a year as interest. The Protestants have not even school premises. For these premises in the open market and they will require more than the minimum. That is shadowed forth by this scheme to enable them to buy them. The others with a school of their own are really in the same position. But in each of these counties the endowment is looked upon as prima facie the property of the locality and only a portion is proposed to be given over to the general fund. I ask you to deal with the £5,000 as being in reality and legally part and parcel of the Cavan endowment just as much as if it was a part of the endowment, just as if the Cavan school had been properly conducted, and every penny of that £5,000 which should have been spent upon it had been spent upon it. It was intended for the benefit of the people of Cavan, but they were deprived of it owing to the peculiar management of the school—with respect to which I shall say nothing more. Under section 13 of the Act of 1883 I submit that, within the spirit and meaning of that Act, this ought not to be taken away from the use of the people of Cavan.

Aug. 4, 1888.

10729. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—You are aware that under the Act of George IV., all the residue remaining after providing for the payment of the masters and the maintenance of the school was put absolutely in the power of the Commissioners to be applied to other schools, and in this case we must take it that the Commissioners fulfilled their duty as far as they could in that respect, and accordingly, this is a free fund.

Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—This is only a residue—they have spent a good deal of money from the Cavan Estate on Rathfriland and Broughshill.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I admit that that was in the power of the Commissioners, but the true meaning, spirit, and intention of the Act is that the people of the locality should not be ignored; quite otherwise, they are to be taken largely into consideration when you are dealing with the endowment.

10730. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We are giving you something in return by allowing the Cavan Schools to compete for the general fund.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—We would be willing to forego that right if we got the fund.

10731. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Even if we gave you, as we have given in Rathfriland, the whole income of the landed property, if the £5,000 is used for the general purposes of competition the argument would not apply that was pressed so much against you—that you ought not to be allowed to compete for the general fund as not being contributors to it.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—At the present time I am satisfied that it would be for their advantage, if the Commissioners would give the Cavan people the £5,000 as part of their estate, to forego any competition with the other schools. They are in a very backward condition, and I believe if they started in competition with other schools they would get nothing for a great many years, because the advantages that other towns like Rathfriland, Broughshill, and Monaghan have, are very great.

10732. Rev. Dr. MURPHY.—The provision with regard to the competition for the surplus is not introduced for the purpose of giving any special advantage to any locality, but for the purpose of promoting the general interests of education throughout the whole five areas, by giving all a stimulus to work hard, and giving the greater part of the endowment where the greater educational work is done.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—Certainly; but this scheme, to say the least of it, modifies the privileges and advantages of a particular class in this particular area.

10733. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—How does it? If this scheme had not passed, and things went on exactly as they are now, if a new head master was appointed in Cavan, and the school became a large one, what claim would Cavan have over any other district on the £5,000 when once that money is accumulated in the hands of the Commissioners as surplus income?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—We could not legally claim it when it went into the general fund; but you are going, in the words of section 13, to “modify” this so as finally to interfere with the property of this particular locality.

10734. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—A good deal of it has not really been accumulated at all, but is merely entered in a book, because £1,000 of a debt against Rathfriland and over £1,000 of a debt against Rathfriland have been in fact paid away out of the surplus in credit of Cavan and Rathfriland.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—But the entry represents money, and I ask you in making this final settlement of the endowments to treat that fund as part and parcel of the Cavan endowment, and in view of the present requirements of the Protestants and Catholics, and the needs of those two schools—their necessities and want of money—I ask you to give them the whole of that sum as it would be little enough to enable them, in the first three years at all events, to support these two schools in effective order. If you give us the whole of that sum we will consent to be excluded from the competition with the schools of the other counties afterwards.

10735. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—You are willing if you are given a couple of thousand pounds towards your debt to give the Protestants a couple of thousand pounds to enable them to acquire these Royal School buildings?

Mr. DRUMMOND.—We are quite prepared to do that, and although we shall not be competing with other schools in Ulster, still Dr. Stokes and Dr. McGeach will do the best they can to promote education, but unless they get funds they cannot start two such expensive schools as are contemplated by this scheme is a comparatively poor county like Cavan.

Mr. RICE.—I support Mr. Drummond's argument, and it is far more important than anything else I have to put before you. These I represent believe that if this £5,000 be taken from them it will be almost hopeless in their present circumstances, and with the worst estate, perhaps of all, to recreate intermediate education in Cavan. You are aware of the circumstances of both parties; the Catholic party are very much in debt, and in trying to set up an intermediate school, we will have to purchase these school premises to begin with. We propose that such district should stand on its own legs as regards liabilities. We propose out of this fund to pay off the head master and the other master who is entitled to compensation. That will considerably diminish the £5,000. Let me call attention to the way in which this fund has accumulated. In 1830 there was a debt of £9; in 1850 there was a credit of £2,000; in 1870 the credit was £1,153, in 1880 £2,200, and in 1888 it is £5,300, with £1,031 in cash beside. This is really money to which the people of Cavan are entitled for the purpose of intermediate education. It has been practically saved out of their pockets. There could not be people who want the money more than we do, and we are not in a condition to make presents to the other schools. If it is taken away it is very hard to see how we can set this scheme upon its legs, or how, in the present position of affairs, we can set our schools going. I would strongly press upon you that this money should be left to us when we require it so very badly.

10736. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We should like to know the views of the Commissioners and of the other parties on this matter. They are all interested.

Rev. Dr. MURPHY.—I should like to make an observation about the Rathfriland debt in connection with this question. Some years ago, when the Rathfriland school was considerably in debt, I asked the Commissioners if any of the surplus money of the other schools could be applied towards clearing off that debt, and the reply made was “certainly not,” that as long as any Royal scholarships were running in Rathfriland they could not apply one penny of the other schools' funds to clear off our debt.

10730. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—They could not clear off the debt; it stands against you still, but the money of the Cavan, Dungannon, and Fernagh schools is gone, but they have got as security these debts against Arragh and Raphoe.

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—This proposal of Mr. Drummond and Mr. Rose would meet seriously affect Arragh, and it sets right into the entire scheme, which rests upon the practice by which in times past the Commissioners who had the management of these endowments have applied them to one school or another as circumstances required.

10731. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—They had legal power to do so by the Act of George IV.

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—You have given that a definite form in this scheme by throwing all the surplus funds together to make up the compensation fund, and my learned friends now want to cut out the Cavan endowment entirely from the scheme.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If their proposal was accepted to their liability for vested interests would fall upon the income of the other schools.

10732. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It is hard upon Cavan, because they have an apparent credit of £5,000, and they also happen to have the oldest and consequently least valuable life interest in their school, but the question really is whether this is their money or whether under the provisions of the Act it is not now a common fund?

Mr. Roche, Q.C.—Under the old Act the Commissioners had power undoubtedly to make it a common fund, and to use it for the purposes of any of the Royal Schools for which you are now legislating. The scheme only gives effect to that power.

Mr. Carter, Q.C.—I also protest against the arrangement which has been suggested by Mr. Drummond and Mr. Rose, unless each district is made self-supporting. They ask you to give the entire of the Cavan endowment to Cavan, and the entire of the Dromagall endowment to Dromagall. But it seems to be a great injustice to give the entire of these endowments to Cavan and Dromagall, and to throw the responsibility of providing for the vested interests of the whole five districts upon the other three.

Mr. Drummond.—Let me call attention to the Act 3rd Geo. IV., chap. 29, section 8. And, to put an extreme case, suppose the head master of Cavan School had turned round on the Commissioners and said, "I will not conduct the school at all, I will have no expense incurred, I will pay no assistant masters," and in that way he let the whole income accumulate for two or three years, that could not be a residue within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. Though the Cavan School has been theoretically carried on for many years, it has not been properly carried on, and I submit that the money was not a residue within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, having been accumulated while the school was practically shut up.

10733. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We will consider the matter. Dungannon is the next case.

Archbishop LOGAN.—I don't think there is any representative of Dungannon here, but I have an interest in that district. And I understand there has been no unanimous agreement between the parties concerned—Protestant and Catholics—that the school buildings are quite sufficient for the purposes of two schools; and I believe the principle can be carried out in relation to these buildings of devoting them to educational purposes.

10734. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We have had inquiries whether the Dungannon premises are likely to go into the market from a public department, and, therefore, in this case there is an intending purchaser. I think we had better ascertain whether any definite offer can be obtained, and let the local boards consider whether they would prefer to take the money or the buildings between them for educational purposes.

Archbishop LOGAN.—In Dungannon the Protestants and the Catholics could each have a good day school, and they might also have a boarding school. I think it is a great pity to deprive a large town like Dungannon and the country round about it of the advantages of good schools.

10735. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Does not St. Patrick's Diocesan College, Arragh, provide intermediate education for the Catholics of Dungannon?

Archbishop LOGAN.—There is a private school at present in Dungannon which is a feeder for the Arragh School.

10736. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If the interests of education are really concerned, and if the Catholics and Protestants can agree to utilize the buildings for educational purposes, I apprehend we would not put them into the market, but before they make up their minds, we should try to let them know what money may be got for them, as, of course, the price would be available for the purpose of providing other and possibly more convenient buildings.

Mr. Shaw.—The General Assembly think it would serve educational purposes in Dungannon much better if the buildings were sold for a good price, and the money given to the local Boards, because they consider the present buildings quite too large and expensive for the purposes of any school likely to be maintained there under the present system.

10737. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Dungannon competes as a boarding school with Arragh. What is your view Father McNAMES?

Father McNAMES.—I am sorry to differ with his Grace. I want them sold. Cavan has given a guarantee already by starting and supporting two intermediate schools.

Archbishop LOGAN.—May I ask you what they are, because you are continually telling us that you have two schools.

Father McNAMES.—One is the Christian Brothers' school which has sent in twenty pupils to the intermediate examinations for a number of years, and the other is the convent school, which has also sent in twenty-one pupils, from the first year, with the exception of one, since the Intermediate System was established. Besides Omagh is the central town of the county, and the county town, and has advantages which Dungannon never can have. Formerly Dungannon was the county town, and for the convenience of the whole county it was changed to Omagh. Besides Dungannon is within ten miles of Arragh, and in order to distribute these schools where they are required, I say the proper thing would be to sell the Dungannon buildings to the best advantage, and then to consider the question on its merits, where the schools should be. As his Grace has challenged me, the record for the convent school for 1887 is—in the junior grade, ten passes, one prize and three exhibitions; in the middle grade two prizes, and in the senior grade one exhibition.

Archbishop LOGAN.—Within the rules laid down by the Commissioners, how can the Catholic local board allocate this endowment to the Christian Brothers' school, which is a primary school? That is why I asked Father McNAMES to name the schools, and he does not show that they have an intermediate school at Omagh, except for girls.

10738. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It would be for the local boards to determine how they would allocate the endowment among any qualified schools. They want, as I understand, to get these premises for purposes of education under the scheme. If both sides have agreed on that, it is an encouraging proof that the provisions of the scheme enabling such agreements to be come to were not so hopeless as we were told they were, and we will facilitate them in every way. Between this and September 15, we shall be prepared to receive a definite consent of the proposed division, and if the local people agree to terms or ask us to settle the terms, the buildings at Dungannon may be disposed of, as we hope to settle those at Cavan. Meanwhile we will communicate with those who have asked about buying them, and if we can get an offer we will let the local board know what it is. It is curious that there is no one here from Dungannon.

Archbishop Logue.—Because they were both satisfied with the scheme. As a matter of sentiment, I should be sorry to see the buildings given to any other purpose than that of a school, even if the Protestants had it, because it is a beautiful site.

Rev. Dr. Molloy.—That is also our opinion.

10739. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—And we are perfectly prepared to not upon sentiment, if the money matters are settled.

Archbishop Logue.—I understood they could divide the buildings, so that they could with the greatest ease have two schools—the Protestant body one, and the Catholic body one, without the least friction whatever. Dean Byrne told me that they were discussing the matter amicably, and that it is the feeling of both parties in the district that that would be the best thing.

10740. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—When we were at Dungannon, Dean Byrne told me he thought he could make an amicable arrangement, and the others gave evidence to the same effect.

Archbishop Logue.—Rather showing that the joint estates committee might have come to an agreement after all.

Father McNamara.—It is gratifying to find that political and religious differences are forgotten when they are settling a happy family arrangement.

10741. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But you can't carry the school to Omagh.

Father McNamara.—I only want to get proper value for the premises.

10742. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We will now take the case of Enniskillen. These premises consist of fifty-four acres statute measure of land valued at £95, and buildings valued at £188.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I submit that, according to law and justice, these buildings and as much land as is necessary for the proper management of the schools should be handed over to the Protestant Board free. I do not contend that the word "endowment" in the Act of 1885 is not sufficiently large to cover lands and buildings, in my opinion the lands and buildings do fall within the technical definition of the word "endowment" contained in the Act of 1885. But I submit that the whole of the provisions of this scheme are—when you consider the patents and statutes—entirely ultra vires. Because out of the minimum grant given to this school, which is only sufficient in itself to give substantial aid to one existing school, the value of these buildings is to be deducted. As I understand it, if we take over these buildings—say at a valuation of £100 a year—that £100 would be deducted from the minimum grant.

10743. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—No, not deducted: it is given to you in kind.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Probably, when the vested interests are compensated for, there will not remain more than £1,000 as the entire available amount of the Fermagh endowment. The minimum grant for the Protestant Board will be, therefore, £350 a year—that is one-fourth. I am told that the object of the minimum grant is "to give an annual sum sufficient to afford substantial aid towards the maintenance of at least one school." How by any ingenuity it could carry out that purpose when in some places it won't be more than £35 or £50 a year, it is not for me to say. I am only dealing with Enniskillen, and I say that there it cannot be more than £300 a year. If we take these premises, say at £100 a year, that £100 a year is deducted from the minimum grant, or at least is charged against the minimum grant.

10744. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But is it first added to it. You are leaving that out of your calculation.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Assuming we take it at £100: Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Take it at any way. The minimum grant in Enniskillen is 40 per cent.—30 per cent. for each local board—and the value of the land and buildings besides.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Supposing the available surplus outside the buildings is £1,000 a year, and supposing we take the buildings at £100. Of that £1,000 we get £250. We have valued against that £250, the £100 appertaining to the buildings—that is, we have the school premises and £150 a year.

10745. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Not at all—you get £300 a year and the buildings free—and the Catholics get £100.

Mr. Atkinson.—I say that is starving out the Royal School, and I say that the imperative trust attached to this endowment which you have no power to annul, was that these schools should be adequately maintained in their respective places. That was the policy down to the passing of the Act of 1885. I now call attention to sections 8 and 13, with a view to show that although you have power to subdivide and to deal with these endowments, you have no power to defeat the operation of those trusts which were in force down to the period at which the Act of 1885 passed.

10747. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Certainly the maintenance of the school is the object, but your argument was that we are attacking the Porters school buildings.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Yes.

10748. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But we want the Porters buildings are. Is it not a question whether any body desiring to maintain an efficient school in Enniskillen now would dream of undertaking to keep up that enormous place for the purpose.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I say that the object of the Act was to maintain a local school in that particular place.

10749. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—No, the object was to maintain one free school in each county, and there was a power of transferring it from one place to another in the same county or diocese.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—There was a power of transfer, but not of transferring it from time to time, and I am dealing with it as it was when your Act passed. I say that there was then an imperative trust that these respective schools were to be maintained where situated under the endowment.

10750. Lord Justice Naunton.—Is it not plain that, if we thought it a better arrangement we could transfer them to another place?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I think not.

10751. Lord Justice Naunton.—If it was intended that the existing schools should be kept up in the existing places, the intention would have been stated.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I say it is plain that the object was to maintain these schools in efficient working order in the respective localities in which they then stood.

10752. Lord Justice Naunton.—That Act of George III. did not contemplate more than one school in each district. The only residue that could be transferred was a residue after the primary object had been fulfilled in each district, and that residue was divisible only amongst the five named schools then and there existing in those particular localities, and I ask you to find in the Act of 1885 anything to contravene the definite words that define the object of the founders as interpreted by the original Acts.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I submit there are no words in the Act of 1885 enabling this Commission to override the intentions expressed in the earlier charters as interpreted in the statutes. I don't mean to say that we need all the land, but only such land as is necessary for the due and adequate maintenance of the Porters school.

The first charter showed that certain lands were assigned in the plantation of Ulster for the maintenance of grammar schools in that province, and should be conveyed to the Archbishop and distributed to the several schools as he thought fit. The letter of Charles I. says in effect that that has been done and that certain free schools had been established at Mountmorris in Armagh, at Mountjoy in Tyrone, at Donagall, at Linsgoole (now called Portora), and in the town of Cavan. The schools established at Mountmorris, Mountjoy, and Donagall were afterwards annexed to Armagh, Dungannon, and Raphoe, and the schools so established have been maintained out of this grant, and are still in operation as grammar schools, and are known as the Royal Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Cavan, and Raphoe, respectively. Then comes the Act of George III., which created the Commissioners of Education, and provided in section 2 that the several lands granted for the use of the masters of the Royal Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Raphoe, Cavan, Banagher, and Carrisfort, should be vested in the Commissioners for ever, and that the rents and profits should from time to time be applied by the Commissioners as by the Act directed, and it was by (sec. 12) further enacted that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners from time to time to invest any money belonging to any of the schools, and that such proportion as they should think proper of all funds or estates applicable to the support of such school should be applied for the use and benefit of the schoolmaster thereof for the time being, and such other proportion as they should think proper should be applied for the use and benefit of such under master or masters as the Commissioners should think necessary for such school; and after payment of those salaries to apply such sums as should be deemed necessary in or towards purchasing, building, enlarging, repairing, or furnishing the school-house with grounds, apparatuses, and other necessary or useful accommodations. There you see the dedication of the fund; then the statute was to be employed in creating exhibitions in Trinity College. Now the Act of George IV., chap. 73, section 8, provided that whenever any moneys should remain of the funds of any of the Royal Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Raphoe, Cavan, Banagher, and Carrisfort, after defraying the expenses of the master and of the under master or masters, and of all enlargements and improvements of the school-house, grounds, and furniture, it should be lawful for the Commissioners to cause such moneys to be applied to the like maintenance and improvement of any other or others of the said schools whose funds might stand in need of such aid. The schools are the Armagh school, the Dungannon school, the Enniskillen school, the Cavan school, and the Raphoe school, and I say that the intended trust and the object of these Acts were that all the funds should be applied to maintaining these respective schools in complete working order, and that the residue was not for general purposes at all, but the only schools mentioned are the seven. I therefore say, that although these provisions enabled a poor school to get a grant in aid from a rich school where necessary, it by no means enabled the residue to be otherwise disposed of, and looking at these statutes together with these enactments it shows conclusively that the object was that these respective schools, having got a local habitation as well as a name, were to be the primary objects to which all the funds were to be applied and that they were to be maintained in good and efficient condition.

10753. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Then do you contend that we must apply the whole of the endowment of the Enniskillen estate to maintain the Portora school on its present site?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Not the whole of it, but so much of it as is necessary to maintain the Portora school in a good and efficient condition.

10754. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Then the question at once arises, can that be done? Portora, on a matter of fact, is a great big building with accommodation for 100 boarders and for as many more day boys. The present actual number of pupils is thirty-five day boys and no boarders—one or any means of receiving boarders—it is an empty house. Do you contend that we are bound to spend whatever money is necessary to maintain that fabric?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I do.

10755. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Then you use the word "school" not in the sense of a place where people are taught, but in the sense of a big building?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Nothing can be more fallacious or unjust than to say that the personal neglect and mismanagement of a particular master for a number of years is to enable the Commission to defend the operation of this grant, and to say that if this school for some years is not teaching at all there fore it has ceased to be a school. Supposing the present master had shut up the place altogether for four or five years, surely that would not enable you to forget its past history nor the object with which it was endowed? If so it would be competent for any master to deprive the school of all endowment. Enniskillen was quite full at one time. This fine school building was never dedicated to any other purpose; it has a historical reputation as a school, and to say, merely because for a few years no teaching has been given to boarders it has ceased to be a school, would be a very severe construction.

10756. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—You must remember that, at the time it was full, it was full of the very class of pupils to whom you so strongly objected yesterday—the pupils whose you called recruits and foreigners. It was never filled by natives of Enniskillen.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't object to them.

10757. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You objected to the application of the endowment to teach them.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—No, but to their being called to aid in the fixing of the endowment.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If you object to their being taken into account in fixing the division of the endowment you object to the endowment being treated as intended for them. You ask that these vast buildings should be kept up at the expense of the endowment, and yet you do not say that it is possible to fill them with Enniskillen boys?

10758. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—It should be observed that there is now as large a number of day boys as ever there was, and this seems really to be about the number of Protestants who want education in that locality.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Be the school good or bad the number of day boys must be more or less constant, because the day boys cannot come from a distance.

10759. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I can understand your argument so far as you apply it to the maintenance of sufficient buildings for the day boys of the locality, but it seems to branch off altogether when you say we are to use this endowment to maintain these existing buildings of Portora, because about thirty-five day boys are as many as appear likely to attend, and the fifty-four acres of land and buildings, sufficient for 200 pupils, are what we have to deal with.

Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Your argument just proves that we are bound to give you as much of the endowment as will enable you to maintain a school for thirty-five day boys.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—If the Act of Parliament said that the endowments were to be divided in proportion to the number of day boys, that might be so; but it says nothing of the kind, and the school must draw its boarders from two classes—from those residing in the district beyond a radius of four miles, and if that fail to supply it, it may draw its boarders from elsewhere, I do not at all despair—that a very large number of boarders will be drawn from the district outside the day boys' area. Indeed with proper management and small fees it is quite possible they may have as large a number of boarders from that district as they ever had. The only statute interfering with the movement of 14 & 15 Charles II, is the statute authorizing the transfer of the schools from one place to another within the diocese. That does not help the matter. It might be desirable to change the school, but that was not done, and when the subsequent statutes were passed they recognized the existing institution in the place in which it was carrying on its work. Now I call attention to the second and thirteenth sections of the Act of 1885. But for the passing of this Act the Educational Commissioners under the Acts of George III, and of George IV, were bound to maintain these schools in the localities in which they found them, out of the funds properly applicable to them; and if they were more than sufficient in the case of any particular school then and then alone could they dispose of the residue for the benefit of the other schools. The sixth and thirteenth clauses of the Act of 1885 must be taken together. The sixth section gives power to prepare schemes for the future management of endowments, which schemes may provide for altering the conditions and provisions of such endowments, changing investments, selling the properties, amalgamating, combining, or dividing the endowments, or, in the case of endowments applicable for intermediate education, transferring them to the Intermediate Education Board, to be applied by them for the purposes of the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act, 1878, or (in the case of endowments applicable for elementary education), placing the schools under the inspection of the Commissioners of National Education, and there it stops.

JULY 5, 1902.

10760. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—It does not stop there, it goes on to provide for consolidating or dividing the schools, or removing them to different localities, or authorizing the governing bodies of boarding schools to discontinue their boarding departments, or readjusting, extending, or abolishing existing schemes of institutions or scholarships, and so on.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—That is, I submit, not dealing with Royal schools, but with endowments applicable for elementary education.

10761. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—I do not think so; those powers are general. The very terms show that they apply to intermediate schools.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—You might say that Portora school should be moved to another place, and still be endowed with all the endowments, but can it be contended for a moment that this statute enables you to say that Portora shall cease to exist, and that the endowments shall be transferred to Monaghan?

10762. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Want do you say to the words "authorizing the governing bodies of boarding schools to discontinue the boarding department?"

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—That must be construed, not by itself but subject to section 13. If that contention be carried, it might be provided by the scheme that all the Fermanagh endowments should be removed to Cavan.

10763. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Has your attention been called to the fact that the Commissioners of Education proposed such a removal in their scheme?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I am aware of that.

10764. Professor DOUGHERTY.—I suppose you do not contend, Mr. Atkinson, that the maintenance of a large boarding establishment in such a vast building as Portora is essential to the continuance of an efficient day school in Fermanagh?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—Yes, I say it is permanent—the intention of maintaining a good Protestant school in Fermanagh, whether in Portora or in any locality to which it is changed.

10765. Rev. Dr. MOTTEN.—I think it need to be held that Portora was open to all denominations. Then how do you say that the permanent intention was to maintain a good Protestant school?

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—A school governed by Protestants—under the management of Protestants, although open to Roman Catholic pupils, I didn't suppose it could be contended that a school established as a supplement to the plantation of James I., was ever intended to be governed by Roman Catholics.

10766. Rev. Dr. MOTTEN.—In point of fact there is a Roman Catholic master in one of the Royal Schools.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—That might leave the Commissioners open to a charge of something like malversation of funds.

10767. Rev. Dr. MOTTEN.—It was the Lord Lieutenant who made the appointment.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I don't argue that it is an exclusively Protestant endowment, but I do not think it could be contended that schools in Ulster, planned by James I., were intended to be schools under Roman Catholic management. The 13th section of the Act of 1885 provides that—"In framing schemes it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to have regard to the spirit of founders' intentions, and in every scheme which abolishes or modifies any privilege or educational advantage to which a particular class of persons is entitled, to have regard to the educational interests of such class." It may be that according to the terms of section 6 you have power to abolish or transfer a school, but those powers are subject to the subsequent provisions of section 13, and you must have regard to the educational advantages of the particular class.

10768. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—I distinctly consider myself bound by section 13, but who are the particular class? Are they not the class who require intermediate education belonging to this Fermanagh diocese or district. They are of different denominations, and our first duty is to secure to them a higher class grammar school education under this endowment. It appears to me that if you are able to show that the utilization of this big building at Portora is the best way of securing these educational advantages for even the Protestants of this place, it will be our duty to use them for that purpose, but that is totally different from telling us that the first charge on this endowment is to maintain one hundred empty beds.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—That is working back again to the same thing, because Mr. Steele is infinitely fast upon this endowment.

10769. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Parlan me, it is going back to your argument that the boarding establishment for 100 pupils is the best object of this endowment, and I say that that is dead against your argument of yesterday.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—I say the first purpose is to have a good school in Fermanagh.

10770. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—And in that we are quite agreed.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—In or about the locality in which it was situated.

10771. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—If there was a good Roman Catholic Grammar School at Enniskillen we would try, as we are doing in Cavan, to start both denominations on equal terms there, but in this case the nearest Roman Catholic school is at Monaghan, and we propose that they should apply their share to maintain it, and that you should be enabled to use your share at Enniskillen. I agree that you make a strong case for seeking to maintain a good school at Portora, but we are now on the question of how best to utilize these big buildings.

Mr. Atkinson, Q.C.—You are so delicate as the "minimum," as I understand it, the least sum necessary to carry out the object.

Aug. 4, 1888.

10772. Rev. Dr. Motter.—We propose to give you, with the minimum, half the value of the buildings.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—You propose to value against us the fabric.

10773. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Speaking roughly, the minimum for each based on cash in Bunhill would be £150, and over and above that half the value of these buildings probably another £50. We don't value the fabric against you, but if you prefer it at £50 you can have it.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes, but it must be a minimum for the College now existing—it must be a minimum for both boards, and the minimum for any purpose means the least sum that the Protestant Board can apply to carry the existing Portora School with success.

10774. Rev. Dr. Motter.—That is not the meaning—it means the least sum that you are to get out of the endowment; and we believe it is a sum which will give substantial aid towards the maintenance of at least one school.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That is £250.

Rev. Dr. Motter.—We consider it is a sum sufficient to give you substantial aid towards maintaining one school.

10775. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—As it seems to me you are endeavouring to increase the minimum sum that will give substantial aid to a school in Bunhill, by assuming that the school that is to be maintained in this enormous building, Mr. Ovenson states that Dr. Steele told him it would take £300 a year to keep the house in proper repair; and reckons "that the repairs would be no much almost as the value of the house." You say that to keep up Portora is excessively expensive, therefore the minimum is too small, because your first proposition is that we must give you as much money as will keep up this place.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't say that. I say if you put valuation on these premises, and deduct the value of the minimum, you give us no money grant at all.

10776. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The fallacy of your argument will appear, if we suppose some one offered to buy Portora for £10,000. For £5,000, year there of the price, you could build a useful well equipped school, and then you would at once have a substantial endowment, because you would have a school of proper size, and your minimum of cash besides; but you want to claim more cash, because you claim buildings which it will cost you £200 a year to keep up.

Rev. Dr. Motter.—What do you want the buildings for?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—To keep a school in them of course.

10777. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Do you regard these buildings as necessary for the purpose?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes, certainly. How else could we get buildings.

10778. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—And the whole of them?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—There is a difficulty about the whole of them.

10779. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Supposing we gave you the buildings free—that would meet your necessity?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I think so.

10780. Rev. Dr. Motter.—What do you say to this proposal—to give you the buildings free and to give the Catholic board the thirty acres of land adjoining.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That would be ridiculous having a school without any land.

10781. Rev. Dr. Motter.—If you got the buildings with a garden for the head master, and a playground for the boys, you would have a full equipment for a school.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That is all I ask.

Mr. Carton, q.c.—So far as the Catholic board are concerned I am quite prepared to accept<sup>a</sup> that—I don't want the buildings.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I know nothing about the land, those who instructed me have not considered that.

10782. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—It is very important that you should do so. There are fifty-four acres of land, and the largest quantity belonging to any other school is eighteen acres in Arragh. There are only ten at Danganooon.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't think the thing can be settled on the quantity of the land. You must, I submit, consider the particular condition of the school. I don't know whether or not it would be necessary that they should keep the whole of the land in order not to interfere with the institution as a suitable one for a school, or whether the whole of the land would not be required. Of course I can understand the liberality with which Mr. Carton says he does not want the buildings, when he has got buildings already.

Mr. Carton, q.c.—I was prepared to give you the buildings if you give me the land.

10783. Rev. Dr. Motter.—What you want is to get the buildings, with a reasonable amount of land for a garden for the head master, and a play ground for the boys?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Certainly—I presume so.

10784. Rev. Dr. Motter.—If you get that you will get all you want?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes.

10785. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—And you will have a magnificent specimen of a white elephant.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't know how the lands are situated, and I can only put it in a general way and say that we want as much land as having regard to the position of the building will be suitable and adequate, to maintain it as a school both for day boys and boarders.

10786. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I can only say that, however strong my own personal opinion may be upon having looked at the place, if the two local boards are prepared to divide the buildings and land, I should not feel myself called upon to interfere. Mr. Carton says he does not want the buildings and he is willing to take instead of cash an equivalent in land. No one without walking the land could say how it should be divided or not. At Bunhill it was rather suggested that the new and detached schoolrooms built by Dr. Steele, and now unused, could be used as a Roman Catholic school. But these are details we cannot discuss here.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I understand that, therefore I adopt a general principle.

10787. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Don't you see that you are not in a position to get all the land and the buildings as well, because you wish to have your minimum free of charges?

Mr. Carton, q.c.—I understand that it is quite easy to separate the land from the buildings.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That is what we differ about. I understand the building is in the middle of the land.

10788. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If this proposal was definitely made that Mr. Carton should get all that valuable agricultural land, and that you should take these enormous buildings which would probably ruin you, not only with half the endowment, but even with the whole of it, a serious question would remain whether we should sanction it.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Those who instruct me are responsible for that, and they consider that they would be able to maintain it. Your lordship said that if we got £5,000 we could build a suitably equipped school—I did not understand that if these buildings were sold for £10,000, we would get £5,000 to start a new school?

10789. Lord Justice NAULT.—Certainly you might. The value of the buildings is treated as part of the minimum grant, and as the scheme stands, the purchase money would belong equally to the two boards, and a capital sum could be given to each of you to build new schools.

<sup>a</sup> See Appendix B, No. LXIX., p. 154.

Aug. 4, 1916.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That would in the first place put us to this disadvantage—that we would be idle while the school would be in process of construction.

10790. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—What are you doing now? Almost any house in Enniskillen would accommodate your whole school.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't think you can leave out of view the questions of association and reputation; it is ridiculous to suppose that a room with thirty-five boys in a stable or in a back street could be worked with the same effect as in the Portora buildings. I don't know that any man would think of sending his child as a pupil to a place with no reputation and no history.

10791. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—There are three years during which you can get your school into working order, and start the scheme.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That would be all very well if we continued the existing state of things for three years: but we would not get the £5,000 until the place was sold, and the moment it was sold we would lose our school; and for the time that our new school would be in process of construction there would be none at all, and that would have the most injurious effect upon its reputation, to have the old school sold and turned into a barrack or anything else and no new school created.

10792. Lord Justice NABIT.—Supposing we found that you had the school continuing successfully in the Portora buildings as an educational institution, ought we to hand it over in the interests of education?

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think you proved that it could not be successful, because the total number of available pupils in the locality, was from twenty to thirty; and you proved yesterday that although the Catholics could get recruits you were not in a position to get recruits, and you made it a great complaint against us that we allowed them to get recruits and to swamp you by their numbers.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Those who instruct me entertain this opinion, but my argument was misunderstood. I say that the population from which the Protestant school is recruited by foreign boarders outside the district is infinitely small compared with the population from which the Roman Catholic school can be recruited; and, therefore, there is nothing to prevent the Roman Catholic school at Monaghan getting smart boys from the Christian Brothers' schools and diverting the 60 per cent through their instrumentality—and I think that would do so.

10793. Lord Justice NABIT.—There never was a time when Portora was filled by means of day boys and boarders from Formanagh.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—Yes, but I submit that nothing could be more unjust than to say that the future in reference to these schools would be necessarily like the past, for they were maintained at that time by three masters as fellows of Trinity College almost alone. They taught pupils from a high social class, they were not working in conjunction with the different establishments they will be working in connection with now, and there will be an entirely different system of education and of management, and it will aim at a much wider spirit and, last but not least, at much less expense.

10794. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—But if you had anything like the number of boarders you speak of, instead of waiting an endowment, there would be gross profit from the school. When there were seventy-two boarders the net profit, after paying all expenses, is returned at £1,150 a year from these pupils alone. Therefore the real problem you have to deal with is how to maintain in Enniskillen a good school for day boys?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I don't admit that if you found a thousand boys carrying on the school at Portora with credit without a penny of endowment you are entitled to tear up these charters and to give Portora nothing.

10795. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We should not think of doing anything of the sort. If the school was in that condition now we should treat it as a successful school, but it is not, and we have with this endowment to try to provide a good school.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I say it is contrary to the spirit of the founder's intention, which you must regard if the school in Portora is not to be maintained out of the Formanagh grant. Is it not perfectly plain that we cannot get on without an endowment, and we are entitled to this endowment for this particular school.

10796. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Your contention is that we are bound to give you the whole of the existing buildings. Then because you cannot maintain them without the whole endowment, we must give you that too. But the buildings are not used for day boys, and as a vast boarding establishment involves large expense, though if you get boarders to fill them you would not want anything from the endowment, but the endowment would even be made more effective for its proper purpose keeping up a good school for the day boys of the locality.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—But merely to give a grant for day boys would ignore the claims of one sixteen-twentieths of the population, and I claim the Portora buildings, and so much land as is necessary to adequately maintain the school as a boarding-school as well as a day school. If you get rid of these buildings you destroy its past history.

10797. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—You cannot destroy past history.

Mr. Atkinson.—You destroy its past history when you destroy the institution with which it is associated.

10798. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The institution which had the history does not exist now.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—It does exist. You destroy the association, and the name of Portora, which was a well-known school, at the one time.

10799. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The name is there now, over an empty house.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—But that is on account of mismanagement.

10800. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—That is not borne out by the evidence, which really goes to show that the total number of pupils at any one time educated in the Royal schools was only sufficient to fill one Royal school well, but was never sufficient to fill the five Royal schools simultaneously. Every one of the five Royal schools was at one time a success, but they never were all successful together.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—In a confusion of things it which Under was overbuilt with schools.

10801. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—A great many new schools have been now built, and you want to get the largest of the old buildings?

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I do, with the expectation that it would be a success if put forward, as the old Portora School under a superior system of management, it would attract pupils, and have a better chance than a new school.

10802. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If you started in attracting boarders you will be lost in need of an endowment, because, according to the evidence, the profits from the boarders enable the head master to maintain his school, and to pay the assistant masters good salaries. Here is Dr. Moore Morgan's evidence:—

"5232. Then in fact your boarders are not a charge upon the endowment, but rather a help?—Yes, they help me to pay proper salaries to assistant masters, which I could not possibly pay them if I had only day pupils."

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I think you imagine that you have an absolute control over the endowment, and that, if the school could get on without any endowment, you are at liberty not to give it any. Now, I say that if the Portora School was earning from people $1,000 a year you cannot defend the intentions of the founder of the grant, and take it away from that school.

10803. Rev. Dr. Mottor.—We propose to give to each Board a sufficient part of the endowment to help them to take at least one efficient school.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—When I spoke of mismanagement, I did not wish to hurt the feelings of anyone, but the entire system shows a state of mismanagement which was as much due to the Commissioners as to anyone else. The whole system was unsatisfactory under the condition of things that prevailed.

Rev. Dr. Steele.—I wish to correct a mistake that has occurred in reference to Portora School. There is provision in Portora at this moment for boarders. There is one dormitory which has never been closed, and which contains sixteen beds fully equipped, and in one week I could receive fifty boarders if they came to the school. The other dormitories were stripped when the boarders left the school, and when I saw no prospect of them coming under the clouds of threatened legislation. I, however, still retain that one, and members of my family have all along occupied Portora.

10804. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—As a matter of fact, Dr. Steele, are you not resident elsewhere yourself for several years?

Rev. Dr. Steele.—Not for several years—since the beginning of 1886. When the boarders left I did not at first go away, but then when they ceased coming I moved three miles away, being ready to come back the next day if a single boarder came. I daily attend the school.

10805. Mr. Corton, q.c.—As I understand Mr. Atkinson's argument this Act of 1885 might never have been passed, the Commission has been going wrong from the first time it set, and time after time the scheme framed by the Commission and subsequently approved by the Privy Council, thereby getting all the force of Acts of Parliament, have been in violation of the real powers of the Commission, for the Commission has been doing with every endowment as if it were exactly what they propose to do in the present scheme. Mr. Atkinson does not argue that the lands and buildings are not educational endowments within the meaning of the Act. It is expressly stated to be an Act to recognise the educational endowments throughout Ireland, and it defines educational endowments to comprehend both lands and buildings. Now, the ample powers conferred under section 6, enable the Commission to do what they like with educational endowments, provided they carry out the object of the Act which is to recognise the endowments in such a way as to best promote education in Ireland. Section 27 provides that when the scheme has been approved "every Act of Parliament, Letters Patent, Statute, Deed, Instrument, Trust, or direction relating to the subject matter of the scheme, in so far as consistent with the provisions thereof, shall be repealed and abrogated." If Mr. Atkinson's contention be right, we have been losing our time for the last three days, because the arguments urged on behalf of Portora might equally be addressed on behalf of Dungannon, Cavan, Armagh, and all the other schools—yet no counsel appearing for these has ventured to submit this rather startling proposition that under these old Acts of Parliament—express power to repeal which has been given by the Act of 1885, you are bound in respect to what Mr. Atkinson calls a trust fastened on this property to maintain what Lord Justice FitzGibbon has most aptly described as a white elephant. He says at one time Portora was the object of this trust, and that you cannot take away the Portora buildings or land, because under the original foundation there is an irrevocable trust for the benefit of Portora which this Commission has not the power to take away—whereas I contend it has unmistakably the power to alter that trust and to remove the school and to reorganise the governing body, and the endowment in the interest of intermediate education. The entire scheme is entirely within the jurisdiction conferred by the Act, it is exactly what you have been doing with the Swords Borough school and other schools. You find a school with a large endowment not doing satisfactory work, you divide the endowment between the Catholics and Protestants who are seeking intermediate education. You find an endowment and a large class of people entitled to benefit by that endowment, which is founded for the purpose of promoting education—and you are simply dividing it between two bodies for the purposes of extending the education to all classes entitled to it.

10806. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If we are to be held not to have jurisdiction, it must be so held by the Privy Council, but assuming these buildings to be part of the endowment, if they are wanted for the educational purposes of the scheme, should we not use them for these purposes?

Mr. Corton, q.c.—Yes, but if you hand them over to Mr. Atkinson's clients for the purposes of the Fermanagh Protestant Board, they must be charged with the value of them, whatever it is. Mr. Atkinson wants to get them for nothing. If they are part of the Educational Endowment the Commissioners cannot hand them over for nothing, but the full value, at an occupation rent, should be put upon them.

10807. Lord Justice NAIRN.—What is your proposition with regard to the Enniskillen school buildings?

Mr. Corton, q.c.—Dr. Donnelly and the Fermanagh Catholic Board are satisfied on this head with the scheme as it stands. It leaves the two local boards to carry out the matter among themselves. It is not hopeless that a fair settlement can be come to, having regard to what has been mentioned with reference to Dungannon, and if six months after the scheme is launched, the two local boards cannot agree, the Commissioners of Education have ample powers under another section to frame a scheme.

10808. Lord Justice NAIRN.—They have power to approve of any scheme, and if there is no scheme, to sell.

Mr. Corton, q.c.—Postponing the final consideration of this matter until October, with power to the parties in the meantime to send in their views would be a convenient course; but values will value according to the side by whom they are employed, and I would suggest that between this and the next sitting, the Commissioners should get an independent valuation made.

10809. Lord Justice NAIRN.—This is a very difficult kind of property to value.

Mr. Corton, q.c.—I know it is; but I only threw out whether an independent valuation could not be had by the Commissioners for their own guidance?

10810. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We have already tried to do that and found that it was useless because of the question whether they were to be valued as school buildings or as property to be sold in the market. In the latter case the value put on them by professional people is a great deal less than if they are valued as school buildings; but on the other hand valuing them as school buildings assumes that they can be used for a successful school, and it would be utterly unjust to take the value on that principle of these Portora buildings against local people who took them on the chance of being able to establish a school in them. We therefore have no figure that we can look to, except the Government valuation.

Mr. Corton, q.c.—There is a large amount of the land which could be easily valued.

10811. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—It is not so easy as you think. The Portora buildings occupy most of the flat portion of the land, and there are great slopes down from them on each, and a considerable quantity of land between the existing playground and the lake which would be hard to separate.

Mr. Corton, q.c.—Archdeacon Smollen and Mr.

Aug. 4, 1891.

Why think it would be perfectly easy and they know the place well.

10812. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—It would be well if Mr. Atkinson's clients, who say they want only the buildings and whatever land is necessary for the school, would mark on the ordinance map the portion of land which they regard as essential. If they claim the whole as essential we must deal with that proposal, but if they did not claim the whole then the claim portion would remain to be dealt with. You offer to give them the buildings and you too should mark on a map what land you think ought to go with them.

Mr. Carion, q.c.—When they come to consider the question they will find that they have not the faintest notion of taking the buildings.

10813. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—There is a good deal of sentiment and something more than sentiment here, because a school that could call itself the literal descendant of old Portora would have more value. They would have to give credit for it, and they will incur enormous responsibility in taking over this great place, but we cannot ignore their feelings, and the question of prudence is more for them than for us.

Mr. Carion, q.c.—I at once concede that if they really satisfy the Commissioners that they want the Portora buildings for purposes of education they have a right to get them on the condition of paying for them. But I am quite prepared to mark on the ordinance sheet so much land as we think would be essential for the working of the Portora school.

10814. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—Do you think what would remain would be sufficient for the Catholic board as a set-off against the buildings?

Mr. Carion, q.c.—That would depend on the quantity of land they would require.

10815. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We won't ask you to proceed any further with this matter now. You can do a great deal towards coming to a conclusion, if Mr. Atkinson's clients persevere with the intention of trying to keep up the school in the existing buildings, if they show how much of the land they think essential to the buildings and will also say what they think the annual value of what they want. You on the other hand would point out what land you are willing to take and what you regard as the annual value of it. If you mark a piece of land and say we regard that piece of land as worth say £60 a year, and they send in a claim for the buildings and a piece of land, same the price, say £100 a year, and you agreed on the boundaries the result would be that Mr. Atkinson would get his buildings and land for £20 a year! If on the other hand, which is most probable, your estimates and line of demarcation differed, we might keep you to settle the thing between you.

Rev. Dr. Mooney.—In the meantime some one may offer a bulk sum, and you could consider whether it would not be better to take it, and to divide it.

10816. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Do you really want any land, Mr. Carion, for educational purposes?

Mr. Carion, q.c.—We don't want land; we would much rather have money; but in the event of their seriously wanting the buildings, and that they do not want the entire land, we would be quite prepared to take the portion left outside the requirements of the buildings at a valuation.

10817. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—You would allow them to have the buildings free, together with the land necessary for school purposes, without encroaching upon the minimum which Mr. Atkinson is anxious to preserve intact?

Professor Deane.—You would not object to sell the surplus land, and to take the money which that sale would bring in as portion of your share of the endowment?

Mr. Carion, q.c.—Certainly not.

10818. Professor Deane.—That would bring the matter a step nearer to a settlement.

Mr. Carion, q.c.—It is much better for the purpose of local education that the local boards should deal with the cash.

10819. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Let your clients understand, Mr. Atkinson, that* between this and October they should state how much of this land they regard as absolutely essential to the working of the school, and the value they put on it. Half the price of what is sold would go to your own credit by the scheme as it stands, and, therefore, it is your interest to take only what is absolutely essential. On the other hand Mr. Carion's clients will let us know what they think should be sold, or handed over to themselves.

Mr. Carion, q.c.—Speaking roughly they think what would be sufficient for the school would be the buildings, the lawn in front, the cricket ground, and the play-ground?

10820. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The land in connexion with the Dungannon School is an admirable piece, and it contains only a little over ten acres.

Mr. Carion, q.c.—My clients are quite satisfied that Mr. Atkinson should take the buildings, and all or such portion of the land as they require at a fair valuation.

10821. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—I presume, Mr. Atkinson, your clients when they send in a complete valuation will take into consideration the prudence of taking over these enormous buildings.

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—I presume they have done that.

10822. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—A great part of these buildings was added recently, and perhaps if you could do without these extra buildings—

Mr. Atkinson, q.c.—That is what we consider the hardship. They were built out of income, and not out of the capital of the fund, and we might have spent the income otherwise.

Mr. Carion, q.c.—There is a provision in the scheme that so far as any portion of these buildings were erected by private benefactors the present value shall be treated as belonging exclusively to the share of the Protestant Local Board. I understand that Dr. Steele is making some claim.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That claim will come up when we come to his varied interest; the provision we mention relates chiefly to one of the wings of Dungannon, and to some buildings in Armagh.

10823. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The Raphoe case is next.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—As to the Raphoe case, I had in a report of the Special Commissioners to investigate the Raphoe charities which was in 1852. The effect is to show that the Raphoe school is a private endowment. This, I believe, was not previously before the Commissioners, and I was asked by Canon Bellingham to bring it under your notice. The school buildings were erected out of funds under the will of Nicholas Foster, Bishop of Raphoe.

10824. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That refers only to part of the buildings.

Mr. Bewley, q.c.—I was under the impression that it applied to the whole.

10825. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We shall be glad to have this report, but I think a portion of the building used as a library is all that was a private benefaction.

Rev. Dr. Steele.—One of the wings is two stories high. The lower story is a library and the upper story is used as a dormitory.

10826. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Is the title of the land upon which that wing is built different from the rest?

Rev. Dr. Steele.—I have no idea. When I was appointed the title was, so far as I know, alike for the whole. I should state that at one time, as consequence of the large number of boys attending the school I converted the library into a dining-room, but I believe it was afterwards re-converted into a library.

* See Appendix B, Nos. LXVI., p. 505.

10837. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Was there any library there in your time?

Rev. Dr. Steele.—Yes; but I removed the books into another room in order to convert the library into a dining-room.

10838. Professor DOUGHERTY.—And the books have since been taken to Derry?

Rev. Dr. Steele.—So I understand.

Mr. Ross.—I have got the facts about the library from another source. The library is in Derry, but the salary as librarian is still paid to the head master of Raphoe.

Professor DOUGHERTY.—We know that.

10839. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—But the point at present is the title to the building. Have you any evidence that any part of the existing building was not built with the Royal School fund?

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—There is an inscription on the chimney showing that it was not built with the original fund. That will come before you on the claim as to being a private endowment, and we are anxious that this claim should be settled by this Commission. We shall never have so good a tribunal to decide the matter again, and it would be very important for us if the point will be finally settled.

10840. Lord Justice NAHEM.—When was the library established?

Mr. Ross.—It was built in 1737 by the then Bishop of Raphoe, and it bears an inscription to that effect in stone over it.

10841. Lord Justice NAHEM.—Is this an integral portion of the school building?

Mr. Ross.—Yes.

10842. Lord Justice NAHEM.—Not built away from it?

Mr. Ross.—No, you have to go through the school to get to it.

10843. Lord Justice NAHEM.—When was the library sent to Derry?

Mr. Ross.—Within the last few years. Since a School Hall was provided in Derry; about 1894.

10844. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—What is the proposal as to how the Raphoe School buildings are to be best utilized?

Rev. Professor MAGUIRE, V.R.—The school buildings are in the centre of a very non-Catholic district, hence the suggestion that the party who did not require the buildings should send in a proposal would be very embarrassing to us, because, even if we were to value the buildings, they are not in a desirable position for us. We ask, seeing that the endowment is so extremely small, and that it is proposed to render our portion of the endowment almost useless to us by departing from the principle of having one good, efficient, well equipped school for each denomination in the locality by extending the endowment outside the diocese, and that, therefore, the portion of the endowment in which we would have to work the school in the diocese would be so very small, all that we ask is that the amount allowed for the school be as high as it can be fairly estimated. That will also be in the interest of the Presbyterians, because in all probability the school will fall into the hands of the Presbyterians—if not exclusively at all events largely—and it becomes of importance to them and to the Protestants generally to allow the Catholics some substantial interest in the endowment, because otherwise, seeing that it is Catholics that pay the rent, the Catholics will feel there is no reason why they should put themselves to any extraordinary trouble to pay moneys into a fund from which they derive no advantages.

10845. Professor DOUGHERTY.—There is no suggestion of the "Plan of Campaign" I hope!

Rev. Professor MAGUIRE.—As Mr. Dougherty, who knows the district well, has referred to that matter, I would like to have this opportunity of saying that the Lord Bishop of Raphoe most emphatically condemned any form of resistance to the payment of a fair rent where it was possible.

10846. Professor DOUGHERTY.—I believe that resistance to the payment of rent is of very old standing in this particular district!

Rev. Professor MAGUIRE.—Well it has been at all times condemned by the Catholic Bishops, but it has been specifically and emphatically condemned within the last few weeks by the present Lord Bishop of Raphoe. I would suggest to refer the allocation of the buildings to some local committee composed of Presbyterians and of Catholics, and I think they could decide on the matter.

10847. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We can do in your case what we have proposed in Carrigrohane. Ask those you represent to send in a memorandum stating what they consider they could fairly expect as the rent of the premises; and we will ask the others who want the buildings for a school to say what they regard them as worth.

Rev. Professor MAGUIRE.—The Presbyterians, if they wished, could make the buildings practically valueless for us.

10848. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—That might be the effect of your not allowing them to have them at a fair rent. The buildings are worth more to them for a school than to anybody else for any other purpose, and we think they ought to get them at a fair rent. If you will each tell us what you consider would be fair we will form an opinion as to what we should do.

Mr. Drummond.—I think you mentioned three elements that you would take into consideration—1, the annual value; 2, the selling value; and 3, the amount for purchase.

10849. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—If you wish you can send in what you regard as the capital value. But in the Raphoe case unfortunately instead of there being any capital fund there is a debt of £200.

Mr. Ross.—I am instructed to support very strongly the proposal that this Raphoe school should be given over to the Denagall Protestant Local Board at a fair rent, they want it, and it would be of use to them and to nobody else.

10850. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—Then let each side send in an estimate, and we will try and arrange it. But if there is no agreement you may have to fight it out in the open market, and it would be a great advantage to agree, for if we do not see our way to approximate between you, in Raphoe at all events it may be hard to get anybody to bid against the Presbyterians.

10851. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—We will do our best; we only want the material. We now come to Arragh, and in this case the buildings are so much mixed up with the question of the vested interests that I think we may take both together.

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—Before you go into that, I wish to make an observation with regard to section 51 of the scheme. I think there is a mistake in that section—that what was meant to be done was, that what was provided by private Protestant benefactors was to be respected, but the effect of the section is that a private Protestant endowment is to be treated as part of the Protestant share, and deducted from it.

10852. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—You mean added to it.

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—No, the words are—"if any portion of the existing premises was provided by any Protestant benefactor, out of private moneys, and is of ascertainable value, the present value shall be ascertained, and treated as belonging exclusively to the share of the Protestant Local Board." On the construction of those words, it would be deducted from their share.

10853. Lord Justice FITZGERSON.—I am sure none of us put that construction upon the clause.

Mr. Bessley, Q.C.—That must require some verbal amendment.

April 4, 1895.

10844. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—It may be wrongly worded; but the intention was to add the private benefactions to the Protestant share. On this point we have no trustworthy evidence. We sent to the Commissioners of Education for details of the funds spent in this way, and they sent in a return practically saying that there were none. On the other hand we were pointed out a ring in Dungannon, and a building in Armagh said to have been built by the private money of the Archbishop.

Mr. Buxley, Q.C.—If it was known that the Commission would entertain the question, claims would be sent in, and the matter would be finally decided.

10845. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We would want claims, and also some proof to sustain them.

Mr. Buxley, Q.C.—The evidence could be sent in as to the buildings erected from private benefactions.

10846. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—We have no difficulty as to the principle on which we ought to settle the matter, and we hope no wrongly founded claim prevails on the subject. Supposing it was proved that, say fifty years ago, £4,000 was spent by an Archbishop on one of these buildings, we could not treat the Protestant Board as having now a charge of £4,000 on the buildings, but we should have to ascertain what proportion of the value of the whole existing building was attributable to the part so built.

Mr. Buxley, Q.C.—That would be perfectly fair.

Mr. Curzon, Q.C.—Before you go into the question of vested interest, there are a few small points in Schedule I. to which I wish to refer. It provides that four marks shall be allowed for every pupil that passes the matriculation of any university of the United Kingdom. Is it intended that the marks should count twice over, supposing a pupil matriculates in the Royal University, and having gone through his course begins over again, and matriculates in another university?

10847. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—It is not.

Mr. Curzon, Q.C.—So I should have thought; therefore there should be some safeguard that only one matriculation should count.

10848. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—We will make that right.

Mr. Buxley, Q.C.—There is another matter that requires to be verbally amended. There are no matriculation examinations in the University of Oxford and Cambridge, but I understand that there are such examinations in the colleges in those places.

10849. Lord Justice NASH.—That should be altered to include colleges in the universities.

Mr. Curzon, Q.C.—In sub-section (b) of Schedule I., would it not be wise to define that a boy could not pass in the same grade of the Intermediate examination more than once. Is it intended that if a boy passes in the junior grade, and then goes up and passes again in the next year, that should count twice over?

10850. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—That is rather a complex question: if a pupil passes in the junior grade this year, next year in the middle grade, and the following in the senior grade, there could not be better proof that during all those three years he had been receiving valuable intermediate education in the school, and I would allow his school to count him each year once in each grade. His passing in a second year in the same grade, as he must be still within the prescribed age, also seems to show continuing school work, but passing more than one matriculation or professional examination appears to stand on a different basis, because the same school preparation would probably enable him to matriculate anywhere, or to pass into a profession, and this final proof of school work ought not to count more than once for the same boy. Now we have got a great deal of help already in this matter, and we want to make the schedule work as fairly as possible, and I think we, the Judicial Commissioners, may say that we will not sign the scheme until we have sent a revised copy of this schedule to the educational authorities, and got their observations upon it in writing. They know a great deal more about it than we do, and we desire that it should be treated as an educational subject. The Schoolmasters' Association could give us valuable help in this matter.

Rev. Dr. MORTON.—There may be some defect in the language used, but we can easily make it right.

Mr. SHAW.—It ought to be borne in mind that, in addition to the matriculation for the Royal University, there are separate matriculation examinations for a number of colleges in connection with the Royal University.

10851. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—I don't understand it to be intended that if a pupil matriculates into a university, the school which prepared him is ever to get any more money for having taught him as a school boy.

Mr. SHAW.—Certainly not, but I wish to understand, supposing a pupil matriculates into one of the Queen's Colleges, or into the Royal College, whether that will entitle the school to receive fees, or whether he must matriculate into the Royal University as well.

10852. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—He must matriculate in a university.

Mr. SHAW.—I would suggest that if a man passed the matriculation in the Queen's College or in the Queen's Colleges it should be sufficient.

10853. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—You propose that we should put them in the same grade as a university?

Mr. SHAW.—Certainly.

10854. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—We give most credit for the matriculation examination of a university than for the matriculation examination of the Queen's Colleges.

Mr. SHAW.—That depends entirely on the standard of the examination.

10855. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—And the standard of the examination is a reason for our proposal.

Mr. SHAW.—I understand that the standard of the matriculation examination is quite as high as in the case of the Royal University.

10856. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—I think you are not correctly informed.

Archbishop WALSH.—That proposition would be objected to on educational grounds almost unanimously except by the Queen's Colleges themselves.

10857. Rev. Dr. MORTON.—The Queen's College matriculation is not on a level with the Royal University.

Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Some difficulty must arise in every endeavour to estimate the educational value of examinations. And what strikes me as being a cardinal distinction from the point of view of the scheme, as to the work done by the school—would be the distinction between passing the junior grade of the Intermediate examinations, which is an indication that the boy's intermediate education is not yet finished and that his school course is not yet over, and one passing any examination that indicates that a boy's school days were over, whether he becomes an apothecary, a clergyman, a civil servant, or the student of any recognised college or university, I should be inclined to recognise for each one final test examination after leaving school, and only one. It occurs to me that we might make a simple rule and get rid of all this difficulty of weighing examinations—if we allowed two marks for the junior grade, three for the middle, and four for the senior grade, and then to give one uniform value, say four marks, for each pupil turned out of school and passing any recognised examination in which he stood the test of having got at his school a genuine intermediate education. But that would, so far as the school was concerned, be a final examination. That would go in the direction Archbishop Walsh approved yesterday of treating passes on the same scale irrespective of distinctions. I don't see why the school should be affected by the standard of this final examination, where its duty is to pass the boy through the examination he wants, whether it be for the College of Surgeons, or one of the Queen's Colleges, or Trinity College, or Maynooth, or the Civil Service. In each case, for our purpose, the same question arises, has the schoolmaster done his work meritoriously?

Mr. Shaw.—What will be done with pupils who go to universities where there is no matriculation examination? A large number go to Glasgow and Edinburgh where there is no matriculation examination. They simply present themselves, take their classes, and take their instruction, and no question is asked.

10835. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Præcis facite, you would have been paid for these while passing the Intermediate examinations in Ireland, and we can't pay any further for them, without some test or some guarantee that they have got special education. A great many will go into trades, or go home, and learn no more.

Mr. Shaw.—That depends upon whether a man goes to a Scotch or to an Irish University—there is not in the one place and there is in the other place a matriculation examination.

10836. Rev. Dr. Moller.—I understand that Scotch boys go up at thirteen and fourteen for matriculation. The Scotch Universities take the place, to some extent, of intermediate schools.

Mr. Drummond.—It would be no test of educational status for boys to enter Glasgow or Edinburgh before the disestablishment of the Queen's Colleges, the men who went to Glasgow were those who had failed to pass the examination at the Queen's College.

Mr. Shaw.—I have more information on that point than Mr. Drummond has, and I know that that is not so.

Mr. Drummond.—I know of a number of instances in which men when they could not pass the examination at the Queen's College went to Glasgow and succeeded there.

Mr. Buckley, q.c.—I think there should be some limit of age on the schedule. I observe one witness spoke of pupils between the ages of sixteen and thirty going in for examinations of this character.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The Intermediate ages are fixed.

10840. Rev. Dr. Moller.—I think the number of pupils of excessive age would be small, and would not disturb the balance, and I must say for myself, that I never could see why a young man who wished to get education should be deprived of the advantages of a public endowment, simply because he had reached the age of twenty-one.

Professor Drummond.—And the work done in educating a man of thirty is more than in educating a boy of twenty.

10841. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I should object to paying for such work on the ground that it is a waste of public money. If you educate a boy of eighteen, the state gets twelve years more work out of him than out of a man of thirty—who ought to have got some other calling than attending school before that age.

Mr. Carter, q.c.—I think the schedule ought to be also modified to meet this difficulty which often happens—a boy leaves school this year and then goes on into private study and in matriculation, really not as the result of the work done by the school, but as the result of private study, it seems unfair to give the school the benefit of what is really the result of private study.

Rev. Dr. Moller.—I think we should put in a provision that they must come direct from the school.

10842. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—And we will have to consider whether we should not put in some limit of age.

Mr. Buckley, q.c.—The Intermediate Education

Commissioners do that as far as their examinations.

10843. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—They do, but our limit should be something under, as a considerable number of boys go up for the Royal University who are too old to pass the Intermediate.

Mr. Carter, q.c.—Sub-section (f) of section 45 of the scheme sets forth—"The school shall, during the year for which the claim is made, have had in regular attendance not less than twenty-five pupils receiving an intermediate education, and not less than ten pupils of the school shall, during such year, have passed a qualifying examination as defined in Schedule II. hereto, having each made not less than one hundred attendances at the school during the twelve calendar months preceding the examination."

10844. Rev. Dr. Moller.—That is a condition which must be fulfilled by the schools which claim to share in the results fees, but it has nothing to do with the way of calculating the amount of the results fees which each school is to get.

Mr. Carter, q.c.—The pupils should either pass direct from the school, or within a certain time after leaving the school. It is only right to say that there was an objection of Dr. Donnelly's asking the Commission to lower these numbers, but he instructed me to withdraw it. He thought the condition was too severe, but on consideration he thought it would not be a really efficient school unless these numbers were retained.

Mr. Buckley, q.c.—I am also instructed by Dr. Logan to withdraw his objection on that point.

Mr. Shaw.—I am instructed to press very strongly that the limit of the number of those getting intermediate education should be fixed at ten or at the highest of fifteen.

10845. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have heard that already; but I understand you not to press it with regard to the school getting the minimum grant.

Mr. Shaw.—No, I think the school getting the minimum grant should have the number fixed at twenty-five.

10846. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—With regard to other schools the only effect of leaving the numbers as they stand would be to leave a smaller number of schools to share the surplus.

Mr. Drummond.—I am instructed to make an observation as to the possibility of having the marks awarded by an Inspector of the board or some such person, because the test provided by the scheme is arbitrary.

10847. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We discussed that and discarded it, as the responsibility, expense, and time taken up would be excessive, and nobody would be satisfied with the Inspector's report.

Rev. Dr. Moller.—It would necessitate a complete system of examination.

Mr. Drummond.—My clients would be quite satisfied, because there is a large number of pupils who do not go into the Intermediate examination.

10848. Professor Drummond.—If we increase the number of examinations in Ireland we shall have no time left for education.

Mr. Ross.—You will remember my objection to the whole results system, and this discussion shows that it will be impossible to work it.

Archbishop Walsh.—Before marks are allowed for a pupil passing the examination, I think, some number of attendances at the school should be required.

10849. Rev. Dr. Moller.—Your Grace may remember that 100 attendances are required by the scheme.

Archbishop Walsh.—One hundred attendances are required from a certain number of pupils to qualify the school, but I think, that does not apply to the state of things which I wish to bring under your notice. There is nothing in the scheme as it now stands to prevent a school letting in twelve clever boys a week or two before the examinations, and sending them in as boys educated in the school.

Aug. 6, 1905.

10870. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—That point must be made clear, and we shall have to attend carefully to the settlement of all these details, and we will invite observations and suggestions on the revised schedule.

Archbishop Walsh.—Before you finally reject the suggestion of having an inspector appointed by the Commissioners of Education, I should wish to point out that there does not seem to be the same difficulty about that as there is about these competitive examinations going on all over the country. Such a system is worked by the National Board without difficulty in the thousands of schools they have under their direction. Probably there would not be more than forty or fifty schools altogether concerned in this matter.

10871. Lord Justice NASH.—Then does your Grace support the suggestion of Mr. Drummond?

Archbishop Walsh.—It comes upon me as a new idea, and it seems to me to be an excellent one. I think it worth thinking over at all events.

Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—We should require a large staff for such examinations.

10872. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—If any one by looking at a school could ascertain that its pupils were getting a bona fide intermediate education, we might be satisfied with the report of the inspector under the scheme. But the cost of any sufficient inspection would be great and the schoolmaster would never be satisfied with an examination that did not enable the inspector to report that each boy was being properly taught in all the required subjects.

Archbishop Walsh.—Perhaps the cost of the inspection might be paid out of the Consolidated Fund as the expenses of the Commissioners of Education are now.

Mr. Drummond.—We think it could be done very easily and inexpensively, and a small sum might be allocated to the appointment of one inspector out of the funds at the disposal of the Commissioners. There are only ten schools and this arbitrary system of attaching one value to one pass and another value to another might be dispensed with, and, besides, in some schools a very great injustice might be avoided. My clients have a substantial interest—for very many of the students of the Catholic College in Cavan go to Maynooth. Most of these pupils do not trouble themselves with the intermediate examinations but go straight into Maynooth.

10873. Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—And you are to get credit for that.

Mr. Drummond.—Up to the present that is not included. Besides it is on a level with the senior grade of the Intermediate, and there would be no provision for the Cavan school from passes in the junior and middle grades of the Intermediate examinations, because they would not have any candidates in them.

10874. Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—Could not the heads of the Catholic college make some effort to have a centre established in Cavan. That is done by institutions much smaller than yours.

Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—Your suggestion was tried some years ago when the former Commission sent a fellow and a graduate of the University of Dublin to examine several schools, and their reports were not accepted as satisfactory by the schoolmasters.

Mr. Drummond.—One or two gentlemen could be appointed to examine the pupils of these schools at a very small cost.

10875. Professor DEWEY.—Would you propose that the same inspector should examine the Protestant and the Catholic schools?

Mr. Drummond.—Certainly.

10876. Professor DEWEY.—You think that the one man could do the work satisfactorily to both parties?

Mr. Drummond.—I think on the whole more so the Royal University he would. That University has now got a permanent Protestant and Catholic examining body.

10877. Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—The bulk of the examinations of the Royal University are conducted by papers, and the examiners never see the candidates. Do you propose that they should go down to the schools?

Mr. Drummond.—I think there should be a visitation of the school.

Archbishop Walsh.—If you have for the basis of distribution an examination conducted like the results examinations of the National Board, I don't see how any difficulty on the religious question need arise.

10878. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—There might be a difficulty as to the number and denomination of the inspectors.

Archbishop Walsh.—I don't think so at all. There is practically no religious difficulty in the case of the results examinations under the National Board. I have known cases in which the change from a Catholic inspector to a Protestant one was considered a very favourable one in a number of Catholic schools.

10879. Rev. Dr. MOLLON.—The Catholic inspector was afraid, I suppose, to show any leniency?

Archbishop Walsh.—Sometimes a Catholic inspector may be found who is afraid even to be just, afraid of even a groundless charge of undue leniency.

10880. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—I still fear there might be a great difficulty as to the number of inspectors required. The courses must include Latin, Greek, Mathematics, English, French, German, and other subjects.

Archbishop Walsh.—It may not be necessary to have more than one examiner. It is not a competitive examination. The Act 53rd Geo. III. section 4, provides for the payment of such officers as the Commissioners shall think proper for carrying into execution the purposes of the Act, and empowers them to certify to the Lord Lieutenant such sums as they deem adequate to defray the expense of such officers and the incidental expenses of the Board.

Rev. Dr. Moore MORGAN.—I have been greatly interested in this matter of the test, and if we could get a broad, fair, and uniform test we are all of opinion that it would be more satisfactory; I am sure that a diversity of standard would never give satisfaction all round.

10881. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—What would you think of having but one inspector?

Rev. Dr. MORGAN.—That is far better—the inspector proposed in the scheme.

Mr. Drummond.—My clients would be satisfied to have one inspector appointed by the Commissioners.

10882. Lord Justice FRYGIMON.—Our Act provides that it must be an appointment by the Lord Lieutenant.

Archbishop LOGAN.—Would it be possible to get the Intermediate Commissioners in the interests of education to waive this fee for the examination of pupils over age? Their endowment is not a Government endowment. It is from our own Irish Church Fund, and I am afraid as their interest may soon be reduced you have not much chance of inducing them to do that.

Archbishop LOGAN.—It would not increase their expenses, if they undertook the duty of examining a few extra boys. The great objection to making the Intermediate examinations the test under this scheme would be that boys over age have to pay 10s. if they undertook to examine boys under these circumstances for it would get over the difficulty you are now discussing.

10683. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I am afraid it would not get over the whole difficulty, because for several schools the Intermediate Examination test alone would not be sufficient, particularly in girls' schools—there being so many that do not send pupils to the Intermediate Examination.

10684. Rev. Dr. Motter.—It might be a matter for the Schoolmasters' Association to take into consideration, and if they sent in a report it would help us.

10685. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—I don't think those who spoke have quite understood the difficulty. One schedule lays down the conditions to be fulfilled by the school in order that it shall be entitled to receive any share of the Royal Endowment. The other schedule fixes the marks to be assigned for pupils passing different examinations—according to which the results will be apportioned from time to time among the qualified schools. If you establish any new system of examinations, the actual distribution of results between the several schools will depend entirely upon the results of these examinations, and there will be a practical competition between the schools by means of these examinations—the conduct of which will therefore be subject to interested and eager scrutiny and observation.

Rev. Dr. Morgan.—I am certain that the Schoolmasters' Association would not be satisfied with a proposal that introduced these various examinations; they would far prefer a system which would have only one examination.

10686. Rev. Dr. Motter.—I am sure of that; and if the two Schoolmasters' Associations considered this matter together they might send in a joint report, or two separate reports which would be of great assistance to us in revising the scheme next October.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—As you are passing from this subject, your lordship would, perhaps, allow me, on the part of the Roman Catholic Archbishop, to say something on the buildings question before you go into the question of vested interests. The Archbishop adopts the principle of the scheme as set forth in the 15th section, with respect to the Armagh buildings, and with respect to all he wishes is that the endowment of Armagh should get the ordinary fair value of the buildings there. With a view to arriving at that fair value, he suggests that each party interested should be at liberty to make a proposal, and to name the value that he is ready to give, if declared the purchasers of the buildings. Supposing an offer is made by either the Protestant or the Catholic Board—the party making that offer—bidding what he thinks fair for the buildings—shall, if the other party do not elect to take the buildings at that offer, be obliged to himself purchase them for the sum that he names in his offer. It would be a self-acting arrangement, and would ensure that a fair offer should be made. With that modification, so far as the buildings are concerned, he adopts the scheme.

10687. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Would you be willing to send in a tender, offering to take the buildings yourself, allowing the rent or price you put down to be charged against you unless the other side take them at that same figure.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Yes, that is, as I understand it, the Archbishop's view. The tender will, of course, be based on a valuation.

10688. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Naming a capital value would be, in all probability, putting a price on people who could not pay. You could deal with it better as an annual rent.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—I apprehend that the Archbishop would not have any objection to offer a rent instead of putting a capital value—and let the tender take on each side the form of rent.

Archbishop Leazar.—Certainly.

Rev. Dr. Motter.—You might give both valuations, the annual rent, and the capital value. We should like to get both in every case.

Aug 4, 1888.

10689. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We will now take thest vested interests.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I appear for the Rev. Dr. Moore Morgan, and his position seems to be somewhat like that of Mahomet's coffin. It is my duty to have his vested rights determined, but compensation may not be necessary if he is to work on under the new scheme, if the conditions which he considers necessary for saving his vested rights are agreed to and carried out.

10690. Lord Justice NABH.—If he is kept in his present position with his rights preserved, then the question of compensation will arise at the end of the period fixed when he would retire.

10691. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—What are your objections to the proposal in the scheme for saving his vested interests?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—In the first place there is one very important one—the tenure of his office.

10692. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The tenure of his office is for life.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—No. He holds during residence and good behaviour.

10693. Lord Justice NABH.—What is the substance of your alteration?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—It begins with paragraph 55 of the scheme. I propose to strike out the words "so long as he continues to discharge the duties of his office," and to read "during good behaviour."

10694. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That was intended to be covered by the words "continues to discharge his duties?"

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The appointment is during residence and good behaviour, and there is a simplicity about the words "good behaviour" that we lawyers all know.

10695. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The words of the scheme are taken from the analogy of the Church Act.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I don't think there is any substantial difference between what the Commissioners intend and what I propose.

10696. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—It is a verbal alteration. What is the next objection?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I object to the limit "not exceeding £175" as the sum to be paid for rent and repairs. You are now dealing with him as a schoolmaster having the use of the school premises. There are six and a half acres of land with the house rent free. In addition there are eleven and a half acres of land of which the rent is £40. The taxes are £37 and the insurance £15. The average of all these is £93 13s. 7d., and on the same basis the rent, taxes, and insurance with the repairs, would make the average of all the items which go to support the fabric amount to £360. At page 407 of the evidence for 1885-1886 you will find all the figures. I have given the average. Some are fixed payments.

10697. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—During what period of years have you taken it?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Five years.

10698. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But there seems to have been some extraordinary expenditure included in that period.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—No, Dr. Morgan is here if there is any difficulty about the items.

Dr. Moore Morgan.—We have always had in addition to repairs, improvements.

10699. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—But you cannot have a vested interest in future improvements. The figures in the Commissioners' reports include expenditure on the tenantry school, and the average outlay on the Royal School for the last three years seems to be about £190. You have taken a different period, we must take the average at present.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I understand the average adopted in the scheme was for two years.

10700. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The scheme

July 4, 1886.

says "estimated average amount." It says nothing about the period.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—But the £175 is arrived at as an average of the outlay on repairs for five years.

10901. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—And what is wrong in it?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Nothing; but I want to have added to the repairs, "Rent, taxes, and insurance" in the column "miscellaneous."

10902. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That includes the salary of Mr. Fleming, the clerk, and things of that sort.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I am instructed not. Dr. Morgan says not.

10903. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have taken the original reports of the Commissioners to Parliament.

Dr. Moore Morgan.—We only come down to 1855.

10904. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We are bound to come down to the present time. We cannot give you a vested interest in the average outlay of years gone by, you may begin a little back for an average, but you must come down to the present time.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The period must be taken up to August, 1855, because that is the period of the vested interest at the date of the passing of the Act.

10905. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But the interest then vested has not been disturbed as yet by anything done under the Act.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—On the contrary it is entirely subverted. What you have to ascertain, I respectfully submit, is the vested interest of the individual at the date of the passing of the Act.

10906. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If a man has a vested interest, and repairs are included, he ought to have precisely the same vested interest now as at the time the Act passed.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I apprehend that if you fix a sum, and do not put in the words "sufficient and reasonable" you must take an average going behind the date of the passing of the Act.

10907. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We must fix a sum, otherwise Dr. Morgan would be always asking, and the Commissioners would be always refusing to spend money on repairs.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I quite admit that it is necessary.

10908. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—All that he can have a right to is to have his buildings kept in repair; and that cannot be ascertained by what it cost to repair them before 1855.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—It would require more in 1857.

10909. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Probably, and, therefore, I think we may pass this point, and you may send us particulars of what you claim as the fair average amount it takes now to keep your buildings in repair, or you may take the year just gone, ending in 1857. I don't think there is any difference of principle between us.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I think not, but at present the full amount of the rents was not included.

10910. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—It was, I assure you; however the divergence has arisen—it was not through leaving out the rent.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Well, with the rent which is fixed at £72—the taxes which are variable, but considerable, and the insurance which is fixed, you have only to look at the figures to see that the repairs must come to more than £175.

10911. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Dr. Molloy notices one item which may account for the discrepancy. In 1852 the Commissioners laid out £569 12s. 6d. on the Armagh buildings, if that was for new buildings or improvements, it ought not to come into the average cost of maintenance; but this is a mere matter of arithmetic, and if you give us the mode by which you have calculated your claim we will look into the Commissioners' reports and see if we can fix it fairly.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—My next objection has reference to the provision, that the Commissioners shall pay to Dr. Morgan the salary of an assistant master so long as the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report that the services of such master are required. That would interfere with the status of Dr. Moore Morgan and the assistant masters as between themselves. I suggest that the clause should read—"so long as he shall certify to the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant that the services of such master are required." Otherwise the clause would put him in a different position as regards the assistant master to that in which he was before.

10912. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I think not. The Commissioners have always held themselves, as far as we can see from the evidence, at liberty to refuse to pay an assistant master when the number of pupils fell below a certain figure. They struck off one assistant's salary in Enniskillen a short time ago.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—That is contrary to Dr. Morgan's experience.

10913. Rev. Dr. Monaghan.—Would you hold that, if the number of pupils fell down to three, there should be £120 a year paid to the assistant master?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Most decidedly, if you don't want to interfere with Dr. Morgan's status.

10914. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—His present status is to have an assistant if he is wanted.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The Act says he shall have an assistant.

10915. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—It does not bind the Commissioners to pay an assistant unless they think his services necessary.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The number might fall to three in one year and be up to 100 in the next.

10916. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—And if so they ought to give him an assistant, but he has no vested right to have an assistant except while the school is efficient.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I think he has. So long as the school has been in existence the Commissioners have given £150 a year for an assistant master, and that continued up to August, 1855, when this Act passed. The status quo then was that there should be an assistant master.

10917. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Under what Act do you claim that Dr. Morgan, irrespective of the requirements of the school, is entitled to have an assistant master?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Under the Act 53 George III. It has been the practice. I admit that £150 is a sum arrived at by practice. The appointment is under section 18, which declares "that the under master or masters, if any, who shall be endowed at any of the schools, shall be appointed by the head master with the approbation of the persons in whom the appointment of the head master is vested." Section 13 provides "if it shall appear to the Commissioners that one or more under master or under masters are necessary for any school, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to order that such other share of the fees and profits as they shall think proper, shall be applied to the sole use and benefit of such under master or under masters."

10918. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But that is precluded by the condition, "if it shall appear to the said Commissioners that one or more under master or under masters are necessary." Therefore, if it continues to appear necessary to the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, he will be entitled to it still.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Where is the Inspector of the Lord Lieutenant mentioned in any preceding Act of Parliament?

10919. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We must substitute somebody for the late Commissioners.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—We object to the Inspector; he must be an individual and may act under the local board, or there may be various influences at work; he might end in great injustice.

10920. Lord Justice NAISH.—Still, must not the appointment of an assistant master depend on the requirements of the school?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—When Dr. Morgan went there, there were two boarders, and the assistant master was paid all the same, and had been paid for years before.

10921. Lord Justice NAISH.—As long as there were only two scholars in the school, I think it was rather a misapplication of the funds.

Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We don't desire to perpetuate that kind of thing. What would you say to making the allowance subject to the approval of the Commissioners?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Surely the master ought to have a voice in this matter! He has the appointment.

10922. Lord Justice NAISH.—It was not intended that he should have a voice. We could not give him a power of overruling the Commissioners.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Is he to appoint the master and not to have the power of removing him?

10923. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—The scheme provides for the payment so long as the master shall be engaged by him. It might be said that they only applied to the master.

Lord Justice NAISH.—We must have something to guard against such a state of things as an assistant master being kept on and paid when there is no necessity for him.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The scheme leaves the dismissal of the master, in effect, to the Inspector. That is not in any Act of Parliament.

10924. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We must have some guarantee that the services are efficiently rendered. I am not supposing that such a thing would occur in Dr. Moore Morgan's case, but we have the case of one endowed school where a man of sixty years of age was retained as an assistant master, in order to draw £50 a year.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—But supposing the head master is efficient and honest, who would be a more proper person to certify the necessity for an assistant master? Is the Inspector to come in over his head and say—"You don't want an assistant master," "he is not efficient," or, "he is not required"?

10925. Lord Justice NAISH.—What would you say to leaving the matter to be decided by the Commissioners, giving Dr. Morgan power to appear before them?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I would like to know who the new body were first.

10926. Lord Justice NAISH.—You don't wish to be put under the new board?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Of course we don't. That is the reason I put into the clause the words—"the Commissioners shall, notwithstanding anything in this scheme contained."

10927. Lord Justice NAISH.—If Dr. Morgan does not want to come under the Local Board, I don't see why we should put the assistant master under them.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—You are giving him the appointment of the assistant master, but the anomaly is that an Inspector can report that the master ought to be dismissed.

10928. Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—It is proposed to leave that power with the Commissioners, and they have it at present.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—A different body altogether.

10929. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Surely we must reconstitute the Commissioners; we are not to preserve the old body merely to say whether you shall have an assistant master or not?

Mr. Stanley.—I appear for Mr. Gordon, the assistant master, and I would refer to the 18th section of 34th George III, which provides—"that the master or masters, if any, under this Act endowed, shall be appointed by the head master, with the approval of the several persons in whom the appointment of the head master is vested," and by the 10th section of the same Act provision is made for the cancellation of the appointment of the assistant masters; for Mr. Gordon, I intend to maintain that his appointment is, practically, one during good behaviour, and that neither the head master nor any other person, without first having an investigation before the Commissioners, has any right to dismiss him. The passage is as follows—"provided that in case of such misconduct of the master, under master, or usher of any school, being reported to the said Commissioners, as they shall be of opinion ought to subject him to deprivation, they shall not proceed to such deprivation until they have cited the said master, under master, or usher to appear before them, and given notice to the trustee or trustees of the school or foundation to which such master or usher shall belong, and inquired into his misconduct."

10930. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We have got evidence, I don't know whether it applies to Mr. Gordon or not, that the Commissioners have given grants to the head master for the purpose of aiding in paying the assistant masters, but that they have not modified with their appointment or removal.

Mr. Stanley.—That may be as a matter of convenience, but under the Act of Parliament the Commissioners must pay the assistant master, and if they think fit to endow him.

10931. Lord Justice NAISH.—Was Mr. Gordon appointed under any written instrument of appointment?

Dr. Moore Morgan.—I appointed him by letter.

10932. Lord Justice NAISH.—Did you get the sanction of the Commissioners for his appointment?

Dr. Moore Morgan.—It is a long time ago and I cannot recollect.

Lord Justice NAISH.—It is necessary to know the terms upon which you appointed him.

10933. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—Who was his predecessor?

Mr. Stanley.—I was his predecessor and was paid by the Commissioners. If the Commissioners had not sanctioned his appointment they would not have any right to allocate him £150.

10934. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—We must look into how he is removable. What is called an "endowed" assistant master under that Act might have a right to come under the 18th section before he could be removed. Down to the present time in the evidence before us we have not a suggestion of any assistant master contending that he was not removable by the head master.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—We may shorten it in this way. I want to preserve the same right of dismissal, if it existed, as existed before.

10935. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—That ought to be done, but the only question now is how we are to find some independent authority to see whether he is an efficient master and required for the school. He was clearly at present under responsibility to the Commissioners on that point.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I don't think so. The Commissioners would have the power of removing him only for misconduct.

Mr. Robert McDowell (Secretary to the Commissioners of Education in Ireland).—There is certain to be some document in reference to the appointment and I will find it. I think it will be found that in all these cases the appointment is confirmed by the Lord Lieutenant before it comes to the Commissioners at all.

10936. Lord Justice FRYGROUSE.—If so you can put an end to the whole matter by producing the minute, but no assistant master who has as yet appeared before us suggested that he had any appointment from the Lord Lieutenant.

Rev. Dr. MORRIS.—Also get the minute of the Commissioners approving of the appointment.

Mr. McDowell.—Certainly.

Aug. 4, 1886.

Rev. Dr. Steele.—The first assistant was always appointed by the Lord Lieutenant.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Dr. Steele was appointed by the Lord Lieutenant. 53rd Geo. III., sec. 13, requires for the assistant master "the approbation of the person in whom the appointment of the head master is vested." Dr. Morgan was appointed by the Primate.

Dr. Moore Morgan.—And I had the Archbishop of Armagh's approval of the appointment of Mr. Gordon.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Under clause 36 of the scheme each master and assistant master is to be appointed by the Local Board. I want to control that.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But the Armagh assistant master is not to come under the control of the Local Board during Dr. Morgan's tenure of office. It is part of his vested right not to be put under the new Local Board.

10937. Lord Justice NASH.—Supposing the assistant master vacated office—are we to give to Dr. Moore Morgan unlimited power to appoint assistant masters—even when the school does not want one?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—He has the power of appointment, otherwise you alter his status. The application of income for them is regulated by another section. Perhaps the Commissioners on withheld the salary.

10938. Lord Justice NASH.—If there were only three or four pupils would it be right to appoint an assistant master?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The same observation would apply to Dr. Morgan himself; taking away his power of appointing his assistant would be a complete alteration in his status.

10939. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We understand your contention. What is your next point?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Clause 50, relating to the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, puts a power of dismissal over Dr. Morgan which does not exist at present.

10940. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Does it not exist at present?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—No, except in the case of a breach of good behaviour. I claim to preserve his tenure during good behaviour.

10941. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What is this title to a permanent fixed salary? At page 87 of the report of 1867 you will find an instance of reducing the salary by the Commissioners, owing to the inefficiency of the school at the time.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I am taking the present salary as a vested interest, and you cannot assume that it would be reduced.

10942. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We will carefully consider whether he is not entitled to hold his office during good behaviour, but is it in the power of the Commissioners to change the salary?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Certainly not. If you give the power to interfere with the salary of an old officer I maintain you will do that which you have no power to do. I claim that his vested interest must be saved or compensated for. You are saving him and must leave him as you found him without altering his position. You don't save him if you entail upon him the possibility of his salary being taken away. I claim to put him, when he retires, on the same footing as those who are now compulsorily retired. And that brings us to the consideration of the elements upon which compensation is to be estimated.

10943. Lord Justice NASH.—The scheme does not give any compulsory power to the Commissioners to force the retirement of Dr. Morgan, but it enables him to retire under certain terms. That is his own act. At present if he chose to retire he would be entitled to no pension whatever, and one of the objects of giving him one is that circumstances might arise in which it would be for the interest of the school that he should retire.

Mr. Walker.—It would be unjust not to leave it as it is. You are purchasing Dr. Morgan's rights for thirty years' service.

10944. Lord Justice NASH.—It is very often a great advantage both to the public service and to an institution of this kind that a man should retire.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I want nothing better than that his vested interests should be saved. If Dr. Moore Morgan comes under this scheme nobody who has any common sense can fail to see that he will not have the same class of school as before; he will not have the same fees from pupils—he will not have pupils paying sixty guineas a year—

10945. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Why not?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Does your lordship imagine that under this scheme Dr. Morgan will get people to give him sixty guineas?

10946. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Why not, if he would get such fees otherwise? If we preserve his position, it depends on himself whether he will conduct the schools so as to draw pupils. I don't see how this scheme can affect him.

Rev. Dr. Moore.—The only disadvantage to him is that the other endowments may be made more efficient than they have hitherto been.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—It will raise up five competitors. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—He has no vested interest in keeping other competitors down.

10947. Lord Justice NASH.—We say it is better for the interests of the school that his interest should be saved rather than compensated for, and if we do that, how do we put him in a worse position?

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We can put into the scheme a clause that it shall not take effect at all with respect to Armagh School Endowment so long as Dr. Moore Morgan holds his present place. That would completely save his vested interest, and he would have no claim whatsoever to compensation, but if he broke down in health, or for any other reason was no longer able to continue in office, he must walk out without one farthing of compensation or retiring allowance, and this compensation clause would have to disappear.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I know that, but that is not what you are doing.

10948. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In what respect have we not done so? Up to the present all your amendments have been in the direction of preserving his position exactly as it is, and if you insist on carrying out that principle, as he has no vested right to any retiring allowance, we should strike it out. If we give him a retiring allowance, we have the right to require a surrender of some of his rights in return.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Will you preserve the scholarship given to the school?

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There is no money to pay them.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I am aware that you cannot make the money of others pay for them, but you take them away by the scheme.

10949. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You have no right to them, for we cannot pay Royal scholarships in Armagh out of the funds of any other estate.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I understand that, but clause 54 continues them only so long as there shall be pupils in the school who, having been there at the date of the Act, would have been entitled to compete for the scholarships under the same regulations as were in force in 1867. After that date you take away the Royal scholarships, and alter the conditions existing about the funds.

10950. Lord Justice NASH.—On these points we shall consider if we can alter the scheme, and if you are dissatisfied with the conclusion we arrive at, you can go to the Privy Council.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We can at once state that the school shall go on as at present as long as Dr. Morgan holds office, and the effect will be to stop one exhibition at once, for the deficit last year was £40, and the amount spent on exhibitions was £385. It is for you to say whether you will retain your existing status with no prospect of a retiring allowance.

But if you wish for a retiring allowance, it is not unreasonable for us to lay down some conditions.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Dr. Morgan is more capable of estimating that than I am. He will give you an answer before the Commission closes. All Dr. Morgan wants is to preserve his vested rights, and when we see how far the amendments I have proposed are carried out, we shall know our position.

10931. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—We shall be very glad if you will send all your proposed amendments to us in writing.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Certainly. I have altered the scheme in red ink, in accordance with our contentions.

10932. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—You will remember that if Dr. Moore Morgan was to go on exactly in the same position as he is in at present, he would not be entitled to a retiring allowance.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I know that, but he expects to live a long time.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—We consider it advisable that a retiring allowance shall be provided for Dr. Morgan at any time after the date of this scheme that he would wish to retire.

10933. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—You would wish to tempt him to retire?

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Yes. Let Dr. Morgan have the right to retire at any time upon an allowance provided as prescribed by the 16th section. Though he does not ask for it, we think it would be reasonable.

10934. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—You think it would be of advantage to the endowment?

Mr. Roche, q.c.—Yes, and we suggest it upon that ground. As the scheme is now, these sections may develop the existing state of things for at least fifty years, or until other changes happen. And, therefore, we suggest that we should have the right to retire at any time upon the scale of pensions provided by the section. Upon the 16th section, sub-section 3, I understand Mr. Walker takes exception to this sum of £178.

10935. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—That is a matter of figures.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—The Commissioners shall also pay to the said Rev. William Moore Morgan, LL.D., an annual salary of £400, being the annual salary payable to him out of the Armagh Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of the Act, such salary to be paid in the same manner. The £178 appears to be provided for rent, rates, and taxes, but who is to expend it? There is nothing to ensure that this large sum shall be properly applied. We think a clause should be introduced to secure the due application of the money.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I have no objection; it would save us some trouble.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—It ought to be expressed that the application of the money shall be secured by the Commissioners. As to all other matter which Mr. Walker opened, the 13th section confers upon the Commissioners the power of appointing the assistant master, and when appointed he must, of course, hold his office during such time as the requirements of the school demand it.

10936. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Under the 13th section he would not be deprived except for misconduct, in which case he would have an opportunity of showing cause.

Mr. Roche, q.c.—But that is in case of misconduct; but I apprehend that an appointment is to be made by them only if they think fit; it is certainly not a permanent appointment; it is merely a temporary appointment, and the exigencies of the school must be held to regulate the matter. If the school falls to such numbers that there is no need of an assistant master, there is no section to compel the Commissioners to continue to pay a man whose services are unnecessary.

10937. Sergeant Corry.—There are five head masters in the same position. I appear for *Rev. Dr. Steele, head master of Enniskillen, to sustain an objection which is concisely this—that the scheme neither saves nor makes compensation for his vested interests. It omits any compensation whatever for a number of items of the endowment, of which the scheme is now about to divest him. I am not going to enter into any details. I have simply to put before you the several elements for which we claim compensation, and to submit the principle upon which the compensation is to be awarded. The interest which is now being divested is by the original statute of 53rd Geo. III. a primary charge upon the endowment, and, by the 48th & 49th Victoria, must be either saved or compensated for. But at the outset I would be doing less than my duty if I didn't refute and correct in the most decided terms the very inaccurate observations made by Mr. Atkinson—the unfounded statement fairly and impartially corrected by one of your lordships, and which imputed the existing state of things in Persons to neglect on the part of Dr. Steele. I give the most decided repudiation by the records of the Education Commissioners during the long interval of time from 1837 to 1880, where the figures show a continuous progress in efficiency during the whole time. I can hardly conceive anything more unjust than to take the critical period when the Act was about to pass, from 1880, when everybody must know that the explanation of the decline of the school was the feeling of uncertainty as to whether the attractions and advantages which these schools once possessed would be maintained. Dr. Steele is a man pre-eminently for efficiency and high character during that long period. The questions I have to deal with are the principle and the elements of compensation. The Commission has required information in the terms of an official letter of July 10, 1888. It has been complied with, and I will give each item. Before I do so, I may mention that Dr. Steele was appointed by Royal warrant under the seal of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the year 1857. He is, therefore, over thirty years in discharge of his duties. That warrant grants him the office “during his good behaviour,” with all the emoluments thereto belonging. The Act of 48 & 49 Victoria, section 11, declares that the Commissioners shall save or make due compensation for the vested interests of individuals holding any office or emolument arising out of the endowment at the date of the passing of the Act. That statute uses the word “emolument” in its most comprehensive sense, and it is a term which excludes the idea that the amount of the stipend could alone satisfy it. Now compare these terms with those of the 16th section of the scheme to which we object. The services of the head masters of the Royal Schools of Dungannon, Enniskillen, Carrick, and Rathfriland shall be discontinued, but each of the said head masters shall be entitled to receive, during his life, a retiring annuity equal in amount to the annual salary to which he was entitled out of the Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of this Act. Then one uniform scale or element of compensation is adopted for all the schools, whereas the emoluments of each must differ from the other—in other words the sole criterion for compensation is the annual stipend. But that most plausibly does not satisfy the word “emoluments,” and you have inferentially excluded every other emolument. There is now to the credit of the Enniskillen School a sum of £26,350, and there are also the school buildings and premises, which under sec. 50 are to be regarded as part of the endowments of the district, and from the date at which the services of the head master are discontinued, the premises or the value or produce thereof, are reserved in each case, exclusively for the educational benefit of the district, and treated as belonging in equal shares to the two local boards. We therefore have these schools, including the residence for the master, handed over to the district boards to be divided between them. Therefore, a most substantial element of emolument, a personal residence, with all the advantages of the schools, and all the accommodation of the dormitories and so forth, are handed over to another body. In the requisition I have read the period fixed upon was five years up to 1885, you have included the three years from October, 1885, when the Act began to operate up to the present time. Is that a fair criterion of what you are to assume as at the date of the Act? I ask in point of time is it not the position of the master at the passing of the Act that we are to take? You cannot fairly take three years during which there manifestly must be a decline in anticipation of a scheme which everybody knew perfectly well was about to come into force.

July 6, 1885.

10058. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—As a matter of fact the day boys at Enniskillen are now one-half more than they were at the beginning of that period, so what you call the period of decline has really been a period of advance. At the passing of the Act there were twenty day pupils in Portora—at present there are thirty-five.

Mr. Sergeant Campbell.—Of course the number will fluctuate. If you go further back, during the period when Dr. Steele was head master, you will find the number 121, and up to a particular period he had never less than sixty or seventy. Therefore to take a particular year won't do, we must take the average some way for the purpose of ascertaining the compensation. Section 11 of your Act states that you shall make due compensation for vested interests of individuals holding any office at the date of the passing of the Act.

10059. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—On the construction of the Act, as we have understood it up to the present, we must make compensation for the emoluments of any office existing at the passing of the Act which are interfered with by a scheme, but the compensation is to be calculated with reference to the value of the office, not at the date of the passing of the Act, which is immaterial, but at the date when the scheme affects it. If we deprived a man of an office which was much more profitable now than it was in 1885, we could not put him off with compensation for the value of his place as it appeared in 1885.

Lord Justice NASH.—We must take into account the possibility of the thing becoming better, and also the possibility of the thing becoming worse. We are not to take its actual value at any one particular time and say we are bound to act according to that.

Sergeant Campbell.—I am not going to ask you to do that, on the contrary I ask you to take an average of several years. You have yourselves sanctioned taking the average of five years to 1885.

10060. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Pardon me, we asked information as to that period as we thought it would be some evidence of the value of Dr. Steele's place, but it is only fair to tell you, in case you thought we were picking out this period for some reason, that we had the figures as to the previous periods in like books already, and we asked as to this period only to bring down the information to the present time.

Sergeant Campbell.—But I press upon you that where it was manifest that the extinction of his office was as certain the day the Act passed as it is now, the period of the retirement should not be taken. From the time the Act was first mentioned in the House of Commons in 1881 or 1882 it was inevitable that there should be a decline in the schools.

10061. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We do not say that any particular period should fix the value of Dr. Steele's position. We ask you to tell us what you claim more than the £200 a year retiring annuity which you get under the scheme.

Sergeant Campbell.—Yes, but I say you have included the only three bad years.

10062. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I assure you we include no years. We asked you for information which we hadn't got, as to Dr. Steele's emoluments, but you say take it that our requisition was only for information.

Sergeant Campbell.—You ask me what terms I will take? I will tell you. I say the fair average to take would be seven years up to the passing of the Act, for the purpose of ascertaining the annual emoluments of the office which you are now about to direct—10063. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But the question is what was the probable value of the office in the future?

Sergeant Campbell.—Surely you must have some data to go upon. You should take a fair average, and I submit, you should take it up to what the Act of Parliament says is the terminus a quo—the time of the passing of the Act—to find what his position was.

10064. Lord Justice NASH.—Then are we not to take into account the fact, if we found it to exist, of the school's being declining, or the probability that it never could be reconstituted. If we found Dr. Steele unlikely to derive any further profit out of the school, should we compensate him on the basis of profits previously made?

Sergeant Campbell.—The only thing I know is the position of each of these gentlemen on the day the Act passed.

10065. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—On the paper before me Dr. Steele returns £240 as his net profit at the passing of the Act, while he returns it as now £375.

Sergeant Campbell.—Yes, but I object to taking any particular years at all, or taking two years and comparing one with the other. A fair way is to take an average. From a variety of causes there must be fluctuation. You must take an average of that, otherwise it would be too much in one case and too little in another.

10066. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We are, I fear, on different lines. You are discussing a different matter from that which we are considering. Dr. Steele is going to remain a schoolmaster or he is not. If he remains on, he will receive whatever fees he can earn, but if he is obliged to retire, we must give him due compensation, but not for the emoluments which he may have got before the passing of the Act, but for what he would be likely to get if he remained in office for the rest of his life.

Sergeant Campbell.—You cannot parade the prospect of a man's retirement without harm being done. The Act made a fundamental change in these schools, and while he had the extinction of his office certain; he had the prospects of the school so uncertain that it must lead to the decline of the institution. I submit that the fair way would be to take the average of five or seven years, up to the passing of the Act which is the terminus a quo, and I will now come to the items.

10067. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think what you really object to is the second line of clause 32, which says that the services of the head master shall be discontinued.

Sergeant Campbell.—Yes.

10068. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We propose to discontinue his services, and to give him his full salary as a retiring allowance. You propose that his services shall be continued, and that he shall continue to enjoy all the emoluments which he at present enjoys. Will you address your argument to the point that he is entitled that his services should be still continued?

Sergeant Campbell.—On the contrary, for the purposes of my argument, I treat it that he is now de facto discontinued. I am on the subject of compensation, and my argument is based on the fact that he is being discontinued.

10069. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—But his services are not discontinued until the scheme comes into operation.

Sergeant Campbell.—But he will be then.

10370. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Then you consent to his being discontinued?

Sergeant Cuspin.—Yes, that is the whole basis of my argument. At this moment he is, practically speaking, not head master, and you have discontinued his services. I ask you, have his interests been saved or compensated for? Saved they have not been, because he is discontinued, and consequently retired, being perfectly efficient at this moment to continue his duty, and willing to do it. Taking his emoluments in the order in which they have been returned, the salary of £500 a year is, of course, No. 1, and I say no more upon it. No. 2 is the free use of the head master's residence connected with the school buildings, and the grounds attached to such residence, the buildings to be at all times kept in proper repair, free of all expense to him, and all rents, taxes, and insurances being also paid for him. Could it be extended for one moment that these interests are not most substantial? He has not only a personal residence, which, if now turned adrift, he would have serious expenditure in replacing, but he has it free of rent, taxes, insurance, and cost of repairs.

10371. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—As a matter of fact, does not Dr. Steele at present reside away from the village?

Sergeant Cuspin.—Yes, he does. But when did that occur? When did he leave it? After the passing of the Act, when there ceased to be boarders, he was promoted to a living in the neighbourhood, and he and his family then went to reside there when there were no longer boarders coming to the school.

10372. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—How can we pay compensation, as for a personal loss, and allow the full value for a residence in which Dr. Steele is not living. He is living, as a rector, in the glebe-house of a parish, three miles off, where he has different duties and different emoluments. Look at it as a matter of common sense.

Sergeant Cuspin.—I am not going into amount.

10373. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—But really amount is the only thing we have to go into at present. I have got here your own claim, and the time for free residence, school buildings, and land, £400, and for repairs, rates, taxes, and insurances, £150. You have even added those together, that is to say, you demand that we are both to keep the house for you, and to pay the rent, taxes, and insurances for you, and after doing that we are also to pay you the amount of the rent, taxes, and insurances over again!

Sergeant Cuspin.—I think it is a fair answer that the amount is not to be judged by what it was when boarders ceased in the last three years, after the passing of the Act and when on being appointed rector of a neighbouring parish he got another residence. The amount is to be estimated on what he had at the date of the passing of the Act when he had a house free and a school in full working order with all the advantages of the £500 paid to teachers, and of a fully going and working concern. If that is the criterion, what becomes of the question of a gentleman who when he finds that there are no pupils resident there goes with his wife and family some few miles away to live, because he happens to be an officiating clergyman in the neighbourhood? Dr. Steele if he was not discontinued—if the school was resumed in anything like its former proportions again—of course would live there, and, therefore, I ask you to attach no weight whatever to that. There is a dormitory which could be completed in a fit and proper way for the accommodation of no less than fifty boarders in a fortnight if the demand for such accommodation returned.

10374. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Do you really expect that parents would send their boys to occupy the dormitory of a school where the head master is resident several miles off?

Sergeant Cuspin.—I don't suppose that parents would send their boys to such a school at all since it went through such a change in the organization as this has done. Therefore, that won't be a criterion at all. We have only to look to the numbers, which we will trace consecutively backwards from the time the Act passed.

10375. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Do you propose that the public buildings of the school are to be kept as a residence for a head master who does not reside?

Sergeant Cuspin.—Certainly not. If you could suppose such a state of things as that there were boarders there to-morrow, he would be bound to return. It is because during the present intervening period there is no necessity for his being there, that he is absent. I say it is the fault of the boarders. He would be there to supervise them if they were there. The gentleman who occupied that position from 1837 was not likely to desert the place in that way, unless there was a cause, and that cause was the absence of gentlemen's sons committed to his charge. It was not likely that a man would do that who spent more than £4,000 on the buildings of which all the advantage is to be transferred to the Board, who will have control over that property. Whether you will allow anything for it or not, you have the fact in evidence that he laid out £4,000 for which he was not compensated, simply because it was not authorized by law, and, therefore, it could not be allowed. I merely put that before you—in answer to an observation which fell from one of my learned friends—that a man was not likely to desert the house that he spent that amount on out of his own money. He has only done so temporarily. The personal residence is calculated at £250. Supposing he had the school—as a going concern in full working order—what would that be worth? He leaves a personal residence on which all this money has been spent, kept in repair out of a public fund, tax free, rent free, and so forth, and also the buildings which are pre-eminently suitable for the scholars whenever they are there. I don't want to trouble your lordships with items or amounts. I pass them over.

10376. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—How can we pass them over when you ask us to give you money for them?

Sergeant Cuspin.—The buildings £250, and repairs, rates, and insurances, £150. That is £400 for the buildings alone.

10377. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Do you seriously ask us to give compensation out of public money to Dr. Steele on the basis that a residence he is not living in, from which he has removed his furniture, and to which he says in his evidence he has no intention of returning, is worth £400 a year?

Lord Justice NASH.—That we should give him £400 a year?

Sergeant Cuspin.—I am rather new upon the principle, the actual amount will be a matter for the Commission.

10378. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Then, on principle, how can we give him anything for the loss of a residence he is not occupying?

Sergeant Cuspin.—You cannot conceive that that will continue.

10379. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—But he was asked whether there was any prospect of the school reviving, and he said not, quite the reverse.

Sergeant Cuspin.—You cannot conceive that Dr. Steele has abandoned his residence. Is there any evidence of that?

10380. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The evidence is that he has gone to live in the rectory of his parish. Is there any evidence of an intention on his part to abandon his rectory?

Sergeant Cuspin.—The accident of his residing with his family elsewhere is due to the absence of boarders. Supposing the school went on uninterruptedly for forty or fifty years, is it not morally certain that he would live there, and must live there?

10381. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Is it evident, if your claim is in stand, that we should have no alternative but to let him stay there and carry on the school. Your claim is for £1,913 a year, which is more than the whole endowment. Therefore, if you establish your claim, the only way we can meet you is to say "stay in the school and go on teaching there."

Sergeant Compson.—We could not give the items in any other way, they may be more or less.

10982. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—They could hardly be more, sergeant.

Sergeant Compson.—We were bound to give them, and I am not going into amounts at present. All I say is this, there is the residence and the school with all its advantages in full working order, and if that man thought proper to be a schoolmaster all the remainder of his days, and to set up another school, he would have to provide every one of these facilities of which he is free at present.

10983. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Isn't he at the present moment holding another office and living in another house?

Sergeant Compson.—I am not prepared to ask you to put any fancy price upon anything, but Dr. Steele, as I am instructed, will give the court every evidence to verify what he says.

10984. Lord Justice NAHEM.—What we have to ascertain is the value of the office that Dr. Steele will be deprived of under the Act. I don't think that salary is the only test of that. A schoolmaster might have no salary and might derive very large profits from the school, and what struck me, after seeing the school and hearing the evidence in Bonickhill, was that, independent of this Act, before this Act was thought of, in 1880—that school had run down from bad to worse, and was so run down that no profit could be made outside the salary of the head master, and I think that to make out that he is deprived of an office worth £2,000 a year is perfectly preposterous.

Sergeant Compson.—I think, if I may say so with great respect, I have only to read the figures which you have before you in the return to show you that that is not so.

10985. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—One of the figures shows that in the year 1883-1884—before the Act was passed—the total number of students on the roll was 36; and in the present year the total number of students on the roll is 36: so that you have rather benefited by the passing of the Act?

Sergeant Compson.—I think you are there counting the day boys?

10986. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—No; the boarders in 1883-1884 were 15, the day pupils 10; total on roll 25. In 1887-8 the total on roll is 36.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have got it on the evidence again and again that keeping boarding schools for small numbers is not profitable at all.

Sergeant Compson.—I know that, but it was plain that the pendency of the Act caused a decline in the school.

10987. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The report of the Commissioners, page 7, for the year 1885, gives a return of the attendance in 1883-1884. Number on roll let February, 1884, boarders, 15; day pupils, 10; total, 25. These are the figures eighteen months before the Act passed. And now you have got 36, and yet you complain that the Act has ruined your school.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is there any endowment whatever to be derived from keeping ten boarders? Now, you have no boarders, and thirty-five are all day boys, on whom your claim states your expenditure to be only from £1 to 30s. per annum each, while the cost of the boarders is returned at £25 a year each. Therefore, let us not be going into imaginary causes—the time when your profits really disappeared was when the boarders fell from being a substantial number, and that was long before the passing of our Act.

Sergeant Compson.—But it is notorious that the year before the Act passed is precisely for all the purposes of my argument the same as after the passing of the Act. Every one knew that an entire change was absolutely certain in the immediate future, and though the date might be uncertain, the fact of extinction was certain.

10988. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But if there was a general belief that a change was impending, it was founded on the condition of the schools and the reports of successive Commissioners, which showed that these schools could not go on as they were, and that long previous to our Act the process of decay was most marked.

Sergeant Compson.—If you expunge the figures for the five years before the Act passed, ending in 1884, 1885, you will see that the profits from the school, if you go back further, were very much higher; the number goes up to 181 going back from 1879.

10989. Lord Justice NAHEM.—Now, taking everything into consideration, what do you say is the retiring allowance that Dr. Steele is entitled to? It is strange that Dr. Steele should not be able to say what the figure is. Does he say that he is entitled to £1,900 a year?

Sergeant Compson.—I don't call it retiring allowance at all. I call it compensation.

10990. Lord Justice NAHEM.—Then what do you say your compensation ought to be?

Sergeant Compson.—Your lordship and I are speaking of two totally different things. When we speak of a retiring allowance it is usually upon the scale of the Civil Service superannuation.

10991. Lord Justice NAHEM.—They got only two-thirds of their present income after thirty or forty years' service.

Sergeant Compson.—We are dealing with compulsory retirement of which the true precedent is when an office is abolished it ought to be so.

10992. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have his own memorial in 1880, in the report of Lord Howe's Commission, when he was more than eight years younger than he is now, applying for power to give retiring allowances to the head master. It appears to me that there is an alternative, either Dr. Steele wants compensation or he wants to retire on pension. If he wants compensation there must be two parties to the bargain, for we cannot compensate him at such an expense as would erode the endowment. If he wants a pension how much is he willing to take? In either case we must at least be at liberty to say we cannot afford to pay you off, and will let you keep what you have got until you can do duty no longer, and if you want a retiring allowance you must say what you think is fair?

Sergeant Compson.—Every word of what you have heard me state was only intended for a retiring allowance.

10993. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Very well. If Dr. Steele would have been satisfied to retire in 1880 why should he get a larger allowance now?

Sergeant Compson.—Is there no difference between a man obliged to retire whether he will or not and a man voluntarily retiring?

10994. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There is; but he is the same man who wanted to retire in 1880, and his "compensation" for retiring now ought therefore to be the same as the "pension" he wanted to get then.

Sergeant Compson.—But if a man says "I don't want to retire."

10995. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Does Dr. Steele say that?

Sergeant Compson.—My position is that I am able, efficient, and qualified, and I don't want to retire.

10996. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Very well. Then we may leave you as you are if we cannot arrange for your retirement on terms just to the endowment.

Sergeant Compson.—But if you force a compulsory retirement, as you have done, that is not like Dr. Steele's having an allowance out of a public fund and saying, "I will take a retiring allowance and I will not go to a school elsewhere." If a man is able and willing to continue his duty as in this case you say—"wherever you want retire." Take, for instance, the Queen's College—how were they dealt with?

10967. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—But we want to know, do you want to get a retiring allowance, or do you want to remain on as master of Portora? If you satisfy us that you really want to remain on as master of Portora we will consider whether it is right to have you there or not. If you want to go, we will give you a reasonable retiring allowance; but you must tell us even what you claim as reasonable.

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—This is a case of good will, and you are not compensating Dr. Steele even for what in fact he was in receipt of at the time your Act passed. In the case of the Queen's University, the officers were dismissed; their offices were abolished, and there is not an office connected with the Queen's University that does not at this moment receive his full pay. I call it compensation—I might multiply cases when Parliament thinks proper to change a certain organisation—by the strong arm of the law—and when they do the State pays the man—that is not a retiring allowance. The next item is the thirty-three acres of land, that has yielded up to £150 annually for grazing land. It is prime land, and the grazing has brought £150 a year to the master, and that is an emolument of his office held for life. That is an actual emolument of £150 a year acquired and earned simply by letting it for grazing. I then come to the profits from pupils. You have the analysis of the number of paying pupils, the fees paid, the non-paying pupils, and the net profit on fees. It begins with the year 1878-1879, and goes each year consecutively for seven years before the Act the net profits are 1, £1,120; 2, £1,130; 3, £1,090; 4, £800; 5, £515; 6, £506; and 7, 1884-1885, £470. For the three years subsequently to the passing of the Act they are £240, £317, and £275. Now, the result is, beginning with £1,120 and terminating with £275, that the pupils' fees are income directly arising out of the school and incident to Dr. Steele's position there.

Under the 33rd George III., after payment of the master's salaries any surplus is to be applied to scholarships and exhibitions in Trinity College. And there were attached to the Kenilworth school ten scholarships or exhibitions in Trinity College. Was not that an attraction and a means of inducing parents to send their children to the school? They were all valuable exhibitions, provided out of public money and from the beginning to the end we had these ten scholarships attached to the school and connected with Trinity College.

10998. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—How long is it since they were all full?

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—I don't know.

10999. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If they are to be compensated for as an attraction the test of their value is to see how many pupils competed for them.

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—They were an attraction, at any rate, up to a certain point.

11000. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Only £30 was paid in 1887, and is there now a single exhibition from Portora?

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—I believe not. I can hardly conceive anything more calculated to give status, and character to a school than to have had connected with Trinity College ten valuable scholarships open to young men with small means. They were to each of them as the prestige of their life. Without them an ordinary school would be in a position quite the reverse. The income from the pupils' fees is lost, whatever average of years you take. Some of the teachers also are paid out of the public funds. Well, we have that school and it ceases for no other reason than by the strong arm of the legislature. Am I to set up another school and to endeavour to follow the same line? Where am I to get the same sort of pupils? I am not getting the advantages inherent to the system to which I was attached. I cannot get the pupils, nor the paid teachers; and if I get a school I shall have to pay the rent, taxes, and repairs, and the teachers. That is my position—altered in the case of a man of advancing years who has to begin life over again? Are not those advantages substantially all emoluments within the very terms of the Act of Parliament? If so it is a matter of compensation as to how you take them. Now, there is another item which I don't want unduly to press but merely to mention—the results fees of the Intermediate examinations. I admit there is no actual connection between the Intermediate Education system and this or any other particular school, for they come up from all schools.

11001. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—How much did he get from results fees?

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—It is put down on an average of five years at £50 a year.

11002. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—In 1881, we can only find four boys who came up from the whole county Fermanagh.

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—At all events although contingent it was undoubtedly a profit.

11003. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—There is one consideration that I should like to suggest. The claim you put forward is so very large that all idea of making compensation on that basis is out of the question. If your claim were established the only thing we could do would be to save your vested interests; that is to leave you all your emoluments, and all your duties as well. You would still remain under the Commissioners of education; and perhaps they would reduce your salary to one-half, or one-third as they did in the case of Curran Royal School.

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—That is not our position and is not the basis on which I put my case forward.

11004. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—But if we leave you as you are—you are liable to have what has already occurred in another case, namely to have your salary reduced by the Commissioners?

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—But I take it for granted that we are not to be left the way we are. The whole basis of my argument is based on the assumption that we are obliged to retire.

11005. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—You ask us for compensation on a basis which makes compensation practically impossible; and therefore nothing remains for us but to save your interest.

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—You are not going to save our interests.

11006. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We certainly must and will save your interests, if the only alternative is an impossibility—that is, to compensate a claim to £1,930 out of a net income of £1,300.

Sergeant CAMPBELL.—I am instructed to put one more item before you, not probably so much as seeking compensation for it, that is the large sum spent by Dr. Steele on the premises. I admit it is not an emolument, but it is the strongest argument I could use in asking you for a liberal allowance for this gentleman on his retirement, or I should say, dismissal. It is in evidence before you that he laid out £4,000 for which he did not get one penny of compensation. I won't discuss it further. The thing was before the Commissioners and they dismissed it simply upon a point of law. That is it was a voluntary act, there was no legal obligation to pay him, and he only failed to get it by a very small majority. The value of the place has been improved with £4,000 out of his pocket, and you are giving to the District Board premises made valuable to the extent of £4,000 more than otherwise they would have been at the expense of Dr. Steele.

11007. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I am afraid that is an entire mistake. You will find large payments were made to him, first £1,669 9s. 7d., and then £970, and finally the Commission of 1879, finding that further expenditure had been vouched so reported, and I believe about £1,200 more has been paid since. The only sums left are either unvoiced, or were spent unprofitably, or on essential repairs.

Mr. Gorton, q.c.—The money paid was in full discharge of the claim.

11008. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Instead of being of any present value, Dr. Steele's buildings are now a source of embarrassment.

Sergeant Campion.—He got £1,500, but he didn't get what he sought.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Will you let me call your attention to clause 63 of the scheme on behalf of Mr. Morgan? You contemplate the discontinuance of some of the head masters, and you create a compensation fund, and their annuities are charged primarily upon "the interest and principal of the compensation fund." Clause 55 says, that the Rev. William M. Morgan shall be entitled to £400, "being the annual salary payable to him out of the Armagh Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of the Act, such salary to be paid in the same manner and out of the same funds as if this scheme had not passed;" but the first item in the fund of which the interest and principal is devoted to the payment of the other masters' annuities is a sum of £1,010 16s. 2d. stock, arising out of the Armagh endowment, which is primarily charged with Dr. Moore Morgan's salary.

11009. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I think, if you look at the accounts, you will see that you are the last person who should complain. Only £1,010 is even apparently contributed to the general fund from Armagh, while over £6,000 is contributed by Cavan, and a like sum by Enniskillen; but Armagh over £1,130 Os. 3d. cash, so really contributes £110 less than nothing.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I would not complain, if I was going out, but I complain as a continuing person. While I continue I maintain that the first charge upon the fund is the income of the existing school-masters.

11010. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We can settle that by writing it off against what you owe.

11011. Rev. Dr. MURPHY.—The Armagh endowment is in debt £1,130 Os. 3d.

Mr. Gorton, q.c.—Sergeant Campion sat down without telling your lordships the amount he claimed, but I gather that he urges you to fix £1,000 a year. I submit that the only element which the Commission can take into account, is what they have taken by the scheme—namely his salary.

11012. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We did not take his salary into account. We don't regard salary as the only source of emolument which we are bound to take into consideration; but having regard to the condition of the school, his own age, and other engagements, and all the other circumstances, we named £600, the amount of his salary, as a reasonable sum.

Lord Justice NAIRN.—And we shall give Sergeant Campion's argument every consideration.

11013. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In the Curyfort case Archbishop Walsh can give us some information. I should state that the scheme as regards the Curyfort endowment was settled without our being able to get any assistance from the people of the locality. We went to look for the school, and found no school, but an old schoolmaster, since dead, who had no school roll, but wrote down a list of less than thirty names which seemed to include all the pupils he had had in modern times. We found nothing that could be regarded as a working school, and no one had visited the place since 1879. We wrote to several people in the neighbourhood, we tried to find out who was interested in the matter, and we got no practical assistance from anyone, except Mr. Littledale who owns land in the neighbourhood, and attended at our request on one occasion. Therefore, if your Grace can now make any suggestion it will be the first we have received for the utilisation of this endowment.

Archbishop Walsh.—The main principle of the scheme as it stands is to keep this endowment, which is a small one, in the immediate locality. It is proposed to break up the existing endowment of £30 or £40, and to distribute that over three or four National schools in the neighbourhood. It seems to me that it would be a pity to break up the endowments into these small fragments, if there is any possibility of keeping it together and utilising it in some substantial way. It cannot be kept together for any useful purpose at Curyfort, and to distribute it in the way proposed would be almost tantamount to throwing the money away.

11014. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Your Grace suggests a transfer of the endowment?

11015. Archbishop Walsh.—Yes, a transfer in one bulk sum. If that were done it could be made use of for the development of some practical industrial work. My view is that we should try to keep this small endowment together, and turn it to account for some definite purpose in the nature of industrial education. I find in the Report of Lord Kildare's Commission, vol. 3, page 328, that this endowment is available for Curyfort, or for "any other town in the diocese." You cannot make it useful if you leave it where it is, among the mountains. I would bring it down, say, to Arlow, and make it the nucleus of a fund for some industrial purpose, the starting of a fisheries school or something of that sort. I think there can be very little question as to the feasibility of transferring it in that way. But to do that effectively it may be necessary to deal with this fishery work as a new department in some existing school. The practical point is to turn the endowment to account in some one definite way. Your scheme applies the principle of transfer very freely in the case of the schools in Ulster. It seemed to me that the Commissioners looked upon the Curyfort school as standing on some different footing in this respect. Now, I would refer you to the table of endowments in the Report of the Commission of 1850. The endowment is there described as available for use in Curyfort, "or some other town in the diocese to be named by the Lord Lieutenant, with the assent of the Privy Council, and approbation of the Archbishop of the province, and bishop of the diocese." That puts it exactly on the same footing in this respect as the other Royal schools. The power of transfer, if it exists, is now vested in this Commission. In the Report, among the references, there is one to the statute 24 and 25 Charles II., c. 10. That evidently is the statute brought up by Mr. Curran.

11016. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That statute speaks of the schools "founded by your Majesty's Royal progenitors." Was not this Curyfort school founded by Charles II. himself?

Archbishop Walsh.—If I am not mistaken the statute names Curyfort as well as those in Ulster. At all events the statute of Charles II. covers it. It seems clear that there is power to transfer this endowment, just like the Ulster one, to any other place in the diocese. I merely wish to make the suggestion in a general way for the Commissioners to consider it—if it be possible, as I think it is, to do so within the terms of the original foundation.

11017. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Could your Grace suggest a way by which we could get the people in the immediate neighbourhood to let us know what their views are. We wrote to the clergyman of the parish, and to the parish priest, and except Mr. Littledale, those are the only people from whom we have been able to get any information.

Archbishop Walsh.—I don't think it would be possible to make any useful suggestion with regard to the selection of a place in that mountainous district; but if you considered it possible to transfer it to any where else, I think it likely that information could be had of a useful kind.

11018. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Arklow is in your Grace's diocese?

Archbishop WALSH.—It is.

11019. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Would it be too much to ask your Grace to send us some written suggestions which we might make the basis of action in the matter?

Archbishop WALSH.—I can communicate with the people in Arklow.

11020. Professor DOUGHERTY.—You do not wish the endowment to be applied to the maintenance of existing schools; but, if I understand your Grace's views accurately, rather to establish a school which would give some kind of technical instruction in connection with the fishing industries of Arklow?

Archbishop WALSH.—As an addition for a specific purpose to some school in Arklow. I think it would be thrown away if left in this district among the mountains.

11021. Lord Justice NASH.—Your Grace knows that the school in Carysfort was not in a very efficient state?

Archbishop WALSH.—I do, indeed. It seems to have been one of the worst cases.

11022. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—The schoolmaster who was there last year is now dead, and the school is closed. But even when he was alive the Assistant Commissioners found the school practically of no use.

Archbishop WALSH.—The school has always been in an unsatisfactory state. Every Commission from 1791 down to the present time has had the same report to make, and the Commission of 1791 reported most adversely.

11023. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Nobody, save the persons sent by these Commissioners, has ever seen it.

Archbishop WALSH.—It was inspected by Lord Kildare's Commission in 1857. The report was most unsatisfactory. But everything went on as before, and when Lord Rosse's Commission had it inspected in 1879, the Inspector reported that the state of instruction was "very unsatisfactory," and that the school had not been inspected since the visit of Lord Kildare's Inspector in 1857.

11024. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—When Dr. Molloy and Professor Dougherty went to the school they found that nobody had been there since the time of Lord Rosse's Commission.

Archbishop WALSH.—I don't exactly know where it is, although it is in my diocese. I know the Macreddin school.

Lord Justice NASH.—It is near that school.

11025. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—If your Grace would write to us on the subject, and put this proposal into a shape in which we could send a copy of it, with a communication to the people in the neighbourhood, and give public notice of what we think of doing, we should be very much obliged. We must look into the Acts of Parliament, and if it is mentioned with the other Royal schools we can deal with it.

Archbishop WALSH.—You will see a passage in the report of Lord Kildare's Commission, Vol. IV., page 50.

11026. Mr. DANE.—There is one matter which I wish to mention about the assistant masters. I appear for four of them, and I hold in my hand the original appointment of the Lord Lieutenant, the Duke of Abercorn—of the appointment of Mr. Valentine.

* Baroness, 18th November, 1873.

* Sir.—I am directed by His Grace the Lord Lieutenant to convey to you his approval of the appointment of Mr. Valentine.

* (Signed) FRANK BERNARD,
Private Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant.

The Commission adjourned to Tuesday, August 7.

PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1888.

At the Four Courts, Dublin.

Present.—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERALD, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice NASH, Judicial Commissioners; and the Rev. GERALD MOLLOY, D.D., B.Sc., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N. D. MURPHY, JUNR., was in attendance.

The same counsel and parties appeared as on the preceding days.

11027. Mr. BRADY, Q.C.—I appear for "Mr. William Prior Moore, and I submit that the scheme neither uses his rights nor provides him with proper compensation for the emoluments of which he is deprived. The first question that Mr. Moore raises is the jurisdiction of the Commissioners to revoke the letters patent under which he holds. He is in an exceptional position—none of the other schoolmasters hold under letters patent from the Crown. He holds under letters patent of 4th William IV., 1835, by which the late king granted him the office of master of the Free School of Cavan, "during our pleasure, the said office, with all lands, profits, stipends, fees, and emoluments thereunto belonging in as ample manner as said John Moore or any other person formerly held the same." The patent was duly enrolled on November 18, 1833. Therefore this serious question arises—whether the Act under which the Commission is now sitting would, without the consent of Mr. Prior Moore, enable the Commission to revoke those letters patent, and to displace this gentleman from his office. He has a freehold office, held during the pleasure of the Crown. An Act of Parliament may revoke a Royal Grant; but it does so by virtue of the Royal Assent, and I submit the Royal Grant cannot be revoked by implication.

11028. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—Our Act, section 57, provides that on the passing of any scheme—"Every Act of Parliament and letters patent relating to the subject matter of the scheme, so far as inconsistent with the provisions thereof, shall be repealed and abrogated."

Mr. BRADY, Q.C.—But that would hardly justify your revoking letters patent under the Crown, granting a freehold of this nature. The object of the Act was to enable the Commission to frame schemes for schools, and in that way to vary Acts of Parliament, charters, and letters patent; but we submit that this Commission has no jurisdiction to deprive my client of his office. But assuming there is jurisdiction—

11029. Lord Justice FITZGERALD.—We should know what you argue. Are we to take it that you contend that we have no alternative but to save Mr. Moore's interest?

Mr. BRADY, Q.C.—Yes, unless with his consent. But, assuming that there is this jurisdiction, this Commission must either save Mr. Moore's rights and vested interests, or make due compensation for them, and the scheme proposes to give him only during his life the amount of the salary he has had. That, I submit, is not compensation for his vested interests. He was appointed in October, 1835, at a nominal salary of £300 a year.—

11030. Lord Justice NAHE.—Is that mentioned in the patent?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—It is not mentioned specifically, but in general words—"all stipends, fees, and emoluments," and so forth. The stipend payable at that time was £300 a year. In October, 1835, he was appointed at that stipend, but in the month of March following that was reduced by £140 a year. There is a mistake on that point into which Lord Justice FitzGibbon has fallen. He was under the impression that the salary was altered in 1848 or 1849, but Mr. Prior Moore informs me that the reduction was made immediately after his appointment.—

11031. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—It was twice reduced, according to the evidence before us, first by £100, and a second time by £100 more.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—I am wrong. It was altered first to £500 and then to £300 a year, and only for that short period, from October to March, he nominally enjoyed the £500. Therefore we have no complaint to make with regard to this salary. The average salary has been only £160 a year, and we can only claim that sum. But, in addition, Mr. Moore has a residence kept up free of expense under the provisions of the Act of George IV., under which the rent, taxes, and repairs are paid. That is valuable, quite independently of being a school, as a residence. There is attached to the school ten acres of good grazing land, worth £6 an acre, in itself worth £60 a year. The residence would be worth to him £100 a year, so that the value he puts on the school buildings and lands is £160 a year. In addition to this the rates, taxes, insurance, and repairs, average £70 a year. That is paid in addition.

11032. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—That claim appears to have been made in all three cases. Sergeant Campbell gave it up. You cannot hope to get the value of a free residence, and also to get the amount paid for rates and taxes.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—Of course not, but I have put the value of having the rates and taxes paid.

11033. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—As a free residence the house is not worth more than £100.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—It is quite separate from the land, and I am taking the land and the house together at £160.

11034. Lord Justice NAHE.—You are claiming £100 for a free residence, and £50 for the land. The value of the premises now is not £160—plus rates and taxes.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—At any rate he is deprived of the residence, whatever value you put upon it.

11035. Lord Justice NAHE.—Have you detached the residence from the school buildings?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—No, the school buildings, residence, and ten acres of land he is entitled to hold for his life, and compensation must be made for them.

11036. Lord Justice NAHE.—I think £100 a year for the mere house is a very high value.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—If he was put out, he would have to take a house elsewhere, and to pay the rates and taxes. In that neighbourhood he could not get a house and ten acres of land for anything under the sum that he names. In addition, there are the students' fees, and it is idle to say that those fees do not form part of his emoluments. If there is any authority wanted, the question came before the English Privy Council in Carver v. The Governors of Dulwich College, 45 L.J. P.C. 28.

11037. Lord Justice NAHE.—You should show us the actual bona fide profit, and how long it was likely to continue.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—Yes. There is no difference in Mr. Moore's case about years at all, so far as I can see.

11038. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Surely we must take it to consideration the number of years that he has held his office. He has been fifty-five years in occupation. Surely it is not to be anticipated that he can go on much longer receiving fees to the same amount, irrespective of his age?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—It is to be assumed that he will go on for some time receiving fees. Supposing you were to abolish the office of Attorney-General—Attorney-Generals, like other people, don't live forever—still you should compensate the holder of the office.

11039. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You, but not by giving him a life annuity equal to the full amount of the fees he had received, say for a single year, from an office which he might lose in a few months.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—You might do that. The compensation might be measured by his emoluments at the time, and I am sure he would be justified with a life annuity of that amount.

11040. Lord Justice NAHE.—Sometimes life annuities are based on the average of a number of years. But here we are not told to do that; we are to calculate "due compensation" as best we can under the 11th section of the Act; we are to compensate vested interests existing at the passing of the Act, by ascertaining the amount of personal loss caused to Mr. Moore by the scheme when it passes. Your school seems more profitable now than when the Act passed, because you have more boys now than last year, and more last year than the year before that. The profits are stated at £167 last year, and £178 in the present year, and there were only 19 pupils in 1882. What is the amount of the fees claimed?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—On the average of seven years the amount is £388 7s.

11041. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We have nothing to do with the average of past years. We have to compensate him for the loss of profits likely to accrue after the date of the scheme.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—He must be compensated for all the emoluments of which he is deprived by the scheme. You cannot send him out in his old age with £100 a year, when the income he was getting was £600. You must compensate him not for the mere salary, but for the profits, fees, and advantages of the house and land and school buildings and so forth—all the other advantages.

11042. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—What do you claim?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—£833 7s. per annum. His fees, £160 a year salary, and the house and land would amount to £600 and over.

11043. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Let me read you his own evidence from the Report of 1880. On April 2, 1879, when he desired to get a retiring allowance—

"Question 214. . . Formerly the Government feeling the necessity of a retiring allowance, and not having the means of giving it as such, used to promote the matter for the time being to valuable Government livings. But that is all at an end, so the suggestion might come very well from the Commissioners to make some provision for it. As to myself I may mention one circumstance Lord Liger strongly recommended me, and the Government agreed on a valuable living some years ago. I went to see it, but there was so much opposition, and being always fond of active life I could not consent to accept it."

"215. Would you retire into the mastership of Cerna school if there was retiring allowance?—I should decidedly, on a suitable allowance, but at present if I was a retiree, I have nothing to retire upon, and I could not retire to beggary."

At that time, the whole income of the Cerna endowment was considerably less than what you now claim. Surely that was not what he then meant to claim?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—The Government have thought fit to pass the Act of Parliament, authorising a retiring allowance, and he is not going to take anything less than his full rights.

11044. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Then nothing remains for us but to leave him where he is, according to your first argument?

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—He would rather be left where he is than sent out drift with £100 a year, as the scheme proposes.

11045. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—We have never had up to this hour a claim which setting fairly between the endowment and the master, we could regard as reasonable.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—The proposal that he should get £100 a year did seem most reasonable.

11046. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—You will find a proposal in the report of 1880, p. 236, that he should retire on £100 a year, and be allowed to retain his residence during his life. It is certainly Dr. Moore's home, and not merely an official residence. He has been living there for fifty-six years farming the land and acquiring neighbouring land during that long period.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—If a reasonable proposal was made, Dr. Moore would consider it.

11047. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—We quite agree that all the profits of the office should be taken into account in estimating a retiring allowance, but we are certainly not agreed that he is entitled to retire on full pay, including emoluments which in the course of vide he can no longer expect to earn as he did in years gone by.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—In the Dulwich College case Dr. Carter who was head master had a fixed salary, and in addition certain fees from pupils which amounted to about £3,000 a year. The Commissioners gave him as a retiring allowance the amount of his salary without compensation for the loss of fees and after full discussion the Privy Council were of opinion that those were emoluments of which he was deprived, and sent the scheme back to the Commissioners with a declaration that the master had a vested interest in the fees for which he was entitled to compensation.

11048. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—If you wish to have your rights saved, we can save them, but if you want a retiring allowance or a bulk sum, we must have regard to the future position of the endowment. I cannot say what we might do, if we had as much money as they had in Dulwich. There is a great deal to be said for allowing him to retain his residence and lands, but he cannot have a right to insist on retaining the school buildings after he has ceased, or must in the course of nature expect to cease, to be able to teach any longer.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—He is prepared to verify his return in detail. It includes the allowance for an assistant master, and the profits from fees, and states the net amount of his profits.

11049. Rev. Dr. MOORE.—The only way he could get that sum would be by staying in the school to earn the fees, because the whole endowment does not furnish the annual amount of money which your claim requires.

Mr. Bealey, q.c.—He can only stay there or he reasonably compensated, but he strongly objects to the provision for paying him nothing but his bare salary.

Mr. Carter, q.c.—With reference to Dr. Steele's claim I would call attention to the difference between the English and the Irish Acts. The Irish Act circumvents the compensation more than the English Act, and I submit that Dr. Steele can only get an allowance in respect of salary—because he has forfeited all allowance in respect of residence by voluntarily abandoning the place when he accepted the post of Rector of Dorchester. He ought then to have been dismissed from his post of head master, because the duties of the head master of a boys' school, and the duties of the rectorship of a parish three miles off, are utterly incompatible.

11050. Lord Justice NATH.—Supposing the school was prosperous with large profits, you could not say he would not be entitled to compensation in respect of the profits?

Mr. Carter, q.c.—I do. I say that all he could get under the wording of your Act would be compensation for allowances "arising out of the endowment," and, possibly, for the right of residence if it had not been forfeited. The words of the English Act are not the same. It cannot be said that the profits from the pupils' fees arise out of the educational endowment.

11051. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—Are we not to make compensation for his vested interest to the person who has a place or emoluments arising out of the endowment. The value of the place, it would occur to me, is the subject of the vested interest, and the profit from fees is included in this interest though they are not paid out of the lands—we are to compensate the vested interest of the individual who holds a place under or arising out of the endowment. Take the case of Rhyolite in Dr. Steele's time; the endowment could not pay him more than £300 a year, but it was a highly prosperous school, and surely his post of head master was then worth to him more than £300 a year?

Mr. Carter, q.c.—The utmost that the head master would be entitled to get would be, first, his salary, and second the value of a fully equipped school. That is what he gets now under the endowment, anything he gets by using that capital is a different matter and is made by his own skill and energy. That does not come out of the endowment. Now, if you compensate him first for his capital, and then for his profits, you are compensating him twice over.

11052. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—No, you are compensating him for the value of his place.

Lord Justice NATH.—The person who holds the place here is an old man. If he was young, and was deprived of his office, he might be able still to earn as much as the income attaching to his present office and that would be a matter to be taken into account.

Mr. Carter, q.c.—In Dr. Steele's case it is more an abstract question than anything else. There are now no profits from Rhyolite and the right of residence has been abandoned.

11053. Lord Justice NATH.—Armagh is the next case.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The principle has been discussed very fully, but you should have before you already the position of Dr. Morgan. He is a young man and certainly has been a successful master.

11054. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—That is important from both sides. I may say, without offence, that Mr. Prior Moore, for example, could not now begin the world again, nor make his abilities marketable on account of his age. But according to the principle of compensation under the Church Act for instance—the younger a man is the larger in proportion is the value of his services to his employers if he is kept on, and to himself if he is released from duty.

Mr. Carter, q.c.—That is, if you buy him out.

11055. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—In the case of a young man, you buy out his time, less by the value of the amount of work which he would be bound to give if he kept his salary, but which his release enables him to apply elsewhere.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—This is wholly inapplicable in a case where you destroy the appointment.

11056. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—You must compensate each man for the difference between what you take from him and what you leave him or give him in exchange. A young man gets his time and ability for use elsewhere.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Dr. Moses Morgan went to Armagh in 1869 and found two pupils. The best way of testing his efficiency is by observing the new entries in each year. In 1884—which is a critical year—he had twenty-three new entries (I speak of boarders only), and the next year, in 1885, he had five new entries, in 1886 he had five, in 1887 he had five also, and in 1888, up to the present he has had none. Now that is a commentary upon the working of the scheme upon the school.

11057. Lord Justice FRANKSON.—The figure for 1885 cannot have been affected by this Act.

Aug. 1, 1902.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—I think it was. Pupils are sent to school after the summer vacation, and at that time the Act was in full operation; any way everyone knew it was to pass; it was on the stocks in the previous year and known to exist.

11058. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—But in a very hopeless condition.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—But its life was cut short, and then it was reconstituted in 1885. The new entries for each year before the Act came into operation would be an average of twenty-one. Therefore, what has been called educational absenteeism did not apply to the case of Dr. Morgan. He had, in 1885, when the Act came into operation, the school in full working, with a large number of pupils. In 1884 he had sixty-six boarders, and the number of day pupils averaged twenty.

11059. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—As the scheme stands we don't propose to lay him out nor to deprive him of his fees.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—I know that, but it will still be necessary to ascertain what his vested interest is, because if you must measure his retiring allowance, provided he remains under the scheme. Of course that is a matter for himself. Now, in reference to the masters' memorial for a retiring allowance in 1880, I know that the Duke of Marlborough at the time wanted to take the retiring allowances out of the Church surplus. Of course everybody is glad to get a retiring allowance if it comes at a time when they see reason to think that they cannot hold on to what they have, and desire to get their income for the future secured. But Dr. Morgan was as party to that, and he did not join in that movement because he was a young man. You will find at the foot that Dr. Morgan did not adopt that memorial. Therefore it has no operation upon him.

11060. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Here is Dr. Morgan's evidence on the subject, taken from our Report for 1885-87:—

"5494. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—What do you think ought to be the provision for the retirement of the head master?—There ought to be a provision for his retirement. I should say certainly at not later than sixty. I do not think it is well to fix the age by a hard-and-fast line, but I think he certainly ought not to continue to hold office after that age. Of course there must be a period in every one's life at which he begins to want rest, but some men at sixty are better than others at forty-two."

"5495. Therefore you think a fixed age is not the best plan?—No."

"5496. Dr. TRAHERN.—Except that you would have a maximum of sixty?—Yes, I think it would be well to have a rule that the master should retire at all events at sixty."

"5497. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—What provision would you make for his retirement?—I think there should be a pension on retirement. It might be arranged as in some of the English schools, by the head master and the Governing Body constituting his share."

"5498. Should the amount of the pension be determined with reference to the number of years service?—Well, in that way it would, for so much would be laid by each year."

"5499. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The superannuation fund would start from the date of his appointment, and would therefore grow in amount the longer he served?—Yes."

"5500. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—When, in your opinion, should the head master be under compulsion to retire?—It would be hard to fix that."

"5501. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Don't you think the Governing Body ought to have the power to dismiss the master?—Yes, if they found the school inefficient, and that the inefficiency was due to his inability."

When his attention was called to the provision for his retirement in the draft scheme of the Commissioners of Education, which certainly seemed to us quite inadequate—he says, "It would be utterly inadequate. Suppose a head master holds office ten years, the fund would be £2,000, and on retiring he would be entitled to get £100 out of that fund of £2,000. I suppose it is hardly worth while to go into the details of the scheme, inasmuch as it is entirely unworkable." That is all evidence of the fairest kind, showing that what he himself contemplated was some reasonable provision for his retirement at or about sixty years of age, whereas at present he has none.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—But we are not dealing with that now, we are dealing with the taking away of his vested interest.

11061. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—In the case of Dr. Moore Morgan with all respect, you are dealing with provisions of which the object is to preserve his vested interest as it is, until the time comes when he ought to retire.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—And up to that point Dr. Morgan falls in with the scheme; but in the rest of the scheme he expects that you will estimate his pension on retiring allowance, not by the reasoning applicable to ordinary retiring allowances; but by the reasoning applicable to the determination of vested interests. But that all assumes that he is coming in to work under the scheme.

11062. Rev. Dr. Mooney.—The scheme proposes to leave him exactly as he is with all his existing rights.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—I submitted on Saturday that it didn't do that. I now hand in my amendments in case Dr. Morgan agrees to come in under the scheme. [Amendments handed in.] And now I should like to point out what he has at present. He has a salary of £400 a year, his house, and six and a half acres of land run free, ten acres of land of which the rest is paid, and all repairs, insurance, and taxes paid. He has an allowance for the assistant master of £150, and he has an attraction attached to the school in the shape of Royal scholarships. It appears to me that these are what you might call his plant or capital. Having that plant or capital, through his own teaching power he is capable of producing certain results, which if you deprive him of his vested interest he loses. He loses all that capital which is supplied to him free by the Commissioners of Education. The Commissioners might have given him £2,000 a year, and left him to start with his own capital. It is another way of paying salary, supplying these emoluments under the Superannuation Acts; these are estimated in the retiring allowance.

11063. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—They come under the head of emoluments.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—Any person in an official position knows how often this question arises; a public official is entitled to those things as a part of his salary. It also applies in the case of Dr. Ringwood; he has his salary, his residence free, the fees of the scholars, allowances for improvements, lands free, his taxes and insurance paid, and the attractions of the school in the way of Royal scholarships. From these he works and produces the profits of his office, and he loses all the income and the fees because you deprive him of the position in which he now is. If he were to start as a schoolmaster again, he must supply all these items himself, and when you take them from him that appears to me to be the measure of what he loses, and therefore, the measure of what he is to get.

11064. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—For some years past, more than the whole income of the endowment has been spent on the Armagh school, which is now in debt £1,150. According to your agreement Dr. Morgan has a vested interest in all this outlay, and therefore you practically claim the whole endowment during his life as compensation for him if he retires.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—That is merely a book-keeping debt.

11065. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—It is a book-keeping debt in this sense that it is always cleared off once a year, when the rents are collected, but for several years the excess of outlay over income has been increasing. A few years since the debt on December 31 was only £500, last year it was £1,150 0s. 3d. Therefore during the last eight years the Commissioners have spent very nearly £100 a year more than they get out of the Armagh endowment, and therefore even if the scheme never passed they must stop the exhibitions.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—That portion of the scheme which proposes to apply portion of the capital of the Armagh endowment to the compensation fund would be applying capital to meet a diminution of income.

11056. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is there any possible case that would entitle Dr. Morgan to get more than the whole income?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—No, not at all.

11057. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But his claims go greatly beyond the total income.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—It is enough for me if my claim is a just one, and I cannot help it if there is not enough to pay.

11058. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Really your claim is to give Dr. Morgan, for his life, the whole of the Armagh endowment.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The only question is whether it is a legal claim or not.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There would not be a farthing left even for the assistant master's compensation.

11059. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Do you consider that the head master of a Royal school has a legal right to remain so in his school and to continue to enjoy all those emoluments which you have enumerated, if he is incapable of conducting his school efficiently, or do you consider that when he is no longer capable of discharging the duties of his office he may be required to retire on a pension?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—At present I could not answer that question at all, because I confine myself to the Act of Parliament. He holds during good behaviour, and it is useless to consider anything about the efficiency of the school, or anything showing that the school was not going on well, because that would not deprive him of his office.

11060. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Allow me to remind you that the scheme does not interfere with Dr. Morgan's tenure at present.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—It allows him to remain, but not, I submit, with the same status that he possessed before. You transfer him to a new body altogether.

11061. Rev. Dr. Motter.—Is that what you are now defining compensation for?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I am claiming this compensation in order to ascertain what his retiring allowance would be.

11062. Rev. Dr. Motter.—In ascertaining what retiring allowance he may be entitled to, the question will arise whether he should be allowed to remain after he can no longer conduct the school with efficiency?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Now consider whether Dr. Morgan is going to remain, but in any event you must contemplate a time when the necessity might arise—and what he would be entitled to if he was to go.

11063. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Even dealing with his compensation as in case of a forced sale, as if a railway went through the Armagh school, he would be set free, and no judge could tell a jury that he was entitled to the full amount of his present emoluments to be continued for life.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I submit he would. You must ascertain what he has lost. You can't give him his age and youth and breaking power.

11064. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We set them free for him to earn other emoluments. For example, there is a sort of rough rule of giving three years' trade profits where a man's shop is compulsorily taken. He is bound to exert himself to establish his trade elsewhere, and his legal compensation never decreases, or could rise to the free-market value of his trade profits.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The question of trade profits would be only applicable by way of analogy to the fees of the pupils.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have Dr. Morgan's own evidence that at about the age of sixty years he must expect to lose his profits.

11075. Lord Justice Nunn.—Do you deal with compensation on the basis that the person dispossessed is to get a life annuity equal to the amount of his trade profits?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I am not talking about trade profits, but of things that are fixed upon, which I lay more stress—the salary, the land, and the residence.

11076. Lord Justice Nunn.—There are no fixed considerations applicable to the residence which he gets to enable him to carry on the school.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—And if you take it from him, and if he goes elsewhere, he must have a residence and pay for it.

11077. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If the scheme gave Dr. Morgan a retiring annuity in place of being obliged to work in Armagh school, he could do what Dr. Steele has done, seek preferment elsewhere either as a schoolmaster or as a clergyman. We are not taking away his opportunities of earning an income, we take from him his present income giving him power to earn another, and the loss for which he should be compensated is proportionately diminished. The Church Act did not go upon your principle, for that changed the status of the clergy, and altered their prospects, yet it made everyone liable to do his existing duties as long as he got his existing salary.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—But we are here dealing with a vested interest.

11078. Lord Justice Nunn.—Do you think we are bound to compensate him for the profits arising out of pupils' fees by giving him a life annuity equal to the amount of the fees?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Yes, as he loses them by being deprived of his vested interest. You are bound to take his life income as a whole.

11079. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We agree that he is to be compensated for his income as a whole, and you must not suppose that we proposed to give the salary to the handmaiden on any different principle from their other emoluments. We thought that, as a proposal at all events, an annuity equal to the full salary was a fair sum, and really the suggestion that Dr. Steele, for example, should retire perfectly free, with a life annuity of £500 a year, is not likely to be rejected. £500 a year for life, with nothing to do for it, and a rectory three miles off, is not so bad.

11080. Lord Justice Nunn.—Give me the elements of your claim in Dr. Ringwood's case?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—As regards Dr. Ringwood's case, it will not be necessary to do very much more than to give you the figures, because any observations in principle apply equally to this case. His salary is £500 a year; he has a residence, garden, and nine acres of land kept in repair the same as the others.

11081. Lord Justice Nunn.—Those nine acres were for a playground?

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Yes; they were.

Dr. Ringwood.—That was a voluntary matter. There was a paddock and three fields given to me for a playground, but I voluntarily had them thrown into one, and I used them for grazing when the hay was away. That field, where I have the infirmary at the end of it, should have made a valuable field.

11082. Lord Justice Nunn.—Do you let any grazing or do you graze them with your own cattle?

Dr. Ringwood.—I never let the land at all.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—He allows the boys to use it. He threw it into the other ground for their enjoyment. He is allowed £200 for an assistant master.

Dr. Ringwood.—That was an element in the original agreement when I took the appointment. In fact I was getting £700 for myself for I had to give four times more than £200 to assistants during my tenure of the school, and at present I am giving just about double.

Aug. 5, 1886.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—The Dungeness Royal scholarships amount to five of £40 and five of £30. As regards the number of pupils from 1831 to 1884 there was a fixed number of boarders of 9; in 1885 he had 6, and then the number of day pupils is in 1881, 37; in 1882, 34; in 1883, 40; in 1884, 42; and, in 1885, 41; so that there was an average of about 22. The annual value of the residence, purchase, and land was £171. The profit from pupils in 1884 was £178 11s., in 1885, £68 15s. You will observe the remarkable change between 1884 and 1885—nearly two-thirds had gone.

Dr. Ringwood.—The pupils didn't all pay the same. Everyone paid what he was able.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—Of course the boarders are the paying element in an establishment of this kind.

11033. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I think it was Dr. Ringwood who told us how many boarders was the minimum that would pay.

Mr. Walker, q.c.—I can estimate that by the table before me. On the five in 1885 there are no profits. The very last that seem to have been a paying element were in 1885. Dr. Ringwood has not only remained and done his best, and kept up the school, but he has all through provided the same teaching staff, and I find in all the reports the same teaching power, including his own great knowledge and skill. Nobody can attribute to him any dereliction of duty or abandonment of his position as a working head master, and I believe that Dungeness is not in debt.

Dr. Ringwood.—I am quite willing to make a large reduction in that demand. I am quite willing if I am not free to accept £700 a year; £700 was paid to me always, and I had full control of the other £300, besides my house and lands, and by no compensating power could they be reduced to £50 per annum.

11034. Sergeant Caspary.—I wish to correct what appeared to be an erroneous impression in reference to the present residence of Dr. Steele. From 1857 to 1880 he was in continuous residence at Portora, but about two years ago he began to reside in the neighbouring parish. The distance between the school and his present residence is about three miles, but up to two months ago there were members of his family in Portora, and up to the present he is enjoying the occupation of the garden and out-offices.

11035. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We were at Portora, and there is no apprehension in our minds about it. It is an unfurnished house, but that in one dormitory there are beds for about sixteen boys—that number of boys might possibly sleep there, but surely you do not ask us to believe that parents would send boarders into Portora as it is now, with the master living three miles away, and his own rooms unfurnished?

Sergeant Caspary.—That change of residence is only for a period of two years or less.

11036. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Yes, but when it was made it was intended to be permanent.

Sergeant Caspary.—He would be most happy if there were boarders to return to-morrow.

11037. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—He would go back if there were boarders, but no boarders would come while he is not there.

Sergeant Caspary.—It is in the very converse, with great respect. It is because there were no boarders that he did not continue to reside.

11038. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Therefore we propose to hold that you had no valuable vested interest in profits from boarders since you left.

Sergeant Caspary.—You won't consider that an abandonment of residence when you have him residing continually there from 1857 to 1880.

11039. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—He was an efficient head master, and had Portora in a state of prosperity that it never reached before nor since, but that was all gone when he went away and I think it is unreasonable to ask us to compensate him for that.

Sergeant Caspary.—You should not imagine for a moment that his change of residence caused it. It has been the inevitable result of the Act itself.

11040. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is his explanation, but it certainly is not the whole cause of it.

Sergeant Caspary.—I ask you not to assume that he has abandoned his residence in which he was for thirty years, when he is in the enjoyment of the out-offices and garden attached to the house. And a member of his family has actually resided there up to the last two months. Therefore I ask you not to assume that he has abandoned all claims to the emolument arising from his residence because he temporarily resides at another place.

11041. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The emolument is the enjoyment of a free house. In 1880, 1887, and 1888, did he get any value out of that free house?

Sergeant Caspary.—Certainly.

11042. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How?

Sergeant Caspary.—He had a member or two of his family residing there up to two months ago, and he now claims it, not as a favour but as a right under the Act of Parliament—that his residence shall be deemed one of the principal elements of his vested rights. He is there as a matter of fact every day, at that same house, and I refer to his own evidence in October, 1880.—

“Q. Professor Dorensen.—Did you come to seek on the premises before the Boarding Department was closed?—No, I remained there as long as there was the ghost of a boarder.”

11043. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Under those circumstances can you say that he had any emolument out of the house in 1886, 1887, and 1888?

Sergeant Caspary.—Most certainly; within the terms of the statute to deprive him of his emolument because two years ago he changed his residence when there was no boarder to supersede him, would be most unjust and contrary to the provision of the statute. He was occupying that place as a residence on the day the Act passed, and that was the vested interest which the Act requires. I say with great regret that it is the imperative duty of the Commissioners either compensate him for that or to permit him to continue in the enjoyment of it. He was there at that time and still residing there.

11044. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You heard what Dr. Ringwood has said as to his claim, are you instructed to state what Dr. Steele values his vested interest at now?

Sergeant Caspary.—I am not in a position to tell you. I merely explain that there were specific items which constituted my client's vested interest which were wholly omitted from consideration.

11045. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do not imagine that the full salary was given under any idea that the salary was a sum which he was entitled to get in full and that he was not entitled to get anything else; the basis of the scheme was that we thought it a fair proposal that Dr. Steele should retire with £500 a year for life.

Sergeant Caspary.—We consider that his income taken at its very minimum amounted to from £1,000 to £1,500 a year, and that £500 could by no possibility be compensation for £1,500 a year when there is compulsory dismissal. There is a vested right amounting to from £1,200 to £1,800, and by no possible reasoning could the annual payment of a sum of £500—the bare salary—be deemed compensation for that income. But I don't want to interfere with the free action of the Commissioners, and I only hope that some intermediate course may be thought proper.

11046. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—You said you had a strict right to have your vested interest valued or compensated for, but your claim for compensation is so large that it is practically impossible to meet it. The only alternative then is to save your vested interest and to allow you to remain at the school and do the duties of your office.

Sergeant Campion.—That is for the Commissioners. 11107. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You always say that, but with all respect I don't think that is fair to the Commissioners. You may force us to say that the claim is so enormous that we must have the vested interests, but if you named a reasonable retiring allowance we might think it possible, with justice to the endowment, to give it. In a railway case the first thing would be to ask the claimant "what do you say is reasonable?" And the only person who has as yet mentioned any figure approaching what the endowment could bear is Dr. Ringwood.

Sergeant Campion.—I don't mean for one moment to contend—no man with common sense could contend—that Dr. Steele would expect the full amount of his claim.

11108. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Then why did he put it forward, and how much does he expect?

Sergeant Campion.—I must leave that to the Commissioners.

11109. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—No, you must not; you are the claimant, and your only figure is £1,113, which as you said you could not expect.

Sergeant Campion.—I can only give the same answer as Mr. Bewley did, that if the Commissioners fix upon something fair, exceeding £500, but may be far less than £1,000, we should be glad.

11110. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We have no machinery by which to arrive at a settlement in that way. Our draft scheme was sent to the parties for their views, and if you are not satisfied with it you should have named what you proposed to insert by way of amendment; you have not done so, and if you go to the Privy Council it can only send the scheme back to us with a declaration, founded on some proposal, which you have never made to us.

Mr. McIvor.—As matters curio, and on behalf of Dr. Steele might I make an observation?

11111. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Yes, if you are authorised by Dr. Steele to do so.

Mr. McIvor.—Boarders having ceased to come to Peters, and there being no chance of boarders coming again, he went for his own personal convenience to the residence at Devonish parish. But he still uses the house as a son and sister-in-law have been living there.

11112. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you contend that schoolmaster is entitled to compensation for a residence for his son and sister-in-law—in a house which he possesses only as a schoolmaster, and which he has himself left for his personal convenience, when boarders have ceased and there is no chance of their coming again. You have exactly stated circumstances which I for one cannot see any way to recognise as the ground of a valid claim.

Mr. McIvor.—I am not arguing that. All I want to point out is that Dr. Steele is using the house, and that members of his family are living there, and that he is ready to return the moment the first boarder shows himself, and he is giving free quarters there to Mr. Valentine. The reason I interposed at all was that Sergeant Campion does not appear to have been instructed as to the terms on which Dr. Steele would be prepared to retire. Some of the figures sent in, Dr. Steele would not attempt to stand by—some of them are over-estimated—while in regard to others there can be no possible dispute. In 1887 and 1888 he got £560 salary, £310 as pupils' fees, and £180 for the land.

11113. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Is that the gross amount of the fees?

Mr. McIvor.—He puts the profits from pupils at £310. Those £500, £310, and £180 are figures about which there can be no dispute.

11114. Lord Justice NAUGHTON.—Do you treat these as net profits?

Mr. McIvor.—No, I am now only pointing out the figures included in the £1,400 that must be conceded. He claims £290 for the convenience of the house and garden.

11115. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Do you mean for the residence that his son and sister-in-law have been living in?

Mr. McIvor.—Yes; he has it there at the school, as a convenience for himself. Then he has added the result fees. I believe they exceeded £53.

11116. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There must be some mistake about that. Only three boys passed, all in the junior grade, last year.

Mr. McIvor.—I don't know the figure of the results fees; but on an average of years he has got £53—so that Dr. Steele's income amounts to over £1,000 a year, taking last year. Dr. Steele will not retire for anything like £500 a year; but he would retire for £850, and he cannot retire for a less sum than that.

11117. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That is less than half his existing claim.

Mr. McIvor.—Some of the figures he would not attempt to stand by. The average was taken in 1878 and 1879, and I am taking the figures of 1887 and 1888.

11118. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Now, in reference to the case of the "Raphoe Royal School" there is a very serious matter, the head master's salary is charged only upon the Raphoe estate, and there is a formidable deficit.

Mr. Callan, Solicitor.—I understand the compensation proposed by the scheme is not charged exclusively upon the estate.

11119. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We proposed to form a common compensation fund, but if we yield to the claim to save the vested interests Mr. Weir will be left without anything to look to except the Raphoe estate, and his position would be very serious.

Mr. Callan.—I might mention that the valuation of the house, in the rent of which he has a vested right, has been £55, and at a prior period it was £84. He has 3 acres 2 roods of land irrespective of the playground, subject to a rent of £32, from which he has a clear net profit of £10 a year at present. He has been allowed £100 a year for assistant masters, and £30 a year for prize, in addition to his own salary of £100 a year.

11120. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—He gets the whole £300?

Mr. Callan.—Yes, and £30 a year towards prizes for pupils.

11121. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If his rights are saved as they stand they are a charge on the Raphoe estate only, of which the last report of the Commissioners states:—

"The financial position of this school is very embarrassed, and the collection of rent on the estate extremely difficult. We repeat the statement in our last report that, under ordinary circumstances, we should have to reduce the school expenditure very considerably, but that as a scheme dealing with the endowment may soon come into operation, we do not think it well to make any present change."

We do not understand how they are justified in doing it, but they have continued to pay £300 a year for Mr. Weir—£100 nominally for himself and another £100 for an assistant, though the result is that the Raphoe estate is now in debt £1,007 17s. 1d. It has not one penny reserve of capital or cash, and the average net income for the last three years was only £133.

Mr. Callan.—From Mr. Murphy's report it appears that the lands are let at half their value.

11122. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—And the agent gets 10 per cent, not only on what they pay but also on the statements allowed them.

Mr. Rice.—We expect a stimulus will be applied by the local bodies to the management of these estates.

11123. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There will be, an stimulus to raise a deficit of £60 a year and hand it over to Mr. Weir.

* See Appendix B, Nos. LXXIV. and LXXV., pp. 387 and 388.

Mr. Ross.—If he had the income of £100 a year charged on the general fund he would be in a much better position than now.

11114. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The scheme proposes to give him that if he retires.

Mr. Ross.—Mr. Weir is perfectly well able to continue his work, but he understood from the scheme that the head master was called upon to retire, and, consequently, he asks that he should be compensated, and he does not ask for the preservation of his rights. Now the first element of his claim for compensation is the school building that is valued at £70, and from the enjoyment of the land in connection with the school he has £10 a year net profit.

11115. Lord Justice Nasmith.—The premises so far as they constitute his personal residence are rightly included in his claim, but so far as they consist of school buildings not wanted for the purposes of a residence, they may be taken into account only as portion of what goes to make a profit for the school.

Mr. Ross.—Quite so, if they are capable of earning a profit.

11116. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You cannot have them both ways. If you claim the full profits of the school you cannot claim the value of the plot, besides, even the master be regarded as having a personal interest in the school, except as a means of earning a profit?

Mr. Ross.—It is only in that respect I wished to claim.

11117. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In that view you cannot claim the custody on the school, or the assistant master's salary. The profits of the school are all you have.

Mr. Ross.—But in the school buildings there is the capability for making money.

11118. Lord Justice Nasmith.—The matters to be ascertained are—first the amount he is capable of making, and then what he should be allowed for a thing which is pecuniary.

Mr. Ross.—That should be measured by taking the school at the normal state at any one time. In 1873, Dungannon, Portora, and Raphoe, were all flourishing, and I submit that to measure compensation in respect of the capability of the school for boarders, you should not take the present state of affairs when the school is practically empty, but the normal state of the school. He goes back for seven years before the passing of the Act; the figures are before you in the schedule which has been handed in, and I submit that the years 1886, 1887, and 1888, should not be counted, because this Act certainly had a very powerful effect in emptying these schools of boarders.

11119. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Mr. Weir had the same number of boarders in the school the year after the Act as he had the year before. He had only four boarders in 1884, and he had four in 1885. In 1883 there were sixteen day boys, and five boarders.

Mr. Ross.—In 1888 there were three boarders, 1887 only one, and in 1886 none.

11120. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The evidence is that there can be no profit from boarders where you have any such numbers as five or six.

Mr. Ross.—But you have to take into consideration that a wave of prosperity may come round in favour of Dr. Weir.

Mr. Collins.—There were twenty boarders in 1881.

Mr. Ross.—The next element in the sum of £30 paid for the Diocesan Library, which is part of the school buildings, and since 1747 £30 has always been paid annually to the head master of Raphoe Royal School as Librarian.

11121. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Is not the library now in Derry?

Mr. Ross.—Yes; but I believe there was never any doubt that the librarianship was an actual emolument of the head master. Since 1896 the library has been removed to Derry.

11122. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What justification have we to compensate any interest connected with that library out of this educational endowment?

Mr. Ross.—It was an emolument in connection with the school, and having been invariably paid to the head master for more than a century, Dr. Weir thought it was an emolument that would be taken into consideration in estimating the compensation he was to receive. The next element in the profits from day boys. The number of late years has fluctuated very much, but a considerable number are in attendance, and under ordinary circumstances he makes a considerable profit.

11123. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What is your view of the effect on the amount of compensation of the fact that Dr. Weir has been getting older yearly year?

Mr. Ross.—Of course he is getting less efficient, but he is perfectly capable of going on for ten or fifteen years. He is sixty-one years of age. He has always had a difficulty in his hearing, but he has become worse. I also ask you to take into consideration the results from which amount under normal circumstances to £25. The total that he is actually receiving at the present moment is £304 a year. He is not asking for the amount of the income that he has been receiving, but he puts it forward as a basis upon which you should act in assessing the amount of compensation which he is to receive.

11124. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—His witness claims, dated August 4, refers to a schedule of his income, and claims the full amount.

Mr. Ross.—I think that is putting it further than what he is entitled to.

11125. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—So do I. Have you any proposal to make which you think he is entitled to?

Mr. Ross.—I have no means of making a proposal.

11126. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—How are we to deal with the awkward fact, that the average net receipts from the estate for the last three years was £136, and that year the net receipts were £11 13s. 1d., and the Commissioners intimate that they hardly expect to get any more?

Mr. Ross.—But that is not to be pressed too much against him.

11127. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I am not pressing it at all, but I want to know from you where is money to satisfy your claim, or even to continue your salary, is to come from?

Mr. Ross.—Dr. Weir thinks he is entitled to £300 per annum.

11128. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—Will he collect his salary?

Mr. Ross.—If he undertook the collection it would certainly shorten the monthly. But, really, I don't think there is very much in that. Of course they say they won't collect any more rent, but I don't believe in those absolute remarks.

11129. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The largest amount they got in any since 1835 was £188 10s. 6d. They have really paid to Dr. Weir, or for his benefit out of the moneys of the other schools over £1,000, which they had no right to apply to that purpose.

Mr. Ross.—I don't know what efforts were made by the agent to collect the rents.

11130. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Forty years ago the agent's house was blown up with gunpowder—dynamite not being then invented, and the collection of rent has ever since been rewarded with 10 per cent.

Mr. Ross.—That is one of the ordinary incidents which agents must expect; but if the estate was vigorously worked the tenants would not go into arrears so much, and it would not be so hopeless as it is made out. Of course the amount of the endowment should be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of the compensation to Dr. Weir, but it is perfectly clear that the salary would be an utterly insufficient compensation.

11131. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I think if he got good security for his salary he would be very serviceable to take it at once; £100 a year charged on the Raghee Estate would not be as valuable as the £100 provided by the scheme, for the estate is not good security even for £100 a year, being liable to a prior charge of £1,000 already overpaid.

Mr. NICHOL.—We would take whatever we could get out of the Raghee Estate rather than £100 a year which would be utterly insufficient from every point of view, even taking into consideration that the estate is not flourishing at present, he is entitled to a great deal more than that. I do submit that for the sake of serving these schemes in working order these head masters' claims should not be cut down to a minimum; that is not just or fair. These men have really a first claim upon the endowments.

11132. Mr. STANLEY.—I appear for "Mr. Gordon, first assistant master at Armagh Royal School, appointed by Dr. Morgan, with the approval of the patron of the school, in January, 1871. On June 15, 1873, he was promoted to the position of head assistant master, and has been holding that office for sixteen years. The salary, I may say from time immemorial, paid by the Commissioners for the assistant master of Armagh Royal School, has been £150; but that has never been the full salary, and Mr. Gordon has been receiving from Dr. Morgan—supplementing his salary of £150—£100 a year, so that his salary has been £250 for the last seventeen years.

11133. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—To the extent that he has been paid by Dr. Morgan he must either look to Dr. Morgan or Dr. Morgan's claim must be reduced by that amount.

Mr. STANLEY.—It seems to me to have been overlooked that the head assistant masters are distinguished from the assistant masters have a claim upon the endowment, and are almost in the same position as the head masters. The endowments under the charters were not for paying the head masters and the under masters, and throughout the head assistant masters were entitled to receive their salaries out of the funds as a primary charge after the payment of the head masters. The Act of Gen. III. section 18, provided "That the under master or masters, if any shall be under this Act endowed at any of said schools, shall be appointed by the head master with the consent and approbation of the several persons in whom the appointment of the head master or masters is vested." Mr. Gordon being on the foundation he can be removed only as provided by the 10th section of the same Act, which provides—that upon conduct being reported to the Commissioners which would justify them in depriving him of his office—an investigation shall take place, and he shall not be deprived until the Commissioners have satisfied themselves that his misconduct has been such as to entitle them to deprive him of it, it is provided—"the persons so appointed shall not be subject to be removed unless with the consent of the Commissioners."

11134. Lord Justice NICHOL.—Does that mean that the trustees of the school with the consent of the Commissioners can remove without cause?

Mr. STANLEY.—I think not, because it provides that in case of misconduct the Commissioners shall not be subject to be removed until after citation that contemplates removal for misconduct only.

11135. Lord Justice NICHOL.—Is that so clear; is not the investigation provided for only in case of misconduct, if the Commissioners have power to appoint an under master—it may be reasonably contended that at any time if the circumstances of the school are not such as to require his services they may and probably under those circumstances they would remove him.

11136. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—As a matter of fact have they not reduced the number of assistant masters in several instances where the schools fell away?

Mr. STANLEY.—The question would still remain whether they had any power to do that. But at all events we are not here to consider that question, because we have an assistant master in a school which is efficiently managed and has a large number of pupils, and which you do not intend to discontinue. He has got a vested interest entitling him to compensation or to the saving of his interest. In the Dublin case the head master was removable by the trustees, and it was held by Lord Selborne clearly that that did not entitle him to a vested interest. It was contended that the interest of the master was determinable by a vote of the trustees, and therefore that he hadn't a vested interest; but Lord Selborne answered—"You are now dealing with the vested interest of a person in whose case there has been no such determination come to, and therefore you must consider his interest as a vested interest for the purpose of compensating him." But your scheme recognised the interests of these masters, and it is only now a question of whether the compensation or the saving of the rights in these cases sufficiently meet the justice of the case. The position of Mr. Gordon under the scheme is peculiar, and different from the rest of the assistant masters. You neither save his vested interest nor compensate him. You continue Dr. Morgan, but with certain important modifications; you take away practically the exhibitions from the school; you lower the status of the school, though you in name retain it in its present position. The fifty-fifth section of the scheme makes provision for Dr. Morgan, and then comes the clause to which I object—"The Commissioners shall also pay to the Rev. Wm. Moore Morgan, B.A., and towards the salary of an assistant master, so long as such master shall be engaged by him, and as long as the inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report that the services of such master are required, and are efficiently rendered, the annual sum of £150, being the amount which, at the date of the passing of the Act, was so applied." In the first place we may occupy a position to some extent independent of Dr. Morgan.

11137. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Did Dr. Morgan take over any assistant master that Dr. Guillemard, his predecessor, had?

Mr. STANLEY.—I think not.

11138. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Does not that show that the assistant masters derived their title from the head master. Dr. Prior Moore told me in his evidence that he appointed and removed, from time to time, a large number of assistant masters. If your argument were correct, when Dr. Guillemard retired, Dr. Morgan would have had to take over all his assistant masters.

Mr. STANLEY.—I think he would; but the masters under Dr. Guillemard were new men, and when Dr. Morgan succeeded him, they may have said—"We will not continue under a different régime—we will retire and look for work in England."

11139. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Is it the case that none of Dr. Guillemard's assistants came over to you, Dr. Morgan?

Dr. Moore Morgan.—There was a French and German master that had been attending many years under Dr. Guillemard, and when I found him at Armagh I appointed him French master.

11140. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What became of the others?

Dr. Moore Morgan.—The only other assistant master was Mr. Harrison, and I fancy he resigned before Dr. Guillemard. He had £150 a year from the Commissioners, and left in August, 1869, just before I went there he left there. I re-appointed the French and German master. He was paid by the headmaster, not by the Commissioners.

Mr. STANLEY.—I am interested for a man who is on the foundation, who has been appointed in the manner prescribed by the Act of Parliament, and has been receiving for seventeen years £250 a year as the emolument of his office. Mr. Gordon is entitled to hold his office, and there is no reason to apprehend if the school went on in the future as it has done in the past, that the Armagh school would not flourish in the future as in the past. He is now asked to take service under this new scheme, namely, that the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant to carry out the new scheme at any time may report that his services are not required or are not efficiently rendered, and thereupon he can be retired. The scheme will weaken the Armagh Royal School in the future, and if at any time the Inspector found the number of day pupils had diminished, he would naturally say, "I think Dr. Morgan would be quite a sufficient staff to carry on the school, and the services of Mr. Gordon are not required." He would then be dismissed on the paltry gratuity given to the other masters who are compulsorily retired.

11141. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—At Enniskillen the Commissioners have recently reduced the number of assistant masters.

Mr. Stanley.—Whatever right the Commissioners may have had to do that, the Commission has no such power. You must recognise that Mr. Gordon has a vested interest at the present time, as the assistant master appointed by the Commissioners. He has fulfilled the duties of the office, and if you remove him you are to give him fair compensation for the loss of his emoluments or you are to save his rights.

11142. Rev. Dr. MOLLAT.—We can leave him exactly as he is.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—If this clause is altered as I propose, Dr. Gordon is left as he is.

Mr. Stanley.—But in that case the status of the Armagh Royal School cannot be touched or the scholarships taken away.

11143. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—The continuance of the scholarships depends, irrespective of the scheme, on whether the money is available for them, and if you claim in respect of them, how do you deal with the fact that they are not full?

Mr. Stanley.—It is a great attraction to parents sending boys to school to know that there is even one £50 scholarship. Mr. Gordon also objects to being put under any new authority, and says that he ought to be retired and to get full compensation. In section 66 compensation is provided for the head master, and in section 61 compensation is provided for Mr. Gordon. According to that section if Mr. Gordon should serve another ten years, making his period of service at Armagh twenty-seven years, and if at the end of that time the Inspector should say there is no necessity for an assistant master, he is to retire and there is absolutely no provision whatsoever made for him. I need hardly point out that there is flagrant injustice in that.

11144. Lord Justice FRYGEMAN.—Unless he has a tenure against Dr. Morgan, which we must look into, he would be in as bad a position if Dr. Morgan compulsorily dismissed him, or if the Commissioners declined to continue his salary. Your whole case of injustice turns on his tenure.

Mr. Stanley.—I say you are bound to take into consideration the fact that he is at present assistant master, and has been there for a length of time, and that you must award him compensation. You have no right to take into consideration whether or not he can be dismissed by anybody. That was what was attempted to be argued in Delewich case. Dr. Morgan has not retired Mr. Gordon, and has no intention of retiring Mr. Gordon. But I submit that upon the Act of Parliament, Dr. Morgan has not the power of dismissal.

11145. Professor DOUGHERTY.—Have you ever had a case, Dr. Morgan, of dismissal of an assistant master in Armagh?

Dr. Morgan Morgan.—Yes, but not of an assistant master paid by the Commissioners. The only two senior assistant masters paid by the Commissioners that I have had, have been Mr. Stanley and Mr. Gordon.

Mr. Walker, Q.C.—It would be your duty to set in the case of dismissal the same as in the case of appointment, there is a veto on the dismissal, and a veto on the appointment.

Mr. Stanley.—The Act of Parliament is clear that once you have an assistant master appointed with the approval of the patron of the school, it is only upon misconduct, such as the Commissioners think entitles them to deprive him that he can be removed. I don't see how my learned friend can get over the express words of that Act, and contend that Dr. Morgan has an arbitrary power of dismissing any clerk. Under the scheme Dr. Morgan is given a retiring allowance to induce him to give up his position at Armagh, and, supposing he allowed the school to be so reduced that the necessity for an assistant master came to an end, Mr. Gordon would be retired without any compensation whatsoever. My first objection is that the right to compensation should not depend upon his continuing assistant master under the new regime, but that he should be entitled from the passing of this scheme to reasonable compensation not dependent upon any circumstances attached to him. I object to the amount, and I object to its being termed a gratuity, because I say it is a vested interest which must be compensated for. The basis upon which the compensation ought to be measured is plainly put forward by himself. He simply asks that he should be compensated upon the basis of an income of £250 a year, and that, having regard to his age and circumstances, and to the work he has done, he has every reason to expect that, if this scheme hadn't interfered with his position, he would for many years have been in the enjoyment of that income. The sum which he may get under the scheme is the same amount now as if he remained for several years longer—he may get £450. That is not exactly two years of his present salary. He asks that if he is forced to retire he should be entitled to a reasonable annuity, and that it should not be made to depend upon whether or not he continues longer to be assistant master. Of course it would be reasonable to take something off the £250, because there is the possibility of his obtaining other employment, but there are very reasonable grounds for apprehending that any schoolmaster would have great difficulty in opening a school in this country and obtaining the higher education of boys. Still it would be reasonable to take into consideration the fact of his working power. On these grounds he asks either a bulk sum as compensation sufficient for his vested interest or he is perfectly willing that an annuity should be given to him.

Mr. DAVE.—I appear on behalf of *Mr. Valentine, the first assistant master of Portlorn; Mr. Hennig, assistant master at Portlorn; and Mr. Bealish and Mr. Gaskier, assistant masters at Dungannon. The 52nd paragraph of the scheme says that these gentlemen shall be entitled to "receive a retiring gratuity equal in amount to their annual salary"—which having regard to the facts appear to me to be an exceedingly small pittance for gentlemen in their position. Mr. Stanley has already dealt with the rights; the statute 53 Geo. III. shows clearly that there was an express setting apart of particular funds for the maintenance of one or more under masters as in the opinion of the Commissioners might be necessary. All through the Act the head master of the school is dealt with precisely in the same way and placed in the same position as the first under master and the under masters; and I respectfully submit that under the 10th section of the 53 Geo. III. it was incompetent for any head master to have dismissed any one of these assistant masters or under masters, move and except by sitting down to appear before the Commissioners.

* See Appendix B, Nos. LXXVI and LXXVII, pp. 565 and 566.

11146. Lord Justice NARR—Do you contend that that applies to the cases of the three other gentlemen, as well as Mr. Valentine and Mr. Gordon?

Mr. DANE—Certainly; in any master, under master, or usher of any school. The head master could not have dismissed any of these under masters without sitting them before the Commissioners and giving evidence of misconduct. The 9th section empowers these Commissioners periodically to visit the schools. They never had a visitation but one, and that was at Carna. Dr. Moore in his evidence said—and it was what the other masters said also—that he had hitherto acted upon the supposition that he had authority to deal as he pleased with the under masters, as they were appointed by himself, and the Commissioners did not seem cognizant of their rights; but if the Commissioners neglected their duties that cannot affect the rights of my clients. The amending Act of Geo. IV. recognizes those rights and enables the Commissioners to devote the surplus funds to other purposes, but expressly preserving the vested rights of the masters and under masters as the first charge upon their funds. That being so, I say it was a misconception of the position of the gentlemen whom I represent to have retired with a small gratuity. I take the case of Mr. Valentine. He is a gentleman of fifty-two years of age, of very high scholastic attainments; he had originally been a pupil of Dr. Steele's at Portora; he has been for thirteen years the first assistant master. The letter from Dr. Steele offering him the appointment, dated October 23, 1875, states that the first assistant mastership had become vacant, that the salary was £200 a year, that it was without board, and that it was paid by the Commissioners [letter handed in]. Rev. Mr. Valentine stated in his evidence that he consulted with Dr. Steele, in order, if possible, to secure his maintenance in the post, and Dr. Steele undertook to get the approval not only of the Commissioners but also of the Lord Lieutenant; because Mr. Valentine had this fact in his mind—that the assistant master whom he succeeded had resigned, and that before that, Dr. Webb, who had been first assistant master under Dr. Graham at Portora, on the death of Dr. Graham was promoted to the head mastership of Raphoe. Mr. Valentine had been head master of the diocesan school in Waterford with a salary of £200 a year, and he communicated with Dr. Steele knowing the possibility and the probability that if he succeeded as first assistant master he might eventually succeed to the school. Accordingly on November 10, 1875, he got the approbation of the Lord Lieutenant. Now, the scheme proposes to displace him with a gratuity of £400. His rights are not saved. It is not even provided that after the election of the new boards the acting assistant masters shall have the first right to be appointed to the schools. It is simply ousting him, and his family, on the world at fifty-two years of age with £400, after he has been assistant master at the school for thirteen years and peacefully discharging the duties of head master.

11147. Lord Justice FREDGROVE—I wish you could satisfy Dr. Steele that he has been practically discharging the duties of head master, and then we would have more money to compensate him with if Dr. Steele gave up some of his claim?

Mr. DANE—Dr. Steele's claim is all the stronger by having such an assistant master.

11148. Rev. Dr. MORLEY—If he gets £1,900 a year what will remain for you?

Mr. DANE—That is another matter. But the Act of Parliament says you are not to destroy his vested interest; you must provide for it either by saving it or giving him compensation. He has his salary of £300 a year, a residence rent free, and all his taxes paid, upon which he puts the low valuation of £40 a year—and he suggests that the least you can give him is an annuity of £100 a year. Mr. Henry had £100 a year, and board and lodging, which are worth £50 more. His salary was reduced to £80 in 1884. Dr. Steele gives him £15. Under your scheme, after being there for nine years he gets the noble sum of £60. Mr. Beckett has been only four years in his present position at Dungannon. He had been for the four years immediately previous at Portora, and at both places he was under the pay of the Commissioners and received £80. He submits that he should not be taken now as having been only four years in his appointment, but that the whole time he has been in receipt of salary from the Commissioners should be considered.

11149. Lord Justice FREDGROVE—It seems only reasonable that whatever time he has served under the Commissioners ought to count for him, but how much it will count is another matter.

Mr. DANE—Taking the time altogether it makes eight years, and according to the scheme he would only get £90 for that, which having regard to his position and service under the Commissioners is a very miserable pittance. Monsieur Gambier is undoubtedly a foreigner of much learning. He has been fourteen years at Dungannon. He got £200 a year direct from the Commissioners, and £50 a year more from Dr. Ringwood; he got two half days in the week for private tuition which brought in £85 a year and the result fees which Dr. Ringwood allowed him were £10 a year—so that in all he was asking £315 a year. I submit that although these three last-named gentlemen have not got the approbation of the Lord Lieutenant—still, having regard to the fact that they were appointed by the head master with the approbation of the Endowed School Commissioners, their rights are just on the very same footing as Mr. Valentine's. And I ask you to deal liberally and generously with them, for they occupy even under ordinary circumstances a very hard position, toiling at a miserable salary, and then, after having spent the best part of their lives in their position—they find themselves cut off with a miserable pittance. I submit that you must save their rights, whatever they are, under this scheme.

11150. Mr. NILES—I appear on behalf of *Mr. Gunning, who is paid out of the endowment, £200 a year direct from the Commissioners, and another £60, which is a portion of £300 a year paid to Dr. Ringwood, and at the date of the passing of the Act he lodged in the fabric, and the result fees averaged from £16 to £20.

11151. Lord Justice FREDGROVE—In 1886 not a boy at all from the Dungannon Royal School appears in the return.

Mr. NILES—That is such a small point that I do not care to detain you by arguing it at any length. The only statement that Mr. Gunning can supply is that he earned from £15 to £30 from result fees, and he asks for compensation calculated on the whole of his emoluments. The question mainly turns upon whether or not Mr. Gunning has, within the meaning of the Act, a vested interest in the emoluments in respect of which he claims compensation, and which are more important to him than they are to the head master. It would appear to me from the principle indicated in the scheme that you are not inclined to consider anything in the shape of a vested interest in the case of the assistant masters, unless they are able to show an appointment of which the master could not deprive them. Assuming that it is so, we do come within that definition, because this appointment of Mr. Gunning was under the Act of George III., and undoubtedly he holds his office on the tenure prescribed by the Act. He draws portion of his salary direct from the Commissioners, and of course the Commissioners were of opinion that an assistant master was necessary. The conditions for appointment under the Act were that the Commissioners considered that an assistant master was necessary, and that the master was appointed with the consent and approbation of the persons who appointed the head master. Mr. Gunning was appointed by the head master, and I am entitled to ask, his salary having been paid to him directly by the Commissioners, which would have been an illegal payment if he had not been legally appointed—that there has been such consent and approbation, and that he holds an appointment of which he cannot be deprived unless in the terms laid down under the Act. Mr. Gunning has nothing to do with what occurred in other cases. If in the history of these Royal Schools, where gentlemen were dismissed by the head masters, that cannot prejudice Mr. Gunning, who has done nothing to prejudice his own position. Nothing has occurred to prevent Mr. Gunning raising this question, and nothing can occur to prejudice him if he does raise it. In reference to the head masters whose claims the Commissioners have recognised there was, at least in one case, a reduction of salary, and I am sure that the Commissioners do not consider that that should prejudice the claim of either that, or of the other head-masters, and how can the conduct of any head master towards an assistant master hinder Mr. Gunning, or prevent him from raising the question whether he is entitled to remain? Even assuming that Mr. Gunning, and the assistant masters similarly circumstanced held their office at the will of the head masters, which I don't think is the case, even assuming that, I say that the principle adopted in the scheme is erroneous. The case of the Dulwich College established that the principle of compensation to be adopted in cases like the present was not the ordinary principle under the Acts when land is taken compulsorily. The effect of that decision was this that although the employee only holds office at the will of the employer, who on taking certain steps can dismiss him, and though he has no security in his own conduct for the retention of his office, if when you come to assess the compensation those steps have not been taken you are to take the office as you find it and assess the compensation accordingly. As to the compensation actually awarded, I have to say, that if you are of opinion that those masters have no vested rights whatsoever, then the gratuity awarded by the scheme is an effort to obviate the injustice done by the Act. But assuming that they have vested interests, no matter how small, the principle is erroneous, because compensation ordinarily has reference to the length of time the person has enjoyed the office, and assuming that he has a vested interest the longer he has remained in it, and the older he becomes the less valuable it becomes, the more it wastes.

APR. 1, 1888.

11152. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I wish you could get the head masters to see that.

Mr. Bates.—I have nothing to do with the head masters, but the longer the occupancy of the office, the less valuable is the vested interest. In a system of pensions the longer the occupancy the nearer to the time when the holders are entitled to pensions, but when they become entitled to pensions there are far less valuable than the office from which they retire. Here you leave Mr. Gunning after sixteen years service to find employment elsewhere, and you take from his compensation the value of his energies. But a gratuity of £180 does not appear to satisfy the most elementary claim.

11153. *Mr. P. K. Joyce (Head Master, Benagher Royal School).—I am situated peculiarly under this scheme, and will ask permission to point out what I think the hardship and injustice of the conditions proposed in my case.

11154. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Since the scheme was published it appears the Lords of the Treasury have threatened to foreclose, and obtain a receiver, which would compel the Commissioners to surrender the school-house; and from the last report the figures look worse for you even than in the case of Raphoe. Last year they got altogether out of the estate

£187 17s. 3d. The house is liable to a rent which the architect reports that it is not worth. It is only held from year to year. The Commissioners had to pay £124 17s. 8d. outgoings, and the net proceeds of the whole endowment available for you was only £69 15s. 6d., and when paying your salary they drew on other people's money. They owe £420, which is a debt affecting the Benagher endowment.

Mr. Joyce.—Two or three years ago we had money to go on with.

11155. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—That has all been spent and £420 of Owen and Farnagh money besides.

Mr. Joyce.—If I got the endowment as it is, even with the debt upon it, I should be quite satisfied.

11156. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Satisfactorily that is what the scheme proposes to give you.

Mr. Joyce.—The scheme changes my tenure of the office, which is during "good behaviour," and by the scheme is "at pleasure." That is a very important change. Then by the use of the words "efficiently conducted" in the clause great injustice could be done in connection with the management of the school. As used in the scheme those words might be held to mean that the number of pupils should not fall below ten. That has happened to me before now, and if that is held to be the interpretation of those words, the next time the number falls below ten I would have compulsorily to retire, and having been compulsorily retired, I should get due compensation.

11157. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We shall be glad to hear what you think would be a fair retirement.

Mr. Joyce.—I have sent in a statement of what I consider would be fair.

11158. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—You claim that your emoluments shall be calculated at £261 per annum. Do you claim £261 a year as compensation?

Mr. Joyce.—No, I claim it on the same scale as my predecessor.

11159. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—But your claim is not merely to the cash salary, but to emoluments far exceeding the whole endowment.

Mr. Joyce.—My predecessor got the whole endowment into his own hand, and they would not take from him any security, that it should be held out for the benefit of the school. After some years the school got too large for the house, and he took a larger one, selling the one owned by the Commissioners, and took a lease of land, and in that way they divided the salary into cash salary and rent. I consider this cash salary is only part of my salary, and that the pension should be calculated on the whole endowment, and also every emolument arising from the school, because in my case there is nobody else to whom it should be devoted. If my present position is to be saved this new condition, which destroys my tenure patent, should be taken away, and I should be left either in my present position, or I should be duly compensated for any deterioration of my position.

11160. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We quite understand that if your position is to be saved it must be saved as it is; but we cannot fix a retiring allowance which would come to more than the entire endowment. There is £20 rent, a prior charge to yours so long as the Commissioners keep the house. There are insurance, taxes, and several other things in addition, making in all £134, irrespective of your £100 salary, and the receipts are £187, and now there is the Treasury claim besides. Last year they paid £17 10s. 3d. more than they got.

Mr. Joyce.—I will take the proceeds of the endowment, or they can pay me in any other way, if it is simpler than this. I claim simply what is paid to me—part in kind and part in cash—I in reality being paid £180 for my use and benefit. That should be applied for myself.

11161. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We will not take the case of Mr. W. M. Mitchell, the architect to the Commissioners of Education. You are paid eighty guineas a year, Mr. Mitchell?

* See Appendix B, No. LXXV., p. 357.

Mr. Mitchell.—Yes.

11162. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Do you pay your own travelling expenses?

Mr. Mitchell.—Yes.

11163. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—What schools are you obliged to visit for the eighty guineas?

Mr. Mitchell.—Thirteen schools altogether.

11164. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—How many of those schools are Royal schools?

Mr. Mitchell.—Seven Royal schools, including Chrysket and Banagher, and six other schools at Cossack, Middleton, and other places.

11165. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We know what the schools are; after paying travelling expenses what is the net value of the salary?

Mr. Bates.—I appear for Mr. Mitchell.

11166. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—He has to travel for eighty guineas all over Ireland, from Middleton to Banagher. How much do you spend in travelling, Mr. Mitchell?

Mr. Mitchell.—From £15 to £18 a year. I have only to go once a year to any of those schools, except the five large schools in Ulster, and I have to visit them twice. There were occasionally extra fees; if I had to go in a special case I was paid for it over and above my salary.

Mr. Bates.—There are little incidents that make up the travelling expenses. But what Mr. Mitchell asks is that he should be protected from any doubt as to his being under the 7th section of your lordship's scheme, which deals with the secretary and officers. That appears to be only reasonable if the scheme contemplates Mr. Mitchell as an officer of the body; he wishes that that should be defined beyond doubt.

11167. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—These places will still require somebody to look after them. The evidence is that one thing which has been done well in Mr. Mitchell's time and in Mr. McGurdy's time is the looking after these buildings.

Lord Justice NABH.—A great many of these fabrics may be disposed of.

Mr. Bates.—Mr. Mitchell is apprehensive that, as your scheme will remove the fabrics of these different schools from the control of the central body to the local boards, his occupation may be gone, and the governing body may take away his salary. He asks that you should make some provision that, in the event of his services being not further necessary, the governing body should give him a retiring allowance or compensation. By way of alternative he thinks that you can authorize the governing body to retain the services of an architect and surveyor for the service of these local bodies.

11168. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—As long as these buildings are kept as schoolhouses the Commissioners would be bound to see that they are kept in proper repair, and would require some one to discharge that duty, and we can easily put in some clause leaving him in the same boat he is in at present.

Mr. Bates.—If the repair of the fabrics would be the duty of the governing body Mr. Mitchell has no apprehension that his services would be dispensed with, and all we can ask is that clause I would include him among the officers whose services should be retained.

11169. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—We have now for four days been hearing the arguments offered in reference to this draft scheme. I need scarcely say that the discussion has given practical proof that it is a great deal easier to criticize a scheme than to frame it. We must now carefully consider all we have heard, and we have come to the conclusion that, in this instance at all events, it will be necessary for us, so to say, to republish the draft scheme when revised. The Act of Parliament does not make any special provision for its being done technically in that way; but before signing the scheme or giving final directions with reference to the revised draft we will send a copy of it to the parties concerned. I hope it will not again be necessary to have any extended sitting. The further discussion will be very much narrowed, and may perhaps be conducted by correspondence. But if we find it necessary, we must sit again before we sign this scheme. We could hardly hope to sign any scheme that will not be objected to before the Privy Council; but we will do what we can to reduce the points in dispute to a definite shape. We have during the discussion of these last four days heard many new facts and new principles, to which we shall give our best consideration. We are now adjourning for our vacation, and we cannot take into consideration this draft until October, and it will probably be November before we can communicate with the parties about it.

Rev. Joseph Quinn, C.E.—I am for that portion of the county Derry, in the diocese of Armagh, and the people of that district seeing that they are left out of the boundary, as it at present stands, were advised to send up a remonstrance, and that they would humbly protest against that, and would wish to be included.

11170. Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—Is that the Magherafelt area?

Father Quinn.—Yes; there are the three towns included in it, Magherafelt, Moneymore, and Castle-townsend.

Archbishop Logan.—Is there any intermediate school in that area?

Father Quinn.—Yes, one at Moneymore.

Lord Justice FRYGROVE.—I think I may say that the preponderance of opinion was in favour of the boundary as it stands. Father McNamee was your principal opponent.

The Commission then adjourned.

CONFERENCE.—THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1888

At the Office, 23, Nassau-street.

Present:—The Right Hon. Lord Justice FITZGERBON, Judicial Commissioner; the Rev. GEORGE MOLLOY, D.D., D.Sc., and Professor DOUGHERTY, M.A., Assistant Commissioners.

The Assistant Secretary, N.D. MURPHY, Jun., was in attendance.

THE ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY OF MUSIC AND THE COULSON BEQUEST.

The Council of the Royal Irish Academy of Music were represented by Sir Francis W. Brady, Bart., Mr. George Cress, M.L., D. B. Dunne, Esq., LL.D., Mr. Henry Mooney, Mr. R. W. F. Littledale, LL.D., and Dr. Joad, Secretary.

The Corporation of Dublin were represented by Alderman F. E. Dillon, Alderman Winstanley, Sir George E. Cress, Mr. Robert Sutton, and Mr. Browder, the Town Clerk.

There were also present Mr. Joseph Smith (J.W.D.), Professor Brendan Rodgers, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. John O'Donnell.

Mr. Walker, solicitor, represented Colonel Ward, executor of E. S. Coulson.

11171. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—We have received the printed amendments proposed by the Council of the Academy. By whom may we take it that they have been agreed to?

Alderman DILLON.—Subject to some points which we are going to bring before the Commission, it has been agreed to by the Corporation, and has been passed by the Council of the Academy.

Sir Francis BRADY.—The French Government have made a claim for legacy duty on the estate of Miss Coulson on the ground that she was domiciled in France; and, therefore, it is not desirable to describe her in the scheme as of "Paris."

11172. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—You propose to insert the words at page 5—"The Academy shall continue to be under the patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh shall be Vice Patron, provided he consent so to act." Her Majesty is already patron!

Dr. DUNNE.—She is.

Sir Francis BRADY.—The Duke of Edinburgh is at present the president.

11173. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—You are making the Lord Lieutenant president.

Sir Francis BRADY.—The reason for making the Lord Lieutenant president is that there are certainties to be signed from time to time, and he is convenient because he is near.

11174. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—There is no objection to that. The first material change proposed is that no person shall become either a life or an annual member after the date of the scheme without the approval of a meeting of the governors.

Dr. DUNNE.—At present the election to membership is by the council. Is it not usual for the governing body of an institution to elect the members?

11175. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—Yes, but I should say the scheme would practically work the same way as it is, because you need not take the subscriptions if you don't like.

Mr. CRESS.—We thought it would be invidious to leave it to perhaps some one in a subordinate position to decide whether a subscription was to be taken or not.

11176. The Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I should like to ask you the wider question whether it is desirable to restrict to the governors the right of receiving members of the Academy. Why should it not be the members of the Academy who should elect members to their own body?

Mr. CRESS.—Constitutionally that would appear to be the better principle; but it is only a matter of convenience. We have named the Governors just to have some kind of check in a possible case.

11177. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—The members of the Academy may meet only once a year, whereas you might be admitting members all through the year.

Sir Francis BRADY.—It would be more convenient to have the governors as the admitting body.

Mr. CRESS.—No one has ever yet been excluded.

11178. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—Then we may say, "subject to the approval of the governors." You want an express provision that each subscriber shall be over twenty-one years of age? You are not likely to get subscribers under twenty-one.

Alderman DILLON.—Take the case of young ladies.

11179. Lord Justice FITZGERBON.—The proposal to introduce the words "nominate ones" in section 5 is quite right, so as to give only one nomination to a life member for each £250 subscribed; but it may be necessary to make it a little clearer. I don't exactly understand your next amendments. In section 6, line 5, you say—after "the" read "members shall be appointed."

Mr. CRESS.—What we want is that the twelve representatives of the members of the Academy shall not be strangers.

11180. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—What you propose is that the representatives of the members shall be themselves members?

Mr. CRESS.—Yes.

11181. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Why should not we leave the members full scope to choose any person they like? If they want their representatives to be limited to members they can secure that by their own action. There would be nobody to compel them to elect outside people. What we thought, and still think, is that there is no necessity for protecting any association against itself. Why should we tell you that you shall not elect anybody but a member? You would be free to change your minds to-morrow under the scheme; but you would not be free to do so if we put in what you ask us.

Sir Francis BRADY.—There is something in that; but there is a great deal more in saying that the members that are to govern the institution shall be selected from the members who pay for it, and that persons who, perhaps, may pay nothing at all shall not be on the governing body.

11182. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—But if the members wish to have them on the governing body?

Mr. Littledale.—If the scheme be left unaltered it might happen that at a very small meeting of members governors might be elected who would not be representatives of the Academy by any means. Therefore this protection is necessary.

Sir Francis Brady.—If the scheme be left as it is it might happen that the whole body of governors would have no member of the Academy amongst them.

Alderman Dillon.—I don't see any objection to the scheme saying that the representatives of the members shall be themselves members.

11183. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Nearly everybody who comes before us wants to put on a strait waistcoat of this sort. We are perpetually trying to take off limitations, and parties are perpetually wishing to put them on themselves.

Alderman Dillon.—The Corporation may elect any one they please.

Sir Francis Brady.—That is not agreed to by the Academy.

11184. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—You say that the members of the Academy should only be represented by members?

Sir Francis Brady.—We do.

11185. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—As long as you remain in existence you can carry out your own wishes; but you ask us to make a change by which for all time the members will be prevented from changing their minds.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—If you wish it we will make the change, but it is a matter for yourselves. You will have outside representatives from the Corporation.

Sir Francis Brady.—Don't take it that the Academy adopt the proposal of the Corporation. We are rather in favour of the principle that their Governors should be members of the Academy also.

11186. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In the first instance I understood that before you came here you had agreed that the Corporation should be free to elect some independent outside persons.

Alderman Dillon.—The objection of the Corporation is on a very sound basis. The Public Libraries Act, in pursuance of which the Corporation will be asked to raise a grant of money, provides that the town council may elect a committee of management for whatever library they have charge of, out of their own body; and it is in order to comply with the spirit of that provision that we want to be free to elect outsiders if we please.

11187. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—In Cork, where they started this before you did, we found that under a recent act, they had appointed some persons who were not members of the municipal council on their managing committee.

Alderman Dillon.—At the present moment on our Education Committee there are members who are not members of the Corporation.

11188. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The Corporation might find it desirable to select persons of musical capacity who were not in the Corporation, to represent them on the body.

Dr. Dunne.—There are eight or ten musicians in the Corporation.

11189. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—If you make up your minds with full knowledge of what you are doing, I see no objection to the proposed change.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We will restrict the election by members to members, and leave the Corporation free.

Sir Francis Brady.—Very well. We leave it to the Commissioners.

11190. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I am glad that you have got rid of the "Principal Professors." We thought it a most awkward business, to distinguish between your professors in that way. The word "Principal" we take out from before "Professors" in each case, and provide that the "Professors" may elect from their number." As to the proposed amendment at line 39 of section 4, I don't think there is any legal difficulty. You want to make the Body Corporate to consist of the whole Academy?

Mr. Cree.—We do. It would be a more dignified body corporate.

Alderman Dillon.—Is it not usual under the Companies Acts. All the members of the Company form the body corporate.

11191. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—We have hitherto in all cases made the governing body the corporate body, because the corporate body is the body to deal with the property, and it is more convenient to have a small body dealing with property than a large one.

Alderman Dillon.—Dr. Dunne points out that the Senate of the Royal University is its corporate body.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There was a lawsuit lately to make out what was the "Corporation of the University of Dublin," and it was held to be the Provost and Senior Fellows, and not the Senate.

Rev. Dr. Molloy.—In the Royal Belfast Academical Institution the members of the institution were the corporate body, and we made the governors the corporate body and transferred the property from members to the governors.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There is no legal difficulty in the matter, and making the corporate body "The Royal Irish Academy of Music" would look better. [After conferring with Dr. Molloy.] The better way is to incorporate the Academy in Section 2 and take the incorporating clause from where it is to the top of page 5, and to add there the words "shall be an incorporated body under the name of the Royal Irish Academy of Music."

11192. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Now we come to a matter of some importance. You propose to omit the provision in Section 7 for voting by proxy.

Alderman Dillon.—We have discussed that, and agreed to leave it with you.

Mr. Cree.—The Council of the Academy are against voting by proxy, their feeling being that the members should be encouraged to attend the meetings and take a personal interest in the Academy, and not be giving proxies.

11193. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There is a great deal to be said on both sides. If you have a number of members subscribing they may wish to be able to give their votes without attending in person, and subscriptions may be encouraged by allowing the privilege; on the other hand, as you say, more may come if they know that they can't poll unless they do.

Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I should be disposed to exclude proxies, except that you would have a better chance of getting subscribers in the country if they were allowed to vote by proxy, than if only those present are allowed to vote. By giving vote by proxy you might get subscribers all over Ireland; by restricting the voting to those who attend the meetings, your subscribers would probably be limited to Dublin.

Mr. Cree.—That is a rather taking kind of reason no doubt. The main body of subscribers that we have are in and about Dublin; and what Sir Francis Brady and myself have felt about the matter is that if vote by proxy be established when Mr. Littledale or Mr. Meurdy would meet subscribers in the street and ask them to attend the meeting they would say, "Don't ask us to go; here is our proxy."

11194. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—On the other hand bear in mind that at railway meetings and other such places a troublesome shareholder is often silenced by the directors producing the proxies, which give effect to the wishes of the majority of shareholders.

Alderman Dillon.—The corporation are quite in favour of retaining the power of voting by proxy.

Sir Francis Brady.—If I thought there was any prospect of what Dr. Molloy suggests, I would like the proxies; but long experience has taught me that getting subscribers in the country, is a dream.

11195. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—What would you say to the suggestion that the members themselves, when you have the Academy in working order, should have power to make provision by by-law for voting by proxy? It is really more a question for the members than for anyone else.

Aug. 3, 1895.

Sir Francis Brady.—There is a great deal to be said on both sides, and I would leave it to the Commission to decide according to their experience.

11190. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We have no experience yet, as our schemes have not been long enough working. We have given a power to vote by proxy in some cases and left it out in other ones. We have put it in where the members are likely to be large, and have always left it out where the members are likely to be small, and I think in this case we should empower the Academy to adopt proxy voting if they think proper.

Sir Francis Brady.—In the qualification clause, is there any use in leaving in the words—"I shall become bankrupt"? A man might become a bankrupt and yet be a very good musician.

11191. Professor Dowdall.—We have it in all our schemes. It would be rather irrelevant to provide differently in this scheme.

Sir Francis Brady.—Strike it out unless there is some reason for keeping it in.

Rev. Dr. Molloy.—I think it is better to leave it in.

11192. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You want to put out any governors who fail to attend once in a year?

Mr. Cree.—Yes.

11193. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We are in favour of that, because it will give you an opportunity of civility getting rid of useless governors. With regard to your proposed amendments in section 13, about the power of transfer, this was made the subject of discussion before the Privy Council, and the Bank of Ireland has made transfer on the written requisition of governors. The advantage of the power as it stands is that if any trustee in whose name property was standing happened to disappear or become residuary, or that you found a difficulty in getting him to execute deeds of transfer, the new governing body can ask for a transfer.

Mr. Cree.—It was altered in this way by our solicitor.

11194. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—He did it, no doubt, on account of the provisions of the Acts of Parliament with regard to the transfer of Government stock, but you had better leave the scheme as it is, as the Bank makes no difficulty about making transfer on the written requisition of our governing bodies. You want to amend section 14, so as to limit the Academy to the city of Dublin, and I think that is right, as you want to come under the Public Libraries Act.

Sir Francis Brady.—It might be desirable, though the Academy was conducted in Dublin, that a promising pupil should be sent, say to Leipzig, and studied for a few months. Is there anything to prevent that?

11195. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—No; you are the managers of an Academy which must be in Dublin, but your power of giving Exhibitions and scholarships is unlimited.

Mr. Cree.—Would the power of holding local examinations be affected?

Sir Francis Brady.—We have been asked by the London Royal Academy of Music if there any objection to their holding examinations throughout Ireland in centres such as Belfast and Cork, as they do not wish to interfere with us.

11196. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—In section (d) we can put in—"Fees of examiners and expenses of examinations conducted by the Academy in Dublin or elsewhere."

Alderman Dillon.—I don't see what this contemplates unless you make a material alteration in the whole scheme. What do you propose to do with the pupils that you examine elsewhere?

11197. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—They might be examined to get Exhibitions in the Academy.

Alderman Dillon.—By clause 25 you limit Diplomas to people who have passed such examinations in the Academy and who must have passed through such courses of studies and passed such examinations as the Governors prescribe. The whole scheme is limited as present to pupils of the Academy.

11198. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The Honorable would be, as it were, graduates of the Academy, and must attend it. The other clause would give you a power of holding local examinations in music. It might be very important.

Alderman Dillon.—I quite approve of the idea, but I don't think you can do it without some more changes.

11199. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You are agreed to give power to hold local examinations?

Alderman Dillon.—Certainly.

Sir Francis Brady.—Does clause (f) interfere with local examinations?

11200. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We must look into the details carefully, but as you are agreed on the principle we will carry it out for you. Why do you want to get rid of the first paragraph of clause 17?

Sir Francis Brady.—Because it is a repetition.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We don't think it is.

11201. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The first sentence deals with subscriptions, &c., for any of the purposes of the scheme; the second sentence deals with subscription, &c., for objects connected with the Academy not inconsistent with or calculated to impede its efficient working.

Sir Francis Brady.—If there is any distinction between the two clauses I have no objection to their remaining.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—There is this distinction that we want to give power not only to do what the scheme provides, but also to enlarge the scope of their working if additional endowments are forthcoming for kindred purposes.

Rev. Dr. Molloy.—If you were asked to establish a school in Cork, you might do it with additional funds received under this clause, but not with the Academy money.

11202. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Some future Mr. Canon might leave you money for some new object. Now as to the Vaulsley Fund. You want to vary the will of the testator. Whatever the provisions of the will.

Mr. Cree.—We want to make a slight variation. The income is for the endowment of scholarships payable for five years. We have found by experience that it is very inconvenient to have an absolutely fixed period for musical scholarships, and we only ask the power of varying the time.

Sir Francis Brady.—It would be a very important change. We have been obliged to resort to a device to obviate the inconvenience.

11203. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Your amendment may be accepted. In section 19 you propose an amendment which we were afraid to put in before, having regard to the objection of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. In dealing with the Coulson Endowment, we have followed the Vice-Chancellor's scheme. You now want power to pay rents, taxes, and insurance out of the Coulson fund, and if you do that you may revive opposition to the scheme.

Dr. Dwyer.—Sub-section (g) gives power to defray a proportion of the necessary expenses of management of the Academy. Surely rent and taxes are "necessary expenses."

11204. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You might do what you want by book-keeping, for you can pay, say, £50 a year, out of the Coulson endowment for the salary of the secretary, and so relieve the other funds. We have not altered the Chancery scheme in this respect. There was so much feeling about it that we have been very careful not to do so.

Mr. Cree.—What is virtually contained in the Vice-Chancellor's scheme is, that arrangements can be made between the Academy and Miss Coulson's trustees for the education of the pupils. Under that the Coulson trustees were competent to pay money for the use of the Academy premises.

11211. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Can you not, under the clause as it stands, charge the Coulson fund with a portion of the rent of the premises?

Mr. Cree.—That is the very thing we want.

Mr. MOLLER.—We want to have it more clearly defined what is meant by expenses of management.

11212. Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—We have practically got the consent of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to the scheme as it stands, and we should not like to run the risk of provoking opposition by making a change here.

Mr. Cree.—The only thing we want is a power of allocating a proportion of the income of the fund for the purposes in question.

11213. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—It they are included in "expenses of management" you want no amendment; if not, you want power to spend the Coulson fund on an object not sanctioned by the Vice-Chancellor, and you may excite opposition.

Dr. DOWSE.—A house would be necessary for the administration of the Coulson fund, and, therefore, rent and taxes would be payable. I should say that would come necessarily under the head of expenses of maintenance of the Academy.

Sir Francis BRADY.—In the Vice-Chancellor's scheme power is taken to provide a house for the administration of the Coulson fund. Isn't it part of the duty of providing a house to pay the rent of it?

11214. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We have excepted clause 23 of the Vice-Chancellor's scheme, and it does not mention rent and taxes.

Mr. Cree.—The Vice-Chancellor's scheme contains at page 52, a provision that the trustees may enter into arrangements with the Council of the Academy for regulating the terms on which the Academy will provide musical instruction for the use of the charity. Here we have no question about arrangements; the whole thing is to be fixed in the scheme: and what might have been done by arrangement ought to be permitted to the Governing Body of the Academy to do—namely, to apportion the expenditure and the various outgoings upon the several funds.

Allderman DILLON.—The words, "defray the expense of management," necessarily imply that a portion of the rents, taxes, insurance, and other outgoings properly payable should be included.

Mr. Cree.—I should prefer to have it expressly provided for.

Mr. LITTLEDALE.—Each of the sub-sections of clause 51 provides that the outgoings from the Coulson Fund shall be in connexion with the teaching of instrumental music.

Sir Francis BRADY.—The will provides that the house No. 39 Upper Dorset-street shall be used for the purposes of the bequest, and that if it be found not suitable it shall be sold, and other premises purchased or leased for the purpose.

11215. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If Alderman DILLON puts it to me as a lawyer whether I consider "necessary expenses of management" would include a part of these charges, I say I think they do, but the scheme ought to say expressly what it means; and if any objection is made you will have brought it on yourselves. We will say in the scheme, "to defray the necessary expenses of management, including a contribution not exceeding £50 a year for the salary of the secretary, and including also such proportion as the Governors shall deem just of the rents and taxes." The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests have written to say that they offer no objection to the scheme as it stands, but they have called our attention to the fact that to the extent of £133 you have already drawn on the £500 allowed by the Vice-Chancellor's scheme for capital expenditure on instruments.

Mr. Cree.—That is quite so; and the limited sum of £500 mentioned in the scheme clause is to be exclusive of what we have already laid out.

11216. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You have £2,000 besides for buildings.

Sir Francis BRADY.—There is £4,100 more coming in subject to a claim of the French Government.

Alderman DILLON.—Five hundred pounds does not seem a large outlay for musical instruments.

11217. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—We must put some limit to the amount in the scheme; otherwise you might spend the whole fund.

Mr. LITTLEDALE.—£500 will go a very short way in buying musical instruments.

Sir Francis BRADY.—If we build a concert room the first thing required would be an organ; and £500 would not go very far towards providing one.

11218. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Nothing can be spent without the previous approval of the Commissioners. You have spent £133 already. We must put in some limit that will include this sum.

Alderman DILLON.—I think £500 is too small an amount. Where the object is teaching music it is necessary to buy musical instruments.

Mr. LITTLEDALE.—They are very expensive.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If you tried hard you might spend £500 on a flute.

Mr. Cree.—Flutes are very expensive instruments.

Dr. SMITH.—If an orchestra is to be maintained and wind instruments provided you would have to spend £1,000.

Mr. LITTLEDALE.—We intend to educate orchestral pupils and must provide instruments.

Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—You yourselves named the sum of £500.

Sir Francis BRADY.—Is it necessary to name a sum?

11219. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I think Miss Coulson intended her endowment to be permanent, and it would not be in accordance with her will to cripple her endowment by large capital expenditure. Besides, at the bottom of all this, that these provisions are taken from the Vice-Chancellor's scheme.

Sir Francis BRADY.—Would you say such sum as the Commissioners may sanction?

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—You cannot spend anything without their sanction.

Sir Francis BRADY.—Say "£500, or such sum, or sums as the Commissioners may from time to time sanction." They may not sanction so much. We don't want to spend the £500 all at once.

Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Say "£500 in addition to the sum already spent."

Mr. LITTLEDALE.—Does that confine our expenditure for all time to £500?

Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—Out of this fund only. You can spend as much of your own money as you please.

Alderman DILLON.—I would ask you to leave it to the discretion of the Commissioners of Charitable Bequests. I think it would be too bad to be limited.

Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—The scheme must protect the body of the fund. There must be a limit.

Mr. LITTLEDALE.—Say £1,000.

Rev. Dr. MOLLER.—When you went before the Vice-Chancellor you asked for £500. When you come before us you ask for more.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—There is another thing to bear in mind. Unless we include the sum sanctioned by the Vice-Chancellor's scheme you would be under a temptation to spend the whole of that sum between this and the time when our scheme would come into operation. That is a reason for making whatever amount is put into this scheme include both sums.

August 6, 1888.

11220. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Are the trustees re-presented here?—(To Mr. Walker.) You don't make any objection to this proposition?

Mr. Walker.—I think the £500 might remain as it is, adding the words "including the necessary purchases in the future of pianos."

11221. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Are you willing to give them power to spend not exceeding £500, with the sanction of the Commissioners, in addition to their existing powers?

Mr. Walker.—Yes.

11222. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Very well, we will do so. You want to have the people who get diplomas called "Licentiate." That is right enough.

Mr. Cress.—Dr. Donnan suggests to extend sub-section (g), by providing a "library and such other educational appliances as the Governors shall deem requisite," out of Miss Condon's endowment.

Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—You had better not alter that or you will certainly have objections to it.

Alderman DILLON.—Do it out of income.

Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Do it out of the Academy money, with the aid of the Corporation.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The Academy would have to teach instrumental music if Miss Condon had never been heard of. Spend Miss Condon's money on the instrumental music and you will have the Academy money for the other purposes.

11223. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—Now we come to a serious matter—section 15 in granting diplomas you propose to leave out "on the recommendation of the Board of Studies."

Alderman DILLON.—The Academy do. The Corporation don't.

Mr. Cress.—We want to give the granting of diplomas to the supreme body.

11224. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Don't you think it reasonable that the Board of Studies should in the first instance submit to the Academy what course of studies ought to be followed, and what examinations ought to be passed in order that the diploma may be gained? Then it would be for the Governors with their report before them to come to a decision?

Mr. Cress.—The supreme body must eventually have the framing of the conditions under which the diploma shall be conferred. Supposing that the Board of Studies don't perform their functions in such a way as to enable the supreme body to carry out those conditions, the supreme body would be paralysed in the working of the Scheme.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—We can meet that difficulty.

Alderman DILLON.—This is only a little bit of the entire question. So far as the Corporation are concerned they are disposed to leave it altogether with you. They think—and the Academy are disposed to agree with them—that the details as to the duties of the board of studies should be all omitted from clause 28, and that the board of studies should be directed to discharge such duties as might be delegated to them from time to time by the Governors. There are certain provisions here which are strongly objected to by the present Council of the Academy as being delegated to the board of studies. We thought that by omitting all details and leaving it with the Governors to decide hereafter what duties the board of studies should perform, a good deal of the vexed question would be resolved.

11225. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—But if you omit the details you only shelve the question. The scheme—if it be possible—should let the Board of Studies know exactly what duties they have to perform, and let the Governors equally know their powers over the Board of Studies.

Dr. Donnan.—We thought that the first line of the clause should be taken away, which makes it all "subject to the supreme control and regulation of the Governors"; while you insert a quantity of detail here they might by resolution rescind the whole of it. If you leave the supreme control in the hands of the Governors, you necessarily leave the appointment of the duties of the Board of Studies in their hands.

Sir Francis Brady.—Leave in the last line of clause 28 and strike out all the rest. Leave in—"The Board of Studies shall exercise all such administrative functions as the Governors may from time to time entrust to them." The special power given to them illustrates the difficulty. The power to suspend one of their own body never was proposed to be given to the Board of Studies. If attempted to be put in force it would lead to the most extreme unpleasantness if not break up the whole Academy.

11226. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—It is curious that this very power of suspension was the subject of a long battle in the Belfast scheme, and there the Council of Studies insisted on keeping it.

Mr. Donnan.—You have had the advantage of having all these different views, and therefore you are the best qualified to decide.

11227. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Would it not be a weak thing in the scheme to constitute a board and to specify its functions?

Alderman DILLON.—One function is, that the Governors cannot grant diplomas except on the recommendation of the Board of Studies. I would retain that.

Dr. Smith.—Defining the functions of the Board of Studies will protect them from interference.

11228. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—That is the advantage of inserting some details in the scheme. If you leave the supreme regulation and control undefined, it will be entirely ungoverned by any rule. On the other hand if you bring in some small details you are sure to omit others.

Dr. Donnan.—You give the Board of Studies power to draw up time tables of the lectures and studies, "subject to the supreme control of the Governors." The Board of Studies may draw them up, and the Governors on the other hand may throw them out. I think the two things are inconsistent.

Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—If you got to correspondence they might say "we won't draw up any timetable for you."

Alderman DILLON.—Then they might discuss the whole of the professors at a month's notice.

Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—The practical effect of clause 28 as it stands is, that in case of a collision the supreme power would be with the Governors. At the same time both the Governors and the Board of Studies have their specified functions; and as long as things worked smoothly each would have its own sphere. But we provide against a deadlock by giving the supreme power to one body—the Council of Governors—as a final resort.

Mr. Liddell.—The Board of Studies as constituted at present will not perform subordinate functions, and yet the Governing Body is left supreme control. It may mean anything. It may involve the dismissal of all the professors, and taking away all the functions that are given to them under the scheme.

11229. Lord Justice FRINGHAM.—I think your proposals are contradictory. You take out the power given to the Board of Studies of drawing up the time tables of the lectures, and you put in the power of drawing up programmes of examinations and concerts, and the power of determining the grade to which each pupil is to be allocated.

Sir Francis Brady.—I was unfortunately not present when that was discussed by the Council of the Academy; but from my experience, I know that about the most difficult of all that work would be the preparing of programmes of the concerts. Every professor would insist on his pupils getting the best place, and provided his own pupils were taken care of, he would not care where the rest were. Similar observations apply to the determining of the grades of the pupils. To tell one of the professors of singing or the pianoforte that one of his pupils was to go from the second class to the first would provoke a not very satisfactory answer. These two things illustrate the difficulty of defining anything. Would it do for the Board of Studies to report to the Council what they recommend?

11230. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The moment you try to make a detailed catalogue of what they are to do you will be putting in some things and leaving out others. Are you satisfied to leave it that their administrative functions are to be settled from time to time by the Governors, who will be supreme. They are to make such recommendations as they think proper and to report once a year.

Sir Francis Brady.—I entirely agree with the Lord Justice.

Mr. Cross.—The professors, after several meetings with the Council, agreed to this clause, as proposed to be altered. The professors are not represented here to-day. They are strongly of opinion that the details should be set out in the scheme. They said—"Give us the responsibility; we are willing to take it and to work it out, but let us know what we have to do—let us know our functions." I did not think I ought to oppose them in that, and I drew up this clause from their recommendations, and they approved of it.

11231. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Who settles the programmes of the concerts now?

Sir Francis Brady.—The Secretary, Dr. Joad—subject to the approval of the Council or Executive Committee.

Dr. Smith.—Could not the programme be referred to a select committee or the Chairman of the Board of Studies?

11232. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—My impression is that it is a matter of detail too small to be put into the scheme.

Mr. Cross.—Then about the question of the grades of the pupils. That arises every day in consequence of new pupils coming into the Academy. Some persons or persons must decide what class or grade a particular pupil is to be sent into. Surely the professors ought to be competent to do it.

Mr. Littleale.—As none of the professors are able to be present, you should consider their claims as practically set out in this amendment. It was after considerable discussion between the council and the professors of the Academy that this paragraph was agreed on; and I don't think it would be at all fair to the professors if we, as the representatives of the council, were to let these recommendations go by the board. It would be a distinct breach of faith with them.

11233. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Would there be any objection to putting in a statement that all these matters shall be subject to revision by the Governors?

Alderman DILLON.—It would be introducing an element of discord where we want harmony.

Dr. Duane.—The simplest way is to strike all the details out and leave it—"Such duties as shall be allotted to them."

11234. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The determining of the grade to which each pupil is to be allocated is clearly an administrative function. Let the Governors entrust that to the Council of Studies, as the scheme proposes; and if they fall out, they will have to make some new arrangement. The Governors must tell each of the professors what they are to do. I am not musical, and know nothing of the management of concerts; but as to setting the Board of Studies, the educational head of the Academy, to draw up the programme of every concert—it seems to me that they would be too big a body for that.

Sir Francis Brady.—I believe it would be far better to have a general clause as regards the functions of the Board of Studies. I believe that some of the most important professors won't attend it. They won't give their time to it.

Mr. Littleale.—Sir Francis Brady considers that the Board of Studies would not draw up such a correct programme as the Governors would approve of.

Sir Francis Brady.—Oh, no.

11235. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—What he says is that the professors would fall out as to where such a young lady or gentleman was to come on, and what prominence was to be given to the pupils of one class or another. We have seen concerts where nearly everybody disappeared because they could not agree as to the order in which they were to come in.

Rev. Dr. MONRO.—As matters now stand the question we have to settle is this. It is proposed that the Board of Studies shall simply have the power to make reports and to discharge such administrative duties as may be committed to them from time to time by the Governors.

Sir Francis Brady.—Yes, and I believe that that will work. I believe that the most important of them will be perfectly satisfied with that.

Mr. Littleale.—They pressed very strongly on the council at the meetings at which they were present the importance of incorporating these particulars which are set out in the amendment, and if their functions are to be defined by the council at all they should be defined somewhat on these lines which the professor has agreed on.

Sir Francis Brady.—Some of them.

Mr. Littleale.—The majority.

Sir Francis Brady.—Two of the most important professors have said that they won't do it.

Mr. Littleale.—This is practically an arrangement between the professors and the lay members of the council. What is now proposed will give it the go-by. If the Commissioners after the clause is should be altered in accordance with the views announced by the professors at the meeting of the council.

Rev. Dr. MONRO.—I should be prepared to cast the provision as to the suspension of professors. As to all the rest of the clause I should be in favour of retaining it, subject to being corrected by the experience of the present members of the Academy as to whether it would be workable and convenient. If you tell us that it is not workable I should not be disposed to press it.

11236. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—If you put in the proposed amendment any one professor could say:—"The scheme says these programmes are to be settled by us, and I claim my voice in doing it."

Dr. Smith.—The Board of Studies must have a standing committee of their own.

Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Certainly, unless you say that a particular thing is to be done by them all. If you do, any one professor may say—"I won't have a committee for that."

Dr. Smith.—I propose that the Governors shall give specific duties to such members of the Board of Studies as they may think fit.

Dr. Duane.—It comes back to my proposition. Strike out the whole of the details.

Dr. Smith.—Or let the Board of Studies appoint such members of their body as they may think best for particular duties.

11237. Rev. Dr. MONRO.—The first line of Clause 28 reserves supreme control to the Governors. That is not objected to, and is essential. That being so, the real function of the Board of Studies is to make reports, and to offer recommendations on the various points connected with such things as the programmes of studies, concerts, &c. Would it meet the views of everybody if we made a general provision that they shall have charge of all matters appertaining to musical education, and shall furnish reports once a year, and shall be consulted by the Governors with respect to such matters as programmes of studies, of examinations, of concerts, and then put in a general administrative clause at the end?

Alderman Dillon.—You.

Sir Francis Brady.—What do you mean by "having charge of"?

11232. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—It would read—"Subject to the provisions of the scheme, etc., the Board of Studies shall have charge of all matters appertaining to the education of the Academy." They must have that. "They shall make a report once in each year to the governors on the condition of the Academy and the progress of the pupils, and shall from time to time offer such recommendations as they think desirable. They shall be empowered by the governors as regards the programme of studies to be followed in the several departments, and as regards the programme of examinations and of concerts"—and then the general administrative clause at the end. Would that do?

Mr. Littlehale.—I think so.

Sir Francis Brady.—That will do.

Alderman Dillon.—Do you see any objection to placing a restriction on the power of granting diplomas without the recommendation of the Board of Studies?—If the Board of Studies is the teaching body I don't see why the Governors should grant diplomas without recommendations from them.

Sir Francis Brady.—It would be pleasant for them to leave that out, for this reason. You have two or three senior professors in important departments. One recommends a pupil that the others may not think deserving. If the other two do not recommend that pupil for the diploma I pity their pupil when they come up.

11230. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—There are two points. The first is the prescribing the conditions to be fulfilled by the candidate in order to get the diploma. I propose that the Board of Studies shall make a report to the Governors giving their views as to what the conditions should be, and as to the course of studies to be pursued and the examinations to be passed. That the Governors shall exercise their supreme power by fixing the studies to be followed and the examinations to be passed. But when the candidate comes up for the diploma he cannot get it unless he has passed that course of studies and passed the examinations; and it is the professors who will pass him.

Dr. Smith.—In the Royal University it is not sufficient for the candidate to have obtained a certain number of marks!

11240. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—What I propose is that the Governors, having considered a report on the subject presented by the Board of Studies, shall fix the conditions necessary to be fulfilled by a candidate in order to get a diploma; but when they come to give the diploma all that they shall have to consider is whether the candidate for the diploma has complied with the required conditions.

Mr. Cree.—The final granting of the diploma must be left to the supreme body.

Sir Francis Brady.—In an extreme case they might say—"We will set aside the report of the Board of Studies." There might be reasons why the Academy should refuse to grant a diploma although the Board had recommended it. Are the words "certificates of proficiency in music," &c., proposed to be retained?

11241. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—You propose that the persons who get diplomas shall be "deemed fully qualified in the branches of the musical profession in which such persons shall have been examined"?

Mr. Cree.—These words are taken from the charter of the Royal College of Music in London.

11242. Rev. Dr. Molloy.—The value of your diploma depends not on what you put into the scheme, but on the way which you conduct your examinations. You cannot oblige people by Act of Parliament to deem a person fully qualified.

Dr. Smith.—I would propose that diplomas should be given to persons who pass such examinations anywhere in Ireland.

Mr. Cree.—Would not that amount to making the Academy a mere examining body?

11243. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—Why should you not take power to establish a system of local examinations through Ireland conducted by the Academy and giving certificates of candidates passing at Cork, at Belfast, and elsewhere?

Dr. Smith.—The same section suggests that the governors should grant honorary diplomas to persons distinguished in music. I would modify that so as to leave it open to the Academy to create fellowships in the Royal Academy of London is doing now. Leave it open to the governors to specify the form.

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—There is no difficulty in that.

Dr. Smith.—Under the scheme I take it for granted that the initials indicating the qualification would be protected just as under a charter?

Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—The title of "Institute of the Royal Irish Academy of Music" would be protected.

11244. Now, as to clause 26—do you wish to confine the Board of Studies entirely to the professors?

Alderman Dillon.—As I understand, that decision was arrived at by the council after conference with the professors, and it was come to before the Corporation were consulted about the constitution of the Board of Professors. The Corporation are very much inclined to leave it in the hands of this Commission.

Mr. Littlehale.—The view of the professors is this. They say—"We have never had anything to do with the conduct of the musical education of the Academy up to the present without the interference, to a greater or lesser degree, of the lay members of the Academy, and we think it only fair that we should get a trial. If it does not work satisfactorily then it will be competent to the governing body of the Academy to apply for some alteration." The professors object very strongly to there being a lay element at all on the Board of Studies, and they attended on more than one occasion at the council meetings for that purpose.

11245. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If you make this Board of Studies exclusively a professional body you should take some express power in clause 35 to create, if you should find it necessary, a joint committee, to exercise any functions which the governors may think proper to delegate to them. Remember that you are entering on a new experiment altogether in this alteration, for you have no experience of the working of a purely professional body.

Mr. Littlehale.—I am merely representing the views of the professors who are absent. My own view is that there should be equal numbers of lay and professional members on the Board of Studies.

11246. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—We thought that some representation of the lay element was necessary.

Mr. Cree.—We as the lay element don't think it would work at all.

Mr. Mervyn.—I ventured to propose to the Council—and the motion was lost by a small majority—that the President and the Vice President should be ex-officio members of this Board of Studies, following the rule of the Incorporated Law Society. We should have by that Bishop Donnelly and Sir Thomas Jones on the board, both of whom are conversant with the business of the Academy. I think that would be a sufficient representation of the laic element on the Board of Studies.

Mr. Cree.—I must say I don't at all agree with that view. It is not concurred in by the majority of the Council. It would be simply putting the Vice-Presidential element of the Academy to co-operate with the professors.

11247. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If you had any representation it should be one in which you would not be limited to the Vice-Presidents.

Mr. Littlehale.—The professors contended that if

August 2, 1887.

There should be a small lay element on the Board of Studies they would have no practical working power, and would be merely a thorn in the side of the professors. They thought it absolutely necessary that some functions should be put into the hands of the professional element, without any interference by the lay element of the governing body, and they pressed that so strongly in the council that, although a resolution was carried at one meeting of the council that the Board of Studies should consist of half and half, at a subsequent meeting of the council, at which the professors attended, that resolution—which was only a preliminary resolution—was withdrawn, and the scheme was allowed to stand as amended, that the Board of Studies should consist of the professors alone.

11248. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—As it stands now the Board of Studies having complete charge of all the educational affairs, will have a great deal of business to attend to which will not be minor, and I apprehend that the medical men being professionally engaged may not take the trouble of looking after the other necessary business, without which the whole will fail.

Mr. Littlehale.—I am putting forward the views of the Professors. My own view is that a purely professional board won't work at all. They won't work any hours that they are not paid for.

Mr. Cross.—They pleased themselves that they did not ask for payment, and would attend to their duties as members of the Board of Studies.

11249. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Do you agree to leave out the representation of the Governors on the Board of Studies, and let it be an exclusively professional body; but to recognise in the 34th section a power in the Governors of appointing a mixed committee if you think proper, to do any part of the business that is necessary?

Dr. Smith.—Then if the Board of Studies don't stand to the business you will have some remedy.

Alderman DILLON.—It gives them a chance of showing whether they mean to do the work or not.

11250. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Under your proposal every professor is to be recognised a member of the Board of Studies; and the only way of getting rid of him would be by dismissing him from his professorship.

Dr. Smith.—Let it be emphasized that the duties connected with the Board of Studies are to be a principal part of the duties of the professor.

Mr. Strevett.—There is at present a Board of Professors quite analogous to the Board of Studies and I would like to ask as to the working of it.

11251. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—There is a great difference between the future of this body and the past. In the past a large number of the professors were members of the Council or governing body; but any other professors, who were not members of the Council, really felt that they had no voice in the management of the concern and left it to those professors who were members of the Council.

Mr. Cross.—As a rule all the professors are on the Council at present.

11252. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—Henceforth none of the professors will necessarily be on the Council except one.

Sir Francis BRADY.—A number of the most important professors in the Academy are ladies. Are they to be excluded from the Board of Studies?

11253. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—If the Governors name them as professors they will be on the Board of Studies.

Mr. Cross.—It is a question on which there are different opinions.

11254. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—You will have to settle that amongst yourselves. I must say it appears to me that now that you make the functions of the Board of Studies entirely educational it is better that they should conduct that class of work by themselves; but the Board of Governors, if they think it desirable to have the assistance of professors in doing work that requires professional knowledge, can provide for that by appointing professors on committees along with the members of the governing body. In that way provision can be made for doing such work as you require the assistance of the professors for.

11255. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—Now, as to clause 29, you want to have power to call a special meeting of the members by a requisition signed by not less than twenty members; and in section 30 you want to raise the quorum from five to eleven. "Five" may be too small a quorum, but is "eleven" too large?—How many subscribers have you at present?

Dr. Judd.—About 120.

11256. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—In section 30 you want to remove the power to vote by proxy; we will leave that optional. In section 31 you want to provide that the Register of Members shall be open to inspection; that is quite right. Then you want to add an absolute power of removal of member?

Mr. Cross.—Yes.

11257. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—As to section 33 you want to shorten the periods and make the Governors meet in a month after the date of the scheme, and once a month after?

Mr. Cross.—We think they should meet every month after the date of the scheme.

11258. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—As to the power of appointing and removing the professors, lecturers, teachers, &c., we have had objections sent in to several of our schemes by the Schoolmasters' Association; and the Privy Council sent us back two schemes requiring us to insert a provision that no head master should be removed except upon a resolution passed at one meeting. Do you want to make your professors absolutely removable without any check?

Sir Francis BRADY.—It is not of much consequence, for all our engagements are for the season only, and at the end of it every professor's engagement terminates. Therefore a power of dismissal is extremely unlikely to be ever exercised because we have the power of not re-appointing them at the end of the season.

Alderman DILLON.—If they appoint under the clause as it now is, the professors might claim to hold on and get pensions.

Sir Francis BRADY.—The clause should guard against that.

11259. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—The clause provides that there shall be no removal except by a special meeting of the Governors convened after due notice. Are the professors satisfied with that?

Mr. Cross.—The Council had no objection.

11260. Rev. Dr. MOLLOY.—I think, with regard to the removal of professors, that it would be wiser to take the clause as suggested by the Privy Council. It will do you no harm.

Sir Francis BRADY.—I have no objection. We never during thirty years dismissed a professor. There is nothing in clause 40 to give them a stronger hold on us than the annual engagement. I would not like that.

Alderman DILLON.—I think that clauses 39 and 40 are inconsistent as they stand with appointing the professors from year to year. This provides that they should not be removed at the end of the season without a special meeting.

11261. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.—I will read the clause as you propose. Instead of beginning the 39th clause as it is you propose to read: "The Governors shall appoint the lecturers, professors, and teachers employed in or about the Academy." "Provided that no professor or teacher shall be removed from his office except on the resolution of a special meeting of the Governors, passed after due notice"; and then: "Subject to the provisions of the scheme the Governors shall exercise a general supervision," &c.

August 5, 1886.

Alderman Dillon.—I cannot see any reason for two meetings, particularly as these are only annual appointments.

Rev. Dr. Mollot.—The Privy Council sent us back a scheme with a direction to insert that clause.

11262. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If the professors have not invited on three being two meetings, there is no one else interested in there being two.

Mr. Lóidein.—The amendment which is put down was arrived at at a meeting at which the professors were present; and the four lines were dropped out at a meeting of the Corporation and the Council, at which none of the professors were present.

Alderman Dillon.—I don't see why the Commissioners should give to gentlemen who are employed from season to season any special status. They are not like persons employed permanently, and on their good behaviour for their lives.

11263. Rev. Dr. Mollot.—Yes, but this scheme will be permanent, and it might happen in the course of time that it would be desirable to appoint the professors permanently, and this scheme would then protect them if so appointed. We might put into clause 33 that the Governors "shall fix the tenure of the professors in their offices."

Sir Francis Brady.—There is no objection to making it as long as you like provided that their appointments are only to be as at present, so that a professor shall not be able to say—"You cannot dismiss me for the coming season without a meeting of this kind." That would set do.

11264. Rev. Dr. Mollot.—At the end of the season does he come to be a professor?

Sir Francis Brady.—Every one of our professors ceased to be a professor on the 1st of July last.

Mr. Cros.—Is it necessary to use the word "suspend"? It has been struck out of the clause relating to the Board of Studies?

11265. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—If you have the elaborate process of a second meeting you certainly must have the power of suspension.

Alderman Dillon.—It occurs to me that Dr. Joad's position as a professor is hardly consistent with his being secretary of the Academy, and I would suggest that he might come to be secretary and remain a professor. At present he is both. I would suggest a note being put in, that Dr. Joad is not to act as a professor as long as he is secretary of the Academy. Do you recognise his position as being one of the professors and secretary at the same time as being in any way inconsistent?

Mr. Cros.—It has worked very well up to the present.

11266. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—In the Queen's College the secretary is one of the professors. Dr. Gallwey is registrar of Trinity College.

Dr. Smith.—Dr. Joad as a musical man would be very useful as secretary.

11267. Lord Justice FitzGibbon.—You will get one of the professors to act as secretary for a smaller salary than an outsider, and I see no inconsistency in holding both offices.

11268. Lord Justice FitzGibbon then read the following statement which Mr. O'Donnell had sent in:—

TO THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSIONERS.

MR. LEADS AND GENTLEMEN.—I beg to offer the following objections to the 'Scheme' for the Management of the Cosheen Beguest by the Council of the Academy:—

It does not make it imperative on the Council to provide musical education for the working classes and amateur bands in the city.

The musical instruments provided by the working classes are wind instruments (brass and wood). There are over 400 young men in the city possessing wind instruments. Most of these have musical talent which they would wish to cultivate during their leisure hours in the evening, but as the Council of the Academy persistently keep their hours of instruction fixed during the day time these young men are as effectually excluded as if it had been the written rule of the Academy that "no working man will be instructed here."

In 1876 the Council appointed Mr. Vennemann (conductor Constabulary Band) professor of wind instruments at a salary of £40 per year. Vennemann is not a practical teacher. During the thirteen years he has been in the Constabulary he has never taught a pupil; he delegates that branch of his business to two men of the Constabulary Band, to each of whom he pays £1 per month. During the twelve years he has been "teaching" in the Academy he has not produced one player, nor did the Council look to him to produce players; they only required of him to provide for their annual pupils' concerts, and other examination performances a certain number of the Constabulary Band to keep before the public the appearance of there being a wind instrument class in the Academy. For the past twelve years the members of the Constabulary Band have been (much against their inclination) thus brought before the public as pupils of the Academy. This friendly deception on the public has in the time that the Academy has been in 1886, and set one ordinary player professor.

The other instrumental classes have most satisfactory results to show, but they were under the direction of practical teachers. To appoint a professor to teach an instrument in which he cannot give a practical lesson, such as every professor in the Academy gives (Vennemann excepted), is so utterly absurd that it would not be done anywhere but in Ireland.

Such was the system on which the wind instrument class was worked up to last year that same system is now to be continued, only instead of the Constabulary Band, who have refused to play, "the pupils" will in future be selected from the military bands in the garrison.

The Council have now appointed a member of a garrison band to be a sort of under manager, whose business it is to round the garrison bands to get players for the lowest time at which they can be had, to play at the Academy Pupils' Concerts. At the Annual Pupils' Concert, held in June this year, there were fifteen wind instrument players, a what is designated as "The Orchestral Wind Band of the Academy." Of these two were amateurs who were actually in the Academy—one was a professional and twelve were military bandmen. In the Academy's published report for last year it is stated that the Educational Commissioners have allowed £50 per year of the Cosheen Beguest to go towards the remuneration of professors of wind instruments in the Academy. Do the Council carry out your intention by spending this money on a sincere professor (for there is no class in the Academy) and military substitutes for pupils?

The Academy having thus ceased to be a teaching institution for wind instruments, I would respectfully suggest that that class be altogether abolished and that a sort of money should be given in prize at an annual competition open to all Ireland for pupils of natural musical talent and of Irish parentage. I think this plan would be more in consonance with Miss Cosheen's intention than the proposed management of the Academy. "Natural musical talent" (Miss Cosheen's phrase) is a very qualifying term. Take the whole of the pupils (265) at present in the Academy, and amongst them are there half a dozen with "natural musical talent?"

I think Miss Cosheen's intention was to found something like the London Academy of Music, which seeks out amongst the population of the three Kingdoms for "natural musical talent" and provides the best means to cultivate it. There may be people throughout our Irish provinces with the undeveloped qualities of a Paganini, a Thalberg, or a Liszt; yet what will the Irish Academy of Music do for them? Nothing! grant and Cosheen Beguest do for them? Nothing!

If you, my Lords and Gentlemen, will not execute this plan, then some arrangement should be come to between the Corporation and the Academy of Music to establish a proper evening class for the working classes.

The Corporation have power under the Libraries Act to establish a school of music.

I beg to submit this statement for your consideration, and will willingly attend before you for examination.

I am, my Lords and Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN O'DONNELL,

Cornet-a-pisto, late Theatre Royal

The Colonnade, Milltown, Co. Dublin.

11369. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—We ought, I think, to put into the scheme a provision—which cannot do any harm and may do good—for establishing evening classes.

Sir Francis Budge.—We have several evening classes.

Mr. Littledale.—We have everything except the pupils.

Mr. O'Donnell.—We complain that the amateur bands of the city have been excluded last year; the Academy advertised scholarship examinations, and members of the bands came in and received instruction, but afterwards instead of giving the scholarships they only gave them twelve months' instruction, and then dismissed them without assigning any reason. The bandmen drew their own conclusions from that. There is a difficulty about getting working men to go down to a respectable establishment like that at Westland-row, and another difficulty last year was that Dr. Judd said their practice should be conducted so as not to interrupt the other classes. Could some other place be got for them? There are many untarried houses on the quays in which arrangements could be made to have a place of practice for them.

Alderman Dillon.—That is a matter of detail for the Academy.

11370. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—The Academy will have full power under this scheme to do that if they think proper, but we can call attention to the matter of musical education for artisans and others engaged during the day by putting in a clause expressly recognising evening classes as a special part of the work of the Academy.

Mr. O'Donnell.—Some of these young men were taught by a very competent and excellent teacher belonging to the Workmen's Club Band—Signor Reginaldo—and they objected to coming from him to a person who was not a practical teacher. If you ask them to go to the Academy to get instruction in wind instruments they won't do it.

11371. Rev. Dr. Motzov.—How is that an objection to our scheme?

Mr. O'Donnell.—I have had several meetings with the bands, and they propose taking further action by bringing the matter before the Council.

11372. Rev. Dr. Motzov.—All that we can do is to give them every facility for learning music from the Academy. But what is the use of our doing that if you tell us that nothing will induce them to go there?

Mr. O'Donnell.—I mean that they have an objection to the buildings at Westland-row—not to the management. They object to having to mix with well-dressed and respectable people. A working man cannot go there and do himself up in his Sunday attire.

11373. Rev. Dr. Motzov.—Practically your suggestion is that the Academy should give instruction in some building near the locality where these people live.

Professor Brendan Rogers.—In the Workmen's Hall.

11374. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There is an express power in the scheme to spend £2,000 of the Council money in providing any buildings required for the purposes of the Academy. Such building may be placed in any locality suited for the practice of wind instruments, and probably a separate place would be desirable—we can do no more for you.

Mr. O'Donnell.—There is another objection. They never have had such a thing as a bassoon pupil in the Academy, although a professor of that instrument, Mr. Haveman, has been appointed there. The bassoon is an instrument essential in instrumental orchestras, but very few bassoon players are employed.

11375. Mr. O'Donnell then read the following:—

THE COUNCIL OF THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

It has long been a musical reproach to Dublin that it is the only city in the three kingdoms—perhaps the only city in the world—with a population of over a quarter of a million that has not a complete orchestral band sufficiently numerous for the production of the works of the great masters. The cause is quite obvious. Dublin is the most he-silly land in the world. With its police and military bands there are at all times ten bands stationary. London, with four millions population, has only eight military bands—while Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, &c., with larger populations, have each only one military band. It is not an over estimate to state that the garrison bands in Dublin cost in the year close on £2,000. From the month of May until October military bands are engaged in all directions playing in the open air. In the large towns of England all that playing is done by professional musicians, giving employment to bassoons, French horns, low trombones, &c., which are instruments all essential in large orchestral bands. There is no demand in Dublin for these instruments except for concerts and operas, consequently Dublin cannot support local players. For the musical societies' concerts these players (who, strange to say, are chiefly Irishmen), have to be brought from England at great expense—a dozen of these costing more than fifty local instrumentalists. The want of these instrumentalists in Dublin is putting our musical societies into a state of bankruptcy, but it is vain to think that the Academy of Music can supply this want. The difficulty to produce players on these instruments is very great, but supposing the Academy produced first-class players on these instruments, the engagements that offer for them in Dublin are so few that it would not pay the players to remain here.

I have discussed this matter over and over again with the heads of the musical profession in Dublin, and have urged them to adopt the course pursued in England and Scotland by the musical societies when they require particular instruments for which many engagements do not offer, viz., situations are sought for the players in which the salaries are moderate and the duties as light as to admit of their attending to their musical engagements. Surely in Dublin, with all its great patronage of music, and its colleges and institutions, such situations could be procured for about eight players whose musical services are so essential to our large public concerts. This is the only way in which these players can be kept in Dublin. The authorities of the Dublin Metropolitan Police made a proper step in this direction in appointing for their bandmaster a musician who, in addition to being an efficient conductor, takes a position in our musical societies as a first-class performer on a wind instrument.

In conclusion, my lord and gentlemen, I beg respectfully to ask that some step should be taken to bring this matter under the notice of the Educational Commissioners before they finally decide on their scheme for the management of the Council Bazaar.

I remain,

My Lord and Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

JAMES O'DONNELL.

Alderman Dillon.—What do you propose?

Mr. O'Donnell.—Is it not possible to procure situations for men capable of teaching wind instruments, the best horn player in the land would not earn £20 a year by engagements in Dublin.

11376. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Nothing more can be done to meet your wishes than the scheme provides. It gives power to the Academy to provide suitable buildings and it gives them funds for the purpose. They may use their buildings in the evening for the classes that you want, and in the day time for the other classes. They can also engage professors to teach any of these wind instruments. I don't see what more we can do.

Mr. O'Donnell.—We want French horns and trombones.

11377. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Miss Conham's money is for instrumental music, and they will have larger funds now than they had before. We have given them power to employ teachers, and I suppose they would do so if they saw any prospect of pupils.

Alderman Dillon.—As to such a band as Mr. O'Donnell suggests I will do my best to forward Mr. O'Donnell's views. I think it is a disgrace that we should be at the mercy of military bands in Dublin and have no hand of any kind capable of performing a piece of orchestral music.

August 3, 1883.

Dr. Smith.—There are larger towns in England which are still worse off. If they want an orchestra in Birmingham they have to send for it.

Mr. O'Donnell.—Mr. Robinson brings all his brass instrument players from Birmingham.

Dr. Smith.—One trombone. You must get an orchestra from London, if you want it.

Sir Francis Brady.—I can corroborate nearly all that Mr. O'Donnell has said, and I have been very glad to hear him express his views. For many years I have been endeavouring to work on the lines that he has suggested; and I do hope now that the Corporation are becoming interested in music, that they will see their way to allocating some money for these trades bands, which are the material through which our instrumental performances must come.

11278. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—There seems to be a good deal of natural talent for wind instruments going astray in Dublin from the want of teaching.

Mr. O'Donnell.—A very clever young lad, a native of Athlone, only thirteen years of age, a cornet player, was offered by Mr. Corless tuition in Dublin, at Mr. Corless's expense, but he did not come, because there is no one in the Academy to teach the cornet.

Dr. Smith.—I think the Academy has done a great deal in the direction referred to. There is one professorship, that of the violoncello, which, I think, has been a loss to the Academy.

Sir Francis Brady.—The violoncello has been a loss to the Academy; nevertheless, we have felt it our duty to have a professor. A very distinguished performer on one of the more important orchestral instruments, offered to come to Dublin if I could get him a situation in the Four Courts.

11279. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Alderman Dillon might do something for him in the City Hall.

Mr. O'Donnell.—I merely wished to ventilate these matters. Many years ago I spoke to Sir Francis Brady about them, but nothing has been done. It is a single way of providing an orchestra in Dublin.

11280. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I am glad that you have brought it forward. You will understand now that there is a body being created by this scheme with power to do what you want, and with funds available for doing it. Of course the Academy must determine—not we—whether it is prudent to do what you suggest or not, what instruments they can teach, and what salaries they can pay. We can't help you to augment their salaries by situations in the City Hall or the Four Courts, but the number of people that they would get must be considered.

Mr. O'Donnell.—Perhaps the Royal Dublin Society would assist?

11281. Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—I hope they won't practise their instruments during office hours. Is this your vacation at the Academy?

Mr. Cree.—On the 20th of September the Academy will resume.

Lord Justice Fitzgerald.—Our Commission is about to adjourn for six weeks vacation. We will then get the amended scheme printed, and let you see it before it is signed. We are anxious that you should all read it over, and see that all these amendments are properly carried out. We will therefore send you proofs of the scheme before it is signed, but that will not be before the 1st of October.

This closed the conference.

No. I. (a.)

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 2.

LETTER from the COMMITTEE of the ULSTER SOCIETY for the PROMOTION of the EDUCATION of the DEAF and DUMB, and the BLIND.

"September 15, 1887.

"To THE EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENTS COMMISSION, IRELAND.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—In consequence of a statement which has reached the Committee of this Society, that the Committee of the Claremont Institution in Dublin, have asked you to alter your Draft Scheme of June 25th, and allow them to enter Ulster and compete with this Society in collecting funds, and in receiving pupils, they desire us to present to you the following facts, and protest against any such permission being granted. After this Society was formed in 1831, for the education of the deaf and dumb, and blind children of Ulster, 'The Juvenile Association,' auxiliary to the Claremont Institution in Dublin, and which became finally amalgamated with the present Association in 1851, had auxiliaries established in many of the principal towns in Ulster, sending deputations to raise funds and seek for pupils. In many of the same towns there were auxiliaries to the Ulster Institution established for like objects. It often happened from year to year that both Societies sent deputations to the same localities, if not on the same day, at least in the same week or month. This apparent rivalry and consequent heartburning was felt by this Committee to be wrong and injurious to the cause of deaf-mute education. Efforts were made for years to bring about an amicable division of the field to be occupied by the two Societies, but without success, till in the autumn of 1845, when our new Institution was completed, a correspondence was reopened which brought about a meeting of delegates from both Societies, first at the Duke of Manchester's, Tanderagee Castle, and afterwards in Dublin, and the Dublin Committee having asked and got the consent of their friends in Ulster to withdraw from the province, a full and amicable arrangement was signed by both parties on March 19th, 1846. An abstract of the correspondence, with terms of the agreement, was published at the joint expense of the two Societies, and was scattered broadcast over Ulster by the Dublin Association to their friends, and by the Ulster Committee to their supporters. This termination of an unseemly rivalry was hailed with delight by the Christian people of this province. A copy of this correspondence and agreement is lodged with the Secretary of the Commission. We direct your special attention to the joint letter of the Secretaries of the two Associations, on page 2, also to the minutes of the meeting at Tanderagee, page 7, and to the terms of the agreement, page 15. That the Committee of the Claremont Institution acquiesced in this arrangement will be seen from the fact that of the twenty-four pupils then at Claremont from Ulster sixteen were retained there, and according to the terms of settlement this Committee paid £28 for each, per annum, till their educational term was completed, amounting to £297 5s. 4d. Eight pupils then in Claremont were sent to us for the completion of their education, and six children who had been elected for Claremont, but not then admitted, were sent to Belfast. In further carrying out our part of this contract, as the number of pupils greatly increased, we had to provide additional bed-room accommodation at an expense of £803. Shortly after this we were forced to build a new school-room, enlarge the dining-room, and make other alterations at an expense of £1,750, thus giving ample accommodation for every candidate from Ulster. The unhappy rivalry in Ulster being at an end, the society continued to prosper, so that the committee felt themselves in a position to admit every applicant without the former troublesome mode of elections by vote of subscribers. The annual meeting of members in 1852 resolved to give this power to the committee, and since that time every eligible deaf and dumb and blind candidate has been promptly received by the committee. Not only this, but every year the committee send out about 4,000 circulars to about 800 Protestant ministers and other persons of influence in 144 auxiliary centres, and our deputies, to about 140, hold public meetings in the province every year. All ask for pupils, and make known our readiness to receive every applicant. From this it will be seen that the claims of the deaf and dumb and blind in Ulster are fully met by this society; and this committee now enters its earnest protest against the opening up of Ulster to the Claremont Committee as unnecessary, as it would be the breaking up of the solemn compact of 1846, which has worked so well; as it would be unfair to condemn the society to Ulster, as is done in our scheme (but with which we are satisfied as the field is ample), and again open up this province to the Claremont Institution, while there is work enough, if not more than they can undertake, in the other three provinces. We ask you to observe also that we receive all eligible blind children for which the Claremont Committee have no provision, and of these we had twenty-five during the past year. Under all the circumstances of this case we earnestly beg that you will stand by your scheme of the 25th June, and that you will be no party to the violation of a solemn contract which has been honourably kept for over forty-one years. To open up Ulster again to the Claremont Institution could only result in renewed heart-burnings and unseemly contentions amongst Christian brethren, and in permanent injury to the cause of the deaf and dumb and the blind.

"We are your obedient servants,

"THOMAS MONTGOMERY, D.L., the Treasurer of the Ulster Home;

"Wm. JONESON, D.D., Member of Committee;

"JOHN KNECHAN, Principal and Life Member of Society."

LETTER, 23d August, 1887, from the CLERK of the DUBLIN PRESBYTERY.

"Donnee, 8, Circular-road, August 25, 1887.

"SIR,—I am instructed by the Presbytery of Dublin to object to the Draft Scheme for the future government and management of the Educational Endowment known as 'The National Association' for the education of the deaf and dumb poor of Ireland. The National Association was originally an un-denominational Protestant association. Some of those who took part in its organization were Presbyterians, and for many years members of the Presbyterian Church contributed liberally to its funds. On March 19th, 1845, this association entered into an agreement with the Ulster Society for promoting the education of the deaf and dumb and the blind, which has always been an un-denominational society, to confine its operations to the more neglected provinces of Leitrim, Monaghan, and Connaught. In accordance with the terms of this agreement, the two societies were bound to work on the same lines, and the Claremont Institution equally with the Belfast Institution remained the property of Protestants of various denominations.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS TO THE DRAFT SCHEME.

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 8.

1 Upper Merion-street, Dublin,
10th July, 1887.

SIR,—I beg to inform you that a special general meeting of the Members of this Society was held here on the 18th instant (pursuant to amended notice), to consider the draft scheme published by the Commissioners for its future management, and to approve of such objections or amendments as should be found necessary.

That at such meeting, largely attended, the Archdeacon of Dublin presiding, the following amendments were unanimously agreed on, and I am directed to transmit them, and to request that you will kindly submit them to the Commissioners for their consideration and approval, and at your convenience inform me of their decision thereon.

The members of this Society desire if possible to avoid lodging any formal objection to the scheme as published by the Commissioners, being in the main satisfied with it, but to express a desire that if practicable the present Society, as existing under the charter of George III., should not be dissolved, but that a declaration should be inserted in the scheme, that the Society was to be managed in future according to the scheme prepared by the Commissioners. This would involve some technical alterations; but as the members of this Society leave this matter to the discretion of the Commissioners, they have made no alteration in that respect.

Permit me to mention that the reasons which influenced the members in wishing to have the first alteration made are, that many persons will be found to be good and useful governors who do not actually reside in the city of Dublin, but are in it daily, and could attend the meetings, and the condition consequent on non-attendance would prove sufficient to keep up a proper number of working Governors. The Coast-guard Officer for the county of Wicklow is by the scheme made a member, and it is therefore considered reasonable that gentlemen from that or other adjoining counties should also be eligible.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS.

1st. That clause Nos. 3 and 4 of the draft scheme be amended either by the omission of the words, "or shall come to reside permanently in the city or county of Dublin," or by the insertion after the word Dublin of the words, "or in some county adjoining the county of Dublin, or shall not have some place of business in the city or county of Dublin."

2nd. That clause 4 of draft scheme be amended by the substitution of the word "five" for ten in the seventh line.

3rd. That clause 11 be amended by the omission of the words "but not otherwise."

4th. That clause 14 (sec. C.) be amended by the substitution of the word "nine" for eight in the first line, and the word "eight" for seven in the fourth line.

5th. That the name of the Rev. Andrew Campbell, M.A., be added to the list of "Existing Governors," he being a member of the Society for fifty years, and acting as honorary chaplain without payment, a constant attendant at the Board, and resident in the city of Dublin; also

That Charles Pepper's name be added as an "Existing Governor," he being resident in an adjoining county, and a member who frequently attended and took an interest in the Society.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

FRANCIS DE LAURE, Esq.

The Secretary Educational Endowments
Commissioners.

REPORTS OF THE INSPECTOR ON THE SCHOOLS.

See Evidence, pp. 18 and 20.

May Examination, 1887.—Girls.

The head class made excellent progress in that course appointed for the Junior and Middle Intermediate Grade, including Goldsmith's Poems, Scott's "Lord of the Isles," Gray's "Odes," and the earlier portion of Dowden's "Manual of English Literature." Their answering in this portion of their school work was particularly good. Other subjects were English History, the Geography of Europe, and Arithmetic.

were also well prepared, though some were rather weak in English History. Some progress had been made in Euclid. Writing and Drawing were careful.

The general course of the fourth class was in all cases good, with the exception of English History, the portion being 1485-1495. The third class was examined in Arithmetic Tables, Arithmetic (simple and compound rules), writing, drawing, reading, spelling, geography, and a small portion of English History, and the general result showed careful teaching all round. In no case was the answering of any of the pupils otherwise than good.

The same result was to be seen in the lower classes of the school. The youngest of all were reading the first book with various degrees of progress, and were able to answer easy questions on the Map of the World.

The fifth and fourth classes, that is the two head classes of the school, did not exhibit the same steady and uniform progress in their work as the others. For instance, M. Hall answered everything in Arithmetic, but nothing in English History; M. Short and K. Myles were inferior in Arithmetic to what they ought to be. The answering of M. Stoddert and A. M'Keon, however, left nothing to be desired in the preparation of their very long and difficult course. In the fourth class the answering of C. Hayes was particularly good.

Boys.

The head class was examined in Euclid (First Three Books); Arithmetic, in general; Algebra, up to and including simple and simultaneous equations; Geography, general; and English History. The answering was excellent, and it was seldom a question was raised by either A. Myles, W. Russell, or J. K. Bentley.

The third class was examined in a course somewhat shorter than the above, and with the exception of Euclid, for which they were not fully prepared, the answering was very high. Amongst the best were J. Eggleston, J. J. De Courcy, G. Ball, Armstrong, Kidd, Wright, and Short.

The answering of the first and second classes was quite satisfactory as regards writing, spelling, dictation, geography, grammar, and reading. The arithmetic requires, however, some more attention.

The answering of the two senior classes is extremely creditable, and is marked both by clearness and solidity.

LETTER of Sir STEPHEN DE VERE, Bart., and SUGGESTIONS for a NEW SCHEME.

Tervoe, Limerick,

October 27, 1887.

MY DEAR LORD,—Lord Emly and I have carefully considered the new arrangements which we have thought to be just, and to bear out the views which you intimated.

I send you the Scheme, which has the entire approval of the Trustees, the Bishop, and the Jesuit body.

We do not, of course, pretend to put it into legal language, but we think that it carries out our views fairly, by getting rid of claims and giving a permanent existence to a great Catholic College serving as feeder to the Royal University. The large sums of money raised especially for education for foreign missions will be devoted to that object.

Lord Emly requests me to say that as he may be obliged by Lady Emly's health to return very shortly to the continent, it will be very convenient if the arrangements can be completed as soon as possible.

I do not know whether I ever thanked you for your long and valuable letter; and I feel convinced that as all parties concerned have but one common object, the utilization and permanent constitution of a great and valuable educational institution, there will be little difficulty as to details.

Believe me,

Very truly yours,

STEPHEN DE VERE.

Right Hon. Lord Justice FRANKLIN.

SUGGESTIONS FOR NEW SCHEME.

As the trustees must necessarily all be Catholics, the Bishop of the Diocese and the Rector of the College should be appointed in place of Sir David Roche and Mr. E. W. O'Brien. Vacancies in the lay trustees should be filled up by co-option. The Bishop and Rector should be trustees ex-officio. It should be the duty of the trustees to secure the due administration of the College according to the following scheme.

II. SCHEME.

(1.) The object of the College is to prepare students for Degrees in Arts in the Royal University. No pupils should be prepared for the Intermediate Examinations. Should, however, any pupils admitted into the College require preparation before entering the Matriculation class they may be detained in preparatory classes as long as necessary.

(2.) The Rector should be the sole authority to admit and dismiss students. Whomsoever considerable sums have been expended by the lessees on buildings for intern students, all such buildings, and any additions thereto, shall be reserved for the education and accommodation of students in training for foreign missions.

(3.) The fees to be paid by students for board and tuition, etc., the regulations as to meals, class, play-hours and holidays, shall be fixed and determined by the Rector.

(4.) The Rector may make By-laws for the management of the College, provided such By-laws be not inconsistent with the Scheme.

(5.) The Rector, at the time of his appointment, shall sign and deliver to the trustees a document declaring himself responsible to the trustees for the due observance of the said Scheme by the teachers and masters, and said declaration shall be entered on the minutes of the trustees.

(6.) The Rector shall be appointed and removed by the Head of the Order of which he professes to be a member, the appointment being subject to the approval of the trustees.

(7.) The financial administration of the College shall be entirely in the hands of the Rector, who may receive bursars from the benefactors of the institution, and apply them according to the intention of the donors.

(8.) The trustees shall hold a meeting once a year on a day to be fixed by them, and may, in addition, hold a special meeting, whenever they deem fitting. All powers hereby conferred on the trustees shall be exercised by a majority of the members present at a meeting duly summoned by notice at least a fortnight beforehand. Four members shall form a quorum.

III. AMENDMENTS TO THE PATENT LEASE.

(9.) The Lease should be amended so as to give full security to the lessees. It should be made, if possible, in the name of the lessees as an incorporated body. In case this cannot be done, it should be made to three persons, with a clause to the effect, that, in the event of the death or resignation of one of the lessees, the two survivors should have the power of filling his place, and this should be done within one month from the occurrence of such vacancy. In the event of it not being so filled up, it shall be filled up by the trustees. Provision should be made that the heirs and assigns, &c., of the lessees should have no right or claim on the property.

(10.) In the event of the lessees violating, in a serious and persistent way, the rules laid down in the Scheme, the governing body should have power to call their attention to that point, and in the event of their refusing to comply with the prescriptions of the Scheme, the governing body should have power to determine the lease. But, in this or any other conflict that might arise between the governing body and the lessees, an appeal should lie to the Lord Lieutenant in Council.

(11.) In the event of the determination of the lease, as aforesaid, it shall be competent to the lessees to tender to the trustees the full sum expended upon Mungret land and buildings up to the commencement of the lease of 1882. Such value to be estimated as agreed on, and on payment of such estimated sum, to enter upon the full enjoyment and occupation of the lands and buildings at Mungret, now existing or hereafter to exist. And the trustees shall hold such sum subject to such trusts for educational purposes as the Lord Lieutenant in Council for the time being shall declare and appoint.

SCHEME framed in pursuance of the Act 42 & 43 Vic., cap. cxxx., for the MANAGEMENT of MUNGRET AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL and MODEL FARM.

By His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant-General and General Governor of Ireland.

WHEREAS, by an Act of the 42nd and 43rd years of Her Majesty, Chapter 330, "Local and Personal," entitled, "An Act to enable the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, with the assent of Her Majesty's Treasury, to vary the trusts of the Mungret Agricultural School and Model Farm in the County of Limerick," it was enacted that it should be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant, or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, with the assent of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, or any two or more of them, to direct and appoint that the lands, buildings, and premises known as the Mungret Agricultural School and Model Farm with their appurtenances, should be conveyed or let on the best rent that can be reasonably had for same, and such lands, buildings and premises, and the produce, profits, or rent thereof, and all trust funds then under the control of the trustees should from thenceforth be used and applied under the control and direction of the trustees to such purposes of instruction, including the instruction in and the promotion of agricultural science, as to the Lord Lieutenant with such consent as aforesaid should seem meet; anything in the Act of Parliament therein recited, namely, the Act of the 11th and 12th Victoria, Chapter 114, or any other Act of Parliament, or in the Deed of Trust therein recited, being a Deed of Trust bearing date the 10th December, 1859, or any other instrument affecting the premises notwithstanding.

Now, therefore, it is hereby declared and appointed by His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, with the consent of the two Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, whose names are signed hereto, that it shall be lawful for the said trustees for the time being, from time to time hereafter to demise the said lands, buildings, and premises known as the Mungret Agricultural School and Model Farm at the best rent and rents that can be reasonably had for the same, for such term and terms of years determinable or not upon the dropping of a life or lives, and either with or without power of surrender to any person or persons willing to become lessee or lessees thereof, so however that the said buildings and at least two acres of the said land to be held therewith, hereafter termed the school premises, shall be so demised for the purpose only of carrying out therein a school for the purposes, and under the rules and regulations hereinafter specified, and it is further directed and appointed that such school shall be conducted, managed, and carried on in the manner prescribed in the Scheme set forth in the Schedule hereto annexed, which Scheme shall be referred to, and incorporated with, every lease of the school premises, and it is also directed and appointed that the rents and profits of the lands, buildings, and premises, and the Trust Funds under the control of the trustees shall henceforth be used and applied under the control and direction of the trustees, for the purposes of instruction in the said school including the instruction in and promotion of agricultural science as in the said Scheme is mentioned.

Whereas the connection between the trustees and the Board of National Education has ceased, it is further directed and appointed that all future meetings for the appointment of a trustee to fill a vacancy shall be called by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, on the requisition of two surviving trustees.

SCHEME.

1. In addition to instruction in classics and science, instruction shall be afforded in the French language, and in the ordinary branches of a sound English education, suitable to a school as defined by the rules annexed to the Intermediate Education Act, 1878, or to the due preparation of pupils for university education, and also in the science of agriculture. The preparation of pupils for the examinations held pursuant to the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act, shall, together with preparation for university examinations, form the main purpose of said school.

2. No pupil attending the school shall be permitted to remain in attendance during the time of any religious instruction which the parents or guardian of such pupil shall not have sanctioned, and the time for giving religious instruction shall be fixed so that no pupil not remaining in attendance shall be excluded directly or indirectly from the advantage of the secular instruction given in the school.

3. The school shall be open to boys, without religious distinction, but inhabitants of the city and county of Limerick shall have a preference in obtaining admission to the school, and boys other than such inhabitants shall not be received if there be a sufficiency of such inhabitants to fill the vacant places, but no boy once received into the school shall be compelled to leave it merely by reason of any such inhabitant desiring admission. Candidates for admission to the school who may be refused by the manager shall have a power of appealing to the trustees, whose decision shall be final.

4. The fees to be paid by the boys who shall become pupils at the school, either as boarders or as day scholars, shall be fixed by the manager, with the assent of the trustees. The regulations as to meals, school and play hours, and holidays, shall be determined by the manager.

5. The head master of the school may be appointed and removed from time to time by the trustees, who shall make such arrangements for his remuneration as they may think fit. The number of other masters, teachers and monitors shall from time to time be fixed by the head master, with the consent of the trustees, and all such other masters, teachers, and monitors may be appointed and dismissed by the head master.

6. The maximum number of pupils, both as boarders and day pupils respectively, shall be fixed from time to time by the trustees.

7. Every house, whether of the school premises or otherwise, shall contain a clause prohibiting the lease or letting from assigning or sub-letting without the consent of the trustees.

8. Every person employed in the school as head master shall, at the time of his appointment, sign a document to the effect that he had read over this Scheme, as well as the bye-laws of the school in force for the time being, and accepted his appointment subject to them, and shall be held responsible for the observance of the said Scheme and bye-laws by the under teachers.

9. The Manager, with the consent of the trustees, may, from time to time, settle bye-laws for the management of the school, so that such bye-laws shall not in any case be inconsistent with this Scheme.

10. The trustees shall be visitors of the school, and shall hold a visitation once a year upon a day to be fixed by them. They may, in addition, hold a special visitation whenever they deem fitting, and each one of the trustees shall at all times have the authority to enter and inspect the school and enquire into all the details of its management.

11. The net annual income at the disposal of the trustees after payment of all outgoings shall be applied by them in giving such bourses or prizes to pupils as they may determine on. Such bourses or prizes shall be awarded after competitive examination in such subjects as the trustees and manager shall conjointly determine.

12. If the trustees think fit they may apply portion of the income of the trust funds, including rent and profits in the payment of an agricultural teacher and for the purchase of scientific apparatus, and such payments shall be considered an outgoing taking precedence of the foregoing application of the surplus towards bourses and prizes.

13. All powers hereby conferred upon the trustees shall be exercisable by a majority of the trustees present at a meeting duly summoned by notice. No trustee who at the time of summoning such meeting shall be (however temporarily) out of the United Kingdom need be summoned, and a meeting of the trustees shall be valid without his having been summoned.

14. These rules may at any time be amended or varied by the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, with the consent of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, or any two of them, upon receiving an application asking for such amendment or variation from a majority of the trustees for the time being.

(Signed)

SPENCER.

The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury hereby concur in the foregoing scheme.

REPORT OF VALUATION OF THE LANDS AND BUILDINGS OF MUNGRET COLLEGE.

See Evidence, p. 25, et seq.

Sir,—In obedience to your instructions, I made on the 8th instant an examination of the lands and buildings of Mungret College.

I have based my investigation on the case submitted for my information and guidance by the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Commission.

I begin by stating that the portions of the original buildings removed by the present lessees are a one-story office on the north, and about two yards of the end of a two-story building on the south side of the recent additions.

In my opinion, the value of the parts removed is so trifling as to be immaterial in a consideration of the value of the whole.

The original cost of the buildings was £7,500. Allowing for the appreciation of thirty years, and considering the state of repairs in which, as far as I could ascertain, the buildings were found in 1853, the present value of these buildings would be £8,500.

There are seventy-two statute acres of land, the letting value of which I estimate at £75. This is an estimate of the agricultural value of the land, supposing the buildings to be non-existent. It is based on the average prices of the past six years, and takes into account the enhanced value of land due to its proximity to the city of Limerick.

Estimating the value of the lands and buildings conformably to the condition laid down for my guidance, as between a willing seller on the one hand, and a willing buyer on the other,

The fair letting value of the land is	-	£75
The fair letting value of the buildings is	-	£125
Total letting value	-	£200
And
The fair selling price of the land is	-	£1,500
The fair selling price of the buildings is	-	£5,000
Total selling price	-	£6,500

I have the honour to be, &c.,

MEMORIAL OF CERTAIN OF THE INHABITANTS OF KERRY.

See Evidence, p. 39.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—

We, the undersigned members of the Church of Ireland, in the County of Kerry, beg to submit for the consideration of the Educational Endowments Commissioners the claims of the county upon any educational endowments available for redistribution, and also to bring under their notice the inadequacy of the existing provisions for Intermediate Education in Tralee.

With this object we would respectfully invite the attention of the Commissioners to the following considerations:—

1. That at the date of the last (1851) Census there were in the County of Kerry 5,807 members of the Church of Ireland, and that the great majority of these belonged to the classes for whom Intermediate Education is intended.

2. That although there are large endowments applicable for exclusively the higher education of the members of the Church of Ireland, without any restriction to any particular area, our county receives no direct advantage from these endowments.

3. That there does not now exist in Kerry any endowment for the purpose of Intermediate Education.

for members of the Church of Ireland, nor is there any Intermediate School for the members of the Church of Ireland in Kerry receiving aid from any endowment.

4. That the necessities of our county from the great educational centres, and from the existing endowed schools, increases the cost of education, and places obvious difficulties in the way of our availing ourselves of the advantages offered.

5. That efforts have from time to time been made to maintain without external aid private schools in Tralee for Intermediate Education, but from want of such encouragement and assistance as we now seek, the results attained, although so far satisfactory, are not such as may be hoped for, considering the numbers and position of the members of the Church of Ireland in our county.

We venture to hope that the Commissioners will hold a local enquiry in Tralee, and enable us to place before them evidence in support of this Memorial.

See Evidence, p. 39.

The MEMORIAL of the Very Rev. DEAN COFFEY, Parish Priest of Tralee, Co. Kerry, praying that a portion of the sum that may be available for the Endowment of Schools capable of affording education to enable Students to present themselves at the Intermediate and Royal University Examinations, may be allocated to Tralee.

The following memoranda are respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Commissioners:—

1. That the last census shows the population of Tralee, which is the county town of Kerry, to be 3,396. Of these, there are about 1,000 Protestants of all denominations. The Catholic population of the parish of Tralee, which consists of the town and large country district attached, is about 11,000.

2. In the way of primary education, there is nothing to complain of. There are three large convent schools in the town. There is a day school conducted by the Christian Brothers, and two large National Schools in connection with the Board of Education. From the following statistics, which I have kept for the past three years, it appears that the schools for primary education are very fully attended. The following table gives the average daily attendance for each year ending December 31st, in the schools of the parish. The figures, however, do not take into account the children attending the Industrial Schools under the management of the Christian Brothers and Sisters of Mercy, nor the children attending the workhouse schools, nor those attending the private schools in the town. They only give the average daily attendance at the schools of the parish (male and female) in connection with the National Board, and also the children attending the day school conducted by the Christian Brothers:—

For year ending Dec. 31st.	Average daily attendance.		Total.
	Boys.	Girls.
1884, ...	829.8	903.6	1733.4
1885, ...	806.6	832.4	1639.0
1886, ...	859.92	928.8	1788.72

I make the above statement to show that so far as the wants of primary education are concerned, there is nothing to complain of.

3. With regard to higher education, the town and parish are very much in want of the means of higher education. There is no school in the town worthy of the name. There is a day school in charge of the Dominican Fathers. It was founded some twenty-five years ago, but for some reason or another which I cannot explain, it has not been a success. Since the introduction of the Intermediate system, no boy from the school has succeeded in getting exhibition or prize; and at present, and for a considerable time past, the school has been attended by a few children only. It is manifest, therefore, that the curriculum of the school could not possibly be of that extensive and varied scope which education for the needs and purposes of the Intermediate and Royal University requires. There is another academy in the town conducted by a Catholic layman, but, though established for the past three years, it is attended by a few only, and the results of the Intermediate examinations within the period are nil. There is an Intermediate class conducted by the Christian Brothers in connection with their day school, at which some very fair successes have been scored this year—one being an exhibition of £15 for three years—but the staff of the Christian Brothers' School, being small, of course, if teaching energy be concentrated on a few boys, who will be likely to succeed at the Intermediate examinations, it must necessarily mean a subtraction of that attention which should be devoted specially to the purposes of primary education.

From the state of facts indicated, it is evident the town is sadly in want of a school, having for its scope and purpose, such a curriculum as would give students ample facility for the special preparation for success at the Intermediate and University Examinations.

4. With regard to endowments for the purpose, the only one with which I am acquainted is the Jeffers' Endowment, which, however, is of a prospective character. The late Mr. Patrick D. Jeffers, by his will dated the 22nd July, 1871, after mentioning certain sums to be disposed of for private and family purposes, directs the "residue of his property of every nature and kind, be employed for the purpose of founding a perpetual charity, the object of which would be to give a good education to boys, natives of Tralee or its immediate neighbourhood, children of the labouring and working classes, and not of gentlemen or of persons born or belonging to a higher class, whose talents and qualities may afford reasonable hopes of their rising in life, if well educated, and to forward them in college, professions, mercantile, scientific or commercial pursuits."

For the purpose thus specified, Mr. Jeffers left a large sum, the present value of which is about £18,000. Of this, however, a sum of £11,309 3s. 6d. is set apart in order to secure annuity for Mrs. Jeffers, during her life. The difference or nearly £7,000 is vested in various securities; and the yearly interest accruing therefrom is applied by the trustees to the accumulation of the capital, to be utilized only on the death of Mrs. Jeffers. The yearly interest of this surplus investment is about £335, and sometime since I had interview with Mr. John C. Nelligan, q.c., the Recorder of Kerry, who is one of the trustees, as to the advisability of applying this large yearly interest of £335, to the support of a school embodying the idea of Mr. Jeffers, and at the same time supplying what may be wanted for the needs of the Intermediate and Royal University Examinations. Mr. Nelligan very kindly said that he would entertain any project that may be put before him on the matter, but at the same time said, he would do nothing without first consulting legal opinion. With this view I forwarded the following letters and papers, giving details of Mr. Jeffers' will and plan of school which I proposed submitting from the Jeffers' Trust.

St. John's, Tralee,

March 23, '87.

MY DEAR MR. NELLIGAN,

As the labours of the Royal Commission necessarily took up all your time, I deferred putting my scheme before you in reference to the opening of the Jeffers' Institute here. Now that the present investments bring about £350 a year, clear of all charges, I think with such a handsome subsidy, it is a great pity not to open a school of the kind, which would enable boys to compete at the Intermediate and Royal University examinations. In the words of the will which I give, in Mr. Jeffers' own words (paper No. 1), the curriculum of the proposed school is perfectly in accordance with what is required for these examinations, save what may be necessary in the way of the classics. This, however, can be easily got over by tacking on to the school, a classical department. I propose to give a thorough education in all the subjects prescribed by Mr. Jeffers in the curriculum which he makes out, and the salary of the classical master could be had from fees of the pupils attachable to the school, and who should be paying pupils. Of course, the school in all its features need not necessarily be a free school.

The requirements of the will, will be sufficiently carried out by giving strictly gratuitous education to the boys of the class specified, but then there will be many others who would be glad to take advantage of the high class education afforded by an Institute of the kind and who will seek admission through fees. I propose that in connexion with the school, a series of evening classes be held, where young men, employed during the day, may prepare themselves for degrees in the Royal University. This, of itself, would bring a large figure, so that ample funds would be forthcoming for the payment of masters in subjects not contemplated by the will. At present when boys leave the primary schools of the parish, there is nothing to occupy their attention except newspaper literature, nothing to stir up the spirit of study, or occupy their serious attention; but if a school such as is contemplated be got up, their attention and ambition would be directed less to healthy channels, and one, it is needless to say, most useful to their future.

I give two papers.

(1.) My friend Mr. Jeffery's will.

(2.) Showing how future Institute may be organised, and plan of working.

With great respect, believe me,
Very truly yours.

JOHN COFFEY.

J. C. Nellgar, Esq., &c.

Paper No. 1.

1. Boys to be admitted are, viz. —

"Children of the working and labouring classes whose talents may afford reasonable hopes of their rising in life if well educated."

2. The trustees empowered to select boys having promises as detailed in (1), and from the poor schools of the parish.

3. The trustees are to open the school "as soon as they conveniently can, and to have a scheme carefully prepared and embodying details of management."

4. Curriculum of school specified in the will —

1. Religion.

2. English to all its branches — includes literature and composition.

3. Mathematics.

4. Natural Philosophy.

5. French and German.

6. Latin and Greek (when sufficiency in all preceding is assured).

Paper No. 2.

Scheme of future School.

1. Inasmuch as the trustees have the power of selecting the pupils admissible to the school, and from the poor schools of the parish, it will contribute to the efficiency of all such primary schools — Christian Brothers' and National — if admission into the Jeffery's Institute be had only through competitive examination, a certain standard therefore to be prepared, and boys coming up to, only admissible. This, as observed, will secure good working in the primary schools of the parish, and at the same time furnish great facility for selecting boys of promising ability for the future Institute.

The standard proposed to consist of, viz. — English Grammar; Writing from Dictation; Arithmetic, as far as Simple Interest; Geometry, Books I and 2; Algebra, to include simple equations of one unknown quantity.

2. Every such entrance examination to be held on or about the 1st August in each year.

3. That the number of pupils on the Jeffery's Foundation should consist — the first year — of thirty pupils, but in each successive year, the admissions should not exceed ten.

4. The daily routine of the school should be in charge of at least three Masters — The Languages' Master to get £100 a year salary; each of the two English and Mathematical Masters to get £100 a year.

With a view to stimulate the exertions of the masters and concentrate their energy on the work and progress of the school solely, it is proposed that all the fees arising from successes at the Intermediate and University Examinations be divided between the masters in such proportion as may seem best to the trustees, having regard to the nature and character of the subjects taught.

5. In addition to the subjects required for the Intermediate and Royal University Examinations, it is proposed to connect the school with the Science and Art Department, and classes to hold in connexion. The fees and other such emoluments derivable from successes to be divided amongst the masters, subject to the approbation of the trustees as specified in previous note.

6. That in connexion with the school, an evening class — to last from the 1st September to the 1st May — be formed for the benefit of the young men of the town, who may be anxious to secure degrees in Arts at the Royal University, and that they be charged for such attendance a sum not exceeding 4s a year.

7. That everything of a political character be strictly excluded from the school.

Mr. Nellgar, submitted the whole of the above project to Mr. Jelliffe, &c., and I received his decision on the 27th May last, in which he states —

"That my plan is calculated to defeat the objects of the charity as defined by the Testator's will," and, "that the trustees having regard to the terms and directions of the will, would not be safe in carrying out the scheme suggested."

I have taken no further steps in the matter. Considering the age of Mrs. Jeffery — also being now about fifty-six years — and the adverse opinion of counsel, the trustees could not be expected to open a school immediately, leaving for its object the high class education contemplated by Mrs. Jeffery.

This is a great loss to the youth of the town, in which, as I said, we have no school capable of affording anything approaching a high class education.

On the part of my parishioners I beg to bring the wants of this important town and district, in this particular, under the notice of the Commissioners, praying their fullest consideration of the matter and requesting a share in the endowments which may be at their disposal in the future.

Signed,

JOHN COFFEY, D.P., &c.,

Dean of Kerry.

MEMORANDUM submitted by the Rev. DENIS KELLY, VICE-PRESIDENT OF KILLALOE DIOCESAN COLLEGE.

See Evidence, p. 58, et seq.

Dioesan College, Ennis,
October 13th, 1887.

To the Secretary Educational Endowments Commission.

SIR, — As the representative of the trustees of the Diocesan College, Ennis, and of the Catholic population of Ennis and the vicinity, I had intended to make a formal claim before the Commission to have the endowment transferred from the Ennis Erasmus Smith School to the Diocesan College. In the abstract of intended evidence, which I had sent to the Comma-sion before the sitting in Ennis, one of the points was this: —

9. If permitted by the Commission to do so, I will state my view as to the rights of persons of all denominations to a share in the Erasmus Smith Endowment.

In the course of my evidence the opportunity of making the claim did not arise; but I learned after the sitting had concluded that it was perfectly allowable to have done so. In the interests, therefore, of the parties above-mentioned, I now formally make that claim; and I request that the following statement, which I had prepared previous to my appearance before the Commission, and was ready to submit upon oath, be added to my evidence.

Erasmus Smith determined to devote his Irish estates to charitable uses. The use he selected was the founding of schools for the middle and lower classes. Still the education was to be secondary education, in Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, as well as in writing and casting accounts; and those who so desired were to be prepared to enter Dublin University. The charter was expressly granted for "founding Grammar Schools."

The charter says:—"That the said free schools shall from henceforth for ever hereafter be . . . and be used for free schools for the teaching and instructing of twenty such poor children or scholars, who shall dwell or inhabit within two English miles of the said respective schools, and also for the teaching and instructing of all and every of the children of the tenants of the said Erasmus Smith, his heirs . . . at what distance soever from the said schools such tenants shall dwell or inhabit."

The purpose of the foundation is here clearly set forth. The schools are founded, in the first instance, for the benefit of the lower classes residing within two miles of the schools; and, secondly, for the benefit of the farming classes residing on the estates of the founder. We should inquire to what race and religion those children belonged that were the objects of this bounty.

The Deed of Trust throws light on this inquiry. Erasmus Smith therein sets forth as the motive of his action:—"Whereas most of the time which in former times have reigned in this nation have proceeded of the lack of bringing up of the youth of this realm either in public or in private schools whereby through good discipline they might be . . . in literature and good manners, and so learn to lead those heinous and manifold offences, which when they come to years did daily perpetrate and commit."

And again:—"For the great and ardent desire which he hath that the poor children living upon any part of his lands in Ireland should be brought up in the fear of God and good literature and to speak the English tongue."

And lower down in the same instrument he says:—"The intentions of all parties to these presents is that the children of the poor tenants inhabiting on the lands aforesaid and the children of such as are poor or lived by their labour are to be taught at the said schools free and without paying anything for their teaching to the said masters."

Now, who were those persons that, in the mind of Erasmus Smith, having come to years "did daily perpetrate and commit heinous offences?" Certainly not the Cromwellian soldiers; but the native Irish Papists. The persons that required to be "taught the English tongue" were the native Irish Papists. They were the persons that required to be taught "literature, and good manners, and good discipline," that they might quietly and peaceably submit to the new proprietors—the soldiers and adventurers.

This proposition is the more evident when we recall the condition of Ireland in that year, 1687. The subjugation of Ireland by the Cromwellian armies had been completed in 1652. The Act of Settlement was being carried into effect by the Commissioners, who sat at Loughrea. The native Irish landed proprietors were, with their families, servants and cattle, wandering their weary way to Connaught. The common people remained behind, defenceless and unprotected, as the tenants, cottiers, and servants of the new proprietors. (See "Prendergast's Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland," pages 97, 98, and passim.)

Some of the native Irish, under the name of Tories, were turbulent, and troublesome to the new settlers. It was naturally thought that the natives would become peaceful, useful undelinquents if they were taught "to speak the English tongue," if they were "instructed in literature and good manners."

Erasmus Smith was himself a London grocer, that "adventured" a small sum of money for the purpose of carrying on the Parliamentarian War in Ireland, and got large confiscated estates in return (see Prendergast p. 395). He believed that all the troubles in Ireland—"the heinous and manifold offences"—arose from the ignorance of the native population, "from lack of the bringing up of the youth in public or private schools," and therefore his first, main, chief intention was to educate that population—the native Irish Catholics—in "good literature and to speak the English tongue."

He would not, of course, allow Popery or the Irish language, to be taught in the schools, for these were the instruments of propagating "heinous and manifold offences." The education of the Irish Catholic population was the substance of his intention; the teaching of some form of Protestantism was an accident of the manner in which that intention was to be carried out. In the Deed of Trust in 1687, the religious teaching was to be Protestant, the Catechism of the Assembly of Divines. In the Charter in 1689, the teaching was to be Episcopalian, Archbishop Usher's Catechism. My contention—that the removal of ignorance and the consequent introduction of a more submissive spirit to the new order of things, was the primary intention of Erasmus Smith—is much strengthened by the fact that he changed so easily from one form of religious teaching to a widely different form of teaching. Let the "Wild Irish" be educated in any form, provided they are educated; but let Popery form no part of the teaching, for that is the cause of their turbulence.

Now, in modern times, all men agree in holding a higher opinion of the Catholic religion, than the opinion held in that age. Therefore, it is my solemn conviction, that the Commission may, and are bound to, carry out the substantial intention of Erasmus Smith, though they cannot do so without departing from the manner he intended.

At present it is impossible to educate the native Catholic population and to retain a Protestant principle as the regulating principle of the schools. The Commission, therefore, is in this dilemma, they must abandon the persons whom Erasmus Smith intended to educate, or they must abandon the manner in which he intended to educate them. Natural justice demands that the Commission should keep the persons and abandon the manner; that they should keep the substance and abandon the accidents.

One of the Erasmus Smith's schools is situated in Ennis, which town has a Catholic population of 5,908, and 509 of all other denominations; but the area that most nearly corresponds with the circuit of two-mile radius from which the twenty poor boys are to be selected, is the parish of Drumcliff, which has a Catholic population of 8,149, and 436 of all other denominations. It is, therefore, evident that the manner of carrying out the founder's intention has become impossible; the substance of that intention should then be preserved by transferring the endowment to the Diocesan College, which among 8,149 Catholics of the parish of Drumcliff, might easily select twice twenty boys, to whom a Grammar School education would be highly useful as the means of earning an honourable livelihood, but who are unable to pay for it.

The Erasmus Smith Board has at present no property in the neighbourhood of Ennis, but from the Report (Appendix, pages 33 and 34) of the Commission of 1854-5, and the evidence given before them, and from other earlier documents, it is certain that the Board had property in this immediate neighbourhood, but through neglect the property was allowed to lapse, and to vest in some person or persons that have no right to it. If the Board or its officers failed to discharge their duty, that is no reason why Ennis should not claim the endowment for the children of the tenants on those lands which should have this privilege attached, as well as for the poor children of the two-mile circuit.

Though Ennis was not one of the three schools mentioned in the Charter, it was founded by the Governor on the same lines and under the same conditions as the other three. It seems to me that it is only as far as it has been dealt with under the conditions of the charter that it has had any right to existence at all; for the Act of George I. gave the Governor powers to found English Schools only; but Kinnis has always been a Grammar School. Its existence under the Charter is a fait accompli, and should be accepted as such. In the Draft Scheme which the Governor submitted for approval to the Commission, they say:—"Whereas, in or about the year 1773, the Governor of the said schools founded and established a fourth Grammar School at Ennis, subject to the same rules and regulations as were then in force, in reference to the three original Grammar Schools."

I am perfectly satisfied that the fund is at present applied contrary to the intentions of Erasmus Smith. The schools have become fashionable learning schools for the rich, and high classes to the exclusion of the tenant and artisan class. The Head Master of Drogbeda took pride in the fact that his boarders came from all parts of Ireland, and were paying £54 each per year. He made the heroic reduction to £104 for two brothers. The same condition of things prevails in the other schools. If that is not a departure from the intentions of Erasmus Smith, I cannot fancy how that intention can be departed from. The Vice-Chancellor, in his evidence before the Commission, declared that "The schools were doing very good work as high-class schools." That may be so; but that was not the work Erasmus Smith intended them to do. When their funds are re-arranged with a share, or the whole (according to the needs of the population in the different localities) for Catholics, Presbyterians, or others, they will continue to do good work; they will continue to do the work Erasmus Smith intended, though not in the precise manner he intended, for that manner has become impossible by the lapse of time and the change of social conditions.

I may call the attention of the Commission to the fact that the Diocesan College is open to day boys of all religious denominations. The superiors accept a conscience clause in accordance with the conscience clause of the Intermediate Education Act, but require that outside religion the boys should submit to the rules and discipline of the school. The superiors would not wish to encourage the advent of Protestant boarders, but regarding boarders no local necessity can arise.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

(Signed), DENIS KELLY.

The Secretary,

Educational Endowments Commission.

Therefore, in a period of twenty-one years, 992 boys entered the Diocesan College, i.e., an average of 47.2 entrances per year. The most flourishing year of the College's career was 1874-5, in which 83 boys entered, and 125 were in attendance; and the least flourishing year was 1867-8, when 24 entered and 63 were in attendance.

The attendances, speaking generally, varied from 106 to 136; the average annual attendance on the twenty-one years is 127.6.

MEMORIAL of INHABITANTS of ENNIS.

See Evidence, p. 84 et seq.

We, residents of Ennis and its vicinity, acting in concert with influential parties throughout the county of Clare, are strongly of opinion that the maintenance of the Erasmus Smith College in a full and efficient manner is absolutely necessary for the promotion of the education of the children dwelling in the district. We emphatically declare that any diminution of its efficiency would most seriously inconvenience and injure an important section of the community who have no other means or place of education for their sons. We, therefore, earnestly request the Royal Commission now inquiring into the matter to take such steps as they consider necessary to establish and increase its utility. We hope that it will again resume its former eminent position when the present depressed circumstances of the country pass away.

MEMORANDUM of EVIDENCE of Dr. THOMAS LAFFAN, a CITIZEN of CASHEL, CHAIRMAN of its MUNICIPAL BODY, and a TAXPAYER.

See Evidence, p. 74 et seq.

The undersigned having been engaged with a patient between the hours of 9 A.M. and 2 P.M. on the day of the Commissioners' sitting in Cashel, October 13th, was thereby prevented from tendering his evidence.

1. He begs first to point out that there is a grievous necessity for a school in Cashel in which the Greek and Latin languages would be thoroughly taught as pointed out in his previous evidence before your Commission.

2. Two documents are herewith enclosed for the accuracy of both the undersigned is prepared to tender proof.

3. The first of these shows that the State alone now endows primary education to the amount of £150 2s. annually in a town of less than 4,000 of population, being an increase of £158 6s. 2d. over the amount given in 1844, when the Corporation Grant was first given.

4. In addition to this the Corporation gives at 2s. a year two houses, one of which at least cost £3,000, while a third house has been supplied by the general public at the cost of over £1,000.

5. It is unnecessary to observe that all these hundreds, which are thus levied on an education suitable to the requirements of the working classes only, come out of the pockets of all classes.

6. The second document enclosed is a copy of the Charter under which the estates are derived, out of the proceeds of which the £200 a year given by the Corporation for educational purposes come.

7. A cursory examination of this Charter will show that the benefits of the property which was originally formed directly by the estates was intended for the benefit of all citizens and not of one class only.

8. That the undersigned is not in a position (although he is in a better one than that of many parents in Cashel), to pay from 200 to 300 a year for the education of each of his boys at a Grammar School, or as it is called in Ireland, a college or a university college, etc., etc., and he himself is indebted to the existence of such a school in times past for an education, which, without such, he would never have been able to obtain.

9. That the undersigned respectfully protests against continuing to allocate the whole funds derived from public taxes and local property for the purposes of primary education exclusively.

10. That the Commissioners are respectfully reminded of the statement of Mr. Matthew Arnold made now many years ago, substantially to this effect, that the middle classes of these kingdoms were the most ignorant in Europe, and that unless secondary schools were endowed and supported by the State were established, these kingdoms would be beaten out of the field of the World's commerce by the better educated French and German middle classes, and your attention is called to the singular exactness with which that prophecy is being now fulfilled as disclosed by the various consular reports appearing from time to time.

11. Under those circumstances the undersigned earnestly prays that the £100 a year at the least now given to the Male National School in the town shall be given for the nucleus of an endowment of a classical school which would supply the wants of classes, who are now wholly unprovided with facilities for such education.

12. The undersigned recalls the fact testified by him, that so one boy has ever obtained even a pass in Greek out of the Cashel Christian Brothers' Schools, and that if it were not for the deplorable arrangement under which a whole range of subjects are included in the Intermediate result fee list, which nobody before ever thought of including in any list of intermediate subjects, it would not be for a moment possible for the most ignorant parent in Cashel to be imposed upon by the allegation that a classical education was forthcoming in his midst.

13. The undersigned has seen with lively satisfaction that that talented priest, Rev. Dr. Humphries, of Tipperary, has testified to the necessity for the existence of a similar classical school there; though there, as here, there is a Christian Brothers' School.

14. The undersigned specially directs the attention of the Rev. Dr. Molloy, one of the original administrators of the Intermediate Act, to this significant testimony in favour of his views as to the utter sham that Act has proved to be to the struggling Catholic middle classes, even in the richest inland towns in all Ireland.

15. The undersigned is prepared to testify on oath to the foregoing, should the Commissioners deem it necessary to examine him orally.

In asserting his opinions as a taxpayer and representative man, and in daring to defend the interests of his children, he appeals to the majority of the Board to use the large powers with which the Act invests them, and prove that as cultured gentlemen they are as willing as able to earn the gratitude of future generations of Cashel men by placing higher education within their grasp. This memorial at all events will save him from their reproach.

To continue, the undersigned does not care whether a lay or religious person be appointed to such school, provided that he satisfies the State that he is competent to teach Greek and Latin, that he devotes his entire school time to such education, that he allows of some visitation to be named by your Commission, and that he be appointed subject to these reasonable conditions by the Town Commissioners.

I beg to call your attention to the corporate documents forwarded by my direction to you in which the strong moral claim of the people of Cashel was set forth to a share of any endowment which you may have by and by at your disposal for secondary education.

To conclude I also enclose copies of resolutions of the Corporation of Cashel, by which they agreed to allocate as soon as they could obtain permission to do so, a yearly grant for the establishment of a classical school. It is true that the sum proposed to be allocated was to be in addition to the sum now given for educational purposes, but our income was then very different from what it is now, and we had not then in prospect an impending compulsory purchase Act which will reduce our income one-half. Then again, fundamental changes in primary education involving School Boards, local taxation, &c., which are now among the certainties of the near future, were not then even thought of. When such changes do take place the existing primary grants will be a dead loss to the Commission without bringing any gain whatsoever to the existing recipients. I should also add that (for it was at my instance the grant was voted) I was then as fully satisfied as I am now of the monstrous injustice of giving all our money for primary education, but I proposed to make the charge an addition to the existing charges solely to avoid the opposition of vested interests.

COPIES OF RESOLUTIONS OF THE CASHEL TOWN COUNCIL referred to by Mr. LAFFAN in his MEMORANDUM.

Monday, June 4th, 1877.

Resolved—"That Mr. O'Leary, Town Clerk, be directed to request Mr. E. Dwyer Gray, M.P., to use his best exertions to extend the benefits of the Public Libraries Bill to the smallest municipal towns, and to procure for corporations possessed of property, the power to use such property for the objects of the Bill, as also in the establishment of schools for technical education connected therewith."

Monday, June 14th, 1880.

Proposed by Mr. WHITE, seconded by Dr. LAFFAN:—

Resolved unanimously—"That Mr. Grace be requested to make application to the Court of Chancery for an order empowering the Commissioners to expend £320 per year, portion of the Corporate Funds, for educational purposes, instead of £260, the yearly sum now disbursed in accordance with the Deed of the Right Honorable Edmund Spenser, dated the 19th June, 1843, the £320 to be disposed of as follows:—

- £80 to the Convent School,
- £40 to the Male National,
- £25 to the Protestant,
- £45 for an Intermediate School; and
- £130 Christian Brothers.

The Christian Brothers to get the £175, on the understanding that they will keep a competent classical teacher, and permit the five Commissioners, and the parish priest for the time being, to examine the schools."

Minutes of proceedings of the Commission of the City of Cashel, at a special meeting held in the Town Hall this day, for the purpose of taking into consideration an application from Mr. Kearney for the use of the house occupied by the late Mr. Delehant, for the purpose of establishing a classical school. Present—John Mullins, chairman; M. O'Sullivan, J. Wood, T. H. Sayers, D. Ferris, M. O'Ryan, A. O'Meara, and Thomas Laffan. Ordered—"That this meeting do adjourn until Mr. Kearney will produce testimonials from his last employer."

Monday, March 1st, 1875.

Dr. Laffan gives notice he will move at next monthly meeting—"That this Body do revert to its former custom of contributing a small annual grant in the encouragement of Intermediate education in Cashel, and that for this purpose a sum of £25 be voted to aid in establishing a classical school for this purpose."

Tuesday, June 15th, 1875.

Moved by Dr. LAFFAN, seconded by Mr. FEENE:—

"That this Body do revert to its former custom of contributing a small annual grant for the encouragement of Intermediate education in Cashel, and that for this purpose a sum of £25 be voted to aid in establishing a classical school for this city."

Roland, by Divine Mercy and favour of the Apostolic See, Archbishop of Cashel. To all to whom these present Letters shall come. Greeting. We have inspected the Letters Patent of the Lord Mauricivus of good memory, formerly Archbishop of Cashel, our predecessor, in these words:—

"Mauricivus by Divine Mercy and by the favor of the Apostolic See. To all to whom these presents shall come. Greeting. Know ye all that We of our special grace and of our certain knowledge and mere motion have given, granted, and by this our present charter have confirmed with the consent of our Dean and our whole Chapter held in the Chapter House, and specially summoned and assembled for this purpose in a solemn discussion, and with mature deliberation concerning the utility of our Archiepiscopal

City or Town of Cashel, to the Provost and twelve Burgesses of the said City of Cashel, or of whatever lesser number they be who now are, and who for the time shall be, for ever, our City of Cashel afterwards which the Most Excellent Prince Henry by the Grace of God King of England, Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, Earl of Anjou, and Lord of Ireland, by his Letters Patent of the date of the 15th day of November in the 13th year of his reign had given and granted unto us and our successors for ever, in free, pure, and perpetual alms, free from every charge, taxation, or secular service, excepting and reserving to us the Baks House and Shambles of the said Town of Cashel—likewise we have also given, granted, and by this our present charter have confirmed to the said Provost and Burgesses who now are, and who for the time shall be for ever Free pasture for all and every of the Animals of them and of their tenants whomsoever, and of all persons inhabiting and sojourning in the said town and the Burghage thereof, in all our Lands except meadows, standing corn lands and Mares and power and authority to hold therein a Hundred and Court Baron, and to hear and decide pleas and plaints relating to said Hundred and Court in said town and the Burghage thereof by the Provost of the said town for the time being for ever, from time to time as often as it shall please the said Provost. To have and to hold all and singular the aforesaid Town, pasture, Hundred and Court with all their rights and appurtenances (except the Bake House and Shambles aforesaid excepted) to the aforesaid Provost and Burgesses and their heirs and Successors of us and our successors for ever rendering annually to us and our successors out of the said Town and Pastures with their appurtenances the chief rent of nine marks, and out of the Hundred and Court of the said town one mark of current money of Ireland by equal portions at the Feasts of St. Michael and Easter for every service. Now we, the said Mauriceus the Archbishop, and our successors with the consent aforesaid, will warrant, acquit, and by these presents in all places defend the said Town, Pasture, Hundred and Court with all their rights and appurtenances (except as before excepted) to the aforesaid Provost and Burgesses their heirs and successors for ever against all persons. In testimony whereof we have caused Our Seal, together with the Seal of Our Chapter, to be affixed to these presents. Dated at Cachel on the 13th day of July in the 14th year of the reign of King Henry aforesaid."

Now We, the said Roland, Archbishop, deeming the Charter Donative and Grant of the aforesaid

Mauriceus Our former predecessor to be confirmed and acceptable have approved, ratified and confirmed, and by the tenor of these presents We approve, ratify, and confirm them for Us and Our Successors as far as in us lies, and according to the force, form, and effect of the same with the consent of the Dean and the whole Chapter of our Church of Cachel with whom—presupposing the honesty and utility of the said Town of Cachel—we have had and made a solemn discussion and mature deliberation in this behalf in Our Chapter House, and being specially summoned and assembled in Chapter for this purpose, and We now of Our certain knowledge and mere motion with the consent of our Dean and Chapter aforesaid have anew given and granted and by these presents We give and grant All these the Town, Pastures, Hundred, Court, and the rest of the premises and every parcel thereof to Mauriceus Curney the present Provost and the Burgesses who now are, and who for the time shall be, their heirs and successors in the same manner and form in which the aforesaid Mauriceus Our Predecessor granted the same. In testimony whereof we have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent by appending thereto Our Seal and the Seal of Our Chapter.

Dated at Cachel on the 13th day of October in the year of our Lord 1557.

LETTER of JOHN FAWCETT, Esq., HEAD MASTER.

See Cork Evidence generally, p. 77 et seq.

21st January, 1888.

DEAR SIR,—As my school is a private one, I did not think that any evidence with regard to it would be received by the Commissioners when in Cork. However, I have observed in the papers that evidence has been tendered by and accepted from masters of private schools, and have therefore taken the liberty of making a short statement about the Queen-street School. It was established in 1881. There are at present four assistant masters—two M.A.'s, B.U.I., a Graduate B.U.I., and an Under Graduate and Exhibitioner. The number of pupils on the roll is 79, average attendance, 73. During the past four years we have obtained 4 Junior Exhibitions in Trinity College, Dublin; 1 Senior Exhibition, and 1st Classical Scholarship, 1887, besides First Honours in Classics, Honours in Mathematics, and a First Prize in French. In the Royal University 2 Exhibitions and numerous prizes at Matriculation, First and Second University Examinations. In the Queen's College, Cork, 7 Scholarships (including 3 Firsts). In the Intermediate 9 Exhibitions and numerous prizes. Last year 18 entered—results, 3 exhibitions, 4 prizes, 14 passes (13 with Honours). The school is virtually Protestant, as there are only three Catholics on the roll at present. The above results entitle us to rank first among the Protestant schools of the South of Ireland.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

JOHN FAWCETT, B.A., F.R.S.,
 Head Master.

No. X. (a).

The Fourth Year of GEORGE I, 1717, Chap. 14, Secs. 10 & 11.

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 91.

And whereas several well disposed persons have, with the consent of the minister and churchwardens of the parish of St. Mary's, Shandon, in the north suburbs of the City of Cork, erected two schools called The Green Coat Hospital of the said parish of St. Mary's, Shandon, in which hospital one hundred poor children of both sexes are already placed and educated in the principles of the Protestant religion established by law in this Kingdom, and have also built a house, with suitable accommodations for the use of one master and one mistress for the purposes aforesaid, with a convenient library as also a decent almshouse for eighteen poor decayed housekeepers, of the said parish, which several buildings, with the ground belonging thereto, contain in length from north to south one hundred and twenty feet, and in breadth from east to west one hundred feet, bounded on the east with a row of elm trees, and on the north with a stone quarry, on the west with a row of lime trees, and on the south with another row of lime trees, that front the said buildings, which said piece or parcel of ground does now belong to the said minister of the said parish in right of the said church, and was entirely useless until employed in the said buildings, now to the intent and purpose that the said piece of ground may for ever hereafter be applied to the said piece and charitable uses, be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the said piece or parcel of ground, with all the buildings which now are, or at any time hereafter shall be, erected thereon, shall be and are hereby vested and settled in and upon the Right Honourable Robert Earl of Kildare, and James Earl of Bessborough, patrons of the said church, and their heirs; the Right Reverend Peter, Lord Bishop of Cork, and his successors, lords bishops of Cork for the time being; the Mayor of Cork, and his successors Mayors of Cork for the time being, the Honourable St. John Redcliffe, Esquire, Sir Staadish Martstenge, Bart., Francis Edwards of London, Esquire, John Rogerson, Esquire, the Honourable Brigadier-General Robert Scerne, Edward Hoar, and Edmund Knapp, Esquires, Members of Parliament for the City of Cork, Colonel Robert Rogers, Captain James Manla, Philip Crofts, Esquire, John Meade, Esquire, Edward Brown, Esquire, Doctor George Rogers, Mr. Abraham Morris, the Reverend Mr. Richard Baldwin, Mr. John Hawkins, Mr. John Carleton, Mr. Daniel Power, Mr. Edward Webber, Mr. William Masters, Mr. Daniel Thresher, and their heirs, and the minister and churchwardens of the said parish and their successors for the time being, to the intent and purpose, and upon this special trust and confidence, that the said piece or parcel of ground, and the buildings thereon, shall for ever hereafter be applied to and disposed of to the pious and charitable uses aforesaid; and that the said several persons, their respective heirs and successors are hereby created and erected into a body politic or corporate to that intent only by the name of trustees for the Green Coat Hospital in the parish of Shandon in the City of Cork.

XI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the above named persons, their respective heirs and successors, or any five or more of them being met together in the library of the said hospital, the minister of the said parish for the time being having notice of such meeting, shall have full power to direct the disbursement of all such moneys as shall from time to time be given and received towards the educating and maintaining the said children, and paying their out apprentices, and paying the respective salaries to the said master and mistress, and towards the support of the said eighteen poor decayed housewives, and keeping the said buildings in sufficient repair, and other necessary uses of the said hospital, and that the said trustees constituted by virtue of this Act, or any five of them, and any other trustees, may be enabled to add and elect from time to time such other trustees as they shall see convenient; and that the persons so elected shall have like interest, power, and authority as is hereby vested in the persons above named.

I certify that this is a correct copy of portion of the Act.

EXTRACTS from the WILL of WILLIAM MASTERS.

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 91.

I give and bequeath the sum of thirty pounds str. for ever to be employed as followeth—£30 the first year to be lent to 4 Protestant tradesmen free of interest for half a year, they giving security to pay it promptly to the day, and if the overman of this charity see fit, may take the same security for another half a year, but no pledges or pawling, if they have any such, let them give it as security to their bondman. I propose in 20 years there will be £400 in bank to be disposed of in my manner at £5 each family, no more nor no less, and because I would have this charity managed carefully, have ordered £10 pr. ann. to the person appointed for t<sup>e</sup> purpose, and after the 20 years w<sup>h</sup> makes the £400, every year then the Minister and Church Wardens of the Parish of Shandon are to employ said £20 pr. ann. in marrying four young women to Protestant tradesmen, having always regard to those girls bred up in the Green Coat Hospital, and that the above £400 may never be wanting, in case sometimes the security for the £5 may fail, then one of the marriages must cease, till said £400 is made good. Item, my Will is that my Ex<sup>rs</sup> do pay unto the treasurer and trustees of the Green Coat Hospital by £20 pr. ann<sup>l</sup> as will bring water from Kerry Hall in Loden pipes to the almshouses and Charity School as well for the ease of the poor old people as a security ag<sup>t</sup> accident of fire, this money to be paid out of Mr. Jno. Taylor's leases of 2 tenement in Mallow Lane, which makes clear 30 pounds p<sup>r</sup> ann<sup>l</sup> for about 20 years the clear rent of said £20 p<sup>r</sup> years after the water is brought, is to go to the poor of the almshouses, reserving £20 every year to buy books of the whole duty of man, and for the use of the Infirmary, all as the treasurer and trustees shall direct, but care must be taken t<sup>e</sup> sufficient is kept to repair the Infirmary, till, please God to send more benefactors, for fear the above £400 may at some time or other be sunk or lost, have thought it better that said £30 be paid into the treasury of the Green Coat Hospital, and that he and the Minister of the Parish of St. Mary Shandon, do employ every year £30 to the use following, that is to say, where a Protestant family in s<sup>t</sup> Parish, or on the Marsh, that has a trade and can have 2 creditable neighbours to certify his being a careful industrious man, and that they believe 40s. may assist him, see as to put him above want, then is my Will that such a family shall be encouraged, not only one year, but as often as the above persons shall think fit, but where it is found that any family becomes idle, and does not improve by that money, such family is to be refused ever after, unless there is good authority for his reformation, see t<sup>e</sup> every year 8 families will have 40s. each, and £5 every year for ever to the Charity Schools, and for the other £10 to be employed in making of two Protestant serv<sup>t</sup> maidens at £5 each every year, provided they marry Protestant tradesmen, having always regard to those girls bred up in the Green Coat Hospital, and every such couple the first year to be encouraged w<sup>h</sup> forty shillings as a needy family, w<sup>h</sup> will make them a portion of £7 each, and as they improve and behave themselves, that t<sup>e</sup> treasurer and minister for the time being will be mindful of em, but before any girl has the advantage of the £3, the last Mr. or Mrs. where she liv<sup>d</sup> must certify under their hands of her faithfulness and modesty. . . . The rest and residue of all my worldly substance of what kind or nature whatsoever, w<sup>h</sup> otherwise herein devised disposed of, bequeathed or appointed, and all my Estate, right, title or interest of in or to the same and every part thereof,—I give and bequeath unto the said Stephen Masters, who I make sole Executor of this my last Will.

I do hereby name and appoint Doct<sup>r</sup> Edw<sup>d</sup> Barry, Mr. Thomas Brown and Mr. Nat Barry, or any two of them, trustees and overseers of this my last Will, and if any controversy or doubt shall arise or happen, touching the meaning or interpretation of any thing in this my Will, the same shall be determined by my trustees, or the survivor or survivors of them, and what they shall judge and determine concerning the same shall be binding to all persons herein concerned, the said overseers to have £5 a<sup>y</sup> for minding.

The thirty pounds given to the poor family, the Charity Schools and two marriages yearly forever, is out of the lands of Keelbar, a fee farm lease to Mr. Gamble for £21 7<sup>s</sup> ann<sup>l</sup>, and the lands of Donnerrey, a fee farm lease to Ald<sup>r</sup> Brown for £8, both farms as good as a charity. Note<sup>d</sup>—saying that Lisagave is given to Mrs. Judith Brown, and my interest in Brown Street given Mr. Tho. Brown, yet forasmuch as I was security for Ald<sup>r</sup> Brown to Mr. Spread and to Mrs. Plumer for her debt, and for sove those incumbrances may not be cleared, it is my Will that both Lisagave and the Ground in Brown Street be made subject to pay any such debts before either of the parties receive any benefit of s<sup>d</sup> Lisagave. . . . All my former Wills are made void by this, given under my hand and seals, this 31st day of March in the year of Our Lord, Seventeen hund<sup>d</sup> and twenty Seven, 1727.

CORK PRIMARY SCHOOL ENDOWMENTS.

No. XI.

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 95.

The following RESOLUTIONS were adopted at CONFERENCE between the DIOCESAN BOARD of EDUCATION and the CLERGY and REPRESENTATIVES of the CITY PARISHES.

- 1—"That with reference to the Education of our Church of Ireland children in primary schools, it is desirable that the city should be regarded as a whole rather than as consisting of distinct parishes with a primary school in each parish."
- 2—"That in the opinion of this conference in order to provide for the wants of the Church children of Cork, in addition to the Model Schools, four primary schools conducted on the best principles should be maintained—one in the neighbourhood of St. Luke's Church; one at the north side of the river not far from the North Gate Bridge; one on the east of the city for the central district; and one on the south side of the city at some site in the neighbourhood of the Cathedral and St. Nicholas Church."
- 3—"That, with a view of carrying out the resolution adopted by the conference held in June, it is desirable that a representative School Board be constituted to manage the district schools mentioned in the resolution, consisting of the bishop, as chairman, and certain other members, clerical and lay, to be hereafter named."
- 4—"That the school board should consist of the bishop, as chairman, the incumbents of the nine city churches, and one lay representative for each parish, to be chosen every three years at the Easter Vestry, and six members to be co-opted by the foregoing members at the first meeting after their election."
- 5—"That we recommend to the Diocesan Council that application be made to the Commissioners to incorporate the Diocesan Board of Education for the purpose of holding educational trusts throughout the diocese."
- 6—"That, in any scheme proposed by the Commissioners, a clause should be introduced to the effect that, without the consent of the present incumbent of any parish, there shall be no interference with existing parochial endowments during his incumbency."
- 7—"That if the Commissioners sanction the formation of the School Board, proposed in Resolution III, the settlement of details as to the sites of the district schools and the distribution of such educational funds as may be entrusted to them should be left to the discretion of the School Board."

* The Diocesan Council subsequently recommended the following as Trustees (instead of Diocesan Board)—The Lord Bishop, W. E. Meade, Esq., Savage French, Esq., O'Donnovan, and Anderson Cooper, Esq.

CROFTON ENDOWED SCHOOL, MACROOM.

No. XII. (a.)

STATEMENT of Rev. D. O'SULLIVAN, Rector of Macroom.

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 124.

This school was established by the will of Mrs. Maria A. Crofton, dated 17th December, 1832.

The school was under the management of the Rev. Robert Kirchhoff, Rector of Clondrohid, from its foundation up to 1859, when he died, and after him, under his successor, the Rev. J. Terence Kyle, until his death in 1863.

In December, 1835, the Parish of Clondrohid was united to that of Macroom and the rector of the united parishes succeeded to the management of the school.

Every child attending the school when able to read has been provided with a Bible since the school was established in compliance with Mrs. Crofton's desire.

The endowment consists of £90 a year, into Irish currency, with a residence. The sum of £35 is paid to the teacher and £5 is reserved for repairs and insurance of premises.

An efficient teacher cannot be procured for a salary of £32 or so sterling. I would therefore suggest that the school be transferred to the neighbouring town of Macroom, as has been done under similar circumstances in the case of a school founded by the same will, by its removal recently from Luchkappe to Ashford, in the county Wicklow.

The salary derived from the endowment, if added to the stipend provided for Macroom School, would afford an income sufficient to establish a first-class school in a central position.

The children likely to avail of the advantages of the endowment, in accordance with Mrs. Crofton's wishes, can attend a school in Macroom as conveniently as at the present situation of the Crofton School.

The number has been reduced to seven, and in the interest of these children the change I suggest would be most desirable.

DEWIS O'SULLIVAN, A.M.,
Rector of Macroom.

No. XII. (b).

STATEMENT OF REV. M. AHERN, P.P., Clondrohid.

See Evidence, p. 134.

MY LORD AND GENTLEMEN,—You will have perceived by referring to the enclosed will of Mrs. Crofton, that the endowment at Clondrohid was intended by the pious foundress to be non-sectarian as a distinction is made between it and the endowment at Wicklow.

A Catholic teacher taught in the school for a period of five years after the death of Mrs. Crofton and had to leave the school because she then agent over the property insisted that the Protestant version of the Holy Scriptures should be read in the school. The Catholic children then left the school and went to the new schools which the parish priest was obliged to have built for the education of the children of the neighborhood. These schools have been under the National Board ever since, but the accommodation is quite insufficient to meet the educational requirements of the district. So crowded are the schools that the manager was threatened to have the grant withdrawn if an assurance were not given to limit the numbers to fifty-seven in each school, whereas the numbers on rolls are 120 and 140 respectively, and the average for last year about 73 and 90.

The affidavit enclosed shows the numbers that had been attending the endowed school for some years up to January, 1886, since which time no child has attended the school (except the children of the teacher) because there is no Protestant poor child in the neighborhood.

I therefore respectfully submit that it is high time the scandal should be put an end to, and that the endowment which for nearly fifty years has been exclusively applied to Protestant educational interests should now be applied, as it was intended, for the education of the poor children of the locality who are nearly all Catholics.

I take the liberty of suggesting that a portion of the two acres be given as sites for male and female new schools under trustees to be appointed by the Endowed School Commissioners for the proper administration of the endowment and in connection with the National Board, and the present residence (enlarged if necessary) be made available as residences for principal teachers with gardens attached.

I remain, my lord and gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

MICHAEL AHERN, P.P.,
Clondrohid, Macroom,
Co. Cork.

"ITEM.—It is my will, and I do hereby charge my said son and heir that he and his heirs for ever hereafter continue and uphold the payment of £30 sterling per annum to the schoolmaster of the Free School by me at my sole charge erected in Youghal, £10 to the usher thereof, and to each of the six old decayed soldiers or alms-men already placed, or hereafter to be placed there, £5 sterling apiece with their houses. And to pay yearly the like allowances for ever to the schoolmaster, usher, and alms-men of the Free School and Alms-houses by me lately erected at Lismore in the county of Waterford, towards the charge of which Free School and Alms-houses at Lismore, and the several persons that are to supply and reside there, James Roch is bound by his lease of Curran-McBought to pay £40 sterling per annum, and also to cause the like Free School, with lodging for the schoolmaster and usher and houses for six alms-men, to be erected with lime and stone, mason work and slate, in the place where I caused the foundation to be digged, and whether before these troubles I caused great part of the squared timber and beaved stone and other materials to be brought in-place for finishing of that good work, and to assign over and pay yearly the like salary and stipend to the schoolmaster, usher, and six alms-men, and each of them, as is paid to those of the Free Schools and almsmen of Youghal and Lismore aforesaid, and this to be done so soon as it shall please God to send peace in this kingdom. The charge of all which Free Schools and Alms-houses, saving the £40 above mentioned, payable yearly by James Roch, is to come out of my said son and heir's revenue, and he is likewise to keep the said School-houses and Alms-houses in good repair, and to the schoolmasters, ushers, and Alms-houses quarterly and respectively pay their salaries as I have formerly done since the erection of these Schools and Alms-houses at Youghal and Lismore, and also that at Brandon Bridge aforesaid when it shall be there finished, as I have appointed it to be."

COPY LETTER of Mr. WALLER to Lord CORB.

See Evidence, p. 144; 193 et seq; 214 et seq.

"Now to give your lordship satisfaction in the wishes charge you have laid upon me touching Mr.
Greulich, his carriage in the school. It is too true that hath been advertised to your lordship of his severe handling his scholars, not using them as became a schoolmaster that intended to win them to the love of learning, but as an insolent proud man that could not define his temperate nature therein, and like a passionate man that had lost the use of reason, would beat or rather better there, not with decent rods, but wands, and hands, about head and shoulders, inasmuch as he broke the teeth of some of them with his gripped stick; and this rigid and violent course he ran, until he perceived that many of his scholars, gentlemen's sons, sent from remote parts (and good paymasters to him) did fall off, inasmuch as upon a sudden he lost 20 or 30 of them, some of them boarders in his house. Then did he somewhat retire into himself, and, as I conceive, looking into his loss, rather than the upholding of the school, he did begin to cast off that severity which he had indiscreetly and so immediately used, and now becomes a man of a more mild and temperate spirit, wherein Mr. Deane Naylor and myself have so thoroughly laboured him, laying open unto him the reports spread round about in this kingdom of his tyrannical hand held over his scholars as would not only cause him to be questioned for such unwilling abusing of children, but utterly overthrow and dissolve that school which was founded by your lordship as a great charge, not for any private end of your own but the good of the Commonwealth, in breeding up youth in learning, civility, and religion, and thereby ruin his fortunes expected here, and be a tax to your lordship's judgment in placing so unfit a man therein; besides we directed unto him the many favours your lordship had conferred upon him, proceeding from the good opinion your lordship had conceived of him, and the presentation lately sent him, which might be judicious inducements to a grateful heart to endeavour the deserving thereof only by a mild, civil, and welltempered carriage in the school that might bring it to its former late strength, and so to continue it for your lordship's honour, his credit, and fair contentment to the country, with much more, too large to be reported; to which he did ingeniously confess, that he did well understand his errors herein, and did faithfully promise that all things formerly said in him should be reformed. He had at least 12 or 14 boarders each at £12 a year, besides benefit of schooling, and all these have gone off from him. Only he hath now my sweet Lord Buttrant of whom I must give your lordship a true assurance, that he hath been as chary, and lovingly careful, both for his learning and education, and that in a most temperate and mild way, as the child grows strong in body, perfect in health, good colour in his face, very lively, and prospers well in his learning, otherwise he should have heard from me to his discontent. That his boarders fell off, I am confident, proceeded much from the viperous disposition of his wife, who having gotten a strong hand over him, would most devilishly abuse the children in cutting them short in meat and drink, and railing upon them with most base language, for if any of them had come between meals for drink, they for want thereof would have gone to her pail of water, and yet could not be allowed to drink it, but were sent away with the terms of request and requests, that would not leave her a drop of water in the house. This we put him in mind of and told him plainly, that unless he moulded her to a new temper, to carry herself soberly and modestly as become a divine's wife, it would hinder any endeavour of his to improve the school. He hath between 40 and 50 scholars, of which number he hath prepared 8 or 9 that soon after Easter go to the College at Dublin. Mr. William Fenton being one of them. And thus have I given your lordship as full a taste of Mr. Goodrich's desamour as I could learn, or have observed, with the promise he hath made to repair all his preceding errors and misdoings, which I am hopeful he will so providently observe as will turn much to the reinforcing of the school."

LETTER of CANON CUTTER.

Referred to in the Evidence, p. 154.

THE TOWN COMMISSIONERS OF KINSALE.—

GENTLEMEN,—I beg to apply to you as the Trustees of the "Kinsale Endowed School," to grant me a lease of the premises, on which the old school, now in ruins, stood. My object is to build a new National School, in which the classics would be taught by a first class teacher. I have also to ask, that you would be pleased to devote the sum annually accruing from said endowment towards supplementing the salary of the teacher.

If you accede to my request, I venture to think that you will have turned to good account a sum of money so long lying useless, and that you will have the satisfaction of finding that you have brought a good education within the reach of numbers to whom previously no such opportunity was afforded.

I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN CANON CUTTER, F.R.,

Town Commissioners' Office, Kinsale,

13th October, 1887.

At a special meeting of the Town Commissioners this day, in reference to the endowment for a school, it was resolved:—

"That we approve of the proposal in reference to the Endowed School as submitted in Canon Cutter's letter, offering to build a new National school on the site of the present building, and to provide a classical teacher, whose salary would be supplemented by the present endowment, and being of opinion that such would utilise the endowment for the advancement of education, we accede to his request for a lease of the premises subject to the sanction of the Endowed School Commission.

Amount in Munster and Lefester Bank on deposit, to credit of Endowed School on this date, £239 5s. 6d.

M. HEGARTY.

The MEMORIAL of the Reverend JOHN LINDSEY DARLING, Incumbent of the Parish of Kinsale, County of Cork, presented on behalf of the Protestant inhabitants of Kinsale, sheweth:—

That Memorialist is endeavouring, under considerable disadvantages and many difficulties, to provide suitable education for the younger members of the Protestant families, resident in this neighbourhood.

That solely owing to the want of a suitable building, and the impossibility of finding a proper site for such a building, he is unable to obtain any grant from the National Board for educational purposes, and is obliged to depend on voluntary contributions, quite inadequate to secure the services of an efficient master, and increasingly difficult to raise.

That the Southwell Endowed School was originally founded by a Protestant, entrusted to the governance of a body composed, under the provisions of the Test Acts, exclusively of Protestants; and was, until the year 1873, always under the charge of a Protestant master, invariably a clergyman of the Church of Ireland.

That the Town Commissioners have, in this particular matter, succeeded the ancient Corporation by a mere accident, under Acts of Parliament which were never designed to constitute them trustees of such endowments; and, therefore, should not be regarded as lawful trustees of the school.

That there are no less than three National schools in the town under Roman Catholic patronage, and none under the patronage of any Protestant body.

That the hardship of this state of things is all the more keenly felt by the Protestants of Kinsale, because the endowed school which they formerly attended, has been so long closed.

Under these circumstances, Memorialist requests the Honourable Commissioners to grant to him and other suitable trustees, on behalf of the Protestant inhabitants of Kinsale, the premises and garden of the Southwell School, together with the endowment and acres to be used for the building of school premises, and the establishment of a mixed school, which can be connected with the National Board of Education under Protestant patronage.

Such a school was for some years tried in this town, in a rented house, and was largely attended, many walking long distances to avail themselves of its advantages.

J. LINDSEY DARLING,
Incumbent of Kinsale.

SCHEME for the RE-ORGANIZATION of the GRAMMAR SCHOOLS of PRIVATE FOUNDATION which are under the government of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland.

Pursuant to the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1835.

WHEREAS the Commissioners of Education in Ireland are the Governing Body of the Schools of Private Foundation, known as the Grammar Schools of Clonmel, co. Tipperary; Middleton, co. Cork; Navan, co. Meath; and Ballyroan, Queen's co.; and of the endowments severally attached to the same.

And whereas by a scheme termed the Royal School Charter the constitution and general powers of the said Commissioners are extended, amended, and set forth.

From and after the approval of this scheme by the Lord Lieutenant in Council, the following provisions shall take effect:—

1. The Commissioners of Education in Ireland as constituted by the Royal School Charter shall be the Governing Body of the said endowments.

2. All lands, tenements, hereditaments, and premises at present vested in the commissioners, by whatsoever title and for whatsoever estate or interest, for the uses of any of the schools known as the Grammar Schools of Clonmel, Middleton, Navan, and Ballyroan (hereinafter called the School lands), shall be and continue vested absolutely in the commissioners for the purposes of this charter, and to or for as other use or trust whatsoever:

And all securities, sums of stock, sums of money, and property of every description of which the commissioners are at present possessed on behalf of any of the said schools shall continue vested in the said commissioners for the purposes of this charter:

And the said school lands and the said securities, sums of stock, sums of money, and property of every description are hereby amalgamated into one endowment vested in the said commissioners and hereinafter termed the Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment.

3. It shall be lawful for the commissioners from time to time to sell or mortgage all or any part of the said school lands, or any other portion of the Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment, for such sum or sums as they may think fit, and to execute all necessary conveyances and transfers in respect of such sales or mortgages. And until such sales shall be made it shall be lawful for the commissioners to make leases of any parts of the said school lands at the best reasonable rents for the following terms, that is to say, for agricultural or occupation leases 35 years, for leases of rights or easements 40 years, for repairing leases 60 years, and for building leases 99 years.

4. It shall be lawful for the commissioners to invest, or to change the investments of and reinvest, any sums of money which may from time to time be in their hands, representing portions of the Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment, in any securities in which it is, or may at any time be, lawful for trustees to invest trust funds; and the said investments and re-investments shall continue to be part of the Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment.

5. The school established at Ballyroan shall be forthwith discontinued.

6. Out of the said Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment the said commissioners shall provide, whether by way of annuity or sum in gross, due compensation for the vested interests of any of the present masters of any of said schools whose services may no longer be found requisite; the amount of such compensation may be settled by agreement between such master and the commissioners, or in the case of disagreement the question of amount shall be determined by the Judicial Commissioners appointed by the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1835.

7. The residue of the said Grammar School Endowment shall be applied by the commissioners in endowing and maintaining, as schools suitable for boarders and day boys, the schools established at Middleton, Clennell, and Navan.

8. In endowing and maintaining the said schools, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to make provision for the reasonable repairs of the school premises, and it shall be lawful for the commissioners from time to time to determine the amounts of the salaries to be paid to the head masters and to any under masters, and to provide for all or any of the following purposes, viz.—purchase of school furniture, and other apparatus; prizes; exhibitions obtainable by pupils, either during school career or subsequently thereto, and tenable on any terms which may be deemed proper; extension or modification of school premises; or for any other purpose whatsoever which in the opinion of the commissioners may be deemed advisable.

9. It shall be lawful for the commissioners to appoint the head masters of the said schools, and the head master of each school shall appoint, with the approval of the commissioners, such under masters of the school over which he presides as may be found necessary. Any head master or under master shall be removable by the commissioners, if they shall be of opinion, after such a visitation as in Section 7 of the Royal School Charter provided, that he has by misconduct or inefficiency subjected himself to deprivation of his office.

10. The head master of each of the said schools shall cease to hold office on attaining the age of seventy years; unless in the opinion of the commissioners it is for the advantage of the school to continue his services for a further period, in which case such head master shall cease to hold office at such time as by the commissioners may be thereafter fixed.

Out of the said Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment the commissioners shall annually invest, to the credit of a fund to be called the Private Foundation Pension Fund, such sum as may by them be considered adequate with a view to the requirements of reasonable retiring allowances for head masters. And it shall be the duty of the commissioners to award out of the said pension fund to each head master, upon his vacating his office under the provisions of this section, such retiring allowance as they may deem reasonable.

In the case of the present head master of each of the said schools, such retiring allowance as, in the event of such head master vacating his office under the provisions of this section, shall be considered reasonable may be forthwith agreed upon between such head master and the commissioners; or, upon disagreement, the question of amount may be referred to the Judicial Commissioners appointed under the "Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1855."

If any head master of one of the said schools shall at any time be promoted by the commissioners to be head master of a Royal School, it shall be lawful for the commissioners at their discretion to reserve for such master a claim, in the event of his becoming entitled to a retiring allowance out of the Royal School Pension Fund, to a supplementary allowance out of the Private Foundation Pension Fund, of such amount as they may think proper.

The annual interest of the said Private Foundation Pension Fund shall be paid into the general funds of the Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment; and if at any time the said pension fund is, in the opinion of the Commissioners, in excess of the requirements of retiring allowances, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to transfer such excess sum from the said pension fund to the general funds of the Grammar School Endowment.

Out of the said Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment the Commissioners shall, as soon as conveniently may be, transfer to the said pension fund such sum as shall be proposed to be necessary, having regard to the periods that the present Head Masters of the said schools have already held office.

11. It shall be lawful for the commissioners from time to time to fix, and vary, the fees to be charged at the said schools; to make such regulations to be observed in the said schools as they may deem proper; to assign to the general performance of each head master any duties they may consider should be so performed; to call for any returns from each head master, including a return of the work done, and time devoted to school duties by such head master; to determine from time to time the vacations to be allowed, and the course of education to be taught at the said schools; and, to allow additional fees to be charged for special subjects of instruction, in which last case the amount of such additional fees shall be prescribed by the commissioners. All fees charged at any school under the provisions herein shall belong to the head master.

12. Subject to any rules to be prescribed by the commissioners under the authority of this scheme, the head master of each school shall have under his control the choice of books, the methods of instruction, the arrangement of classes and school-hours, and the general organisation and discipline of the school. The head master shall have the power to dismiss any pupil from his school; in such an event he shall forthwith communicate both to the commissioners and to the parent or guardian of the pupil the fact of such dismissal, and the reasons for it; and thereupon any application may be made on behalf of the pupil to the commissioners, who shall have the power, if they are of opinion that a proper case has been shown, to reinstate said pupil in the school.

13. At each of the said schools there shall be a certain number of free places, to be determined by the said commissioners from time to time, separately for each school, according to its circumstances. It shall not be compulsory upon the head master to afford instruction to free scholars in subjects for which additional fees are allowed, as in section 11 mentioned. Where it is necessary to make a selection among applicants for free places, such selection shall be made by examination, if it shall seem to the commissioners that selection by examination would meet the justice of the case; but if on any occasion selection by examination would not, in their opinion, meet the justice of the case, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to make such selection in any other manner. The commissioners may require the head master of the school to hold such examination in such manner as they may prescribe, and to make a return to them of the result thereof.

14. The said schools shall be periodically inspected and the accounts of the said Grammar School (Private Foundation) Endowment shall be audited in accordance with the provisions contained in the Royal School Charter.

15. The commissioners may receive any additional endowments for the general purposes of this scheme, or for any special objects connected with such general purposes not inconsistent with or calculated to impede the working thereof.

16. The commissioners may at any time make application to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, to sanction any amendments or alterations of the provisions of this scheme. Where it is intended to make such application the commissioners shall at least one month previous to such application cause a draft of the said amendments or alterations to be published in such manner as the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests may from time to time direct for the purpose of giving information to all persons interested, and until such application has been made, the Commissioners shall receive any objections in writing made by any persons interested, respecting such intended amendments or alterations, and the said objections in writing shall be forwarded by the commissioners along with their application to the said Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

If upon consideration of the proposed amendments and alterations, and of any objections in writing thereto, the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests shall approve of such amendments or alterations, or any of them, they shall signify such approval in writing under their corporate seal, and thenceforth such approved amendments or alterations shall be incorporated into and read as part of this scheme.

BISHOP CROWE'S CHARITY.

No. XVIII.

A MEMORIAL.

See Evidence, p. 183.

This Memorial is to show the connection which the Crowe Charity has had with the cathedral of Cloyne, and to suggest a mode by which that connection might be maintained, and the efficiency of the Charity in regard of the diocese and the locality of Cloyne increased—both as an educational institute, and also one in regard of technical instruction.

This Charity was founded in the year 1729, by Bishop Crowe, who did by his will "appoint and constitute the Precursor and Treasurer of Cloyne for the time being, the perpetual overseers and trustees of said charity, subject always to give an account of their proceedings to the bishop of the diocese for the time being."

In the year 1727, the Chapter surrendered two houses which belonged to the Economy Estates to the then Bishop Mordaunt, "for erecting a diocesan schoolhouse therein," with the gardens belonging thereto.

In the year 1729, 30s. per month was allowed by the Chapter to Mr. Somerville that he should "instruct the charity boys in singing."

In the year 1771, a legal opinion was taken by the Chapter as to the proposal of the then Bishop Agar, whether the trustees of Crowe's Charity might apprentice the boys to the service of the Catholic church, who should then agree with a choirster to educate the boys for the choir."

The opinion was—"I am of opinion that the trustees may apply the funds of this charitable trust in the way which the present bishop recommends.

THOMAS WOLFE.

30th July, 1771.

In that year, there having been no choir for some time, we find a supply of music books ordered.

In the year 1772 it was agreed "that the Economy shall supply any deficiency in the fund left by Bishop Crowe in charity for the support, education, and maintenance of any number of their boys not exceeding six at the rate of £12 for each boy."

This was done, as appears by account book of Dean and Chapter.

In the year 1775 this grant was increased to £14 each boy.

In the year 1776, it was agreed "that the Economy be empowered to take as apprentices two boys to serve in the choir, or three if necessary, on the same terms as those boys bound by the trustees of Bishop Crowe's Charity, and also be empowered to make up any deficiencies in supporting the boys bound by the said trustees, provided that the whole expenditure shall not in any one year exceed £50."

The Rev. James Mosher was then Economy. Accordingly we have in the Chapter accounts the following—

		£	s.	d.
Accounts, June 1777.	"The boys of the choir, Of which, received from the Bursary room by Mr. Mosher, Remitted charged to the Chapter."	...	75	4 8½
		...	42	4 0

Similar entries showing that the Crowe Charity boys were members of the choir, and that the Crowe Charity funds were managed by the chapter under the trustees, appear in the years—

		Expenditure.	Crowe's fund.
June 24, 1775.	...	205 7 36	432 2 8
1776.	...	80 8 11½	38 16 0
July 3, 1780.	...	27 17 8	21 7 0

In the year 1803, "The trustees of the Crowe Charity do withdraw the annual payment of £50 which they have heretofore given in support of the choir boys, the Chapter funds appearing to be adequate to their maintenance."

The present schoolhouse was built in the year 1808, on the site granted by the Chapter in the year 1727, eighty-one years after the grant; a fact referred to in the words on the building, "Donatus aeternis."

It thus appears that the charity was connected by trusteeship with the cathedral, that its present site came from the cathedral, that the boys always lived in houses granted by the cathedral, that in 1729 the boys were instructed in music for, and by, the cathedral, that the Chapter aided its funds and managed them under the trustees; that in 1771, the boys were apprenticed as choir boys to the service of the cathedral and that from that year until the year 1803 the foundation boys were choir boys in the cathedral—thus apprenticed for thirty-two years, the Charity having then been always a strictly Protestant charity. Now the suggestion is, that the Charity while maintaining its educational character, should also be made one for the instructing of boys in music, both vocal and instrumental.

That the Commissioners should allow that the fund should pay half the cost of the boys, the parents defraying the other half.

That the boys on the foundation might be selected by the trustees with a view to learning music. The present master is a competent ecologist in music, certificated under the Self system. The cathedral could give facilities for practice and instruction, and as far as it can, grant, as it does, gratuities to the boys for singing. And the neighbourhood would always possess in the master of the school a teacher of music whose services could be availed of by all classes and denominations. Without some such foundation no country neighbourhood can support a teacher of music.

Letter of F. E. TYDE, and Resolution of certain of the Inhabitants of Clonmel.

Clonmel,

November 16th, 1887.

SIR,—In consequence of some remarks made by Lord Justice Finluggan at the recent sitting of the Educational Endowments Commission at Clonmel, as to the apparent apathy which existed amongst the Protestant Free-men and Burgesses of Clonmel with regard to the Clonmel Endowed School, and the name of Mr. Bagwell, of Marlfield, D.L., having been mentioned therein, as one likely to take a lead in reforming the constitution of the school, he, with some brother Free-men caused the following advertisement to be inserted in The Clonmel Chronicle.

In pursuance of this, a meeting was held in the Court-house, Clonmel, upon Monday the 7th November instant, the chair being taken by Mr. Moore of Barme, D.L., as representative of the Founder's family. The attendance was of a representative character including the Church of Ireland and Nonconformist Clergy of the town, several Free-men, Burgesses, and parents of present pupils. I was requested to act as Honorary Secretary.

Mr. Bagwell explained at length the objects of the meeting, and after considerable discussion the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"As a meeting convened by public advertisement held at the Court-house, Clonmel, on 7th November, 1887, it was resolved that the following should constitute a Committee for the purpose of treating with the Endowed Schools Commission, and of doing all things necessary towards the procuring of a Scheme for the government of the Clonmel Endowed School."

SUPPLEMENTARY EVIDENCE of JAMES MAXWELL WEIR, Esq., Head Master.

November 17, 1887.

MR. LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—As I do not consider that in my evidence before you at Kilkenny I was sufficiently explicit with respect to my connexion with this college, and as both before I appeared before you, and after I left the court, certain evidence was given of a nature prejudicial to my interest of which I was not aware until I saw it reported in the public press, may I be permitted to submit to your notice the following facts which I can prove most unquestionably:—

During the first seven or eight years of my tenure thirteen of my pupils entered T.C.D., several of whom obtained honours subsequently.

Two of them got senior moderatorships and gold medals, one a junior moderatorship and silver medal, one a mathematical scholarship, and one a classical scholarship. All these gained several honours of the first rank.

Seven entered the Q.C. Cork—five as scholars, and two as ordinary students. Of these two got first scholarships in mathematics, and several honours and prizes, one got first scholarship in classics, many prizes, including the Peel Exhibition and two gold medals at degree examinations.

During these and subsequent years over fifteen pupils passed for various professional preliminary examinations, such as the College of Surgeons, Solitwo Apprentices, Banks, Royal University, three for entrance in T.C.D., &c.

I can when required submit the names of all, and prove the facts, and regret that on the day I appeared before you I had not my reference books. I also mistook the hour, as I thought proceedings would not commence before 12 o'clock.

Under these circumstances I leave it to your consideration whether the Kilkenny College has been so badly conducted under my supervision as it has been represented to you.

In the hope of raising a small fund for prizes at examinations, I on one occasion put an advertisement in The Moderator, by way of an appeal to the clergy and gentry, requesting subscriptions for the purpose would be paid to the Rev. Dr. Hentley, Ex-Sec. T.C.D., as treasurer. To this there was not a single response, and after two months I discontinued it in disgust, paying the expense, which amounted to two pounds. Such is a notable instance of my experience of the Great Ill interest displayed by the people here in the welfare and prosperity of Kilkenny College.

I may add that the Board of T.C.D. by a letter to me from Dr. Hart, Vice-Provost, have undertaken that the sum of £331 10s. shall be refunded to me or my representatives, being half the amount of £663 paid by me as a building charge on my appointment.

I have the honour to be, my lords and gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

JAMES MAXWELL WEIR.

The Ulster Royal Schools.

Whereas in the reign of King James I., upon the distribution and plantation of the lands escheated to the Crown in the province of Ulster, it was directed by His Majesty that there should be one Free School at least appointed in each of the Counties of Armagh, Tyrone, Donegal, Fermanagh, and Cavan, for the education of youth in learning and religion; and by letters patent dated April 20, 1616, it was directed that certain lands assigned in the Plantation of Ulster for the maintenance of the Grammar Schools in that province should be conveyed by grant from the Crown to the Archbishop of Armagh, that by him they might be distributed and allocated in form of law to the several schools as he should think fit, and the distribution of the said lands was committed to the said Archbishop or the person best able to select the most apt places for the establishment of such Grammar Schools:

And whereas King Charles I., by letters patent dated December 15, 1637, granted to the Archbishop of Armagh, and to his successors for ever, certain lands assigned as aforesaid, for the use of the masters of the Free Schools established at the town of Mountnorris, in the county of Armagh, at the town of Mountjoy, in the county of Tyrone, at the town of Donagall in the County of Donegal, at Lisgoole (now called Portora) near the town of Enniskillen in the County of Fermanagh, and at the town of Cavan in the County of Cavan, respectively:

And whereas the schools so established at Mountnorris, Mountjoy, and Donagall, were afterwards removed to Armagh, Dungannon, and Raphoe, respectively, and the five above-mentioned schools have since been maintained and are still in operation as Grammar Schools, and are known as the Royal Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Cavan, and Raphoe respectively:

Carysfort Royal School.

And whereas King Charles I., by letters patent dated August 23, 1629, granted to the Sovereign, Burgesses, and Free Commons of the borough and town of Carysfort, in the County of Wicklow, and to their successors for ever, the lands therein mentioned, to the use of such schoolmaster as the Lord Deputy or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, for the time being, should appoint to reside and teach in the said town of Carysfort; and for want of such schoolmaster, then to the use of the said Sovereign and Burgesses and their successors for ever, towards the maintenance of a Free School in the said town, and of such schoolmaster or schoolmasters as they should appoint to teach school there, until another schoolmaster should be appointed by the Lord Deputy, or other Chief Governor or Governors aforesaid, and then to the use of such schoolmaster or schoolmasters for ever:

And whereas a school was afterwards established, and has since been in operation as an Elementary School, near Carysfort aforesaid, and is known as Carysfort Royal School:

Banagher Royal School.

And whereas King Charles I., by letters patent dated September 16, 1629, granted to the Sovereign, Burgesses, and Free Commons of the borough and town of Banagher, in the King's County, and to their successors for ever, the lands therein mentioned, to the use of such schoolmaster as the Lord Deputy or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, for the time being, should appoint to reside and teach in the said town of Banagher; and for want of such schoolmaster, then to the use of the said Sovereign and Burgesses and their successors for ever, towards the maintenance of a free school in the said town, and of such schoolmaster or schoolmasters as they should appoint to teach school there, until another schoolmaster should be appointed by the Lord Deputy or other Chief Governor or Governors aforesaid, and then to the use of such schoolmaster or schoolmasters for ever:

And whereas a school was afterwards established, and has since been in operation as a Grammar School, at Banagher aforesaid, and is known as Banagher Royal School:

The Commissioners of Education in Ireland.

And whereas by the Act 53 George III., cap. 107, the Lord Primate of all Ireland, the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, the Lord Archbishop of Tuam, the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, and the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, all for the time being, with four of the Bishops of Ireland, and four other persons, to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland for the time being, were constituted and appointed as a Corporation with perpetual succession and a common seal, by the name of "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland," for the regulation of the several Endowed Schools of public and private foundation in Ireland in the said Act mentioned; and it was by the said Act, among other things, enacted (sec. 4) that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners and their successors from time to time to appoint a secretary to the said Commissioners, with a salary not exceeding the sum of £700, and also such other subordinate officers or clerks as they should think proper, for carrying into execution the purposes of the Act, and to certify to the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, for the time being, such sum or sums of money as they should deem adequate to defray the expense of said officers, and the incidental expenses of the Board; whereupon it should be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, to direct the issue, out of the Consolidated Fund of Ireland, of such sum or sums of money to defray the expense of such officers, and the incidental expenses of the Board, as to the said Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors for the time being should seem fitting and convenient; and it was by the said Act (sec. 5) further enacted that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners and their successors to hold any lands or hereditaments whatsoever for the purposes of the said Act; and (sec. 9) to visit each or any of the endowed schools therein described as subject to the jurisdiction of the said Commissioners, and to do all other acts appertaining to the office of visitors relating to such schools; and it was by the said Act (sec. 11) further enacted that the several lands granted under the heretofore recited instruments for the use of the Masters of the Royal Schools of Arragh, Dunganon, Renskillen, Raphoe, Cavan, Banagher, and Carrifort should be vested in the said Commissioners and their successors for ever, and that the rents, issues, and profits thereof should from time to time be received, paid, and applied by the orders of the said Commissioners as by the said Act directed; and it was by the said Act (sec. 12) further enacted that it should be lawful for the said Commissioners from time to time to invest in Government securities any sums of money belonging to any of the schools the estates belonging to which were vested in them, and that such proportion as they should think proper of the issues and profits of all funds or estates applicable to the support of each such school should be applied for the use and benefit of the Schoolmaster thereof for the time being, and such other proportion as they should think proper should be applied for the use and benefit of such Under-Master or Masters as the said Commissioners should think necessary for such school; and, after payment of such salary or salaries to such Head-Master and Under-Master or Masters, to apply such sums as should be deemed necessary in or towards the purchasing, procuring, building, enlarging, repairing, or furnishing the school-house with grounds, appurtenances, and other necessary or useful accommodations; and, if any residue should remain, then to apply such residue to supporting, maintaining, and providing such and so many free scholars, and to the endowment of such and so many exhibitions to Trinity College, to be held by such persons and under such regulations as to the said Commissioners should seem proper; and provision was also made by the said Act for the control and management by the said Commissioners of the several schools of private foundation, and diocesan and other schools, in the said Act mentioned, and for the exercise by the said Commissioners of the several powers and authorities by the said Act conferred upon them in that behalf:

And whereas by the Act 3 George IV., cap. 79, the constitution of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland was altered, and it was provided (sec. 8) that whenever any residue should remain of the funds of any of the Royal Schools of Arragh, Dunganon, Renskillen, Raphoe, Cavan, Banagher, and Carrifort, after defraying the expenses of the Master and of the Under-Master or Masters, if any, and of all enlargements and improvements of the school-house, grounds, appurtenances, and furniture thereof which should be thought necessary, it should be lawful for the said Commissioners, if they should think fit, to cause such residue or such part or share thereof as they should deem sufficient, to be applied to the like maintenance and improvement of any other or others of the said schools whose funds might stand in need of such aid, and that if such residue should be more than sufficient for that purpose, then so much as should remain thereof should be applied in the manner in the Act 33 George III., cap. 107, directed; and it was by the said Act (sec. 11) enacted that all the powers of the said Commissioners should extend to all schools of the nature and description in the said Act mentioned which had been or should be erected in Ireland; and the powers of the said Commissioners were amended as in the said Act appearing:

And whereas by the Act 17 and 18 Victoria, cap. 24, it was enacted that the charges and payments for the salaries of the secretary and other officers of the said Commissioners, and for the expenses of the Board, should cease to be charged on and payable out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, and should thenceforth be paid out of such aids or supplies as might be from time to time provided and appropriated by Parliament for the purpose; and the said salaries and expenses have since been provided and paid accordingly:

And whereas, under and by virtue of the heretofore recited Acts, the said several Royal Schools, and certain schools of private foundation, diocesan schools, and other schools, with the estates, lands, buildings, tenements, hereditaments, funds, securities, moneys, goods, chattels, and other property, real and personal, thereto respectively belonging, have since the passing of the said Acts been vested in the said Commissioners of Education in Ireland, or placed under their jurisdiction, management, or control:

And whereas all the property, real or personal, now vested in or held by the Commissioners of Education in Ireland under the heretofore recited Acts or otherwise, and all other estates and property now held upon trust for or applicable to the purposes of the above-mentioned schools, or any of them, now constituting educational endowments within the meaning of "The Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1885," and the said Act applies to the same:

And whereas it has appeared to the Commissioners under "The Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1885," after due inquiry, that in order to extend the usefulness of the said endowments, provision should be made for altering the constitution of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, and for the future government and management of the said endowments, in manner hereinafter appearing:

Therefore, from and after the date of this scheme (being the day upon which the Lord Lieutenant shall by Order in Council declare his approbation thereof), the Commissioners of Education in Ireland shall be constituted, and the said endowments shall be held, governed, managed, and applied, for the purposes, with the powers, under the conditions and provisions, and in the manner hereinafter set forth, and not otherwise, any previous Act of Parliament, letters patent, statute, charter, deed, instrument, trust or direction, relating to the subject-matter of this scheme, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Preliminary.—Interpretation of Terms.

1. For the purposes of this scheme, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall be interpreted as follows:—

"The Act" shall mean "The Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1885."

"The Lord Lieutenant" shall mean and include the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland for the time being.

"The Commissioners" shall mean the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, incorporated under the heretofore recited Act, 33 George III., cap. 107, and continued under this scheme as hereinafter provided.

"The Local Boards" shall mean the several Boards of Education hereinafter constituted for the administration of Educational Endowments in the several districts defined by this scheme.

"The Ulster Royal Schools" shall mean and include the several schools established by Royal Letters Patent as hereinafter recited, and in the said Act 53 George III., cap. 107, described as the Free Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Enniskoe, and Carran.

"The Estates Commission" shall mean the committee elected by the local boards for the management of the estates of the Ulster Royal Schools as hereinafter provided.

"The Endowments" shall mean and include all the estates, lands, buildings, tenements, hereditaments, funds, annuities, moneys, goods and chattels, and all rents, interest, dividends, and income thereof, due or accruing, and all other the property, real and personal, at the date of this scheme vested in or held or possessed by the Commissioners, or by any other person or persons, upon trust for or applicable to the purposes of the schools vested in the Commissioners, or governed or managed by them, or placed under their jurisdiction or control.

"The General Synod" shall mean the body known as "The General Synod of the Church of Ireland," or other the supreme legislative authority for the time being of the Church formerly established by law in Ireland, and in the Irish Church Act, 1869, referred to as the Church of Ireland, hereinafter referred to as the said Church, and shall include any authority duly empowered to represent or act for the General Synod in that behalf.

"The Diocesan Council" and "The Select Vestry" shall mean respectively the bodies known as the diocesan council and the select vestry of the diocese and parish in each case named, appointed in accordance with the constitution of the said Church, and shall include any authority duly empowered to perform the functions now performed by such diocesan council and select vestry respectively.

"The General Assembly" shall mean the body known as "The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland," hereinafter referred to as the said Presbyterian Church, or other the supreme authority for the time being of the said Presbyterian Church, and shall include any authority duly empowered to represent or act for the General Assembly in that behalf.

"The Methodist Conference" shall mean the assembly known as the Yearly Conference of the people called Methodists in the connection established by the late Rev. John Wesley, or other the supreme authority for the time being of the Methodist Church in Ireland, and shall include any authority duly empowered to represent or act for the Methodist Conference in that behalf.

"Intermediate Education" shall mean education in such subjects as may for the time being be included in the programme of examinations of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland.

"Elementary Education" shall mean such education as may be given in the National schools which are aided by grants from the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland.

PART I.—The Commissioners of Education in Ireland.

The Commissioners.

2. From and after the date of this scheme, "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland" shall be constituted in manner hereinafter provided, and as so constituted shall continue to be a body corporate, with perpetual succession and a common seal, and power to acquire and hold property, real and personal, for the purposes of this scheme, and shall, for the purposes of this scheme, continue to have, hold, exercise, and enjoy all the powers, jurisdiction, privileges, and authority which at the date of this scheme shall be vested in or capable of being exercised or enjoyed by the Commissioners, under the heretofore recited Acts or otherwise howsoever.

From and after the date of this scheme, subject to the provision hereinafter contained as to the continuing Commissioners, the said body corporate shall consist of the members following, that is to say:—

(a.) Ten Commissioners appointed by the Lord Lieutenant as hereinafter provided.

(b.) Ten Commissioners elected by the local Boards as hereinafter provided.

(c.) Two Commissioners elected by the Council of the University of Dublin as hereinafter provided.

(d.) Two Commissioners elected by the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland as hereinafter provided.

(e.) Two Commissioners elected by the governing body of the institution known as "The Catholic University of Ireland" as hereinafter provided.

(f.) Two Commissioners elected by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as hereinafter provided.

Provided that if and whenever any university or universities shall hereafter be lawfully established in Ireland, other than the above-mentioned universities, the governing body of each university so established may from time to time elect two Commissioners, in the same manner as is hereinafter provided with respect to the above-mentioned universities, but if both or either of the above-mentioned universities, or the above-mentioned institution known as "The Catholic University of Ireland," shall be merged in or incorporated with any university lawfully established, the power of electing Commissioners hereby conferred upon this university or institution as merged or incorporated shall thereupon cease.

From and after the date of this scheme no person shall be entitled to be, to continue, or to become a Commissioner by virtue of any office whatsoever.

Continuing Commissioners.

3. In the first instance, such and so many of the existing Commissioners as at the date of this scheme shall be able and willing to act, and shall have attended not less than one-fourth of the meetings of the Commissioners held during their terms of office within three years next before the date of this scheme, shall continue to be members of the body corporate, and shall be deemed to be Commissioners appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and shall hold office as if they had been so appointed. The existing Commissioners so qualified are hereinafter referred to as the continuing Commissioners. All existing Commissioners not so qualified shall, at the date of this scheme, cease to be members of the body corporate, but shall be eligible for appointment or election as Commissioners under this scheme. From and after the date of this scheme, the continuing Commissioners, with such and so many Commissioners as shall have been appointed or elected as herein provided, shall constitute the body corporate, and shall and may have, hold, exercise, and enjoy all the powers, jurisdiction, privileges, and authority of the Commissioners for the time being; provided that every act done by the Commissioners during the period of two months next after the date of this scheme shall be subject to confirmation by the Commissioners at their first meeting held after the expiration of that period.

Appointment of Commissioners by the Lord Lieutenant.

4. The Commissioners appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall be appointed in manner following, and shall hold office during the pleasure of the Lord Lietenant. Immediately after the date of this scheme, and from time to time thereafter, as occasion shall require, the Lord Lieutenant shall appoint such and so many persons to be Commissioners as, with the continuing Commissioners, shall make up the number of ten Commissioners as aforesaid.

In the appointment of Commissioners by the Lord Lieutenant regard shall be had to the due representation upon the body corporate of the several religious denominations entitled to benefit from the endowments.

Whenever any continuing Commissioner or Commissioner appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall die, or resign by writing under his hand, or become bankrupt, or refuse to act, or become incapable of acting, or shall for the space of one year fail to attend any meeting of the Commissioners, or shall be removed from office by the Lord Lieutenant, his office shall thereupon become vacant, and the fact of such vacancy, with the cause thereof, shall be recorded in the minutes of the Commissioners, and, except in the case of removal by the Lord Lieutenant, shall be notified by the Commissioners to the Lord Lieutenant.

Immediately after the date of this scheme, the Secretary of the Commissioners shall prepare from the minutes of the existing Commissioners, and shall forward to the Lord Lieutenant, a list of the existing Commissioners, with the date of their appointment, and a return of their attendances at the meetings held within three years next before the date of this scheme, distinguishing those qualified as continuing Commissioners under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

Election of Commissioners.

5. At a meeting of each Local Board, to be held after due notice, and within two months after the date of this scheme, the members present shall elect one person to be a Commissioner. Each Commissioner so elected shall hold office until the last day of the calendar year first ending more than twelve months after the date of this scheme. At a meeting of each Local Board to be held in the month of November or December in each year and in every year thereafter, the members present shall elect one person to be a Commissioner. Each Commissioner so elected shall enter upon office on the first day of January following his election, and shall hold office until the thirty-first day of December next ensuing, or until the election of his successor, whichever shall last happen.

As soon as conveniently may be after the date of this scheme, and subsequently from time to time as occasion shall require, each of the other bodies entitled to elect Commissioners shall elect two persons to be Commissioners. Such elections shall be held at such times, and the Commissioners so elected shall hold office for such periods, as the bodies entitled so to elect Commissioners shall respectively prescribe from time to time.

The several Local Boards and other bodies entitled to elect Commissioners may elect Commissioners from among their own number, or may elect such other suitable persons as they shall respectively think fit.

Every outgoing elected Commissioner shall be eligible for re-election.

Whenever any elected Commissioner shall die, or resign by writing under his hand, or become bankrupt, or refuse to act, or become incapable of acting, or shall be removed from office by a resolution, passed after due notice, of the body by which he was elected, his office shall thereupon become vacant, and the fact of such vacancy, with the cause thereof, shall be recorded in the minutes of the body by which he was elected, and such body may thereupon elect a suitable person to fill the vacancy; every Commissioner so elected shall hold office so long only as the Commissioner in whose place he shall have been elected might have held the same.

Vesting of Endowments and Continuance of Powers.

6. From and after the date of this Scheme, subject to the provisions of this or any other Scheme or Schemes framed under the Act, all the Endowments then held by or vested in the existing Commissioners shall remain vested in the Commissioners as hereby constituted, who shall thereupon hold, receive, and apply the same, and the rents, issues, dividends, income, and produce thereof, and all other property and moneys applicable to the purposes of this Scheme and receivable by them, for the several purposes hereinafter mentioned. All powers, jurisdiction, privileges, and authority, at the date of this Scheme vested in the Commissioners, or capable of being exercised or enjoyed by them, shall continue to be vested in and may be exercised and enjoyed by the Commissioners as hereby constituted. All existing enactments and provisions then affecting, enabling, or relating to "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland," shall thereupon apply to the Commissioners as hereby constituted, save so far as may by this or by any other Scheme or Schemes framed under the Act be otherwise provided.

Officers, Superannuation, and Expenses.

7. From and after the date of this Scheme, the Secretary and other officers then in the employment of the existing Commissioners, shall continue to hold office under the Commissioners as hereby constituted, upon the same terms, and shall remain bound to perform the same and all like duties, as if the constitution of the Commissioners had not been altered. Every Secretary and other officer appointed by the Commissioners in pursuance of the Act 53 George III., cap. 107, sec. 4, and the Acts amending the same, whether before or after the date of this Scheme, shall be subject to removal by the Commissioners for such misconduct or inefficiency as they shall deem sufficient to justify his removal, and every Secretary and other officer so appointed after the passing of the Act shall also be subject to removal by the Commissioners for such cause as they shall deem adequate, or upon reasonable notice, or such notice as may be agreed upon, not exceeding in any case six months' notice, or upon payment of a reasonable sum, not exceeding six months' salary, in lieu of notice. The Commissioners may, with the consent of the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, grant to any Secretary or other officer in their employment (whether appointed before or after the date of this Scheme), who, otherwise than through misconduct, shall become incapable of further duty, a reasonable superannuation allowance to be fixed with due regard to length of service, and to the other circumstances of the employment, and not exceeding the amount which under similar circumstances might have been granted to such Secretary or other officer under the Superannuation Acts, 1859 and 1884, if holding office directly from the Crown in the Civil Service of the State. No person shall, after the date of this Scheme, be appointed by the Commissioners to be such Secretary or other officer until he shall have obtained a proper certificate from the Civil Service Commissioners. Every superannuation allowance so granted as aforesaid shall be defrayed as part of the incidental expenses of the Commissioners.

The salaries of the Secretary and other officers, and the expenses of the said officers and the incidental expenses of the Commissioners, shall continue to be provided and defrayed in accordance with the Act 53 George III., cap. 107, and the Acts amending the same.

General Provisions as to the Commissioners.

Chairman, Quorum, and Honorary Officers.

8. The Commissioners at their first meeting held more than two months after the date of this Scheme, and at their first meeting in each calendar year thereafter, shall elect from among themselves a Chairman and a Vice-Chairman, who shall continue in office until the first meeting in the succeeding year. The Chairman, and in his absence the Vice-Chairman, shall preside at the meetings of the Commissioners. Until the election and in the absence of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman, the majority of the Commissioners present shall elect one of their number to act as Chairman for the occasion. Five Commissioners shall constitute a quorum, and all matters and questions shall be determined by the majority of the Commissioners present; in every case of equality of votes the Chairman of the meeting shall have a second or casting vote. The Commissioners may, from time to time, appoint such honorary officers as they shall think fit, and may define the duties of such honorary officers.

Committees.

9. The Commissioners may, from time to time, appoint a Committee or Committees, each consisting of two or more of their number, to carry into execution any orders, rules, or directions of the Commissioners with respect to the purposes of this Scheme, or to manage such of their business as the Commissioners may deem it expedient to delegate to such Committee or Committees. The Commissioners may fix the quorum, define the duties, and regulate the proceedings of every such Committee as they shall think fit.

Meetings.

10. The Commissioners shall hold their first meeting within three calendar months after the date of this Scheme, and they shall meet once, at the least, in every three months thereafter, on such day as they shall fix; they shall also meet at such other times as they may from time to time appoint, or as their business shall require. Notice of every meeting shall be sent to each Commissioner six clear days, or such other time as the Commissioners may direct, before each meeting. The Chairman or the Vice-Chairman, or any five other Commissioners, or the Secretary, may, at any time, summon a special meeting of the Commissioners, sending notice to each Commissioner six clear days, or such other time as the Commissioners may direct, before such meeting, specifying in such notice the business for the transaction of which the meeting is summoned; and no other business shall be transacted at such special meeting. Every meeting may be adjourned for the completion of its business to such time and place as the Commissioners present may appoint.

Minutes, Books, and Documents.

11. Every Commissioner shall, at or before the first meeting which he attends, sign a declaration, in a book to be kept for that purpose, of his acceptance of the office of Commissioner, and until he has signed such declaration he shall not be entitled to act as a Commissioner. Minute books shall be kept by the Commissioners, in which minutes of all their proceedings shall be duly entered. All deeds and other writings sealed with the common seal and signed by the Chairman of any meeting, and two other Commissioners, and by the Secretary, shall be held to be validly executed on behalf of the Commissioners.

By-laws and Regulations.

12. The Commissioners may, from time to time, make such by-laws and regulations as they shall consider convenient and needful for giving effect to the provisions of this scheme, provided that no such by-law or regulation shall be inconsistent with the provisions of this scheme, and that the same may be repealed, altered, and amended by the Commissioners from time to time as they shall deem expedient.

Accounts and Audit.

13. The Commissioners shall cause to be kept regular accounts of all their receipts and disbursements, including separate accounts for each of the estates vested in them, in such manner and form as may be from time to time prescribed or approved by the Local Government Board, and the accounts for each year, ending the thirty-first day of December or such other day as the Board may appoint, or an abstrait thereof, in such form as the Board shall prescribe or approve, shall be submitted for audit on or before the first day of March following, or such other day as the Board may appoint, to an auditor of the Local Government Board, or to some other competent authority to be appointed or approved by the said Board. The Local Government Board may fix, and the Commissioners shall pay out of the income of the prospective estates, such reasonable sum or sums as shall be necessary to defray the cost of audit. The Commissioners shall keep an account with such bank as they may from time to time select, and all moneys receivable or payable by them (except petty cash) shall be lodged to or drawn from such account, and every cheque shall be signed by two Commissioners, at the least, thereto authorized.

Annual Report.

14. The Commissioners shall in every year present to the Lord Lieutenant a report of their proceedings under this scheme during the preceding year, with the report of the audit or for such preceding year, and such other information regarding the endowments and the schools receiving benefit therefrom, as the Lord Lieutenant may from time to time direct, or as the Commissioners may think fit; and the Lord Lieutenant shall cause such report to be laid, with all convenient speed, before both Houses of Parliament.

Inspection.

15. An Inspector to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant in pursuance of the Act, section 17, shall inspect each school sharing in any of the endowments administered under this scheme, once at the least in each year, and as much often as the Lord Lieutenant may direct, and shall present his reports thereon to the Lord Lieutenant; the remuneration of every such Inspector, as fixed by the Lord Lieutenant, shall be defrayed by the Commissioners out of the endowments administered by them in such proportions as the Commissioners shall think fit.

Additional Endowments.

16. The Commissioners may receive and hold donations, subscriptions, and other or additional Endowments, real or personal, and apply the same for all or any of the purposes of this scheme, or for any object or objects connected with all or any of the purposes of this scheme, or for any purpose which shall not be inconsistent with, or calculated to impede, the efficient working of the provisions hereof. All property and moneys so received or applied shall be subject to any special trusts lawfully affecting the same, and shall be included in the accounts to be kept by the Commissioners.

Management of Estates.

17. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained as to the management of the Endowments of the Ulster Royal Schools, the Commissioners shall, from time to time, make such arrangements as they may deem expedient for the custody of all deeds and documents belonging to the Endowments, for the management of the estates and property vested in them, for keeping proper maps and records of holdings and tenants, and for the employment of such land agent or agents, and of such solicitor or solicitors, and of such bailiffs and other officers, as they shall find it expedient to employ to assist in such management. Every agent employed by the Commissioners or by any Estates Committee under this Scheme, shall be required to give sufficient security to the Commissioners for the faithful discharge of his duties, and to furnish his account once at the least in each year, and in each account to include all rents and other income due or payable up to the date day next preceding the date of furnishing the account.

Letting Powers.

18. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained as to the management of the Endowments of the Ulster Royal Schools, the Commissioners may make agricultural or occupation leases and lettings of land from year to year or for any term not exceeding forty years, and leases of buildings from year to year or for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years, and leases for building or improvement for any term not exceeding two hundred years, so that every such lease and letting shall take effect in possession upon or within three years after the making thereof, and shall be made at the highest rent that may fairly and reasonably be obtained, and without fine. Subject as aforesaid, they may, in such manner, and upon such terms, as they shall deem most expedient, sell, exchange, let upon fine in fee-farm or for any term, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of all or any parts of the lands and buildings (not being required for the purposes of any school under the provisions of this Scheme) which may be vested in them, so that every such dealing shall be carried out to the best advantage, and that all money obtained thereon, other than current rents, shall be treated as part of the capital of the endowment from which it shall be obtained, and shall be invested or otherwise disposed of in accordance with the provisions of this Scheme.

Powers of Investment.

19. The Commissioners may from time to time sell any of the property (other than lands or buildings), funds, and securities vested in them, and invest the moneys arising therefrom, or other the capital of the Endowments, and may also invest and accumulate any surplus or residue of income, or other funds received by them, in any of the public stocks, funds, or securities of the United Kingdom, or of any Colony or Dependency thereof, or in the stock of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or upon freehold or leasehold securities in the United Kingdom; or upon the lands, debentures, debenture stock, or mortgages of any joint stock company or corporation, whether unincorporated commercial or otherwise, carrying on business or constituted for any purpose in the United Kingdom, or in any Colony or Dependency thereof, and the Commissioners may from time to time vary such investments, and they may from time to time resort to the accumulations of income from any previous year, and apply the same for the purposes of this Scheme; they may retain in their existing state of investment, so long as they shall think fit, all or any securities hereby vested in them or which may hereafter be transferred to them.

PART II.—The Royal Schools.—Ulster Local Boards of Education.

20. From and after the date of this scheme, a Protestant Board of Education and a Roman Catholic Board of Education shall be constituted as hereinafter provided, for the administration of Educational Endowments in each of the following districts:—

The Armagh district, consisting of the county of Armagh.

The Tyrone district, consisting of the county of Tyrone with so much of the county of Londonderry, as is included in the diocese of Armagh. The Fermanagh district, consisting of the county of Fermanagh with the county of Monaghan, being part of the diocese of Clogher.

The Cavan district, consisting of the county of Cavan.

The Donegal district, consisting of the county of Donegal.

The several Local Boards shall be respectively designated as follows:—

The Armagh Protestant Board of Education.

The Armagh Roman Catholic Board of Education.

The Tyrone Protestant Board of Education.

The Tyrone Roman Catholic Board of Education.

The Fermanagh Protestant Board of Education.

The Fermanagh Roman Catholic Board of Education.

The Cavan Protestant Board of Education.

The Cavan Roman Catholic Board of Education.

The Donegal Protestant Board of Education.

The Donegal Roman Catholic Board of Education.

Each of the said several Local Boards shall constitute a body corporate, with perpetual succession and a common seal, and power to acquire and hold property, real and personal, for the purposes of this scheme.

Functions of the Local Boards.

21. The functions of the Local Boards shall be as follows:—

(1.) To establish or aid in establishing, and to maintain or aid in maintaining, each school or schools within their respective districts as they shall think expedient.

(2.) To administer and apply such share of the endowments included in this or any other scheme framed under the Act as shall be payable to them.

(3.) To exercise such supervision and control over the schools sharing in the endowments administered by them as may be necessary to secure compliance with the provisions of this or of any other scheme framed under the Act, and applicable to such schools.

(4.) To elect Commissioners and representatives upon the estates committees, and to do all other acts necessary to give effect to the provisions of this scheme.

(5.) To receive, hold, and administer other or additional donations, subscriptions, and endowments, real or personal, for the purposes of this scheme, or for any objects or purposes not inconsistent with or calculated to impede the efficient working of the provisions hereof. All property and moneys so received shall be administered by the several Local Boards in accordance with any special trusts lawfully affecting the same, and shall be included in the accounts to be kept by the respective Local Boards under this scheme. Each Local Board shall and may have and exercise, with respect to all properties and moneys so received by them, the same and the like powers of management, letting, sale, exchange, and investment respectively, which the Commissioners might have and exercise under this scheme with respect to such property if vested in them.

Constitution of Local Boards.

22. Each Local Board shall consist, in the first instance, of nine members to be appointed as hereinafter provided, and the members of each Local Board so appointed, may from time to time, by resolution of not less than seven such members, passed at a meeting specially convened for the purpose, co-opt such and so many additional members, not exceeding six in all, as they shall think fit. Each member so co-opted shall hold office until the next election of the Local Board.

If any of the bodies or persons authorized under this scheme to elect or co-opt any member of a Local Board shall fail to do so within the period hereby prescribed, or shall, within six months after the occurrence of a vacancy, fail to fill the same, the Commissioners shall appoint a qualified person who shall hold office for the same period as if he had been elected or co-opted by the body or person so authorized.

General Vacancies.

24. If at the date of this Scheme any of the first members of the said several Protestant Local Boards hereinafter named shall be unable or unwilling to act, and whenever thereafter any member of any of the said several Boards shall die, or resign by writing under his hand, or become bankrupt, or refuse to act, or become incapable of acting, or shall cease to reside in the district in which such Board shall belong, his office shall thereupon become vacant, and the fact of such vacancy, with the cause thereof, shall be recorded in the minutes of the Board; and as soon as conveniently may be after the occurrence of such vacancy, the electing body amongst whose representatives the vacancy shall have occurred, or the remaining members of the Local Board to which such member belonged, as the case may be, shall elect a duly qualified person to fill such vacancy; each member so elected shall hold office so long only as the member in whose place he shall have been elected might have held the same.

Election of Members.

25. The first members of the said several Protestant Local Boards shall hold office until the thirty-first day of December first happening more than twelve months after the date of this Scheme, or until the election of their respective successors, whichever shall last happen. Before the said thirty-first day of December, and once in every year thereafter, each of the several bodies entitled to elect representatives upon the said several Boards may elect such representatives. The elections shall be held once in each year, at such times as the bodies entitled to elect representatives shall respectively prescribe from time to time. The members so elected shall hold office until the election of their respective successors. Every outgoing member shall be eligible for re-election.

At the first meeting in each year of each of the said several Boards of Armagh, Tyrone, Cavan, and Raphoe, respectively, the members present shall elect one suitable person resident in the district and willing to act, and a member of a Protestant denomination for which representation upon such Board has not been otherwise provided, to be a member of such Board, and each person so elected shall hold office until the election of his successor. Every such outgoing member shall be eligible for re-election, provided he shall have attended at the least one-third of the meetings of the Board of which he was a member, held during his term of office, but not otherwise.

The Roman Catholic Local Boards.

7. Hugh McDavitt, esq., Glenties, county Donegal.
8. James McFadden, esq., Glenswilly, Letterkenny.
9. Patrick McMenamin, esq., Stranorlar.

Appointment of Ecclesiastical Members.

27. If at the date of this scheme any of the first ecclesiastical members above-named of the said several Roman Catholic Boards, other than the Archbishop or Bishop for the time being, shall be unable or unwilling to act, and whenever thereafter any such member shall die, or resign by writing under his hand, or become bankrupt, or refuse to act, or become incapable of acting, or shall fail to hold an ecclesiastical appointment in the district to which such Board shall belong, or shall fail to attend at the least one-third of the meetings of the Board held in any one year, his office shall thereupon become vacant, and the fact of such vacancy, with the cause thereof, shall be recorded in the minutes of the Board; and, as soon as conveniently may be after the occurrence of each such vacancy, the remaining ecclesiastical members of such Board shall co-opt a duly qualified person to fill the same.

Appointment of Lay Members.

28. If at the date of this scheme any of the first lay members above-named of the said several Roman Catholic Boards shall be unable or unwilling to act, and whenever thereafter any such member shall die, or resign by writing under his hand, or become bankrupt, or refuse to act, or become incapable of acting, or shall cease to reside in the district to which such Board shall belong, or shall fail to attend at the least one-third of the meetings of the Board held in any one year, his office shall thereupon become vacant, and the fact of such vacancy, with the cause thereof, shall be recorded in the minutes of the Board; and, as soon as conveniently may be after the occurrence of each such vacancy, the remaining lay members of such Board shall co-opt a duly qualified person to fill the same.

General Provisions as to Local Boards.—Chairman, Quorum, and Honorary Officers.

29. Each Local Board shall appoint a Chairman and a Vice-Chairman at their first meeting after the date of this scheme, and at their first meeting in each calendar year thereafter. Both Chairman and Vice-Chairman so selected shall hold office until the election of his successor, and shall be eligible for re-election. The Chairman shall preside at every meeting of the Board at which he is present; in the absence of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman shall preside; and in the absence of both, the members present shall elect one of their number to act as Chairman for the occasion. Three members shall constitute a quorum of each Board, and all matters and questions shall be determined by the majority of the members present; in every case of equality of votes the Chairman of the meeting shall have a second or casting vote. Each Board may from time to time appoint an Honorary Secretary and such other Honorary Officer as such Board shall think fit, and may define the duties of such Honorary Officers.

Meetings.

30. Each Local Board shall hold their first meeting within one calendar month after the date of this scheme, and shall meet once at the least in every three months thereafter, at a time and place to be appointed by the Board, and may also meet at such other times and places as may from time to time be appointed by the Board. Notice of every meeting shall be given to each member three clear days, or such other time as each Local Board may direct, before each meeting. The Chairman, Vice-Chairman, or Honorary Secretary, or any five other members of any Local Board, may at any time summon a special meeting of the Board, giving notice to each member thereof, six clear days, or such other time as the Board may direct, before such meeting, and specifying in such notice the object thereof. Every meeting may adjourn for the completion of its business to such time or place as the members present may appoint.

Minutes, Books, and Documents.

31. Every member of a Local Board, other than an ex-officio member, shall at or before the first meeting which he attends, sign a declaration, in a book to be kept by each Board for the purpose, of his acceptance of the office of member, and until he has signed such declaration he shall not be entitled to act as a member. Minute Books shall be kept by each Local Board in which minutes of all their proceedings shall be duly entered. All deeds and other writings sealed with the common seal of any Local Board, and signed by the chairman of any meeting and two other members thereof, shall be held to be validly executed on the part of such Local Board.

Committees.

32. Each Local Board may from time to time appoint a Committee or Committees, each consisting of two or more of their members, to carry into execution any orders rules or directions of the Board with respect to the purposes of this scheme, or to manage such of their business as the Board may deem it expedient to depute to such Committee or Committees. Each Board may fix the quorum, define the duties, and regulate the proceedings of every Committee appointed by them, as such Board may think fit.

By-laws and Regulations.

33. Each Board may from time to time make such by-laws and regulations as they shall consider convenient and needful for giving effect to the purposes of this scheme, provided that no such by-law or regulation shall be inconsistent with the provisions of this scheme, and that the same may be repealed, altered, and amended by such Board as they shall deem expedient.

Accounts and Audit.

34. Each Local Board shall cause to be kept regular accounts of all their receipts and disbursements in such manner and form as may, from time to time, be prescribed or approved by the Local Government Board; and the accounts for each year, ending the thirty-first day of December or such other day as the Local Government Board may direct, or an abstract thereof, in such form as the Local Government Board shall prescribe or approve, shall be submitted for audit on or before the first day of March following, or such other day as the Local Government Board may appoint, to an auditor of the Local Government Board, or to some other competent authority to be appointed or approved by the Local Government Board. The Local Government Board may fix, and each Local Board shall pay, such reasonable sum or sums as shall be necessary to defray the cost of audit. Each Local Board shall keep an account with such Bank as they shall from time to time select, and all moneys receivable or payable by a Local Board (except petty cash), shall be lodged to or drawn from such account, and every cheque shall be signed by two members at the least thereto authorized.

School Committee.

35. Each Local Board may from time to time establish or appoint such School Committee or School Committees as they shall think fit, to aid in the supervision and management of any School or Schools situated in the district, and sharing in the endowments administered by such Local Board. The Local Board may fix the constitution, and define the functions of each School Committee which they may so establish or appoint. The Managers or the Governing Body for the time being of any School or Schools situated in the district, and qualified to share in the endowments administered by any Local Board, may be recognised by such Local Board as a School Committee for the purposes of this Scheme. Each School Committee shall consist of not less than three persons, who may be members of the Governing Body or Teaching Staff, Managers, or residents in the neighbourhood, of the School. Every School for which a School Committee shall be established, appointed, or recognised, shall be deemed to be a School managed by a Local Board for the purposes of this Scheme, and shall from time to time be visited by the Local Board for the purpose of ascertaining that it is conducted in accordance with the provisions of this Scheme.

Powers of Local Boards.

36. Subject to the provisions of this Scheme, each Local Board may maintain or aid any School or Schools within the district qualified to share in the endowments administered by them, in such manner as may, from time to time, seem best calculated to promote education in the district; provided that the Commissioners may prevent any School from sharing in the Ulster Royal School Endowments which the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report not to be qualified as hereinafter provided, and they may prevent any application of the Endowments administered by any Local Board, which is not in accordance with the provisions of this Scheme.

Subject to the provisions of this Scheme, each Local Board, directly or through a School Committee, shall have and exercise general supervision and control over each School sharing in the endowments administered by such Local Board, shall appoint the Masters and other members of the teaching staff, shall determine the various branches of education to be taught, shall fix the terms and vacations, and shall make such rules and regulations for the maintenance of order and discipline, as to the Local Board or School Committee, as the case may be, shall seem expedient. Subject as aforesaid, each Local Board, directly or through a School Committee, shall fix from time to time the number, salaries, and emoluments of the Masters and other members of the staff to be employed in and about each School, and shall define their several and respective duties, and shall provide for the appointment of such domestic staff and other officers and servants as shall from time to time be required.

Each Local Board may from time to time fix and regulate the school-fee to be charged in each school sharing in the endowments administered by them, and may provide for the admission of free pupils, and of pupils at reduced fees, as they may from time to time think reasonable and expedient.

Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained as to the vested interests of individuals holding office at the date of the passing of the Act, every master, teacher, and other officer and person in the employment of a Local Board or of a school committee may be removed by the Local Board or by the school committee, as the case may be, for such cause as they shall deem adequate, or upon reasonable notice, or upon payment of a reasonable sum, not exceeding six months' salary, in lieu of notice: provided that no head master shall be removed except upon a resolution of the Local Board or of the school committee, as the case may be, passed at a special meeting summoned on due notice. No person appointed after the date of this scheme to any paid office or employment under a Local Board, or becoming entitled to any salary or emolument out of the endowments administered by such Local Board, shall be capable of becoming, or shall continue to be a member of such Local Board.

Power to Protestant Local Boards to allocate Endowments.

37. Any Protestant Local Board, for the purpose of allocating the endowments administered by them among the different Protestant Denominations, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as may be agreed upon, may form a committee or committees each consisting of three or more of their number, and each such committee may have and enjoy, with respect to any school or schools which may be placed under their control, all the privileges powers and functions which the Local Board might otherwise have exercise or enjoy, with respect to such school or schools, under the provisions of this scheme. The Local Board may provide, by agreement, for the allocation to any school or schools in their district placed under the control of any committee formed as aforesaid, of so much of the endowments administered by such Local Board as, having regard to the relative numbers of the members of the several Protestant denominations entitled to benefit from the endowments, shall seem just.

Any two or more Protestant Local Boards may, by agreement, form committees, and may allocate endowments, and may exercise the other powers conferred by this section, in the same manner as if, for the purposes of this section, the several Local Boards concerned had been one Local Board, and their several districts, and the endowments administered by them respectively, had been united and amalgamated.

Estate Committees.

38. As soon as conveniently may be after the date of this scheme, an estates committee shall be formed in each district for the management, subject to the control of the Commissioners and to the provisions of this scheme, of the lands and buildings included in the endowments of the Royal school of the district, and for the performance of such other duties relating to the endowments as the Local Board of the district, or the Commissioners, shall from time to time deem it expedient to delegate to such committees respectively. Each estates committee shall consist of three representatives elected by the Protestant Local Board of the district, and three representatives elected by the Roman Catholic Local Board of the district. The representatives elected by each Board shall hold office for such period and upon such conditions as the Board shall from time to time determine.

Functions of Estates Committees.

39. The Estates Committee of each district shall have the management, subject to the control and approval of the Commissioners, and subject to the provisions of this Scheme as to the buildings of the Royal Schools, of the lands and buildings included in the endowments of the Royal School of the district. The Estates Committee shall have the nomination, and (subject to the approval of the Commissioners) shall have the appointment and removal of such agent or agents, solicitor or solicitors, bailiff or bailiffs, and other officers as they may deem it expedient to employ to assist them in such management; provided that the several agents and other officers who shall be employed by the Commissioners for the purposes aforesaid at the date of this Scheme shall continue in office until removed as aforesaid, and shall remain bound to perform the same duties for the respective Estates Committees as they would have been bound to perform for the Commissioners if this Scheme had not passed. It shall be the duty of the Estates Committee (subject to the approval of the Commissioners, and to the provisions of this Scheme) to provide for the collection and recovery, and for the payment to the Commissioners, of the rents and other income of the Royal School endowments under their management, and from time to time to obtain and submit to the Commissioners all necessary or advantageous proposals for the letting, sale, or disposal of the lands and premises, and to make all such reports and recommendations to the Commissioners, and generally to do all such acts concerning the said endowments as may from time to time appear to them to be necessary or expedient for the purpose of administering the endowments of the district to the best advantage. Provided that the Commissioners may from time to time, if in their discretion they shall so think fit, remove any agent or other officer appointed by an Estates Committee, and upon failure by any Estates Committee to perform any duty or to carry out any direction prescribed by this Scheme or by the Commissioners, the Commissioners may themselves take such proceedings as they may deem necessary or expedient to perform or carry out such duty or direction.

Distribution of Ulster Royal School Endowments.

40. Subject to the other provisions of this Scheme, and after providing for all proper and necessary outgoings, charges, and liabilities, the annual income received by the Commissioners from the Endowments of each of the Ulster Royal Schools during each of the first three calendar years commencing after the date of this Scheme, shall be paid by the Commissioners as soon as conveniently may be, in equal shares, to the two Local Boards of the district in which the School is situated, and shall be applied by the Local Boards respectively for the following purposes, or for such and so many of them as the said Boards respectively shall deem expedient:—

(a.) To add, maintain, extend, or improve any existing Intermediate School or Schools, situated in the district, and managed by the Local Board in accordance with the provisions of this Scheme;

(b.) To establish, or aid in establishing, in the district, any Intermediate school or schools to be managed as aforesaid;

(c.) By the investment and accumulation of the sums paid as aforesaid or any part thereof, in the name of the Local Board, to form a capital fund of which the principal and interest may from time to time be applied, as such Local Board shall deem expedient, to aid, maintain, extend, improve, or establish any such Intermediate school or schools as aforesaid;

(d.) By such other means and in such other manner as the Local Board shall deem expedient, to make such provision for Intermediate education in the district as shall appear best calculated to enable the Local Board, upon and after the expiration of the said three years, to avail themselves of the provisions of this scheme.

Distribution of Endowments after first three years.

41. Subject to the other provisions of this scheme, and after providing for all proper and necessary outgoing charges and liabilities, the annual income received by the Commissioners from the endowments of the several Ulster Royal Schools, hereinafter called the Ulster Royal School Endowments, during each calendar year commencing more than three years after the date of this scheme, shall be distributed by the Commissioners among the several Local Boards for the purposes of Intermediate education as hereinafter provided.

Minimum Grants.

42. For each calendar year commencing more than three years after the date of this scheme, each Local Board shall in the first instance be entitled to receive from the Commissioners a minimum grant, to be calculated as follows:—

To each of the Armagh Local Boards, twenty per cent. of the net income received during the year from the endowments of the Armagh Royal School, other than the school premises.

To each of the Tyrone Local Boards, twenty per cent. of the net income received during the year from the endowments of the Dungannon Royal School, other than the school premises.

To each of the Fermanagh Local Boards, twenty per cent. of the net income received during the year from the endowments of the Enniskillen Royal School, other than the school premises.

To each of the Cavan Local Boards, twenty-five per cent. of the net income received during the year from the endowments of the Cavan Royal School, other than the school premises.

To each of the Donegal Local Boards, fifty per cent. of the net income received during the year from the endowments of the Raphoe Royal School, other than the school premises.

Division of Residue by Results.

43. After payment of the minimum grants calculated as aforesaid, the residue of the annual income received by the Commissioners from the Ulster Royal School Endowments, during each calendar year commencing more than three years after the date of this scheme, shall be treated as a common fund, and shall be distributed in proportion to results among the several local boards for the benefit of the Intermediate schools situated in the several districts which fulfil the conditions hereinafter set forth, and for which claims to share in the said endowment shall be made and established as hereinafter provided. The Commissioners shall keep such accounts as may be necessary to enable them within one month after the last day of each half-year, commencing from the first day of January next after the date of this scheme, to provisionally ascertain, declare, and pay to the several local Boards the several payments by this scheme directed: the Commissioners, in so doing, may take into account all outgoings, charges, and liabilities, for which it may, in their judgment, be necessary to provide out of the income of the several endowments, and after the completion of each annual audit of their accounts the Commissioners may vary the amount of any subsequent payment or payments, so far as may be necessary to rectify any previous error, or to compensate for any over payment or under payment which may have been provisionally made to any local Board.

Claims to Residue.

44. Each local Board may, in and for each year commencing more than three years after the date of this scheme, claim, in such manner as the Commissioners shall prescribe, a share of the residue of the income of the Ulster Royal School Endowments for any Intermediate School or Schools within their district which, during such year, shall have fulfilled the conditions hereinafter set forth, and the whole amount of such residue shall be divided by the Commissioners among the several local Boards for the benefit of the schools for which such claims shall have been made and established to the satisfaction of the Commissioners, in proportion to be calculated by results in accordance with the provisions contained in Schedule I. hereto.

Conditions for Schools sharing in Royal School Endowments.

45. No school shall be qualified to share in the Ulster Royal School Endowments, nor shall any minimum grant or any part of the residue of the said endowments be applicable by any local Board for the benefit of any school or of the pupils thereof, unless such school fulfils the following conditions:—

(a.) The school shall be managed by the local Board of the district within which it is situated, either directly or through a school committee established, appointed or recognised as hereinafter provided.

(b.) Instruction shall be given in the school in the following subjects, at the least:—

In a boys' school—Latin, Greek, English (including History, Geography, Grammar, and Composition); French or German; Arithmetic, Algebra, and Euclid.

In a girls' school—Latin, English (including History, Geography, Grammar, and Composition); French or German; Arithmetic, and one other Mathematical subject; and Music or Drawing.

(c.) The Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall be satisfied and shall report that the buildings, premises and appliances of the school are sufficient and suitable for an efficient Intermediate School, and are in good order, and that a competent staff for the efficient teaching of the required subjects is employed in the school.

(d.) The school shall, during the year for which the claim is made, have had in regular attendance not less than twenty-five pupils receiving an Intermediate Education, and not less than ten pupils of the school shall, during such year, have passed a qualifying examination in subjects of Intermediate Education as defined in Schedule II. hereto, having each made not less than one hundred attendances at the school during the twelve calendar months preceeding the examination.

Provided that, in any case in which a school may be prevented, by any temporary or accidental cause, from fulfilling the conditions aforesaid during any year, the Commissioners may for such year dispense with the fulfilment of any one or more of the said conditions, upon being satisfied that the school is likely to fulfil the same in the next succeeding year, but such dispensation shall not be made for the same school in two consecutive years.

Free Places in Schools sharing in Minimum Grants.

46. Every school sharing in the minimum grant received by any local Board, shall be required, besides fulfilling the conditions aforesaid, to provide and maintain to the satisfaction of the Commissioners, and of the inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, a certain number of free places, in accordance with the following provisions:—

(a.) Two free places at the least in each year shall be offered for competition by examination among all candidates qualified as hereinafter mentioned.

(b.) Each candidate shall, during each of the two years next before the day appointed for the examination, have made not less than 100 attendances as a pupil at a public elementary school within the district; shall not on the day of examination exceed the age of fourteen years; shall be of good conduct and character; and shall be in such circumstances as to need, and to be capable of taking full advantage of free intermediate education in the school.

(c.) The examination shall be held at a time and place within the district, and in a room, to be appointed and publicly announced not less than six months previously by the local Board, subject to the approval of the Commissioners, and shall be conducted by an examiner or examiners appointed by the local Board, subject to the like approval.

(d.) The subjects of examination shall be those of elementary education only, and not below the standard of the fifth class, as defined by the Rules and Regulations of the Commissioners of National Education for the time being.

(e.) The names and address of every candidate, with a statement of his or her circumstances, and a certificate of attendance signed by the manager of the school or schools attended by him or her, and such further evidence of qualification as the local Board may reasonably require, shall be furnished to the local Board not less than one month before the examination. If any question shall arise as to the qualification of any candidate, the same shall be inquired into and determined by the examiner or examiners, whose decision and report upon all such questions, and upon the merits of the candidates, shall, subject to the approval of the Commissioners, be final.

(f.) No free place shall be awarded to any candidate whom the examiner or examiners shall not report to have shown sufficient merit. Each candidate to whom a free place shall be awarded shall be entitled (subject to removal for misconduct or failure to make satisfactory progress) to receive intermediate education as a day pupil in all the subjects taught in the school, free of charge, for two years from the commencement of the term next following the examination; or, if admitted as a boarding pupil, shall (subject as aforesaid) be entitled to a reduction in the fee usually charged for boarding pupils of the same age, equal to the full amount of the highest fee charged to day pupils in the school.

Application of the Endowments by the Local Boards.

47. All moneys received by the Local Boards under or for the purposes of this Scheme shall (subject to the other provisions of this Scheme, and to any special trusts or conditions upon which any part thereof may be received), be expended and applied by them for or towards the following purposes, or for or towards such, and so many of them as the Local Boards respectively shall deem expedient:—

(a.) To maintain the buildings, furniture, appliances, and premises of the several Schools managed by them, in good order and condition, and to make such additions thereto, and improvements therein, as may be required from time to time.

(b.) To pay all rents, taxes, cost of insurance, and other charges, necessarily or properly payable out of or for the School premises, and to defray the necessary working expenses of the Schools, and the cost of management.

(c.) To provide for the education of the pupils; for this purpose the several Local Boards may, directly or through School Committees, employ and pay such Masters, Teachers, and other educational staff, as they may deem it expedient to engage for the instruction of the pupils in the Schools managed by them.

(d.) To provide prizes for the most deserving pupils; such prizes may be awarded in money, or in remission of school-fee, or in such other manner as the Governors may deem best calculated to stimulate the industry, reward the diligence, or promote the progress of the pupils, or may be so given as to enable or encourage deserving and capable pupils from elementary schools of the district to obtain free education, or education at a reduced cost, in the Schools.

(e.) To establish, in connection with any School or Schools, exhibitions and scholarships, which shall in each case have such value, and shall be awarded upon such examination, and shall be held subject to such conditions, as the Local Board establishing the same shall think fit. These exhibitions and scholarships may be given so as to entitle their holders to education at the Schools free of cost, or at a reduced cost, or may be tenable at such University, College, or other place of higher education elsewhere, as the Local Board establishing the same may from time to time determine.

The amount of the minimum grant received by each Local Board shall be expended by them for the purposes of an Intermediate School or Schools managed by such Local Board, to be selected by the Board from the Schools within the district which fulfil the conditions hereinafter set forth; or if there be no such School, shall be expended by them for the purposes of an Intermediate School or Schools managed by some other Local Board or Boards, to be selected in like manner from the Schools in the other districts which fulfil the said conditions. The minimum grant received by each Local Board may be applied by them for the benefit of any qualified School or Schools, or for the benefit of the pupils of any such School or Schools, in such proportions and in such manner as the Local Board shall think fit, but any share of the residue of the income of the Ulster Royal School Endowments received by any Local Board upon a claim for results shall be applied by them for the benefit of the School for which such claim shall have been established as hereinbefore provided, or for the benefit of the pupils of such School.

Aid from Public Sources.

48. The several Local Boards may from time to time make all arrangements necessary to enable them to obtain for the schools under their management, from the Intermediate Education Board, from the Science and Art Department, or from any other public body, such aid, by way of teachers' salaries, results fees, prizes, provision for technical or special education, and grants or loans for building or other purposes, as may at any time be available for or open to like schools or the pupils thereof; and they may, notwithstanding anything herein contained, place any or all of their schools or classes in connection with or under the inspection of any such public body as aforesaid, and they may comply with any rules or regulations for the time being in force respecting schools or pupils receiving such aid; and all money and other aid which the several Local Boards may so receive shall, subject to such rules and regulations, be applied by them respectively, in conformity with the provisions of this scheme, and accounted for accordingly.

Religious Instruction.

49. The several Local Boards may, from time to time, make such provision for the religious instruction of the pupils of the schools under their management as they shall think fit; provided always that such religious instruction shall be given with due regard to the religious denominations to which the pupils shall respectively belong, and that no pupil shall be permitted to receive or to be present at any religious instruction to which his parents or guardians shall object, and that the times for giving religious instruction, and the mode of giving it, shall be so fixed that no pupil declining to receive such instruction shall be thereby in effect excluded, directly or indirectly, from any of the other advantages afforded by the school.

School Buildings and Premises.

50. The buildings of each of the Ulster Royal Schools, and the lands used and occupied therewith at the date of this scheme, hereinafter called the school premises, shall be regarded as part of the Royal School Endowment of the district, and from and after the date at which the services of the several head masters who were in office at the date of the passing of the Act shall be discontinued, the said school premises respectively shall be held and disposed of as hereinafter provided. The said school premises, or the value or produce thereof, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, shall be reserved, in each case, exclusively for the educational benefit of the district in which they are situated, and shall (subject to the provisions as to private endowments hereinafter contained) be treated as belonging in equal shares to the two Local Boards of the district.

As soon as conveniently may be after the date of this scheme, the two Local Boards of each district shall meet, or shall depute the Estates Committee of the district to meet, and consider how the school premises should be dealt with so as best to promote the general interests of education in the district. The Local Boards or Estates Committee shall, in each case, consider whether it would be more advantageous to employ the School premises for the purpose of education, or to dispose of them by sale or letting, or to dispose of certain portions by sale or letting and to employ other portions for the purposes of education. They shall also consider whether it would be desirable, if the premises should be employed for the purposes of education, that they should be let, jointly or in several portions, to the two Local Boards or to School Committees established appointed or recognised by them, or should be let wholly or partly to one Board or School Committee, for the purposes of a School or Schools to be managed by such Board or Boards, or by such Committee or Committees; and they shall consider the terms and conditions on which the premises might be most advantageously and justly dealt with, having due regard to the interest of both Local Boards therein.

In considering these questions the Local Board or Estates Committee shall in each case take into account:—

(a.) The extent of school accommodation that may already exist in the neighbourhood of the School premises for the purposes of Intermediate Education.

(b.) The special wants of each of the Local Boards and of the denominations represented by them, with respect to Intermediate School accommodation in the neighbourhood of the School premises.

(c.) The relative facilities possessed by each Local Board for acquiring suitable accommodation for any Intermediate Schools established or managed by them, or likely so to be.

(d.) The amount of capital or income that could be made available for the educational benefit of the district by the sale or letting of the School premises, or any part thereof.

If, having duly considered the matters aforesaid, the Local Board or Estates Committee of any district shall agree upon a Scheme for the disposal of the School premises of their district, they may submit the same to the Commissioners, who shall confirm the same if satisfied that it is for the benefit of education in the district so to do, or, if not so satisfied, may remit it for further consideration to the Local Board or Estates Committee by whom the same may have been prepared.

If within six calendar months after the date of this Scheme the Local Board or Estates Committee shall not have submitted a Scheme to the Commissioners for the disposal of the School premises of their district, the Commissioners, as soon as conveniently may be, shall give public notice of their intention to sell or let the said premises to the best advantage, and shall sell or let the same accordingly: provided that every such sale or letting shall be subject to the approval of the Local Lieutenant.

Under any Scheme submitted as aforesaid, and upon any sale or letting of school premises by the Commissioners, either or both of the Local Boards of the district, or any School Committee established appointed or recognised by them, may become the tenants or purchasers of the School premises or any part thereof upon such terms as may be agreed upon, or as the Commissioners shall deem reasonable, subject to the following provisions:—

(a.) The fair value of any school premises taken by a Local Board or School Committee shall be ascertained or estimated, by way of annual occupation rent or of purchase money as the case may require, and the amount so ascertained or estimated shall be treated as received by the Local Board out of the Royal School Endowment of the district, and the Local Board so receiving the same shall be bound to pay or account for the same accordingly.

(b.) Any Local Board taking any portion of the school premises, directly or through a School Committee, may account for the share of the value thereof belonging to the other Local Board of the district by charging the same, by way of annual occupation rent or of purchase money as the case may require, against an equal amount of the minimum grant or any other moneys payable to such Local Board under this scheme.

(c.) All moneys received or charged by the Commissioners by way of income or annual rent from the sale or letting of school premises, shall be paid or credited by them in equal shares to the two Local Boards of the district, and shall be applied as if the same were part of the minimum grant payable to the Local Board receiving the same, and as an addition to such minimum grant.

(d.) All moneys received or charged by the Commissioners by way of purchase-money fines or capital from the sale or letting of school premises, shall be invested or held by them for the benefit of the Local Boards of the district in equal shares, and each Local Board may, with the approval of the Commissioners, at any time and from time to time, expend the whole or any part of their share of such moneys in acquiring or erecting new or additional school premises, or acquiring additional ground for any school managed by such Local Board, or in enlarging or improving the then existing buildings of any such school, or in providing suitable residences for the master or other members of the teaching staff employed therein, or in providing new or additional school furniture or appliances for any such school. The Commissioners shall, upon the written application of the Local Board concerned from time to time realise and pay out of the moneys aforesaid such sums as may be required for the purposes aforesaid.

Private Endowments.

51. In the consideration of any scheme for the disposal of school premises, and upon any sale or letting of such premises, and upon every dealing with the moneys received from any such sale or letting, or with the value of such premises, if it shall appear that any portion of the existing premises was provided or erected by any Protestant benefactor out of private moneys, and is of ascertainable value, the present value of such portion shall be ascertained accordingly, and shall be treated for all purposes as belonging exclusively to the share of the Protestant Local Board in the premises, and shall be taken into account and dealt with accordingly.

Compensation for Past Services.—Head Masters.

52. On and after the first day of January next following the date of this Scheme, the services of the Head Masters of the Royal Schools of Dungannon, Enniskillen, Carrick, and Raphoe, if then still in office, shall be discontinued; but, notwithstanding such discontinuance, each of the said Head Masters who was in office at the date of the passing of the Act, shall be entitled (subject to the provision for commutation hereinafter contained) to receive from the Commissioners, during his life, a retiring annuity equal in amount to the annual salary to which he was entitled out of the Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of the Act; such annuity to be payable quarterly, and to be secured by the Ulster Royal School Endowments in priority to all other payments and charges under this Scheme, but to be in the first instance charged upon and payable out of the interest and principal of the Compensation Fund hereinafter mentioned. Within three months after the first day of January aforesaid, but not at any other time, any Head Master to whom a retiring annuity is then so payable may apply to the Commissioners to convert the same for a capital sum, to be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Pensioners Commutation Act, 1871, and upon the terms and at the rates applicable to the commutation of pensions under the said Act, and thereupon the Commissioners, on being satisfied that the applicant is in his usual and ordinary state of health, shall accor-tain such capital sum, and shall raise and pay the same to him accordingly, out of the fund and property chargeable with the said annuity, which shall thereupon cease.

Assistant Masters.

From and after the first day of January aforesaid, the services of the several Assistant Masters of the said Royal Schools, if then still in office, shall be discontinued; and upon such discontinuance each of the said Assistant Masters who was in office at the date of the passing of the Act, shall be entitled to receive from the Commissioners a retiring gratuity equal in amount to the annual salary to which he was entitled out of the Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of the Act, together with a further sum of equal amount for each completed period of five years, over and above the first period of five years, that shall have elapsed between the date of his appointment to the office held by him at the passing of the Act, and the date of the discontinuance of his services under the foregoing provision. The Commissioners shall ascertain the amount of each retiring gratuity, and shall pay the same out of the Compensation Fund to the Assistant Master entitled to receive the same, immediately after the discontinuance of his services.

Compensation Fund.

73. From and after the date of this Scheme the Commissioners shall set apart as a Compensation Fund, and shall place to the credit of a separate capital account, the moneys, funds, and securities specified in Schedule III. hereto, and shall apply the same and the annual revenue arising therefrom as hereinafter provided.

The annual revenue arising from the capital of the Compensation Fund, or such portion thereof as shall not be expended under the provisions hereinafter contained, shall be placed to the credit of a compensation revenue account, and the retiring annuities and any sums required for commutation thereof, and the retiring gratuities payable by the Commissioners under this Scheme, shall in the first instance be charged against and paid out of the sum standing to the credit of that account, so far as the same will extend. If at any time any sum shall be standing to the credit of the said account which is not required for the purposes aforesaid, the Commissioners shall invest and accumulate the same as part of the capital of the Compensation Fund.

If, and whenever the sum standing to the credit of the compensation revenue account shall be insufficient to pay the sums for the time being required for the purposes aforesaid, the Commissioners shall realise from the capital of the Compensation Fund the sum necessary for the said payments.

If, and whenever the capital of the compensation fund shall be exhausted, or shall prove insufficient to pay the sums for the time being required for the purposes aforesaid, the Commissioners shall, out of the residue of the annual income of the Ulster Royal School Endowments, after payment of the annuities payable to the several Local Boards, or by sale or mortgage of the said endowments, raise the sum necessary for the said payments, but the Commissioners shall so adjust the accounts of the endowments of the several Ulster Royal Schools, that the amount so raised and paid shall be borne by the said Endowments, in proportion to their value, to be estimated by the Commissioners, whose estimate shall be final.

If any portion of the compensation fund shall remain after payment of all the sums required for the purposes aforesaid, the Commissioners shall allocate the same among the Endowments of the several Ulster Royal Schools, in proportion to their value, to be estimated by the Commissioners, whose estimate shall be final.

Exhibitions and Scholarships.

54. Every person who, at the date of this Scheme, shall hold any exhibition or scholarship payable out of the Royal School Endowments, or any of them, shall continue to hold, and shall be entitled to receive the emoluments of the same from the Commissioners, for the same period and upon the same terms and out of the same funds as if this Scheme had not passed, in priority to all or any sums payable by the Commissioners to any of the Local Boards under the provisions of this Scheme.

Special provisions as to Armagh Royal School, Head Master's Vested Interest.

55. If the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall, at the date of this Scheme, be still in office as Head Master of Armagh Royal School, he shall thenceforth, so long as he continues to discharge the duties of his office, be entitled to hold the same, and to receive the emoluments thereof, as hereinafter set forth.

He shall be entitled to the free use and occupation of the school premises, for the purpose of carrying on the said school, and the Commissioners shall, so long as the said premises shall be so used and occupied by him, pay and apply for or towards the rent, taxes, out of insurance, cost of maintenance and repair, and other outgoings of the said premises, such annual sum not exceeding £175, being the estimated average amount heretofore so applied, as shall be required for the purposes aforesaid.

The Commissioners shall also pay to the said Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., an annual salary of £400, being the annual salary payable to him out of the Armagh Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of the Act, such salary to be paid in the same manner and out of the same funds as if this Scheme had not passed.

The Commissioners shall also pay to the said Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., as and towards the salary of an assistant master, so long as such master shall be engaged by him, and so long as the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report that the services of such master are required and are efficiently rendered, the annual sum of £150, being the amount which, at the date of the passing of the Act, was so applied.

The said Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall continue to be entitled to receive the same or the like school-fee from the pupils of the school, and such school-fee shall be applicable by him in the same manner as if this scheme had not passed; and the amount thereof shall not be altered without his consent.

Exhibitions.

56. So long after the date of this scheme as there shall be in the Armagh Royal School any pupil or pupils who, having been a pupil at the date of the passing of the Act, would, if this scheme had not passed, have been entitled to compete for any exhibition or scholarship payable out of the Armagh Royal School Endowment under the same or the like regulations as were in force in and for the year 1857, the Commissioners shall provide such exhibition or scholarship for any qualified pupil to whom the same may, upon competition, be awarded. The amount of such scholarship or exhibition shall be paid by the Commissioners out of the same funds and in the same priority as if this scheme had not passed.

Payments.

57. The several payments to be made by the Commissioners under the foregoing clauses 55 and 56, shall be charged against the annual income received from the Armagh Royal School Endowment in priority to all or any sums payable by the Commissioners to either of the Armagh Local Boards under the provisions of this scheme, but shall be treated as having been received by the Armagh Protestant Local Board on account of the same which would otherwise be payable under the provisions of this scheme by the Commissioners to the said Board, whether by way of minimum grant or for results: Provided always that if in any year the total amount which would be so payable to the said Board under the provisions of this scheme shall exceed the total amount payable under this clause, the amount of the difference shall be paid and applied as heretofore provided, and that if in any year the total amount of the payments made under the foregoing clauses 55 and 56, shall exceed the total amount which would otherwise be payable as aforesaid, the excess shall not be carried forward or charged against the said local Board in any subsequent year.

Minimum Grant to Armagh Roman Catholic Local Board.

58. From and after the date of this scheme, if, in any year, after providing the sums payable under the foregoing clauses 55 and 56, the net income received during the year from the Armagh Royal School Endowment shall not be sufficient to provide a minimum grant of twenty per cent. of such net income for the Armagh Roman Catholic Local Board, that Board shall be entitled to receive from the Commissioners, as a minimum grant, such a sum as with the residue of the said net income will make up the amount of twenty per cent. of such net income. The sum required to make up the amount aforesaid shall be paid by the Commissioners to the said local Board, by an equal poundage rate, out of the annual income of the endowments of the Enniskillen, Dungannon, and Coven Royal Schools, after payment to each of the other local Boards of an amount equal to the minimum grant heretofore provided for such Board.

Postponement of Application of Scheme to Armagh Royal School.

59. So long as the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall continue to hold the office of Head Master of the Armagh Royal School, the provisions of this scheme as to the disposal of the school premises shall not take effect, but whenever the said Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall vacate his office, the provisions aforesaid shall thereupon take effect, and the Local Boards and Estates Committee of the district, and the Commissioners, respectively, shall immediately thereupon have and exercise the several powers heretofore contained with respect to the disposal of school premises. Provided that in addition to the matters mentioned in the foregoing clauses 50 and 51, account shall be taken, in the case of the Armagh Royal School, of the circumstances of the said school at the time when the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall vacate his office, and if the said school shall then be in a condition of efficiency, regard shall be had to the advantages which would accrue to education in the district from an arrangement by which the Armagh Protestant Local Board, or a School Committee established appointed or recognised by them, should retain the management of the said school, and should become the tenants or purchasers of the school premises upon terms to be ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the clause aforesaid.

Compensation to Head Master.

60. If and whenever the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall retire from his office as heretofore provided, or the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report, and the Commissioners shall be of opinion, that the Armagh Royal School is no longer efficiently conducted by him, his services shall be discontinued by order of the Commissioners. Whenever the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall have held his office for thirty years, or shall before that time have become incapable from any cause other than his own wilful misconduct of longer conducting the Armagh Royal School with efficiency, he may retire from his office, and unless his services shall be discontinued for wilful misconduct, he shall, from the date of the order discontinuing his services, be entitled to receive during his life from the Commissioners a retiring annuity equal in amount to one thirtieth part of his annual salary of £400 for each completed year that shall have elapsed since the date of his appointment. Such retiring annuity shall be subject to the like provisions for commutation (to take effect from the date of its commencement), and shall be payable in the like manner, and shall be in all respects subject to the like provisions, as are heretofore contained with respect to the retiring annuities of the head masters of the other Ulster Royal Schools.

Compensation to Assistant Master.

61. If, at the date of this scheme, the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., and Thomas Gordon, Esq., shall both still be in office, as head master and assistant master respectively of the Armagh Royal School, and if the said Thomas Gordon, Esq., shall continue in office as such assistant master until the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall vacate the office of head master, the said Thomas Gordon, Esq., shall thereupon vacate his office, and shall be entitled to receive from the Commissioners a retiring gratuity to be calculated from the date of vacating his office, and to be paid in the same manner as the retiring gratuities heretofore provided for the several assistant masters of the other Royal Schools.

Banagher Royal School.—Head Master's Feetal Interest.

62. If Patrick King Joyce, Esq., M.A., shall at the date of this scheme be still in office as head master of the Banagher Royal School, he shall thereupon as long as he continues to discharge the duties of his office be entitled to hold the same and, so far as the Banagher Royal School Endowment will extend, to receive the emoluments thereof as heretofore set forth.

He shall be entitled to the free use and occupation of the school premises for the purpose of carrying on the said school, and the Commissioners shall, as long as the said premises shall be so used and occupied by him, provide and pay the yearly rent of £30 payable in respect of the said premises, and provide and apply for or towards the taxes, cost of insurance, cost of maintenance and repair, and other outgoings of the said premises, such annual sum not exceeding £16, being the estimated average amount heretofore so applied, as shall be required for the purposes aforesaid.

The Commissioners shall also pay to the said Patrick King Joyce an annual salary of £100, being the annual salary payable to him out of the Banagher Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of the Act, such salary to be paid in the same manner and out of the same funds as if this scheme had not passed.

Compensation to Head Master, and Discontinuance of School.

63. If and whenever the said Patrick King Joyce shall resign his said office, or the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report, and the Commissioners shall be of opinion, that the Banagher Royal School is no longer efficiently conducted by him, his services shall be discontinued by order of the Commissioners, and unless his services shall be discontinued for wilful misconduct, he shall, from the date of the order discontinuing his services, be entitled to receive during his life from the Commissioners a retiring annuity equal in amount to one-thirtieth part of his annual salary of £100 for each completed year that shall have elapsed since the date of his appointment. Such retiring annuity shall be subject to the like provisions for commutation (to take effect from the date of its commencement), and shall be payable in the like manner, and shall be in all respects subject to the like provisions, as are heretofore contained with respect to the retiring annuities of the head masters of the Ulster Royal Schools.

Provided that no payment for or in respect of the Banagher Royal School, or the head master thereof, shall be charged upon or paid out of any other fund or estate than the Banagher Royal School Endowment.

Distribution of Banagher Endowments.

54. Whenever the said Patrick King Joyce shall vacate his office, the Banagher Royal School shall be discontinued, and the school premises shall be surrendered, let, sold, or otherwise disposed of by the Commissioners as they shall deem most advantageous. The Commissioners, by sale, mortgage, or other disposition of the Banagher Royal School Endowment, so far as the same will extend, shall provide and pay such amount as may be required to discharge all incumbrances, charges, and liabilities affecting the same, and to provide for the several payments aforesaid.

After paying or providing all sums so required, the annual income or produce of the lands or investments, constituting the Banagher Royal School endowment shall be paid by the Commissioners to the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, who shall annually distribute the same by way of results fees to the managers of those schools situated in the King's County which receive results fees under the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act, 1878. The results fees payable under this clause shall be in addition to any other results fees payable to the same managers, and shall be paid in the same proportions. If in any year there shall be no student qualified as aforesaid, or the number of such students shall be insufficient to justify the payment of the full amount of the results fees aforesaid, the said Board may invest and accumulate all or any part of the income of the said endowments, or may pay the same by way of results fees to the managers of schools situated in any adjoining county, as they shall think just and reasonable.

Carysfort Royal School.

55. From and after the date of this scheme the Carysfort Royal School shall be discontinued, and the school premises shall be dealt with by the Commissioners as a portion of the Carysfort Royal School endowment, and shall be sold, let, or otherwise disposed of by them to the best advantage. All sums, other than current rents or other income, received by the Commissioners from the said endowment shall be invested by them as part of the capital of the endowment, and they may also invest and accumulate any income thereof not received for the other purposes of this scheme.

From and after the date of this scheme the Carysfort school district shall include and consist of the parish, or union of parishes under the same incumbent or parish priest, in which the town or village of Carysfort is situated, and the said endowment shall be held and administered by the Commissioners for the educational benefit of the said district in the manner hereinafter provided.

The Commissioners shall, for each calendar year after the date of this scheme, ascertain and declare the net income received by them during the year from the Carysfort Royal School endowment, and shall thereupon allocate the same among the elementary schools situated in the district which shall have been reported by the inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant to be efficient schools; provided that no school shall be regarded as efficient which has not a suitable school building, and an average attendance of fifteen pupils at the least, with at least one teacher qualified as a "class teacher" under the rules and regulations of the Commissioners of National Education.

One half of the amount to be allocated as aforesaid shall be divided in equal shares, without regard to the number of pupils in attendance, among all the elementary schools in the district reported to be efficient as aforesaid, the remaining half of such amount shall be allocated among the said several schools in proportion to the average number of pupils in daily attendance for elementary education during the year preceding.

In ascertaining the average attendance of pupils for the purposes of this scheme, the Commissioners may make such allowance as they shall think just for any reduction of actual attendances due to temporary and exceptional causes for which allowance might be made under the rules and regulations of the Commissioners of National Education, regarding teachers' salary.

The share of the endowment allocated to each school shall be paid by the Commissioners to the Manager of the school and shall be applied by him for the benefit of the school, subject to the provisions of this Scheme, and he shall annually account to the Commissioners for his application thereof.

The money received by the Manager of each school under the provisions of this Scheme, shall be applied by him for such and so many of the following purposes as to him shall seem expedient:—

(a.) To provide or supplement the salaries or emoluments of any teachers or monitors employed in the school.

(b.) To employ and pay such teachers as the Manager may deem it expedient to engage for the instruction of the pupils in such subjects of elementary, agricultural, technical, or industrial education as he shall deem suitable or useful for any sufficient number of pupils of the school. Provided that the Managers of all the schools in the District, or any two or more of them, may combine for the purpose of employing from time to time and paying out of the endowments one or more teachers of special subjects who shall teach in all the schools subject to the Managers so combining. Such teacher or teachers may be employed to give instruction in drawing, modelling, agriculture, cottage industries, and such other branches of technical and industrial education as in the opinion of the Managers may be found best suited to the wants of the locality and the requirements of the pupils.

(c.) To establish and maintain exhibitions and prizes to be offered for competition by examination, among the pupils of the school, upon such terms and subject to such regulations as the Commissioners may approve.

The Commissioners may, from time to time, make building grants or grants in aid of building, not exceeding 2500 in all, out of the capital of the Carysfort Royal School Endowment, for the erection and permanent improvement of elementary schools in the district, provided that no one such grant shall exceed £180, and that, in the opinion of the Commissioners, the educational requirements of the district, and the circumstances of those entitled to benefit from the Endowment, render such grant just and expedient.

The Commissioners shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as they shall deem necessary or expedient, for giving effect to the provisions of this Scheme, for the purpose of promoting elementary education in the Carysfort Royal School district by means of the Royal School Endowment aforesaid.

Other Endowments managed by the Commissioners.

56. Save so far as may be otherwise provided by this or any other Scheme framed under the Act, the Commissioners as hereby constituted shall from and after the date of this Scheme continue to hold, manage, and administer all Endowments not hereinbefore specifically mentioned, and shall continue to exercise all powers and authority, and to do all acts which might otherwise have been exercised or done by the existing Commissioners, in the same manner in all respects as if the constitution of the Commissioners had not been altered.

Payment of Expenses.

67. The Commissioners shall, subject to the provisions of this Scheme, pay out of the income received by them from the Endowments, all charges which under the provisions of the Act shall be properly and necessarily payable by them for the costs and expenses of this Scheme, or for audit and inspection, or for other purposes; and the several Local Boards shall, subject to the other provisions of this Scheme, pay out of the income received by them all charges which under the provisions of the Act shall be properly and necessarily payable by them respectively, for the costs and expenses of this Scheme or for audit, or for other purposes.

Printing of Scheme.

68. The Commissioners shall cause this scheme to be printed, or procure printed copies thereof, and shall keep the same for sale at a reasonable price.

Alteration of Scheme.

69. This scheme may be altered from time to time by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland in any matter whatsoever upon the application of the Commissioners, provided that such application shall be founded upon a resolution of the Commissioners specifying the alteration required, which resolution shall be passed by a majority consisting of not less than two-thirds of the Commissioners present at a special meeting convened on due notice for the consideration thereof, and shall be afterwards confirmed at a subsequent special meeting to be held after six days notice at the least. Except upon such application, no alteration shall be so made, and no alteration shall be made contrary to anything contained in the Act.

SCHEDULES REFERRED TO IN THE FOREGOING SCHEME.

SCHEDULE I.

The residue of the income of the Ulster Royal School Endowments shall be annually divided among the several local Boards, as mentioned in clause 44 of the foregoing scheme, in proportion to the number of marks obtained by the several schools for which the said local Boards, respectively, shall have made and established claims in accordance with the provisions of the foregoing scheme, such marks to be allotted as follows:—

(1) Four marks shall be allowed for every pupil:—

(a.) Who passes the Matriculation Examination of any University in the United Kingdom.

(b.) Who passes in the Senior Grade of the examinations of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, in the several subjects required for a qualifying examination as defined in Schedule II.

(3.) Three marks shall be allowed for every pupil who passes in the Middle Grade of the examinations of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, in the several subjects required for a qualifying examination as defined in Schedule II.

(5.) Two marks shall be allowed for every pupil who passes in the Junior Grade of the examinations of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, in the several subjects required for a qualifying examination as defined in Schedule II.

The Commissioners may, by order duly published, recognise as equivalent to any of the foregoing examinations any open competitive or other public examination held in the United Kingdom, at which a pupil passes in the several subjects required for a qualifying examination as defined in Schedule II.

No marks shall be allowed for the same pupil in respect of more than one examination in the same year.

SCHEDULE II.

Each of the following examinations shall, for the purposes of this Scheme, be deemed to be a qualifying examination in subjects of Intermediate Education:—

(a.) The examinations of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, at which a pupil passes in the following subjects at the least:—

For Boys.—Latin or Greek; English; French or German; Arithmetic, and one other Mathematical subject.

For Girls.—English; French or German, or Latin; Drawing or Music; Arithmetic, and one other Mathematical subject.

(b.) Any open competitive or other public examination held in the United Kingdom at which a pupil passes in the several subjects aforesaid, at the least, and which the Commissioners may, by order duly published, recognise as a test of Intermediate Education equivalent to the foregoing examinations.

(c.) The Matriculation Examination of any University in the United Kingdom.

SCHEDULE III.

COMPENSATION FOR VESTED INTERESTS.

The Compensation Fund.

Each of the following funds and securities as at the date of this Scheme shall be still forthcoming:—

1. The sum of £1,019 18s. 2d., Government Stock, standing in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland in the names of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, and in the accounts of the said Commissioners designated as Arrangh Royal School Railway Land Investment.

2. The sum of £5,305 18s. 5d., like stock, standing in the same books in the same name, and in the said accounts designated as Cavan Royal School General Investment.

3. The sum of £340 18s. 9d., like stock, standing in the same books in the same name, and in the said accounts designated as Dungannon Royal School Railway Land Investment.

4. The sum of £25 7s. 11d., like stock, standing in the same books in the same name, and in the said accounts designated as Dungannon Royal School General Investment.

5. The sum of £3,324 2s. 10d., like stock, standing in the same books in the same name, and in the said accounts designated as Baniskillen Royal School General Investment.

6. Any investments which, on the first day of January next following the date of this Scheme, may represent the foregoing funds and securities, or any of them, or may consist of the income or accumulations thereof, or of any other income of the Royal School Endowments, or any of them.

7. Such sum, if any, as on the first day of January next following the date of this Scheme, shall represent the excess of the balance to the credit of the Ulster Royal Schools upon the Income and Expenditure account of the Commissioners, over and above the balance to the debit of the same schools upon the same account made up to and closed upon that day.

Objections and Amendments.

XXII. The Commissioners of Education in Ireland.

The Commissioners of Education, in the month of January, 1885, transmitted to the Endowments Commissioners a Draft Scheme for the Royal Schools. It was framed on the principle that the endowments, having for many years been mainly applied for the purposes of higher education, should continue in future to be so applied. In support of their view they refer to the statutory recognition of this principle expressed at the close of s. 13 of 53 Geo. III., c. 107, by which the residue of rents in their hands is directed to be applied to the endowment of Exhibitions in Trinity College. The present Scheme is prepared on lines inconsistent with the principle above referred to; and its effect, if carried out, will be to inflict a severe blow on such higher education in Ireland, without (in their opinion) affording any equivalent benefit elsewhere. For this reason, and because it would under the circumstances be futile to offer formal objections or amendments founded on their view of the general application of the Royal School Endowments, the Commissioners adopt the course provided by s. 23 of the Act of 1885, and request that their Draft Scheme may be submitted to the Lord Lieutenant in Council.

It may be noticed that the Endowments Commissioners, in their memorandum of the 30th November, 1885, remark that the latter Scheme had been disapproved by all parties who had appeared before them; but it should be observed that, of all classes, that in whose interest this Draft Scheme had been principally prepared, viz., those parents who will hereafter desire high education for their sons, is precisely the one which might reasonably be expected not to appear.

Independently however, of the difference of opinion as to the general scope of the Draft Scheme already adverted to, there are some points on which the Commissioners think it right (under s. 22 of the Act of 1885) to state the objections which they entertain to its provisions.

1. Composition of the Board.—The new Constitution appears to the Commissioners open to objection on several grounds. The number of its members seems to them to be greatly in excess of what is required for any of the purposes for which they are to be selected; while this increase in number will almost of necessity have the effect of diminishing the constant attendance of individual members, and will thus materially tend to break that consistency of action which is essential to the maintenance of efficient control over the management either of the schools or of the estates.

2. Powers of the Board in respect to Education.—The existing powers are, by section 6 of the Scheme, preserved; subject, however, to the subsequent provisions of the Scheme. But by section 36 each Local Board is empowered (subject only to the intervention of the Commissioners founded on a report by the Inspector) to determine the education to be given in any school which shares in its endowments; to appoint and remove the masters, as well as to define their duties and to fix their number and salaries, and to exercise general control over every such school. The existing powers of the Board appear, therefore, although nominally preserved, to be, so far as regards this most important branch of their duties, wholly annulled.

It should be noticed in connection with this part of the Scheme that there is no provision for reports by the Local Board to the Commissioners, without which it would be impossible for them to prepare the Annual Report prescribed by section 14, or to exercise the powers given to them in respect of residues of income by section 44. And it seems open to objection that the whole amount of such residue must in each year be divided in accordance with the provisions of Schedule I., no matter what may be the amount of such residue or what may be the number of the schools entitled to benefit under those provisions.

3. Powers of the Board as to Management of Estates.—The existing powers are by section 6 preserved, subject (as mentioned above) to the provisions of the Scheme. But under section 39 all these powers are vested in the Estates Committee to be appointed by the Local Board, "subject to the control and approval of the Commissioners." The Committee alone can nominate and (subject to such approval) appoint and remove agents, solicitors, bailiffs, &c.; and, with the exceptions of the sale and letting of the lands and premises, are empowered "generally to do all such acts concerning such endowments as may from time to time appear to them to be necessary or expedient for the purpose of administering" them. The nature of the control so reserved is left absolutely undefined, nor is there even a provision for the necessary reports to the Commissioners of the proceedings of the Local Committee; but, even with such a provision, and with the most carefully prepared definition of the intended control which can be inserted, the Commissioners are of opinion that such a system cannot possibly with success be reduced to practice. To give an example of the difficulties which it would entail, the Commissioners refer to the constantly recurring communications which have during recent years taken place between themselves, their agents, and the tenants on the estates, communications which in very many cases have led to most satisfactory results; but where, the constant intervention of the Local Estates Committee would have rendered such results almost, if not altogether, impossible.

4. Remuneration of Inspector.—Although comparatively of minor importance, the Commissioners think it right to repeat the reasons which they stated in the Memorandum annexed to their Draft Scheme in 1885, why this remuneration ought to be defrayed from the Estimates and not out of the school endowments. The Act of Geo. III. provided that the salaries of all their officers should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund, in the place of which for such purposes the Estimates now stand; and the 17th section of the Act of 1885, while directing that the remuneration of the Inspector should "be defrayed by the governing bodies of such endowments as the Scheme may provide," does not specify the source from which such payment should be made. The provision of the earlier enactment is thus left in full force. The office of Inspector, absolutely necessary as it is, and often asked for in the Reports of the Commissioners, is for the first time created by the late Statute; but he is to be appointed by, and will be subject to, the Lord Lieutenant alone. On these grounds it seems only just that the expense thus entailed should be borne by the State, instead of being thrown on the greatly diminished income of the school endowments.

5. Finally, the Commissioners suggest that although unquestionably, under any system which can be reasonably devised, there must still exist a central authority with competent officers to carry out its orders, it is doubtful whether, if the Scheme now proposed be finally approved without very substantial modifications, a sufficient number of persons, such as the Lord Lieutenant would nominate or the universities would elect, will be found willing to act in the discharge of duties almost entirely confined to the management of small landed estates, when deprived of the supervision and control of education for which the Commission was originally established.

S Y 2

Additional Clause suggested, namely, to provide that—In case the members of any denomination shall resolve to maintain a Boarding School in one of the present Royal School buildings, or in any other suitable premises, and not to provide any Boarding School in one or more of the other districts, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to deduct such portion as they may think fit from the endowments to be handed over to the Local Board of the denomination in any district that maintains no efficient Boarding School, and apply that portion towards the Boarding School or schools maintained in whole or in part by any other Local Board of the same denomination—i.e.,

Suppose the Church of Ireland were to select Armagh, the Presbyterians Enniskillen, and the Roman Catholics Dungannon, for Boarding Schools, respectively—that the "Commissioners" should have power to allocate something from the other local shares of Endowment towards the maintenance of the school thus respectively selected.

XXIV. The Diocesan Councils of the Church of Ireland of the Dioceses of Armagh, Clogher, and Derry.

- A. To the general principles of the Draft Scheme.
B. To clauses in detail.

A. In principle we object—

1. To the constitution in each district of one mixed Protestant Board, while a separate Board equal with it in numbers and in weight in the decision of all common questions, and greatly superior as being homogeneous, has been conceded to the wishes of the Roman Catholics.

2. We further object that in the constitution of the mixed Protestant Boards the representation of the Church of Ireland is wholly inadequate from every point of view, whether regard be had to her gross population, or to their educational status as proved by the last census. In none of the districts is the Church of Ireland in a numerical minority, yet in two of the Boards she is outweighed in the proportion of two to one. And we would point out that the utmost practical injustice might result both in the treatment of competing schools in the various districts and also from the hopeless minority in which the Church would find itself in the contemplated negotiations with Roman Catholic Boards for the disposal of school buildings and the management of property. The gravest difficulties would also result from this disproportion in the allocation of endowments "by agreement" under clause 37. A minority may reasonably expect due consideration from the majority when it represents a similar proportion of those who should benefit by the common fund. On no other supposition can the composition of the Boards be justified. It is otherwise when those who are entitled to a majority are deliberately deprived of it by the constitution of the Board, for this will inevitably be taken as an indication of the treatment which is their due and of the disproportionate advantage which the others may themselves claim, since the power to grasp it has been put into their hands.

3. We object to the Estates Committee and are convinced that many of the reasons which admittedly made it impossible for Protestants and Roman Catholics to work together upon Local Educational Boards, will also lead to discord in the local management of lands and buildings.

4. We mainly object to the "distribution of the endowments after the first three years" as proposed in Clauses 41, 42, 43, and 44. The equity of a proportionate division of the whole net endowment during three years having been recognised, it is then proposed that a common fund should be formed to be distributed in a manner which provides neither finality nor a uniform or efficacious test, we would point out that while the matriculation examinations of all Universities alike are recognised upon equal terms, however various and variable be their curricula and however inadequate their standards, and while the same privilege may be freely extended to institutions unnamed in the Scheme, or even to institutions as yet non-existent, many examinations of the utmost importance and the highest educational status (e.g. Woolwich and Sandhurst entrance) are practically disqualified under Schedule II. We further submit that this proposal tends to destroy the confidence of the public and to generate party feeling within the governing body itself.

5. We also object in the strongest manner to the constitution and method of appointment of the Commissioners of Education. First, with regard to those who are to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, we submit that "the due representation upon the Body Corporate of the several religious denominations" ought not to be confided to his discretion, but so defined in the Scheme itself as permanently to secure the principle of religious equality, which is admittedly in the above paragraph. Secondly, we submit that the representation of Universities and other Educational Bodies can be sufficiently obtained by the Lord Lieutenant's appointments, and that under the proposed arrangements for this end, the equities of religious representation might and probably would be seriously disturbed. It will be observed that the duties committed to this body are for the most part fiscal.

6. We further object that the Scheme is inconsistent with itself, being in the districts denominational in regard to one permission, but mixed in defined proportions in respect to all the rest; and again being mixed in regard to the Central Board; but here in uncertain and varying proportions. And while the claim has been conceded to the uttermost, which Roman Catholic witnesses put forward to an exclusive administration of their schools, no attention has been paid to the evidence given in Dublin, by the authorized representatives of all Protestant denominations, claiming the same treatment, the same independent control of the education of their children for themselves. This evidence was also remarkably unanimous in desiring a final distribution of the endowments which the arrangements under discussion do not grant.

7. Lastly, We object to a system of so called rewards in which only members are rewarded while excellence is quite ignored.

B.—We propose to specify the following additional objections in detail:—

In Clause 8.—We consider that a quorum of 5 Commissioners is inadequate.

In Clause 10.—We object to the inclusion of the County Monaghan in the Fermanagh district.

In Clause 35.—We object to the power given to a mixed board to delegate its functions to a Committee, who may all be elected by a bare majority of the board.

In Clause 37.—We object to the words "by agreement," as not sufficiently explicit.

In Clause 40.—We object to the equal distribution of the endowment between the two local Boards as unjust to the Protestants of the districts.

In Clause 45 (f).—We object to the omission to state any number of students to whom instruction in the prescribed subjects must be given.

In Clause 50.—We object to the division in two equal shares of the school premises as unjust to the Protestants of the districts; also to the power given to one dissentient Board to force the sale or letting of the school premises within six months from the date of the scheme, for purposes which may be wholly uncon-noted with education, and at a price which may involve a religious sacrifice.

In Clause 51.—We object (a) to a limitation of a vested interest to those cases only where it can be shown that a specific portion of the existing premises was erected entirely by a private benefactor, and where the present value of such portion can be accurately ascertained; since we mention that neither an approximate value should be ignored, nor a contribution which aided in providing or erecting premises; (b) to the direction that such value when ascertained should "belong to the share of the Protestant Local Board in the premises," since it should evidently be preserved for the Protestant Board over and above their share (expressly limited to one-half) in the remainder; and (c), to the assumption that money given by Churchmen and benefactors of the Church to schools at that time under its exclusive management can be justly treated as the common property of all Protestant denominations. We further object that the task of ascertaining such contribution and the present value thereof ought not to be entrusted either to the joint

Local Boards or to the future Commissioners of Education, since these bodies will not necessarily possess sufficient legal qualification for the required investigation, and will not approach the decision of these matters in an unbiased and impartial spirit.

In Clause 56.—We object to the limitation of the vested right to compete hereafter for exhibitions and scholarships to boys in the Armagh Royal School only, and also to the restriction of such right to boys who were in the school at the date of the Act.

In Schedule I.—We object to the omission of all limit of age.

In Schedule II.—We object to the proposed power to recognise for result fees any public examination which may at any time commend itself to a bare majority of the Commissioners.

HENRY T. DIX AND SON,
Solicitors for Objectors,

61, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

June 29, 1888.

XXV.—The Diocesan Council of Kilmore.

Draft Scheme, Page 8, Sec. 3.—We object to the proposed constitution and method of appointment of the Commissioners of Education. We consider that a body consisting of twenty members would be ample. Ten of these to be elected by the Local Boards, and ten to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant; and in order that the due representation of each religious denomination should be maintained the Scheme should state distinctly the number of each denomination to be appointed as Commissioners by the Lord Lieutenant.

Page 9, Sec. 5.—We consider that it would be more convenient and satisfactory that the Commissioners should be elected triennially instead of annually as proposed in the Scheme.

Page 11, Sec. 8.—We are of opinion that the quorum of five as proposed is too small and should be increased to seven.

Page 22, Sec. 37.—We strongly object to the proposed appointment of the Estates Committee believing that it would be impossible to work suitably in the management of Lands and Buildings with satisfaction and harmony.

Page 23 to 25, Secs. 40 to 45.—We also object most strongly to the plan proposed for the distribution of the Endowments after the first three years as is proposed in Secs. 41 to 44. For the first three years the Scheme recognises the principle of proportionate division of the whole Endowment of each school, but after that period a different plan is proposed by which after granting a minimum of 25 per cent. to each Local Board, the residue of 50 per cent. from the Cavan Royal School Endowments, together with the residue of the Endowments from the other Royal Schools shall form one common fund, which is to be distributed, as result fees, in a manner and on a principle which are neither just nor satisfactory, and which must necessarily lead to endless strife and bitterness. We consider that the property should be divided in fair proportions between Roman Catholics and Protestants, and that the two parties should not be brought into collision or competition with each other. We would approve of any reasonable plan whereby the different Protestant schools to be established could be brought into competition.

Page 28, Secs. 50.—We further object to the proposed arrangement respecting the disposal of the school premises. We consider that the buildings should be used for educational purposes, and should be given over, free of charge, to the Protestant Board in consideration of the special wants of the Protestant Body for intermediate school accommodation.

Page 31, Sec. 53, Schedule III., page 39.—We most decidedly object to the proposed transfer of the sum of £5,305 18s. 5d. Government Stock standing in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland in the name of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, designated as Cavan Royal School General Investment, to the compensation fund. This sum of £5,305 18s. 5d. has been accumulated during past years by depriving the Cavan School and the Cavan community of advantages to which they were justly entitled; and we consider it would be an act of injustice to deprive the Cavan locality of the benefits of this important portion of the Endowments. We consider that the balance of the said sum of £5,305 18s. 5d., after compensating the present masters, should be dealt with as a part of the Endowments of the Cavan Royal School. We further consider that the endowment of each Royal School, or any capital sum at present placed to its credit, should bear the cost of compensating any master belonging to said school entitled to receive same, and that neither, at the present time nor at any future time, should the funds of the Cavan Royal School be charged with any portion of the sum necessary to be paid as compensation to the master of any of the other Royal Schools.

Page 33, Sec. 59.—We also object to any portion of the property of the Cavan or other Royal Schools being called upon to pay any portion of the Minimum Grant to the Armagh Roman Catholic Board.

Signed, W. R. HUTTONSBOROUGH,
Hon. Sec., Kilmore Diocesan Council.

The Rectory, Ballisodare.

XXVI.—The Intermediate Education Committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland.

I. The Committee object to the constitution of the body to be known as "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland." They are of opinion (1) that the number of the proposed Commissioners is too large; (2) that the mode of election is unsatisfactory, and (3) that no provision is made to secure an adequate representation of the Presbyterian Church on the Commission. They are of opinion that a small body of three or five Commissioners should be nominated by the Lord Lieutenant, that the various religious denominations should be represented in fixed proportions upon the Commission, and that the names of the first Commissioners should (if possible) be given in the scheme. They suggest that as the endowment is an Ulster one, the fixed place of meeting of the Commissioners should be in Ulster.

II. They are of opinion that in section 44 of the Draft Scheme, the word "may" should be read "shall," so as to make it compulsory upon the Local Boards to claim for any Intermediate school within their respective districts which fulfils the conditions laid down in section 45. If the word "shall" be adopted, the section must of course be further modified so as to provide that the Protestant Local Boards shall claim only for Protestant schools, and the Roman Catholic Local Boards for Roman Catholic Schools.

III. They are of opinion that the minimum attendance provided for in section 45, sub-section (II.), should be reduced from twenty-five to ten, and that the number of pupils required to pass a qualifying examination should be fixed at one for every five pupils in regular attendance at the school.

IV. They propose that the provisions of section 45 should be extended to mixed schools of boys and girls by adding to the words "In a boys' school," in (b) the words "or a mixed school of boys and girls."

V. They are also of opinion that no fees for results should be paid in respect of any pupil attending at a school, unless such pupil was born within, or his parents reside within, the district of the Local Board which claims for the school at which he is in attendance.

VI. They are of opinion that the mode of marking for results, set out in Schedule I., should be amended by providing extra marks for pupils who obtain honours at the several examinations, as, for example, 4 marks for an exhibition in the Junior Grade, 6 for an exhibition in the Middle Grade, and 8 for an exhibition in the Senior Grade of the Intermediate Board's examinations, and 8 for a scholarship or exhibition obtained at entrance to a University.

VII. They propose that instead of providing free places in schools sharing in the minimum grant for deserving boys from elementary schools, a certain number of exhibitions of £10 each, to continue for two years, should be provided out of the revenue for each district, and that these exhibitions should be awarded in the manner mentioned in section 45, save that the District or Head Inspector of National Education should be the examiner. These exhibitions should be tenable only if and so long as the winners attend an Intermediate school under the Local Board of the district.

VIII. They are strongly of opinion that the mode of disposing of the existing school buildings and premises should be settled by the Commissioners and embodied in the scheme.

Subject to these objections and proposed amendments the Committee approve of the general tenor of the Draft Scheme.

XXVII.—The Methodist Conference.

1. The Scheme is a departure from the principle of united secular and separate religious instruction, which has heretofore been the principle recognised by Parliament as applicable to public endowments for educational purposes in Ireland.

2. It continues and aggravates the evils arising from the present cumbersome and costly machinery employed for educational purposes, and it imposes upon the Royal Schools Endowment Fund a burden of charge for administration unwarranted by the amount of that fund.

3. It makes the mere proportion of the several denominations, relatively to the population, the basis of the Scheme without taking into consideration what these denominations have hitherto done, or are now doing, on behalf of Intermediate or Higher Education.

4. Notwithstanding the large number on the Board of Commissioners of Education, the Scheme makes no adequate or certain provision for the representation of the Methodist Church thereon; and the provision made for its representation on the Local Boards is utterly inadequate and unsatisfactory.

WALLACE M'MULLEN.

13 Leinster-road, Dublin.

XXVIII.—The Most Rev. Dr. Logue, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh.

1. Sufficient provision is not made by the Scheme for an adequate representation of Roman Catholics on the new Corporation proposed to be created by the Scheme, and to insure such adequate representation I respectfully insist that the Scheme should provide:

- (a.) That one-half at least of the new body, "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland," should be at all times Roman Catholics.
- (b.) That none of the existing Commissioners should have a right as such to be continued to be members of the new body corporate, or to be deemed to be Commissioners appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, or to hold office as if they had been so appointed.
- (c.) That the Council of Studies of Maynooth College should have a right to elect two of the Commissioners, and that accordingly the number of Commissioners to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant should be reduced to eight, or the number of Commissioners should be increased to thirty.

2. The percentage of 60 per cent. of the endowments proposed to be taken from the schools in the Armagh district and distributed over the six counties is excessive and unjust, having regard to the requirements of the district.

3. The proposal by sec. 43 to allocate an equal minimum grant to the Catholic and Protestant Local Boards is objected to as unfair and unjust, and I respectfully insist that inasmuch as much more than one-half of the school-going children in the several districts are Catholics, these minimum grants should be apportioned with a just and due regard to the relative numbers of the Catholic and Protestant children in these several districts.

4. The conditions imposed by the Scheme for schools sharing in Royal School Endowments are too severe. In Clause 45, sub-sec. (d.), the number twenty-five of pupils receiving an intermediate education should be reduced to ten, or at most fifteen, and the number of pupils who shall during a year have passed a qualifying examination should be reduced from ten to five.

5. The Scheme should provide that a qualifying examination, as mentioned in Schedules I. and II., should include the matriculation examination of Maynooth College.

6. The special provisions as to Armagh Royal School are objected to on the following (amongst other) grounds:—

- (a.) An undue preferential treatment is given to that school.
- (b.) The school is practically constituting a Protestant school.
- (c.) The provisions made by the Scheme for the school are unfair and unjust to the Armagh Roman Catholic Board, and to the Roman Catholic Boards in the other districts.

XXIX.—The Most Rev. Dr. Walsh, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin.

1. As regards the constitution of the Commission, that provision be made for the election of two members by the Council of Studies of Maynooth College.

2. As regards the provision for securing upon the Commission a due representation of the various religious denominations, that words to the following effect be added: "The persons chosen in each case being persons who, in the matter of education, enjoy the confidence of the members of the religious denomination in question."

3. As regards the examinations enumerated in Schedules I. and II., that the matriculation examination in Maynooth College be added to those mentioned in the Draft Scheme.

4. As regards the "Corysfort" endowment, that, instead of distributing the endowment among the ordinary schools of the district, some plan be adopted by which the endowment may be kept together, and may thus be made available as a substantial help in some distinct educational work, such, for instance, as the establishment in the district of a school in which special training may be given in some branch of industry suitable to the locality.

I should, perhaps, add that I propose the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd of these modifications in compliance with a request conveyed to me in a resolution unanimously adopted by the Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of Ireland, at a recent meeting.

The 4th suggestion, which deals with a matter of merely local interest, I propose from myself, as Archbishop of the diocese of Dublin, in which the district in question is situated.

(2.) The percentage of 60 per cent. of the endowments proposed to be taken from the schools in the Fermanagh District, and distributed over the six counties, is excessive, and is unjust, having regard to the requirements of the District, and the provisions of the Charters under which the schools in the District were founded and endowed.

XXXI.—The Most Rev. Dr. McGee, Roman Catholic Bishop of Kilmore.

1. The distribution of endowments should be on the basis of population.

2. Provision is not made for adequate representation of Catholic interests on Central Board.

3. Too many marks are given to Matriculation Examination in a University.

4. As I understand the scheme, the money to credit of Cavan Royal School (£5,205 18s. 6d.) is to go into a common Compensation Fund. I submit the Head and Assistant-master of the Cavan School should be compensated out of this sum, and surplus be put to credit of Cavan district. The Cavan endowments for distribution between Local Boards are small compared with those available for distribution in some of the other districts.

5. I doubt if Local Estates Boards will collect rent and manage property as well as in an agent disconnected with locality could.

6. I think the school lands should be sold under Lord Ashmead's Act, the money invested and distributed without such elaborate machinery as required by present Scheme.

7. I suggest that entrance examination into Maynooth College be put on a par with passing Senior Grade examinations of Intermediate.

XXXII.—The Most Rev. Dr. O'Donnell, Roman Catholic Bishop of Raphoe.

As the scheme now stands I make no objection on behalf of the Catholics of this diocese to the giving of equal minimum grants to both Local Boards. I also think the net income of the Raphoe estate, together with the annual value of the buildings, scarcely suffices to secure the requisite amount for these grants. But as I have heard that objections have been lodged against that portion of the scheme which gives our people a chance of meeting some part of the balance accruing elsewhere after minimum grants have been allowed, permit me to say, that this provision of the scheme is essential in order to meet the fair demands of the Roman Catholic population of Raphoe. If the intended arrangements were changed we should be forced to claim more than half the local endowment, owing to the fact that we have by far the greater part of the population, and a very much larger number of boys seeking intermediate education, than the various Protestant communities. As matters stand the Catholics of Raphoe are treated on precisely the same principle as their brethren in neighbouring dioceses, for the surplus is different of course for each locality; but we entirely object to any arrangement which would preclude us from the opportunity of getting from the Royal Schools endowments the rewards by which we hope to see the annual amounts paid to our Board exceed those coming to the Protestant Board of Raphoe, in accordance with the claims which we always have based on a larger population and a larger number of students.

I understand objection has also been taken to confining this Raphoe endowment to the diocese. Well, as a matter of fact, one of the gentlemen recommended by me for membership of our Local Board resides in Strabane, in the diocese of Derry. The reason, however, for suggesting his name was that he has property near Raphoe, and takes a great interest in education. But the objection is of no value.

The Catholics residing in parts of Donegal, not in this diocese, who wish for any education beyond what is elementary, go to such diocesan centres as Derry or Monaghan to obtain it. They must sometimes come to Letterkenny, and we hope to have them again. But there is no Intermediate school in those districts of Donegal that lie outside the diocese of Raphoe, and no hope of any being established. Besides, of course in your scheme the diocesan division has been wisely followed even to the extent of including a county.

XXXIII.—The Very Rev. Dr. Henry, President, St. Malachy's College, Belfast.

See Evidence, p. 391.

On behalf of the Trustees of this College, I take the liberty of objecting in the strongest terms to the Draft Scheme for the redistribution and future management of the Ulster Royal School Endowments. My objection is principally against that part of the Scheme, which confers the Endowments to the districts in which the estates are situated, and in which the schools have been hitherto maintained.

The Commissioners in their Scheme (page 2) say that they think the people of those localities, for whose benefit the Endowments were originally intended should not be deprived of them. If they had said "from the localities instead of" of the localities "my objection could not be urged. But, I say, that the people, who have migrated from those localities in which the estates and schools are situated, and settled down elsewhere in sufficiently large numbers, in the same province, have a just claim to a fair share of the Endowments of the Royal Schools. The people of the districts specified have, especially for the last fifty or sixty years, from various motives, and with great advantage to the State, settled down in large numbers outside the areas of the estates, being drawn to the increasing centres of population, viz. — Belfast, Londonderry, Lurgan, Lurgan, &c. Of these, many no doubt, are the descendants of those whose lands were confiscated and have at least in equity a derelict claim. Take Belfast with its present population of over 200,000 inhabitants, of whom about 70,000 are Catholics. In the year 1639 the town contained only 600 inhabitants. From this year the population has continued to increase by thousands. Thus we find the inhabitants to number —

In 1767 -	9,549	In 1831 -	93,987
" 1792 -	35,303	" 1841 -	135,206
" 1793 -	38,390	" 1851 -	166,560
" 1810 -	37,632	" 1861 -	181,603
" 1821 -	36,727	" 1871 -	176,344

The great bulk of these immigrants came from the several counties of Ulster as may be seen from a memorial in process of signature, which will be presented to the Commission, if they entertain any objection.

These people could not be said to have forfeited their rights to State educational advantages by removing from one county of the province to another. We find that in the time of Charles I. the schools established at Mountnorris, Mountjoy, and Donegal, were removed to Armagh, Dungannon, and Raphoe, to bring education to the people for whom it was intended. On the same principle there is nothing to prevent the Commissioners extending the area, so that the people for whom the Endowments were originally intended, may reap the advantages instead of continuing to pester schools that have miserably failed, and adding others, which, if we can judge from a long-extended experience, must also fail.

The Catholics then of the towns of Down, Antrim, &c., seem to have a just claim to a share of the Endowments. If they have, non-Catholics have an equal claim, but the Commissioners in considering the latter claim should take into account the present Endowment of non-Catholics for Intermediate Education. They have the exclusive use of the Model Schools of Ballymena, Ballymoney, Belfast, Carrickfergus, Coleraine, and Newtownards, whose buildings cost the State over £45,000, and on which is annually expended a sum of about £8,000.

In the interest, therefore, of the claims of the Catholics of Down and Antrim, and in the interest of education, I venture to enter my protest against the partial character of the proposed Scheme, and hope to obtain an opportunity of supporting this objection and also an objection to the part of the Scheme for the reconstitution of the Commissioners.

XXXIV.—The Very Rev. Dr. Hassan, President, St. Columba's College, Londonderry.

See Evidence, p. 361.

I claim for St. Columba's College a share in the Endowments on the following grounds:—

1. That from Diocesan lines—a great portion of Donegal, being in the Diocese of Derry; from business lines—Derry City being considered more or less as the Capital of Donegal; from geographical lines—Derry City being on the Donegal side of the river; the area for Donegal should include the City of Derry.

2. That a large proportion of the boys in St. Columba's come from Donegal.

3. That you cannot exclude St. Columba's without practically excluding from the benefit of the Endowments a great and the most deserving portion of Donegal—Inishowen.

4. That St. Columba's is looked upon as much the centre for education of the Tyrone and Donegal boys as it is of the Derry boys.

5. That any Board representing Tyrone and Donegal is not rightly constituted that has not representatives from Derry Diocese.

XXXV.—The Very Rev. B. McNamara, P.P., V.P., Omagh.

In reference to the Scheme published regarding the Royal School Endowment, I beg to state that in my opinion there is not a proper distribution in the appointment of Trustees.

I have under my charge two Intermediate Schools—the Christian Brothers for boys, and Loreto Convent for girls. I believe they are the only Catholic Intermediate schools in the county, yet there is not a single Trustee named in the Scheme who lives within twenty miles of Omagh. I am strongly of opinion that endowments should not be extended to any portion of the County Derry, as that county was more amply provided for by the London companies.

B. MCNAMARA, P.P., V.P.

Omagh, June 22, 1888.

XXXVI.—The Schoolmasters' Association.

CLAUDE 55.—The part of the Scheme which, from the schoolmasters' point of view, stands most in need of amendment is the 36th clause. We are very strongly of opinion—

A. That in the details of school management, mentioned in the second and third paragraphs, excessive powers are assigned to the Local Board, and that most of them should be transferred to the Head Master;

B. That the tenure of head masterships, as provided in the fourth paragraph, is insufficiently secure; and

C. That a paragraph should be added providing that the Local Board shall arrange for the payment of retiring allowances to Head Masters who are dismissed for other cause than misconduct, or who, after a certain length of service, retire on grounds of ill-health or advancing age.

A.

1. The appointment of masters:

(a.) Even as regards head masters, we are inclined to think their power should be shared with, and to some extent controlled by, a small central committee, which should consist of educational experts. The Local Board, formed as it would be of clergymen, country gentlemen, and professional men, without special experience in the work of education, would, we imagine, be glad of the assistance of members of the staff of colleges and universities, who would be better judges than they of the value of testimonials, and to whom the career of the candidates for the post would generally be well known. Such help they would no doubt seek inferentially in any case; but would it not be better that it should be done regularly and officially, and that the appointments should be made in some such way as those of Incumbents of Parishes, who are chosen by a mixed Parochial and Diocesan Board of Nomination? The existence of such a Central School Committee would be advantageous in many ways, and would give a certain cohesion to the Scheme which, as drafted, it appears to lack. There is unity in the pecuniary arrangements;—in the educational, perhaps rather excessive independence.

The above remarks apply, however, specially to the Protestant Local Boards. In the case of the Roman Catholic Boards no such arrangement would be necessary, as the church takes charge of education, and an ample degree of cohesion is supplied by its already perfect organization.

(b.) The appointment of Assistant "Masters and other members of the teaching staff" should, we are convinced, rest with the Head Master. For the successful management of a school, it is essential that the reins should be in a single hand. In the first place, none but the Head Master can tell what conditions have to be fulfilled by a candidate for the post. He knows what classes need a teacher; what the ages, abilities, and attainments of the pupils are; in what departments most strength is wanted. If an unsuitable man is appointed, the whole organization of the school will be upset, and numberless evils will arise. But even if a well-qualified man were chosen, the risk of friction between him and the Head Master would be serious; a friction which ill-disposed boys would try to increase; while the well-disposed would often be puzzled under the conflict of authorities. The recent tendency has been in the opposite direction. Under the Erasmus Smith Board, for instance, the first Assistant Master at the four grammar schools used to be appointed by the Governors, but this practice has ceased; the appointment of the entire Staff now vests in the Head Master, and through him the salary of the first assistant is paid, and it is agreed that the present system works well.

Moreover, promptness and decision, both in appointment and in dismissal, is often necessary, and the action of the Board would almost certainly be too slow.

The evils we foresee, from vesting the appointment of assistants in the Local Board, might indeed, to some extent, be obviated if the Head Master were, ex-officio, a member of the Board, or of the School Committee, with full power to sit and vote on all questions, except those directly concerning himself. But even this plan would complicate matters unnecessarily and inexpediently; and we conceive that in the selection of the Staff, the Head Master should be absolutely unfettered. At the very most a veto might be given to the Board, and an appeal to them allowed in cases of wrongful dismissal.

2. "The number, salaries, and emoluments" of the Assistant Masters are also matters which may be much more safely left in the power of the Head Master. It is so in most existing schools. Is it found to work badly? Is not the best plan to use every effort, indeed, to choose a good Head Master; but when he is chosen, to leave all details to him, subject to certain general regulations, only taking care that it is to his own interest to secure the success of the school? If he is hampered by arrangements to which he is not even a consenting party, by colleagues either altogether unsuitable or at least thrust upon him from without, of collective authority with himself, and irrevocable by him, he will lose his sense of responsibility and of interest in the work; and in case of failure will, with good show of reason, cast the blame upon his circumstances. In fact, if all power, all initiative is taken away: good men will think many times before they accept what will appear to them so servile a position.

If the considerations are just as regards the Teaching Staff, they apply with increased force to the case of other members of the Staff. Is it not almost a redoubt ad absurdum of the principle on which the Clause is drafted, that the appointment and emolument of kitchen maids and pantry boys should rest with the bishops and squires who form the Local Board?

3. "Are not the various branches of Education to be taught" sufficiently laid down in 45 (b)? And may not the few remaining subjects be safely left to the Head Master's judgment?

4. The fixing of terms and vacation is a less important matter perhaps, but it seems to be one that would be more suitably entrusted to the Head Master than to the Board.

5. "Rules and regulations for the maintenance of order and discipline," the Local Boards, or the members composing them, or any individuals, external to the School itself, are absolutely incompetent to make. And if they did make them, a Head Master could neither carry them out if he would, nor probably would be if he could. He must make his own rules, and, within very wide limits, use his own methods of enforcing them, and he must be able to make or use them as emergencies arise, unfettered and undelayed. Supreme power must be left in his hands, subject at most to the condition that if he be judged after a fair hearing to have abused it he shall be liable to dismissal.

B.

The dismissal of Assistant Masters has been dealt with by implication in connection with their appointment. And, with regard to Head Masters we need not perhaps add much to the arguments used before the Privy Council on our behalf in the matter of Schemes No. 15 and No. 28. It is certainly not for the interests of the Schools that their Head Masters should be placed in a position of undignified dependence. It would deprive them of the best men for masters, and would cramp the energies of such masters as might be found to accept the position. Further, too great ease of dismissal would very likely lead to experimental appointments, and to frequent changes, which would be most disastrous for the pupils. Could the case be met by granting an appeal to the full Board of Nomination, including the proposed Central Committee?

C.

We are of opinion that to any Scheme of School Endowments a pension clause is essential. On voluntary retirement the pension should be conditional upon a certain minimum length of service, should be roughly proportional to the excess of a Head Master's service above that minimum, and also to a definite maximum. It might, if it were thought advisable, be to some extent dependent on the value of his services as determined by the success of the school while under his control. In case of dismissal before the expiration of the minimum term, for any other reason than distinct misconduct the Board should also be required to provide compensation. It seems to us a case of simple justice that retiring allowances should be granted; but there can be no doubt that it is also expedient. The prospect of something—even something small—to retire upon will attract better men and will lead a Master to devote himself much more heartily to his work; while the consciousness of having to provide pensions will increase the desire of the Board to choose the best candidates—the men who will be likely to remain longest in office.

There are one or two other but very minor points, on which we crave permission to say a word or two.

CLAUDE 45.—(b). Is not "Euclid" as a man's name, out of place in a list of subjects? In the present state of opinion, with regard to Geometrical teaching, would it not be better to leave the text book optional, simply prescribing Geometry.

CLAUDE 45.—(c). Does the word "subjects" (line 4), mean all the specified subjects? If not, it is vague; if so, the number of pupils required to pass will probably be found rather excessive. In this opinion we are guided by statistics.

CLAUDE 45.—(f). a "All the subjects taught in the School" seems too sweeping. It would probably include subjects which it would be undesirable for the pupil to learn, but which he yet might claim to be taught; and, perhaps, also such things as Instrumental Music or Painting in Oils, for which every one is charged a special fee. This can scarcely be intended. β "The highest fee charged to Day Pupils" is also possibly unintentionally inclusive. Would it not be better to substitute for a "All the subjects specified in clause 45 (b)," and after β to insert the words "for instruction in the aforementioned subjects?"

SCHEDULE II.—(a). We would suggest allowing Natural Philosophy or Chemistry to stand as an alternative for French or German.

(b). Such an Examination as that for the Indian Civil Service, or for the Royal Military Academy or College, might fairly count, even though the successful candidate did not take up all the subjects named in (c).

Before closing we wish to state very distinctly that we do not venture to offer the foregoing observations in the interest merely of Head Masters themselves. We see, indeed, that Head Masters might have a most undesirable position if the Local Boards exercised, even with the best intentions, all the powers entrusted to them. But it is of the bearing of these powers upon the interests of the Schools, and of Intermediate Education in general, in connection with the new Scheme, as our position and experience enable us to see it, that we find in our duty to speak. We trust accordingly, that no apology need be offered for addressing the Commissioners at such length.

Signed on behalf of the Association,

RICHARD BUDGE,

Hon. Sec.

XXXVII.—The Standing Committee of Roman Catholic Head Masters.

The Committee object:—

1. To the constitution of the Commissioners of Education as proposed under clause 2 of the Draft Scheme. The constitution not providing sufficient security for an adequate representation of the Catholic community.

2. To clause 50 and subsequent clauses, as affecting:—

- The area over which the endowments is to be distributed.
- The constitution of the Local Boards.
- The control over Local Boards (such control not being sufficient in our opinion).

3. To Schedules I. and II., pages 38 and 39 of Draft Scheme.

The entrance examination to Maynooth College ought to be mentioned under these schedules as one of the examinations admitted under the Scheme for the distribution of the residue.

J. E. RUFFIN.

Blackrock College, June 30, 1888.

XXXVIII.—Committee appointed by Inhabitants of Town and Neighbourhood of Raphoe.

Resolutions adopted at a meeting held June 26th, 1888:—

I. That we emphatically object to some of the provisions of section 50 in the Draft Scheme, relating to the disposal of the school buildings and premises, for the following reasons:—

(1.) Because the buildings belonging to the Raphoe Royal School were originally erected as part of a Protestant endowment in what was and is for the purpose of Intermediate Education, an almost exclusively Protestant locality; and, in our opinion, the proposal contained in the Draft Scheme as to the public letting or sale of the school premises would certainly lead to their alienation from the purpose they were designed to serve.

(1) Because, in the opinion of this Committee, unless the present school buildings are retained by the Protestant Local Board, an Intermediate School under the control of that Board, and fulfilling the conditions laid down in the Draft Scheme, cannot be maintained in Raphoe or neighbourhood. Apart from the present school premises there is no school accommodation suited for the purposes of Intermediate Education; and the funds arising from the endowment would not admit of any such being provided, if the present buildings passed into other hands.

(3) Because, with the funds proposed to be put at the disposal of the Protestant Local Board, we believe there is no part of Co. Donegal, outside the Raphoe district, where an Intermediate School, fulfilling the conditions laid down in the Draft Scheme, could be established or maintained with any hope of success.

II. That, having regard, therefore, to the spirit of the founder's intentions, and to the educational advantages of the class of persons inhabiting this particular area who are entitled to the benefits of the endowment, and having regard, moreover, to all the circumstances which the Draft Scheme itself (page 28, section 50, a, b, c, d,) directs to be taken into account by the two Local Boards or Estates Committees in considering this question of the disposal of the school premises of their district, we respectfully request your Commission to insert a provision in the Scheme to the effect that, subject to any claims which may be made arising out of private endowments, the existing school premises in Raphoe shall be offered, in the first instance, to the Donegal Protestant Local Board at a fair annual occupation rent.

Signed, WILLIAM LEWRY BEEKELEY,
Hon. Secretary.

Raphoe, June 27, 1888.

XXXIX.—Protestant Denominations in West Donegal.

We object in the strongest and most decided manner to the proposal to hand over to the Roman Catholics of Ireland any portion whatever, however small, of those endowments intended for the education and advancement of the Protestants of Ireland, as being inequitable and contrary to the intentions of the original donors. We therefore demand, as of right, that this portion of the scheme shall be, not merely modified, but withdrawn altogether.

We also object to the constitution of the proposed Protestant Board for the county of Donegal—ist, That the parties named as members of the said board, instead of being so selected as to represent the different parts of this great county, are taken from a comparatively small area, tho, in the neighbourhood of Raphoe—an area comprising about 100 square miles, while that of the county comprises 2,000 square miles: thus excluding the whole of West Donegal from having even one representative on the proposed board. 2dly, That it is proposed in your draft scheme that the Protestant Board should consist of three representatives for the Church of Ireland, five for the Presbyterian Church, one for all other denominations. We wish to point out that of the Protestant population of this county the Church of Ireland has 51·7; the Presbyterian Church 42·9, and all other denominations 4·3 per cent., thus showing that the Church of Ireland outnumbered the Presbyterians and all other denominations in the county, and yet, when we look into your scheme for the constitution of the board, we find three representatives of the Church of Ireland, five of the Presbyterian church, and one of all other denominations. The gentlemen, however, named under this latter head, actually being a Presbyterian, thus giving the Presbyterian element a preponderating majority on the board.

To remedy this state of things we wish to suggest two proposals, viz, That the number on the board should be increased to twelve, i.e., six of the Church of Ireland, five of the Presbyterian Church, and one of all other denominations. The additional three members to be selected from West Donegal. If, however, the Commissioners should determine to adhere to the number nine, then as the Church of Ireland so far outnumbers all other denominations in the county, it stands to reason and equity that her representation should outnumber that of the others, and that therefore she should have upon the board five members, the Presbyterian church three, and all other denominations one, care being taken that that one shall not be in reality a Presbyterian. In this connection we may also mention that the Census for 1851 shows that the Church of Ireland is increasing in its percentage, while the others exhibit a decrease in theirs.

XI.—The Local Committee representing the various Protestant Denominations in the County of Fermanagh.

While recognising in the Commissioners' Draft Scheme some of the principles which we have ourselves advocated for the better application of the Enniskillen Royal School Endowment, we feel that we would not be doing our duty to the various Protestant denominations we represent were we to accept the Scheme in its present form.

I. We object to the principle upon which it is proposed to divide the Endowment both during the first three years and afterwards.

We beg to call your attention to the fact that the middle classes among the Protestants of this locality have been almost as much debarred from availing themselves of the advantages of the Royal School as the Roman Catholics were owing to the exorbitant prices at which such education could be obtained (see Evidence in the Commissioners' last Report, page 27). Thus, while the one class was shut out by the restrictions of their religion, the other class was to a large extent excluded by excessive fees. The Roman Catholics having a very flourishing college at Monaghan, where education could be had for 25 and £25 per annum for day pupils and boarders respectively (see Evidence, Commissioners' last Report, page 37), have therefore had immense educational advantages over Protestants who were dependent on Royal Schools of late years; and yet the statistics of the Intermediate Examinations show that in the years 1886 and 1887, out of the number of boys who passed in the various grades from the six counties to which the Royal School Endowments are applicable 125 were members of the various Protestant denominations, while only 25—or exactly one-sixth of the total—were Roman Catholics.

From this and other facts already submitted to the Commissioners in our evidence at the Public Inquiry here on 4th October, 1886, it is evident that a much larger proportion of boys connected with the various Protestant denominations require a higher education than among the Roman Catholics. Thus while the Census Returns may show a larger number of Roman Catholics than Protestants, yet the foregoing statistics prove that the Protestants supplied five times as many candidates for Intermediate Examinations at the times and places named. We are informed that the number of Protestants going forward to University Examinations in the said six counties is also greatly in excess of the number of Roman Catholics.

Having regard to these facts, and also to the fact that the Roman Catholics have objected to work with Protestants on the principle of united secular education, we propose that there should be no common fund, but that there should be now a final division of the Endowment among the various religious bodies entitled to share in it. We do not think it unreasonable to ask that in this final division the Protestants of this district should receive in addition to the school premises—hereinafter more fully referred to—at least two-thirds of the revenue from the Enniskillen School Estate in each year, when we remember the foregoing facts, and this additional sum, that there are three distinct corporate bodies of Protestants claiming an interest in the Endowment—Protestant Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Methodists—so be dealt with.

2. We object to the contemplated forced sale of premises (as per section 50 of the Draft Scheme), and to their alienation from the educational and religious purposes they were originally designed to serve.

We maintain that the Commissioners ought not to sell the buildings and adjacent grounds (as the Scheme empowers them to do) for any purpose, but that they should be given to the Fermanagh Protestant Board of Education for the use of all Protestants here who require higher education. The Roman Catholics having a very flourishing seminary at Monaghan, with ample accommodation for all the Roman Catholic boys who are likely to require higher education in years to come, do not need another large establishment here for a similar purpose. Besides the Scheme attaches county Monaghan to this county, apparently for the express purpose of allowing the Roman Catholics to use their share of the Endowment at their institution in Monaghan.

The Protestants not having any other suitable place for school buildings here, and being, therefore, in greatest need of such school accommodation, claim them, in addition to their share of the revenue already referred to, as part of their heritage. Indeed, if the Scheme be not altered in this and some other respects we greatly fear the task assigned to the Local Board would be an altogether impossible one.

3. Further, we request that the Protestant share of the Endowment be vested in the Fermanagh Protestant Board of Education as provided and constituted by the Scheme; and that this local authority should not be hampered by any of the qualifying conditions mentioned in section 45.

We feel confident that the interests of education here would be perfectly safe in the keeping of said Board, and that any Government powers of inspection the Commissioners consider necessary would be quite sufficient to insure the efficiency of the school and the proper allocation of the funds.

4. We also object to the annual election of the members of our Local Board. We cannot see any sufficient reason why the members of a Protestant Board should not hold office for the same length of time, and under the same conditions as Roman Catholics. (See section 28.)

5. We object to any portion of the Enniskillen Endowment being spent on Armagh School, as section 55 gives the Commissioners power to do.

6. We object to the constitution of the new Board of Commissioners in Dublin on two grounds—

(a) The Board seems to be unnecessarily large.

(b) The Lord Lieutenant has too great discretionary power in the selection of his nominees.

We think that the ten Commissioners elected by the Local Boards as proposed, together with ten others elected by the Lord Lieutenant, in definitely defined proportions from the various religious bodies, would be quite adequate to discharge all the duties likely to devolve upon them.

We much regret to see that the whole policy of the Scheme seems to be to divert as much as possible of our valuable endowment away from this locality, and from the class of persons for whom the Charter undoubtedly intended it should be applied.

We protest against the manifest bias of the whole Scheme in favour of the Roman Catholics and against the obvious disregard of the evidence of the Protestant witnesses in many vital matters: and we hereby claim the right to be heard in support of our objections and amendments, at such time and place as the Commissioners may appoint.

Resolutions passed at a Public Meeting held at Enniskillen, on June 23, 1886:—

"That this meeting, representing the various Protestant denominations in the county of Fermanagh, protests in the strongest manner possible, against many of the provisions of the proposed Scheme for the future management and distribution of the Endowment attached to Portora Royal School."

"That, having regard to the fact that the Endowment connected with Portora Royal School was originally granted 'for the advancement of learning and the Protestant religion,' this meeting is of opinion that in any future distribution thereof the school premises, together with the larger share of the Endowment, should be vested in the Fermanagh Protestant Board of Education for the benefit of the Protestants of all denominations in this locality who require a higher education."

XII.—The Protestant Local Committee at Dungannon.

Resolutions passed at a Public Meeting held June 26, 1868.

Resolved—

1. That in the division of the property of the Royal Schools, as contemplated in the Scheme, a much larger proportion should in justice be given to Protestants.

2. That this meeting strongly objects to the disposal of the school premises as provided by the Scheme (sec. 50), believing that a sale will thus be forced at an inadequate price and the buildings alienated from educational purposes, and we claim that the Dungannon School buildings and grounds should be left in the hands of Protestants.

3. That this meeting objects to the representation of universities on the Central Board as proposed in sect. 3, p. 7-8, believing it would be more efficient if composed of members nominated by the Lord Lieutenant in definite proportions according to their religious discriminations, and members of the Local Boards.

4. That this meeting objects to the Scheme on the ground that it makes no provision for the vested interests of pupils who have been for some time past attending the Dungannon Royal School with a view to competing for Exhibitions.

5. We are of opinion that the residue of the fund from any one district should not be taken from the locality as contemplated in section 44, and we also object to the inclusion within the Tyrone district of any portion of the county Derry.

6. That this meeting requests the present committee to continue to act for the furtherance of the objects of the meeting.

Secretary to Local Committee.

XIII.—W. M. Mitchell, Esq., Architect to the Commissioners of Education.

DEAR SIR,—I beg leave to intimate to the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Commissioners, that I object to the Draft Scheme for the future government and management of the Royal School Endowments, on the ground that no adequate provision is made for compensation to me for my vested interest as Architect to the existing Commissioners, in the event of my office being hereafter discontinued by the Commissioners constituted under the Draft Scheme.

(1.) I have been employed as Architect and Surveyor by the Commissioners for more than eight years at a fixed salary of £84 a year. I am, therefore, I respectfully submit, an officer in their employment within the meaning of Clause 7 of the Draft Scheme, and am entitled to the benefit of the provisions of that clause. If there is any doubt as to my claim to be an officer of the Commissioners I should wish to have my position definitely ascertained.

(2.) Assuming that I am an officer within the meaning of Clause 7, and would be entitled to continue to hold office under the newly-constituted Board, a difficulty arises in my case which I think ought to be provided for. The new Commissioners will, so far as I can see, have little or nothing to do with the school buildings, which will be under the control and care of the local boards. In that case there will be no occasion for an architect in the employment of the central Commissioners, and they could not be expected to retain in their employment an officer for whom they had nothing to do. There is no provision in the Scheme for the retirement with suitable compensation of an officer whose services are no longer required, and I respectfully submit that, in my case at least, such a provision is required. It would be very unfair to me that the new Commissioners should have no option but either to retain me as their officer when there was nothing for me to do, or else to dismiss me without compensation for loss of office.

(3.) I would respectfully suggest that Clause 7 should be amended by making it the duty of the new Commissioners to provide a reasonable compensation by way of retiring allowance or otherwise for officers of the present Board whose services should at any time become unnecessary.

(4.) As an alternative, I would suggest that some provision should be made in the Scheme by which the Architect and Surveyor of the central Commissioners should continue to have the oversight of the school buildings in the various districts.

WILLIAM M. MITCHELL,
Architect to the Commissioners of Education.

XIV.—The Rev. W. Moore Morgan, LL.D., Head Master, Royal School, Armagh.

The said William Moore Morgan, sheweth that by Letter of Nomination and Appointment, bearing date the 3rd day of July, in the year 1869, under the hand and Archbishopric Seal of His Grace the then Lord Primate of all Ireland, there was conferred upon him the place or office of School Master or Preceptor of the public or Free Schools of Mount Norris, at Armagh, together with all and singular the privileges, pre-eminences, revenues, profits, commodities, fees, perquisites, and emoluments whatsoever belonging and appertaining to the aforesaid Free School. To hold same with the rights, members, and appurtenances thereto belonging during his good behaviour therein, in as full and beneficial manner and form as any other School Master or Preceptor of the aforesaid Free School had theretofore enjoyed or ought to have enjoyed the same, and he objects to so much of the said Scheme as does not save or make due compensation for his vested interests under said letters of nomination or appointment or otherwise, and to so much of the said Scheme as in anywise diminishes or interferes with the privileges, pre-eminences, revenues, profits, and emoluments, to which he is entitled under or by virtue of the said letter of nomination or otherwise.

The said William Moore Morgan, further objects to the said Draft Scheme, on the ground that it neither saves or makes due compensation for his vested interests as Head Master of the said School, inasmuch as although the said Draft Scheme professes to save certain of his rights in the manner in said Scheme mentioned, it does so in an inefficient manner, and upon terms and conditions which are inconsistent with his original rights.

The said William Moore Morgan shows that he has a vested interest in amongst others the following benefits and emoluments, viz. :—

1. His salary.
2. The free use and enjoyment of the Residence, School Buildings, and grounds attached, such building being at all times kept in good and proper repair and condition, free of expense to him, all rates and taxes and insurances being paid for him.

3. The profits derived from the lands amounting to eighteen acres or therabouts attached to the said school.

4. The profits derived from boarders in the school.

5. The profits and fees derived from day pupils.

6. The advantages which accrued to the school from the Endowments of Royal Scholarships.

7. The benefit of an allowance for the salaries of assistants.

The said William Moore Morgan shows and submits that such benefits and emoluments have not been saved or duly compensated for either by the offer of present compensation, or by a scheme for his retention in which same has been preserved, and on the contrary he submits that same are and by the Draft Scheme will appear to be seriously prejudicial.

XLIV.—The Rev. F. H. Ringwood, LL.D., Head Master, Royal School, Dungannon.

1. The said Frederic Howe Ringwood shows that he was in the year 1850 duly nominated and appointed by His Grace the then Lord Primate of all Ireland to the office or place of Head Master of Dungannon Royal School, to hold such appointment during his good behaviour; and the said Frederic Howe Ringwood objects to so much of the said scheme as in anywise diminishes or interferes with the profits, allowances, stipends, fees, emoluments, rights, and privileges to which he is entitled as such Head Master.

2. The said Frederic Howe Ringwood further objects to the said scheme on the ground that it does not save or make due compensation for his vested interests as such Head Master inasmuch as no adequate compensation is proposed to be made in respect of amongst others the following benefits and emoluments, viz. :—

1. His salary.

2. The free use and enjoyment of the Head Master's residence connected with the school buildings and grounds attached, such residence and buildings being kept in good and proper order, repair, and condition free of all expense.

3. The profits derived from the lands containing ten acres or therabouts attached to the said school.

4. All the profits derived from pupils resident and non-resident.

5. The advantages which accrued to the school from its being one to which the Endowments of Royal Scholarships are attached.

6. The benefit of an allowance for the salaries of assistants.

XLV.—The Rev. William Steele, D.D., Head Master, Royal School, Enniskillen.

1. The said William Steele sheweth that by Warrant dated the 23rd day of June, 1857, under the hand and seal of arms of His Excellency George William Frederick, Earl of Carlisle, then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, he the said William Steele was constituted, ordained, and appointed to be Schoolmaster of the Free School of Enniskillen. To have and to hold the same with all emoluments thereto belonging to him, the said William Steele, during his good behaviour, and be objects to so much of the said Draft Scheme as does not save or make due compensation for his vested interests under the said Warrant or otherwise, and to so much of the said scheme as in any way diminishes or interferes with the emoluments, rights, and privileges to which he is entitled under or by virtue of the said warrant.

The said William Steele further objects to the said Draft Scheme on the ground that it neither saves nor makes due compensation for his vested interests as Head Master of the said School, inasmuch as no adequate compensation is proposed to be made in respect of—amongst others—the following emoluments :—

1. His salary of £500 per annum.

2. The free use of the head master's residence connected with the school buildings and grounds attached, such residence and buildings being at all times kept in good and proper repair and condition, free of all expense to him (all rates, taxes, and insurances being also paid for him).

3. The profits derived from the lands attached to the said school, containing thirty-three acres or therabouts.

4. The profits derived from boarders in the school.

5. The fees derived from day pupils.

6. Results fees from Intermediate Education Commissioners.

7. The advantages which accrued to the school from its being one to which the Endowments of Royal Scholarships were attached.

8. The benefit of an allowance for salaries of assistants.

3. The said William Steele also submits that in estimating the amount of compensation to which he is entitled under the provisions of the said Act for his vested interests (if not saved) regard should be had to the expenditure by him of £4,431 18s. 4d. in effecting valuable additions and improvements to the school-house and premises (as certified to the Commissioners of Education), no portion whereof he has ever been recompensed.

XLVI.—The Rev. J. A. Weir, LL.D., Head Master, Royal School, Raphoe.

1. I claim as part of my emoluments to be permitted to occupy during good behaviour the dwelling-house in which said school is carried on, which is rated to the relief of the poor at £76 a year, or in the event of my being disturbed in the possession thereof, an equivalent annual payment in lieu thereof as was done under the Irish Church Act.

2. I claim also to be entitled to be compensated for results fees under the Intermediate Education Act, 1878, amounting on an average to £15, calculated as from 1878 to 1883, yearly.

3. I also claim in case I am dispossessed thereof to be compensated for the loss of the office of Librarian to the Diocese, which from time immemorial has been enjoyed by the school master of Raphoe, as a matter of usage invariable, resulting as I submit to strict legal right, yearly value of which is £10.

4. I also claim my income from boarders, of whom I have had for a period of seven years, preceeding the 1st August, 1883, an average number of nine. After all reasonable and fair allowances I estimate at £100 per annum.

5. I also claim my income from day scholars during a like period of seven years, preceeding 1st August, 1883, average number twenty, £133.

6. And I submit within the Compensation Clause of the Act 48 and 49 Vic., cap. 78, section 11, I am entitled to an annual sum in lieu of all my sources of income as aforesaid.

XLVII.—The Rev. W. Prior Moore, M.A., Head Master, Royal School, Cavan.

1. The said William Prior Moore shews, that by Letters Patent of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, duly enrolled in the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, on the 18th day of November, 1833, he was appointed to the office or place of Master of the Free School of Cavan, during the pleasure of the Sovereign, with all lands, tenements, profits, allowances, stipends, fees, and emoluments, whatsoever, therewith belonging, or in anywise appertaining, which Letters Patent are still in full force and effect, and he submits that it is not competent for the Educational Endowment Commissioners, by any Scheme under the Educational Endowments (Ireland), Act, 1885, to revoke or annul the said Letters Patent, and he objects to so much of the said Draft Scheme as proposes to dispense with his services as Head Master of Cavan Royal School, or to deal in any way with the lands, buildings, tenements, and premises belonging to the said school, or constituting the endowment thereof, and to so much of the said Scheme as in anywise diminishes or interferes with the profits, allowances, stipends, fees, emoluments, rights, and privileges to which he is entitled under or by virtue of the said Letters Patent or otherwise.

2. [Identical in terms with clause 2 of Objections of Rev. Dr. Ringwood, No. XXXIII.]

KELLY AND LEON, Solicitors for Objector.

23, Chancery-street, Dublin,
June 26th, 1885.

XLVIII.—P. King Joyce, Esq., M.A., Head Master, Royal School, Banagher.

The first portion of clause 63, proposes that my services shall be discontinued by order of the Commissioners, whenever they shall be "of opinion" that the school is no longer efficiently conducted by me.

My objection is—That my appointment is during "good behaviour," which is practically a life appointment, and that this clause changes my tenure into one "at pleasure"—as the Commissioners could at any time, after this Scheme is approved of, discontinue my services, and if asked for cause, they had a full answer by saying, "they were of opinion" the school was not efficiently conducted by me, even though no change in the manner of conducting it had taken place.

What is meant by "efficiently conducted"? It is left to be treated as a matter of opinion, and as opinions vary, my tenure is changed (without due compensation), from a practical life tenure, into one depending on the mere pleasure of the Commissioners.

I respectfully request that this portion of the clause be changed, or the words defined, else my Letter Patent will be repealed by the action of clause 27 of the Educational Endowments Act, and without the due compensation, which clause 11 of same Act provides in all cases in which vested interests are not "swept."

I also respectfully request the amendment of the second part of clause 63, which provides that, "from the date of the order discontinuing my services, I shall be entitled to receive from the Commissioners a retiring annuity, equal in amount to one-thirtieth part of £100 for each completed year elapsed, since date of my appointment."

The words of my "Letter Patent" are, that I am "to have and to hold the same (viz. the position of schoolmaster of Banagher Royal School), with all emoluments thereto belonging during his good behaviour."

Clause 11 of Educational Endowments Act, 1885, estate that "due compensation" shall be made for "vested interests" of individuals holding any office, &c.

Now my vested interest, as schoolmaster of Banagher Royal School, is not in £100 merely, but also in the use and enjoyment of a free house and school premises, or their money value—£281, and besides the fees, &c., derivable from the school, varying from £35 to £135, or any on the average £80 per year. I claim therefore that my vested interest should be calculated on the sum of £100 + £281 + £80, or total £261 or 28 14s. per completed year, on the scale in the Scheme. I hope the Scheme may be amended so that the annuity may be calculated on this sum (£261), and not on £100.

XLIX. Thomas Gordon, Esq., Assistant Master, Royal School, Armagh.

1. That King Charles I., by Letters Patent, dated the 8th July, 1627, granted to the Archbishop of Armagh, and to his successors, certain lands for the use of the Masters of, among others, the free school then established at Mountmorris, in the county of Armagh, which was afterwards removed to the city of Armagh.

2. By the Statute 58, George III., Cap. 107, Sec. 11, the said lands were vested in the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, for the maintenance and support of the masters of the said school among others, and for the other purposes of the said Act.

3. By section 12 of the said Act, it was enacted that if it should appear to the said Commissioners that one or more under master or under masters were necessary for any such school, it should be lawful for the said Commissioners to order and direct that such share or proportion of the issues and profits of such funds or estates applicable to the support of the said schools, should be applied to the sole use and benefit of such under master or under masters respectively.

4. By section 18 of the said Act, it was provided that the under master or masters, if any, should be under the said Act endowed at any of the said schools, should and might be appointed by the head master, by and with the consent and approbation of the several persons in whom the appointment of the head master or masters was vested.

5. By section 10 of the said Act, it was provided that no master or under master of any school should be subject to deprivation of his office until such master or under master should be cited before the said Commissioners, and an inquiry had into his misconduct in the manner and subject to the provisions in said section contained.

6. That for many years prior to the appointment of your objector as assistant master of the Armagh Royal School, it appeared to the Commissioners of Education that an under master was necessary for the Royal School of Armagh, and such under master was accordingly from time to time appointed; and the said Commissioners ordered and directed that the sum of £150 a year, portion of the issues and profits of the funds and estates applicable to the support of the said school, should be applied to the use and benefit of such under master.

7. That on the 15th day of June, 1872, your objector was duly appointed under master of the said Armagh Royal School, and he has since continued as such under master, and in receipt of the said salary of £150 in addition to a salary of £100 a year, given to him by the head master of the said Royal School up to the passing of the said Act.

8. That by the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, 1885, section 11, it was provided that the Commissioners appointed under the said Act, should in framing Schemes thereunder, save or make due compensation for the vested interests of individuals holding any office, place, employment, pension, compensation, allowance, luxury, or emolument, under or arising out of the educational or other endowments at the date of the passing of the said Act.

9. That by clause 55 of the said Draft Scheme, it is among others provided, that if the Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., shall at the date of the Scheme be still in office as head master of Armagh Royal School, he shall thenceforth so long as he continues to discharge the duties of his office be entitled to hold the same and receive the emoluments thereof, as thereinafter set forth. And it is further provided that the Commissioners shall also pay to the said Rev. William Moore Morgan, M.A., as and towards the salary of assistant master, so long as such master shall be engaged by him, and so long as the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall report that the services of such master are required and are efficiently rendered, the annual sum of £150 being the amount which at the date of the passing of the Act was so applied.

10. Your objector says that by the said clause 55 the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant is empowered to report that the services of your objector are not required or are not efficiently rendered, and thereupon to determine the payment of the salary provided by the said clause. If, therefore, as your objector apprehends is the case, the promulgation of the Draft Scheme, which withdraws from the Armagh Royal School a large portion of its endowments, and alters its future management has affected and is calculated to affect prejudicially in the future the prospects of the said school, and if the number of pupils attending it thereby became so diminished as to justify the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant in reporting that the services of your objector are not required, thereupon such report being made, the salary provided by the said Scheme for your objector would, without any fault on his part, cease to be payable. He therefore submits that in no case should he be placed under the control of any new authority created by the said Scheme, and that if your objector is to continue in the office of assistant master that the paragraph four of clause 55 should be omitted from the said Scheme, and in place thereof the following provision should be inserted, that is to say, "The Commissioners shall also pay Thomas Gordon, Esq., the present assistant master of Armagh Royal School so long as he shall continue in office as such assistant master the annual sum of £150, being the annual salary payable to him out of the Armagh Royal School Endowment at the date of the passing of this Act, such salary to be paid in the same manner and out of the same funds as if this Scheme had not passed."

11. Your objector further objects that by clause 51 of the said Draft Scheme no compensation whatever is provided for him upon his retiring from or vacating the office of such assistant master unless he shall continue in office as such assistant master until the Rev. Wm. Moore Morgan, M.A., shall vacate the office of head master of the said school. If, therefore, according to the said Scheme during the continuance in office of the said head master, the Inspector appointed by the Lord Lieutenant shall, owing to the limited number of pupils at any time attending the said school or for any other reason report that the services of your objector are not required, the salary of your objector as such assistant master would cease to be payable, and that through no default whatever on his part. Your objector, therefore, submits that the compensation to be awarded him under the said Scheme should not be made dependent upon his continuance in office as such assistant master until the Rev. Wm. Moore Morgan shall vacate the office of head master.

12. Your objector further submits that he should be entitled, upon the passing of the said Scheme, to retire from the position of assistant master of the said Royal School, and upon such retirement receive from the Commissioners during his life an adequate retiring annuity, regard being had to the annual salary of £150, to which he was entitled out of the Royal Schools Endowments at the date of the passing of the Act, and the additional salary paid to him hitherto as assistant master by the said head master, and also to length of service, and that such annuity should be subject to the like provisions for commutation as are referred to in the said Draft Scheme. Your objector says that the effect of the Draft Scheme has been to unsettle the previously existing state of things and impair the position of the Armagh Royal School and render the future prospects of your objector uncertain and precarious.

13. Your objector further objects to the amount of compensation provided for him by sections 61 and 62 of the Draft Scheme, and submits that the same is wholly inadequate having regard to the emoluments which he has heretofore enjoyed, and which, having regard to the age of the Rev. Wm. Moore Morgan and his own age, being only forty-one years of age, he had every prospect of enjoying for a considerable number of years.

14. Your objector also submits that he should be exempt from the control of the Local Boards provided by section 36 of the said Draft Scheme, and that if and so long as he shall continue assistant master of the Armagh Royal School, he shall hold said office upon and subject only to the terms and conditions upon which he was appointed and now holds said office independently of the control of any other authority.

L.—W. H. Gunning, Esq., M.A., Assistant Master, Royal School, Dungannon.

I beg leave to give notice that I object to the Scheme of the 30th April, for the future management of the Royal Schools, on the ground that due compensation for my vested interests does not appear to have been provided in said Scheme.

Royal School, Dungannon,
June 20, 1888.

W. H. GUNNING.

LJ.—M. Beckett, Esq., B.A., Assistant Master, Royal School, Dungannon.

I object, in the strongest manner, to the loss of my appointment which the Scheme entails, as well as to the other inadequacy of the sum proposed as compensation for that loss. I beg that you will be so good as to bring these objections under the notice of the Commissioners.

My pecuniary interest in the school, at the date of the passing of the Act, consisted of a small salary paid by the Commissioners of Education, together with a further sum, with board, residence, and a share of result fees, supplied by the Head Master. If I understand the Scheme aright, the Commissioners in their provision for compensation have altogether ignored these latter considerations. I respectfully submit that that provision is neither in accordance with justice, nor, I think, with the letter and intention of the Act. The eleventh clause enacts that "the Commissioners shall save, or make due compensation for, the vested interests of individuals holding any office, emolument," &c. not merely under, but "arising out of the Endowment."

I cannot suppose the Commissioners were fully aware of the loss and injury which their proposals will inflict on the Assistant Masters—loss of their present employment, and injury to their future prospects—when they arranged their proposed scale of compensation. To take my own case. Is the sum of £200 an equivalent for the loss of an office worth at the lowest estimate £150 per annum?

If, therefore, the Commissioners cannot see their way to save the vested interests of the Assistant Masters, I would entreat their kind consideration of the following suggestions—

1. That, in estimating length of service, account should be taken of smaller periods than five years; and that as I was an Assistant Master for four years in Enniskillen Royal School, and next January shall have been four years in Dungannon, I should obtain credit for eight years' service.

2. That compensation should be based on the whole emoluments attached to the office.

3. That as the loss sustained by the Assistant Masters will be serious, being the deprivation of their means of livelihood, the compensation, on whatever principle awarded, should be substantial, so as to be in some degree commensurate with the injury entailed by the Scheme.

Royal School.

Dungannon, June 28, 1888.

LII.—T. C. Gardner, Esq., Assistant Master, Royal School, Dungannon.

I beg leave to give notice that I object to the scheme of the 30th April last, because due compensation for my vested interests does not appear to be provided.

Royal School, Dungannon,

T. C. GARDNER.

LIII.—Michael Whelan, Sergeant and Drill Master, Royal School, Dungannon.

I object to the provision made for compensation of my vested interests in the scheme for the future management of the Royal School, on the ground that my salary and emoluments as Sergeant and Drill Master at the Royal School, Dungannon, at the date of the passing of the Act of Parliament was not the sum represented to the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Commission.

ROYAL SCHOOL, DUNGANNON,
June 29, 1888.

MICHAEL WHELAN.

LIV.—W. J. Valentine, Esq., M.A., First Assistant Master, Royal School, Enniskillen.

The effect of clause 52 is in brief as follows:—That after thirteen years' continuous service and more than three other years on separate occasions at an earlier date, I am now, at the age of fifty-two, deprived of my residence and office on the first day of January next, with only a gratuity amounting to two years' salary.

When such ample powers to compensate have been conferred upon the Commissioners under the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, sec. 11, I do not consider the gratuity proposed in the Draft Scheme the utmost in equity permitted by the Act, or nearly approaching the "due compensation" therein mentioned, and I am not aware of any particular reason why, in any case, less than the utmost in equity should be awarded, or why the words of the Act should be harshly interpreted. On the contrary, I think there are reasons, in any case, why a liberal and generous interpretation should be put on them. Let me explain.

In the year 1875 I accepted from Dr. Steele the First Assistant Mastership at Portora. I had been known to Dr. Steele for many years, in that I had been his pupil. I had served as assistant master under him for some months in the Royal School, Raphoe, and afterwards for over three years at Portora. On Dr. Steele's recommendation in 1862 I was offered the Head Mastership of the newly-created Waterford Diocesan School. I held that mastership till the Diocesan schools were disendowed, and continued to carry on the school in Waterford for three years after disendowment. When, however, in 1875 I received from Dr. Steele the offer of a fixed and, as it seemed, well-secured salary of £100 per annum, I at once accepted it and removed my household to Enniskillen to become non-resident master. It was expressly stated by Dr. Steele that while he lived I should not be disturbed, and to get what further securities for me he could, Dr. Steele procured for me a letter from the Secretary to the then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, stating that the Lord Lieutenant approved of my appointment. That the tenure of my office was practically secure was confirmed by the course which had been previously taken with Mr. Weir, who under Dr. Graham held my place; for when Dr. Steele succeeded Dr. Graham who retired, Mr. Weir was promoted to the Head Mastership of Raphoe. In that way, in a somewhat parallel case to mine at present, Mr. Weir's interest were saved by the Lord Lietenant even without the existence of any formal legal constraint. It cannot be said that dementia of mine justifies harsh treatment, as no evidence on that point has been taken, and it is in my power to prove that I have done honest work, that I have been successful as a teacher, and that I have merited the approval of my Principal.

Permit me now to state what I should consider in equity due compensation, presuming that since January, 1884, I have been occupying rooms in Portora, rent and tax free, the value of which I estimate at £50 a year, so that the value of the place which I hold is £250—viz., salary, £200, and residence £50, this £250 made up of residence and salary, being the exact amount of salary, without residence, paid for many years to my predecessors in the office.

I think then that I am fairly entitled to an annuity or to its capitalised equivalent, which will represent the difference between the value of my present place £250, and the income I am likely to earn in the open market. I estimate this difference at £100 per annum, as I am sure that as I grow older I shall find increasing difficulty in getting adequately remunerative employment. In days of change, it has been truly remarked youth is at a premium, for though experience is valuable, experience in one order of things unites ordinary minds for another order of things.

In consequence of a uniform treatment of Assistant Masters conveniently adopted in framing the Draft Scheme, but impossible, as their interests are not uniformly affected, I am reduced, from the moderate income of £200 with residence, to uncertainty of any income at all, to an income most probably both small and insecure, being thrown on a market already overstocked with competent teachers.

In conclusion, let me add that no fear of establishing an inconvenient precedent need prevent a liberal and generous construction of the compensation clause of the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, in my favour, inasmuch as I am not aware that any other Assistant Master in a Royal school is similarly circumstanced at present, and in the scheme for future schools ample provision is taken by sec. 16 of the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act, that security of tenure shall form no attraction to a laborious and scantily remunerated profession.

W. J. VALENTINE.

Portora, May 31, 1888.

LV.—C. Hennig, Esq., Assistant Master, Royal School, Enniskillen.

With reference to the reasons why I think I should on grounds of equity receive a higher compensation than the Draft Scheme in its present form provides for me, I beg to state the following facts:—

I was appointed as Foreign Master at Portora Royal School, Enniskillen, in the year 1880, and entered duties on the first of February. In order to be able to accept the post I had to give up another I held then in England, where I received a salary at least equal to that paid to me at Portora during the first years. I accepted, however, the appointment, because I expected not to be disturbed, and because the engagement was made with the understanding that I should be retained in office at least as long as Dr. Steele would be at Portora himself. I received at first a salary of £100 a year from the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, and in addition to that board and lodgings from Dr. Steele, making the post worth at least £150 a-year. Since the 1st of February, 1884, I received from the Commissioners only £60, and in addition to that £15 and board and lodgings from Dr. Steele, so that the value of my post is at present £125 a-year at least.

As proofs for my being duly qualified for the post, I beg to mention—1, that I have gone through a course at a High class School in Germany; 2, that after passing the necessary higher examinations, including French and German, I have served as a commissioned officer in the Royal Saxon Army; 3, that I possess satisfactory testimonials from my former employers in England; 4, that in going through a course at the Royal University of Ireland, I have obtained first-class honours, (first place) in French and German at all the examinations, at which I was allowed to present myself according to the rules of the University, and first class honours, first place, in Modern Literature at the degree examination.

Dr. Steele would no doubt be kind enough to bear witness, that I have at all times fulfilled my duties punctually and conscientiously, and the Return lists prove sufficiently that I have taught with efficiency, for all my pupils without exception have passed their examinations in French and German, and in fact with two or three exceptions they all obtained honours.

The Draft Scheme proposes to allow to Assistant Masters, all of whom have to retire on the 1st of January, a retiring gratuity of one year's salary, to which they were entitled out of the Royal School Endowment, for every period of five years they have been in office. This provision will be especially unfavourable to me, because on the 1st of February, 1860, I shall have completed nine years of my engagement, and shall therefore be entitled to not quite two years' salary, because one year will be wanting to complete the second period of five years.

Then I consider myself in equity entitled to receive compensation, not only for the salary which the Commissioners of Education pay me, but also for everything given to me by Dr. Steele, that is to say, for my whole income derived from the school. Though not all of it is paid by the Commissioners of Education, yet I receive it indirectly from the Endowment of Portora, and it is given to me for my services in the school; and through the disestablishment of the school I am losing not only the salary paid by the Commissioners, but my whole annual income, for loss of which compensation is undoubtedly due to me. I also think that I ought to get compensation, not for my present income, but for the income I had during the first years, for, though my salary was reduced, yet the amount of work in the school was not reduced.

Finally, I beg to say that those masters who have been in office for above five years are no doubt men, who, like myself, have made teaching their profession; who have spent time and money in order to acquire a superior knowledge of the subjects they profess to teach, and who ought therefore not to be thrown out of employment without being given a fair compensation, which is certainly due to them when they have done their duties conscientiously and efficiently. Moreover, they will be past the prime of life, I at least am so, and I shall consequently find it very difficult to obtain another situation, as I can no longer successfully compete with young teachers, who always present themselves in great numbers for every vacant post, and are in most cases preferred by employers.

I now beg to state, that I would consider as an equitable compensation for myself one year's income for every three years I have been in office, which I some time ago had every reason to expect. As I shall have been in office for nine years on the 1st of January, 1860, and consider myself as entitled to obtain compensation for the income I had during the first years, my claim would amount to the sum of £450.

CURT HENKIN.

Enniskillen, June 7, 1858.

LVI.—W. Brown, Esq., Assistant Master, Royal School, Cavan.

As a person interested, I desire to offer a few objections to section 52 of the Draft Scheme for the reconstitution of the Commissioners of Education, and the future management of the Royal School Endowments. This section relates to the compensation to be given to (1) Head Masters and (2) Assistant Masters, and it is to the latter part that I wish to object. The scale of compensation as therein proposed seems to me most unfair. It is proposed to give, as compensation, one year's salary to an Assistant Master who has had three years' service, and to give exactly the same amount to one who has had nine years' service, and to give double that amount to a master who has had ten years' service.

Again, the compensation should not, I think, be calculated on the salary alone to which an Assistant Master is entitled out of the Royal School Endowment, but on his whole salary as Assistant Master. My salary as Assistant Master here has always been £25 per annum from the Royal School Endowment, and £40, with residence, from the Head Master. All this I consider equivalent to £120 per annum non-resident. My colleague's salary is non-resident, and is all paid from the Royal School Endowment, and if the compensation to him is to be calculated on this salary, surely the compensation to me should be calculated on the non-resident salary which would be equivalent to my resident salary. We are both equally removable by the same means, and have got the same title to our positions. Of course, if I were not paid any salary at all from the Royal School Endowment, I would be in a completely different position, and would have no claim for compensation at all, as I would not then be a servant of the Commissioners of Education, but of the Head Master only.

I therefore beg to suggest that the latter part of section 52 read thus:—

"From and after the 1st day of January aforesaid, the services of the several Assistant Masters of the said Royal Schools, if then still in office, shall be discontinued; and upon such discontinuance each of the said Assistant Masters who was in office at the date of the passing of the Act, and was in receipt of salary from the Royal School Endowment, shall be entitled to receive from the Commissioners a retiring gratuity equal in amount to the full annual salary to which he, as Assistant Master, was entitled at the date of the passing of the Act, together with a further sum of one-fifth part of each amount for each year or fraction thereof, over and above the first period of five years that shall have elapsed between the date of his appointment to the office held by him at the passing of the Act, and the date of the discontinuance of his services under the foregoing provision. The Commissioners, &c."

1. That Memorialist has been employed at Portora Royal School for thirty years as general caretaker and handy man, and especially to look after the waterworks and gasworks, and the back road leading to the lake.

2. That for several years the Commissioners of Education have paid the rent of his house and garden, a sum of £9 a year.

3. That Memorialist is now 68 years of age, and if he is turned out of his place there is no prospect of his being able to get such work and wages as he could undertake, and would maintain his wife and family.

4. Memorialist under these circumstances humbly prays your Honourable Commission to assign him such compensation as you may think just under the circumstances.

To the Right Honourable the Educational Endowments Commission.

LVIII.—J. C. Fox and Ellen Fox, Teachers of Townsville Twentynine National School in the Royal School Estate (Memorial).

1. That this school was erected about 40 years ago, and has received ever since an Endowment of £30 a year with house and small farm for the teachers.

In 1878, the school being vacant, the Commissioners applied to the National Board for two teachers (husband and wife) to whom the above Endowment would be given. Your Memorialists, being then teachers of the Abbey School, Celbridge, under the patronage of Squire Langdale and Colonel Deane, were recommended by the National Board and duly appointed by the Commissioners to be the teachers of this school. The form of agreement is enclosed.

2. That your Memorialists soon found out that no school fees could be got from the pupils; their parents stated that as they paid four or five hundred pounds a year, in the form of rent to the Commissioners for educational purposes, it was but just that a fair portion of that money should be given for the free education of the children in the locality where the money was produced. The school, therefore, is free and open for the children of every denomination on this estate.

Your Memorialists hope your Honourable Commission will throw around this Endowment and the vested interests of the teachers here, the protection and security of law.

LIX.—The Rev. H. B. Carter, D.D., on behalf of his son, a pupil at Dungannon School.

I beg you will lay before the Commissioners the following objection to the draft scheme for Dungannon Royal School.

My son, Gerald B. Carter, has been for four years attending Dungannon Royal School as a day boy, with a view to compete for one of the Exhibitions which were attached to said Royal School, and his education has been wholly directed to that competition. I respectfully submit that it would be an injustice to debar him from competition for Exhibitions referred to, and that his vested interests are entitled to consideration, and in his behalf I claim that the Scheme shall not have the effect of excluding him from the competition for which he has been preparing.

LX.—The Rev. Thomas J. Jones M.A. on behalf of his son, a pupil at Dungannon School.

I beg leave through you to lay the case of my son Henry A. Jones before the gentlemen of the Educational Endowments Commission. He has been at Dungannon Royal School for the past five years, and I had hoped that in the course of time he should have competed for one of the Exhibitions connected with that school. I need hardly say how much these Exhibitions have been prized by parents as enabling them to give, as in my case, a better education to their children than they otherwise could do. I should much wish the Commissioners would grant to my son, and to all similarly circumstanced, this privilege of competing for an Exhibition in due time—a privilege which I understand has been extended to the Armagh School.

I beg to state that my three sons have attended the Royal School at Dungannon for a number of years; that they have been industrious at their studies; that two of them are hopefully looking forward to obtain Exhibitions in Trinity College, Dublin, in connection with the Royal School at Dungannon; and that they trust that in any changes that may take place in the Dungannon School, their interest will receive your kind consideration, and will be fully preserved to them.

LXII.—Vincent de Vassi, L. & C. R. Queen's County.

On page 3 I am glad to see that the Commission have adopted the principle that "the Endowments should be limited to the district in which the estates are situated, and in which the schools have been hitherto maintained." I have no doubt that the Commission will adhere to this principle when dealing with the privately endowed schools.

On pages 6 and 25, I regret to see that "drawing" as a subject of instruction, is omitted from subjects specified to be taught in boys' schools. I think that too great stress cannot be laid on the importance of a knowledge of drawing in all its branches to the class which will be educated at these schools. I sincerely hope that the Commission will reconsider this portion of their Draft Scheme.

On page 4, I am glad to see the very practical suggestion of free education being given to two pupils to be selected by competition from the elementary schools.

I trust that as far as possible the new schools will provide education in common for boys and girls, and thus avoid the danger of frittering away the endowments on a too numerous, incompetent, and underpaid teaching staff.

On pages 15 and 16, I would urge that on the Boards of Education the Protestant bishops should sit by virtue of their office in the same way as it is proposed the Roman Catholic bishops will sit (see pages 18, 19). On page 13 and all other portions of the Draft Scheme, where the management of property is referred to, I would urge that more specific or peremptory directions should be given for the disposal by sale of agricultural property so as to secure a more certain if more limited income.

I am sincerely glad to see the recommendation for the reconstitution of the present very inefficient Commission of Education. I should be glad if some method could be devised by which the Commission of Education and the National Board of Education could be merged together or amalgamated.

I shall be much obliged if you will submit my remarks to the Educational Endowment Commission. I must apologize for troubling you with so lengthy a letter.

ROYAL SCHOOL ENDOWMENTS.

No. LXIII.

See Evidence, p. 382.

STATEMENT on behalf of the LORDS COMMISSIONERS of HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, in respect of the sum of £225 18s. 11d., the balance remaining due on foot of a loan made in 1818, for the repairs of Banagher School-house, under §5 George III., Chap. 107, Sec. 10.

In the year 1818, the Commissioners of Education petitioned the Lord Lieutenant under the 19th section of the 55 George III., chap. 107, for a loan of £225 18s. 9d., to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund for the repairs and improvements of the Banagher School-house, upon condition of its repayment by the master, out of the rents of the school estate, at the rate of £10 per cent. per annum, as provided by the said section.

The said petition is not forthcoming, but it is set out in the printed report of the Commissioners to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, dated 4th April, 1818, which was presented to Parliament on the 18th May, 1818, and appears amongst the Parliamentary papers of the session of 1818 (see copy of the material part of the Report, marked A in Appendix).

A recognisance dated 20th April, 1818 (as provided by the said 19th section for the expenditure of the said sum on the repairs of the school-house), was entered into by the Rev. Thomas Morris, Master of the school, Claudius Cole Hamilton, and Major John Knox, which recognisance was duly enrolled on the 13th July, 1818, and vacated on the 5th June, 1843, the condition having been complied with. The recognisance was handed to the surities on being vacated, but a copy of the Record marked B is given in the Appendix.

It appears from a statement in the Finance Account of the Treasury that the total advances made to the Commissioners under the said section were £10,293 5s. 7d. There was repaid up to August, 1875, a sum of £8,796 13s. 4d., leaving a balance of £1,506 14s. 3d. outstanding, and of this balance the sum of £275 18s. 11d. was due on foot of the advance to the Banagher school.

On the 26th August, 1875, Mr. W. H. Smith, the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury, wrote to the Chief Secretary for Ireland calling attention to the same due on foot of loans in Ireland, and requesting that His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant would authorize the necessary steps to be taken for the recovery and collection of same.

An application was accordingly made by the Government to the Commissioners of Education, for the balance due on foot of Banagher school loan, and on the 26th November, 1875, the Secretary to the Commissioners wrote to the Under Secretary for Ireland, agreeing to pay the said balance by yearly instalments of £80, the first instalment to be paid before the termination of the then present financial year, viz., the 31st March, 1876. See copy letter marked C in Appendix.

In pursuance of this letter, on the 31st March, 1876, a sum of £80 was paid, reducing the balance to the sum of £296 18s. 11d., which still remains due.

After this payment the Commissioners of Education wrote stating that if the yearly instalments were insisted upon by the Government no other course was open to them save to close the school altogether. A long correspondence ensued between the Government, the Treasury, and the Commissioners. At length, in 1883, a case was submitted to the Law Officers, who advised that the proper course was to take proceedings in Chancery for a receiver.

The Commissioners of Education having been written to by the Government, that proceedings would be instituted in Chancery for a Receiver, they submitted a case to Mr. (now Sergeant) Jellett, Q.C., who, amongst other matters advised that in his opinion the Crown would succeed in their application for a receiver. See copy opinion dated 28th February, 1884, marked D in Appendix.

On the 10th April, 1884, the Commissioners of Education wrote to the Irish Government, enclosing a copy of this opinion, and stating that the Commissioners had no intention of contesting any proceedings which might be taken so far as they did not conflict with the views expressed by Mr. Jellett, but they desired to call attention to the financial condition of the Banagher estate, and that proceedings would result in closing the school. See copy letter marked E in Appendix.

The Treasury postponed taking any proceedings pending the Report of the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Commissioners, and the publication of the Scheme of the Commissioners for future management of the Royal School Endowments.

The Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have now called upon the Irish Government to take the necessary proceedings to raise the balance due.

It is submitted that if the Scheme of the Educational Endowments Commissioners could provide for the payment or security of this balance, proceedings in Chancery would thus be avoided.

Dated this 6th day of August, 1888.

Chief Crown Solicitor,

Chief Secretary's Office.

APPENDIX referred to in the foregoing STATEMENT.

A.

EXTRACT from the REPORT of the COMMISSIONERS of EDUCATION in IRELAND to HIS EXCELLENCY the LORD LIEUTENANT, dated the 4th April, 1818.

We beg leave further to report to your Excellency that Osha House, near Banagher, having been surrendered to Mr. Sewes Daly by Dr. George Renny, Director-General of Hospitals, and a demise thereof for the term of three lives renewable for ever (for the purpose of the School of Banagher) having been contracted for with Mr. Daly, the Rev. Mr. Morris now conducts the School in that house (of which he obtained possession on the 26th March, 1817), but that certain repairs and improvements appearing to us material and necessary, the expense whereof, amounting to £225 18s. 9d. (as per an estimate furnished from the master), cannot be defrayed out of the profits of the lands belonging to the School, through their insufficiency to supply that sum within a convenient time. We have therefore availed ourselves of the provisions of the 19th section of the 55th year of the reign of His present Majesty, chap. 107, and accordingly petitioned your Excellency to cause said sum of £225 18s. 9d. to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund for that purpose, upon condition of its repayment by the master out of the rents of the School estate, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and the proper securities to that effect being previously entered into.

Here also we beg leave to observe that the survey and valuation of the School estate of Banagher, situate in the King's County, have been completed since our last report; and we submit to your Excellency our expectation that this measure of ascertaining surveys to be made of the School lands granted at remote periods by the Crown or by private persons, and which we have already adopted with regard to so many of the Royal School estates will prove of lasting advantage to this branch of public property placed under our protection, as at once affording a clue to the retrenchment and recovery of any portion that may have been alienated or encroached upon, whilst the known existence of such accurate delineation of boundary for frequent reference will (in a great measure) operate as a safeguard against the recurrence of wrongful acts of a similar nature.

COPY LETTER of SECRETARY to the COMMISSIONERS of EDUCATION in IRELAND, dated 26th November, 1875.

The Commissioners of Education in Ireland,

26th day of November, 1875.

5, Clarendon-street, Dublin.

Sirs,

In reply to your letter, No. 18,797, dated 25th inst., in reference to the repayment to Government by this Commission of outstanding balances due for loans advanced in the cases of Clarendon and Banagher Endowed Schools; I am to state for the information of His Grace, the Lord Lancaster, that acting in conformity with the opinion of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, and in which opinion His Grace has notified his concurrence, the Commissioners of Education have resolved to make repayments of the balances due—in the case of Clarendon School by yearly instalments of £100; and in the case of Banagher by yearly instalments of £50.

And that the first instalment in each case shall be paid before the termination of the present financial year, that is to say before the 31st of March, 1876.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

WM. CORRIE KYLE, Sec.

T. H. BARKS, Esq., &c. &c.,
Dublin Castle.

D.

COPY ORDERS of Mr. JELFET, Q.C., dated 25th February, 1884.

1. In my opinion the Commissioners are for the reasons hereafter stated liable to the repayment of the sum of £295 18s. 6d.

2. The sum of £295 18s. 6d. is not in my opinion a charge prior to the master's salary. The funds at the disposal of the Commissioners must be applied in the order of precedence pointed out by the 19th section of 53 Geo. III., c.
107, in payment of—

1. The salary of the Head Master.
2. The salary of the Under Master.
3. The repairs, including the sum advanced by the Treasury which represents repairs.
4. The Scholarships and Exhibitions.

The information as to the circumstances under which a lease of the School-house at Banagher was taken on lease at apparently a rack-rent is defective, and I cannot find in the case any circumstances to justify this proceeding. The patent of Charles L. is not before me, but judging from the Acts 53 Geo. III., c. 107, and 5 Geo. IV., c. 79, the intention of the Legislature appears to have been that the Commissioners should build upon their own land, borrowing, if necessary, from the Government the requisite sum repayable by periodical instalments, and not that they should take on lease at a rack-rent, land the property of another, and expend the money advanced by the Government in improving it. Fewing my opinion from the materials before me, the lease seems to have been unauthorized, and the rent payable under it a credit which cannot be insisted upon by the Commissioners in precedence to the instalments of the Government loan.

3. It follows, from the opinion expressed by me in answer to the last query, that there is no such deficiency as would authorize the application of the surplus rents of the other Royal Schools.

4. In my opinion the Crown would succeed in their application for a receiver.

H. P. JELFET,

COPY LETTER of COMMISSIONERS of EDUCATION,
dated 10th April, 1884.

The Commissioners of Education in Ireland,
10th day of April, 1884.

15, Lower Baggot-street, Dublin.

Sir,—I am directed by the Commissioners to transmit to you a copy of counsel's opinion as to their liability in respect of the sum of £295 18s. 6d., the balance remaining due on part of a loan made by the Treasury in 1818 for the repair of the Banagher School-house under the 50th
Geo. III., c. 107, s. 15.

On 1st February, 1870, the Under Secretary forwarded to the Commissioners a letter from Sir R. E. Ligon, suggesting that this loan was a charge on the Banagher School Estate prior to any payment of rent for the School-house, and that it might (under the 2nd Geo. IV., c. 79, s. 4) be discharged out of the surplus funds of other school estates vested in the Commissioners; and in a letter from the Secretary to the Board of Public Works (acting on behalf of the Treasury) of the 22nd September, 1869, it was further suggested that the loan had priority as a charge over the master's salary, as he was appointed long subsequently to its date. In both these letters the offer was made to accept payment in yearly instalments of £27 10s., but in that of September last the Commissioners were required to provide that those payments should be made—a promise impossible for them to give.

It will be seen by Mr. Jelfet's opinion that it is adverse to two of the contentions made on behalf of the Treasury, viz., that the loan has priority over the master's salary, and that resort can be had to the rents of other estates for the purpose of its discharge. He is, however, of opinion that it is entitled to priority over the rent of £50 paid for the School-house.

The Commissioners have no intention to contest any proceedings which may be taken by the Board of Public Works, so far as they do not conflict with the views expressed by Mr. Jelfet; but they desire to call attention to the financial position of the Banagher estate, and to the consequences which must follow if such proceedings be taken.

The net rent is only £150, and is subject to any reduction which may be made by the Land Commission.

The salary of the master is £100, and the maintenance and repairs of the School-house amount to about £25, while the rent is £50 a year; and at the close of the last year there was a deficit of £60, which is taking into consideration the loan from the Treasury.

If, therefore, the yearly payments asked for be insisted upon, no funds will exist for the payment of rent, and no other source will be open to the Commissioners save that of closing the School altogether, while the possibility of re-opening it appears more than questionable.

Whether a result will be counterbalanced by the repayment of this sum, advanced sixty-six years ago, is a matter which the Commissioners think worthy of His Excellency's consideration before a final decision is come to upon the subject.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ANDREW A. GRAVES, Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY THE LOCAL COMMITTEE REPRESENTING THE VARIOUS PROTESTANT DENOMINATIONS OF COUNTY FERMANAGH, re PORTORA ROYAL SCHOOL, at a meeting held September 11, 1888.

First Resolution, proposed by Rev. S. C. Mitchell, and seconded by Henry Flew, Esq. :—

"In answer to the request of the Commissioners that the Protestant Committee here should state their views in regard to Portora School Buildings, they now beg to say that they propose to take them over, together with the thirty-three (Irish) acres of land attached, as they consider it would be most desirable to make any division of the house and lands."

Second Resolution, proposed by Henry Flew, Esq., and seconded by William Toole, Esq., J.P. :—

"The Committee take this opportunity of stating that, after further consideration, they feel very strongly that the minimum allowance after the first three years provided by section 42 of the Draft Scheme would be entirely inadequate to enable the Local Committee to obtain the services of suitable masters, and they strongly urge a modification of the scheme in that particular. In their opinion this minimum allowance should be increased. And in the case of the Enniskillen Protestant School, should not be less than forty per cent. of the net income of the estate, without such conditions as are named in section 45."

Honorary Secretary, Local Committee.

£40 are 1,022 Protestants and 262 Roman Catholics.
£50 " 1,655 do. 479 do.
£100 " 3,023 do. 1,263 do.

We therefore beg the Commissioners' special attention to the fact that our contention is thereby conclusively proved—that the majority of persons requiring higher education in this district belong to the various Protestant denominations.

We consider that as a matter of simple justice a sufficient endowment together with the school premises should be vested in the proposed "Fermanagh Protestant Board of Education," for the object of assisting the various Protestant denominations of this locality in obtaining the benefits of higher education on reasonable terms, without any of the qualifying conditions to which we have already objected.

Should the Commissioners meet the views of this Committee the Local Board will devote its best efforts to the fulfilment of the trust, but it would be unreasonable to expect properly qualified persons to embark in a hazardous undertaking such as the draft scheme contemplates.

Signed on behalf of the Committee,

HENRY FLEW, Chairman.

S. CUTHBERT MITCHELL, Hon. Secretary.

ROYAL SCHOOL ENDOWMENTS.

No. LXVIII.

See Evidence, p. 436.

PROPOSAL ON BEHALF OF THE PROTESTANT BOARD OF EDUCATION IN REFERENCE TO CAVAN ROYAL SCHOOL PREMISES.

These premises consist of the house, yard, garden, and premises standing on 16a. 1s. 13r. statute measure, or thereabouts, being part of the lands of Lurganboy, in the Union of Cavan and county of Cavan.

The Poor Law valuation now stands, viz. :—

	£	s.	d.
On house, . . .	20	0	0
On land, . . .	28	10	0
Total, . . .	78	10	0

A portion of these premises on which the avenue is, is subject to a rent of £5 a year, to the Rev. W. P. Moore, the present Head Master, who is the owner in fee of the adjoining lands. This avenue runs for about 180 yards from the entrance gate along a field owned by said Mr. Moore, and Mr. Moore has a right of way along said avenue to his field adjoining.

This field will probably be sold by Mr. Moore, and it may be built on, and may therefore become a very serious drawback to the value, and to the comfort, convenience and enjoyment of the school premises. It is for this portion of the avenue the said rent of £5 is paid.

The Protestant Board of Education of Cavan propose to take the school premises on the following basis:—

They propose to give twelve years purchase for lease premises, calculated on the said:—

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Poor Law Valuation of £50,	—	—	—	600	0	0
For land on Poor Law Valuation,	28	10	0
Less yearly rent of portion of land on which avenue is, and payable to Rev. W. P. Moore,	5	0	0
	23	10	0
Twelve years purchase on same,				470	0	0
Total capital sum purchase money,				£1,070	0	0

The Board is unable to pay down this sum of £1,070 to the Commissioners, and suggest the following means of carrying out the sale.

1. The Board to get the premises at the price stated, undertaking to pay 3 per cent. on the £1,070, amounting to £32 2s. which would become a permanent yearly rentcharge. Three per cent. is suggested, for if the money were paid to the Commissioners it could not be invested by them at even 3 per cent.—the Government funds being 2½, and that terminable, and to be released to £2½ per cent.

2. The Board to be charged say 4 per cent., or such other rate as the Commissioners shall think fit on said £1,070, same to be in the nature of yearly or half-yearly instalments, paying off both principal and interest on said sum of £1,070 in a given number of years, or in such other way as to the Commissioners would seem right.

3. By way of an alternate proposal, the Board begs to suggest—

That taking the capital value at said sum of £1,070, let the premises be given to the Protestant Board free of charge, allowing to the Roman Catholic Board of Cavan in lieu thereof a sum equal to one-half of said sum of £1,070 towards their school premises.

I beg to submit the foregoing for the consideration of the Commissioners.

Dated this 31st day of September, 1888.

Signed on behalf of the Protestant Board of Cavan.

W. H. HURCHESON, Hon. Secretary,
The Rectory, Bellisboro',
Co. Cavan.

PROPOSAL of the Most Rev. Dr. DONNELLY, Bishop of CLOUGH, with regard to the PORTORA

ROYAL SCHOOL.

See Evidence, p. 443.

GENTLEMEN,—In obedience to a suggestion made by the Educational Endowments Commissioners at their public sitting early in last month, I have the honour to submit the following proposal for the division of the Portora School premises.

On behalf of the Catholics of this diocese I am prepared to take over the land, and leave the school buildings to the Protestant body.

Should the Protestant body desire to have any portion of the land—as for instance the garden or the lawn—I am willing that they should receive such portion either by purchase or at a rent based on the Government valuation.

This proposal I consider a reasonable one, seeing the relative proportion of the Catholic and of the Protestant population of the Diocese of Clough, whether account be taken of the whole or only of the literate population. The figures taken from the Census returns of 1881 will be found below.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

✠ JAMES DONNELLY,
Bishop of Clough.

V. Observations—I send, accompanying this paper, an account of my net profits arising from the working of the school for the seven years ending 1888.

This period was suggested as a fair one on which to base the claim of vested interest by the petitioner who has consented to the case. Had I been at liberty to go back and select five consecutive years of the best paying period of the school, and base the average on them, the claim would have been much larger.

Since the passing of the Act of 1865 the school has been regarded as in a transition state, and reorganisation in such circumstances was an impossibility.

It is to be hoped that an average based on period including these years will not seem a reasonable one to allow for vested interests. See, too, of the present scheme from the date of the passing of the Act of 1865, August, as a terminus.

* Second half-year.

Officer thinks it right to allude to the fact that the Diocesan Library, in respect of his office wherein he claims to be entitled to claim as an endowment, appear to have been held in the school premises since the year 1781. And there is no record of any other than a person occupying the position of Head Master being Librarian thereof.

The land attached to the school premises is held as part of my endowment, and is well worth £10 a year, as a shop letting and also the rent of £25, payable to the purchaser from the Church Commissioners who were the donors.

No. LXXV.

See Evidence, p. 472.

Q. I. Number of pupils paying fees, and amount of fees paid by them for each year of the five ending Midsummer, 1886?

To end of June.	Average Number of Pupils.	Amount of Fees.
		£ s d
1884,	102	85 8 8
1885,	104	88 0 6
1886,	107	88 1 0
1887,	105	86 8 10
1888,	125	64 15 0

The small number of boys and consequent low amount of fees for the year ending June, 1887, was caused by a report which spread immediately after the local inquiry of the Commissioners in 1886, that the school would be very soon closed, and parents were, under the circumstances, reluctant to send their children. Although there is an improvement apparent this year, still I am raised when the school is to close.

The amount of fees for the last five years was not nearly as large as in former years; and although I have a record of all which I have put down, still as it was not kept for any particular purpose, I believe it is under the mark as I may not have entered some amounts.

Q. II. Amount and particulars of outlay made by you upon school staff or otherwise?

For last five years there was no outlay.

Q. III. Amount and particulars of all endowments in respect of which you claim a vested interest?

I claim a vested interest in all the money arising out of the Banagher Royal School Endowment, less cost of collection, &c. (This is in accordance with the terms of my letter patent.) I claim besides the whole amount of fees from pupils, &c.

According to the Report for this year the total amount of the endowment for last year was £187 17s. 6d. Now, my claim would be:—

	£ s d
Cash paid to me as Salary,	100 0 0
Cash paid for my benefit in House Rent, Taxes, Insurance, &c.	82 0 0
Average amount of Fees for last five years,	86 8 10
	268 8 0

Q. IV. The net sum which you claim to have received by way of profit out of the school?

As there is no outlay to deduct, the above sum is net, viz., £236 8s.

Q. V. Any other information which you may desire to submit to the Commissioners in support of your claim?

Former masters received the whole endowment and provided a house themselves. It was only to oblige a master (I think the Rev. Allan Bell) who required a larger house, that the endowment was distributed as now. On my appointment the house was running, and so I was bound by the arrangement; but on the secretary informing me, I think in '70 or '71, that there was an intention to give up the house, I then said I should claim the whole endowment in money, but the lease was renewed without informing me.

Has made no outlay on school.

Has received net sums annually by way of profit:—£150, 1880-1884, and £125, 1885-1888.

Observations.

I have given the above information for the five years ending midsummer, 1888, as requested, but I would respectfully submit that, in accordance with the provision of section 11, the amount of my income arising from the endowment at the date of the passing of the Act, or for the five years previous to that date (in each of which the amount and particulars of my endowments were the same as in the years 1883-5 in table) should be taken as the basis of compensation.

I should add that, not having any record, and not at present being able to procure one, of the exact sums paid me as results fees, and as the amount varied largely in different years—from £30 to £8—I have estimated £15 as the average of what I received each year since the establishment of the Intermediate Board in 1879. In addition to this I added considerably to my income by giving private tuition to pupils of the school who required instruction in special centres. This, though an indirect endowment of my appointment, I have not considered should be included in above table.

Finally, in general support of my claim I would most respectfully urge the following facts upon the patient consideration of the Commissioners.

I am a Graduate M.A., ex-Royal Scholar, ex-Classical Bizar, First Honours, Firstman, &c., of Trinity College, Dublin. Before leaving the University I was compelled to renounce all work owing to a breakdown of my health combined with an injury to one of my eyes. I subsequently adopted the profession of teaching, and for sixteen years have held the appointment of First Assistant Master in the Royal School, Dungannon, during which time I believe I may say that I have been closely identified with the acknowledged sound teaching and educational success of that institution, a success testified to as well by the various witnesses as the sitting in Dungannon as by the Endowments Commissioners in their Second Report (p. xix.)

Considering these things I venture to hope that, in framing a scheme which will deprive me of an appointment that I have held for so long a time, the

Submits observations in the following terms:—

IV. In support of my claim I beg to submit the following:—

1. To accept the post at Portora, I gave up a good post in England; I accepted this appointment, because I considered it would be permanent.

2. I submit my compensation should be measured not on the stated annual income of £125, but on the £150, which was the amount I first had, and was the inducement to me to relinquish my appointment in England, and I would not have consented to the reduction made in 1835, save from my unwillingness to make a change or incur the risk of duty in getting another appointment, and the reduction was made by the Commissioners not for any fault of mine, but by reason of the falling off in the number of the pupils, and Dr. Steele was so satisfied of the hardship inflicted upon me thereby, that he supplemented my allowance by £15 a year out of his own pocket in addition to my board at the school, which I valued at £50.

3. I have made teaching my profession; I have spent time and money to acquire a superior knowledge of the subjects I profess to teach, and I ought therefore not to be thrown out of employment without being given a fair compensation, which is certainly due to me, since I have done my duties conscientiously and efficiently. I am past the prime of life, and shall consequently find it very difficult to obtain another situation, as I can no longer successfully compete with young teachers, who always present themselves in great numbers for every vacant post, and are in most cases preferred by employers.

4. Finally I beg to submit as an equitable compensation, I should be allowed one year's income for every three years I have been in office, which for nine years to the 1st of January, 1835, would amount to £450.

I have the honour to be,
My Lords and Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servant,
CURT HUNTER.

RETURN

As to PRIVATE ENDOWMENTS given for the building of any of the ROYAL SCHOOLS and of any repayments of the same.

In the case of Banagher (where the schoolhouse is only held from year to year), Carrig, and Caryfort, I have not found any record of endowments of the kind mentioned.

Dungannon.—Dr. Ringwood states (Commission of Inquiry, 1857, Evidence, Vol. I, question 11788) that the Primate gave him £400 to complete alterations in the school buildings. Of this sum the gift of £200 is noticed in the minutes of the Board for December, 1855, but I have not traced any account of the remainder. No repayment was ever made, nor I believe expected. Dr. Ringwood informs me that in one of the corridors there is an inscription to commemorate the gift—"Built by the Lord Primate, 1850."

Armagh.—In the report of 1858 it is stated that the Archbishop of Armagh gave £5,996 for building purposes at this school. I cannot verify in full this statement from the records of the Board. The particulars which I have collected are as follows:—In November, 1848, the Primate suggested to the Board to expend a sum of £1,200 on Armagh buildings, and, as there was a difficulty about money, he undertook to advance same on the understanding that at some future date it would be repaid. In April, 1849, the Primate again urged the Board to lay out another sum of £1,500, but the Board expressed their inability to do so. The Primate then said he would advance the money "in the hope that if in future the Commissioners were in a position to do so they would repay him." It was on this order that the new works proceeded with under his Grace's supervision. Probably this £1,300 was exceeded. No part of it was repaid to the Archbishop, nor do I think it was ever asked for.

In May, 1849, I find that the Primate states that, on the works intended to be paid for out of the first sum (of £1,200) he had paid £1,360 9s. 6d., but that he only claimed back £1,200. He was repaid 31st May in that year £600. The balance, £600, was not repaid until after his death. The payment was made on 30th January, 1854, to his executor.

I understand from the minutes that the conduct of the works intended to be covered by the sum of £1,300, as well as the payment for them, was undertaken by the Priests, and the matter was not carried out through the Board.

I have not found any other endowment given to this school.

Reply.—Dr. Steele on his appointment to this school offered to lay out £600 on the buildings if the Commissioners would advance the money, same to be repaid to them out of his salary, and that salary to be entirely retained by them until the £600 was cleared off. The offer was accepted: but £175 alone had been repaid when Dr. Steele was appointed to Portora. Upon this the balance of the £425 was cancelled by the Board 17th December, 1837.

Whether this expenditure or Dr. Steele's large expenditure at Portora is to be considered in the nature of an endowment I cannot say. I may add that there is on the minutes of the Board a statement of Dr. Steele's, that he laid out sums on permanent improvements to the extent of £1,300 (inclusive of above £600).

Enquiry.—Dr. Steele's Expenditure. In February, 1850, Dr. Steele presented a memorial showing expenditure by him of £3,963 3s. 3d., and praying for repayment. The minutes on this matter are numerous and long: but the result was that the Architect of the Board certified that £1,666 8s. 11d. was the value of the permanent improvements effected, and the Board repaid Dr. Steele that amount, but declined to pay the balance £2,296 13s. 3d. In May, 1858, another memorial of Dr. Steele's praying repayment of £4,001 19s. 4d. (composed of £2,296 13s. 8d. balance of first sum claimed and sums expended since 1850) was considered and refused. This and other memorials were before the Board on many subsequent occasions, and finally in 1881, August 18th, a payment was made to him of £1,425 7s. 8d., "Dr. Steele undertaking to receive such payment as a final satisfaction of every claim he may have against the Board in respect of any expenditure connected with the buildings at Portora."

I know of no other private endowment to this school.

ROBERT McDOWELL.
